Neil Hamilton, the new D. W. Griffith star in "America," has been asked by Henry H. Kitson, the sculptor, to pose for a statue, which has been ordered as a memorial for Washington's headquarters at Newburgh, N. Y.

Mr. Kitson is the sculptor of the famous statue of "The Minute Man" at Lexington Common.

Before starting his work, Mr. Kitson came from his studio at Framingham, Mass., to New York to see "America" with the idea of getting inspiration for his work.

After seeing Hamilton in the hero's role, he selected him as the ideal type of young American manhood.

Atlantic City (N.J.) Gazette 5/18/24

Neil Hamilton, the new D. W. Griffith star in the romantic national picture "America," has been asked by Henry H. Kitson, the sculptor, to pose for a statue which has been ordered as a memorial for Washington's headquarters at Newburgh, N. Y. Mr. Kitson is the sculptor of the famous statue of the Minute Man at Lexington Common. After seeing Hamilton in the hero's role, he selected him as the ideal type of young American manhood, and asked him to pose as a model.

Chicago (Ill) News May 19 1924

FASHIONS FAVORED IN THE DAYS OF THE REVOLUTION.

AT NANCY MONTAGUE, heroine in the movie of the same name, the mode of '76. The [illegible] in the picture "America" being [illegible] for the [illegible] Theater, New York, where the picture is showing at the Majestic. Carol Dempster [illegible] the costumes of the period [illegible]

Sioux City (Iowa) Journal 5/18/24

Film Star to Pose for Statue of Washington

Neil Hamilton, a star in the romantic national picture "America," has been asked by Henry H. Kitson, the sculptor, to pose for a statue which has been ordered as a memorial for Washington's headquarters at Newburgh, N. Y.

Mr. Kitson is the sculptor of the famous statue of "The Minute Man" at Lexington common.

Before starting his work, Mr. Kitson came from his studio at Framingham, Mass., to New York to see "America," with the idea of getting inspiration for his work. After seeing Hamilton in the hero's role, he selected him as the ideal type of young American manhood, and asked him to pose as a model.

New Orleans (La) Item 5/18/24

New Griffith Star To Pose for Statue

Neil Hamilton, the new D. W. Griffith star in the romantic national picture "America," has been asked by Henry H. Kitson, the sculptor, to pose for a statue which has been ordered as a memorial for Washington's headquarters at Newburgh, N. Y.

Mr. Kitson is the sculptor of the famous statue of the Minute Man at Lexington Common.

Before starting his work, Mr. Kitson came from his studio at Framingham, Mass., to New York to see "America," with the idea of getting inspiration for his work. After seeing Hamilton in the hero's role, he selected him as the ideal type of young American manhood, and asked him to pose as a model.

WASHINGTON
as he is impersonated by Arthur Dewey in America

Harrisburg (Pa) Tel Telegraph 5/19/24

D. W. Griffith went to Italy some time ago to confer with Italian bankers as to rehabilitating Italian films. He is back in America now as the Italian bankers could not be brought to agree on the amount of money Griffith thought necessary for the purpose.

N Y Evg Post Daily 5/19/24

Los Angeles (Cal) News 5/19/24

Newark (N.J.) Ledger 5/20/24

Norwalk (Conn) Sentinel 5/22/24

Binghamton (N.Y.) Sun 5/21/24

Los Angeles (Cal) Exp. Bulletin May 21 1924

Rochester (N.Y.) Times-Union 5/18/24

Dayton (O) News 5/18/24

FOREM—Charles Dumont Mack, a Griffith director, is making a big impression with his work in "America."

Neil Hamilton Asked to Pose

Pittsburgh (Pa) Sun 5/20/24

FLICKER FOLK

GRIFFITH HAS FILMED ONLY 'AMERICA' IS TO BE MADE

Washington Page Is Obtained from Gelin Own Letter

Lousville (Ky) Herald 5/18/24

STAR OF "AMERICA" TO POSE FOR MEMORIAL

Dallas (Tex) Times 5/19/24

Los Angeles (Cal) Times 5/20/24

Walter Huston 'America' Hero

Milwaukee (Wis) Post 5/21/24

Rice Soldiers for

Chicago Tribune 5/19/24

Chicago Herald Examiner 5/19/24

Nov Exhibitors Herald May 24 1924

Ny Post May 20 1924 Los Angeles (Cal) Record 5/21/24 Hartford (Conn) Times May 21 1924

AS ONE WOMAN SEES IT

The Garden Club of America Finds Richmond a Delightful Place to Visit, With Much of the Best of the Old South Still Surviving in Virginia

By SARAH D. LOWRIE

THE Garden Club of America came home from its yearly gathering, this time at Richmond, Va., brimming over with the pleasure of the affair and the delightful warmth of the welcome which the hostesses gave their visitors, not only in Richmond but in all the gardens and old places where they were made happily at home. There are not many places in America where arere are gardens patterned in Colonial days that are still gardens, and just now, when Griffith's great spectacle of "America" has renewed our interest in things of 1776, a glimpse into such old places as Shirley on the James River and of Westover is singularly apropos.

A friend of mine who has lately renewed his impressions of Mount Vernon felt, what any one who saw Shirley with the Garden Club must have felt, too, and that is a great interest in the manner of life that such places were designed to make agreeable and hospitable. The variety of little offices for every kind of domestic activity that were in close proximity to the main house and the number of skilled artisans tht were permanently attached to each household give one an astonishing comprehension of how complex was the life of these dignified masters and mistresses which we are accustomed to regard somewhat patronizingly as so simple compared to our own.

To be the mistress of a ménage like Shirley or like Mount Vernon, to evolve such parklike plantations of frees and shrubs, and such long vistas and fertile pleasances, to place them in such beautiful points of vantage and to make all the surrounding landscape part of their charm, took a certain sophistication and experience and background of knowledge that we are not always quite aware of when we think of those of our progenitors whom we quaintly summarize as "the early settlers."

And if the 600 or more women members of the Garden Club of American who are in the way of making or of keeping up the gardens of today got nothing else by their few days' sojourn in Vidginia, they are bound to have had, besides a very agreeable time, a renewed sense of what a picked lot of men and women those early settlers proved themselves to be both in what they discarded of their former European life and what they retained.

OF COURSE, too, charming as Virginians are out of their setting, they are immensely at an advantage as hosts. What to some persons of the North goes for mere flattery and easy Southern talk, in an alien atmosphere, greatly enhances the gracefulness of hospitality in the South. A South that, whatever it has lost, has kept its good manners and fine manner of its more prosperous era just as it has kept the Tudor and Cavalier accent and voice in its English, the drawl and the inflection that belonged to an England that was still more French than Anglo-Saxon.

I do not know why religion in the form of Puritanism or of Quakerism should have made talking with a pinched nose more pious than with an open throat. I think that Dr. Talcott Williams has very well buttressed theories on that subject, and I for one would like to know the psychology back of the Pittsburgh see-sawed inflection, and the dropped "R" of this town, and the dragged last syllable of the Philadelphia-born, the flat "a" of the back woods New Englander, and also the flattering caress that finds its way into the inflections of the South.

That last sometimes is misunderstood in the North. A little group in Philadelphia is still laughing gently over the recent happening to one of its best and most appreciated and estimable of transplanted Virginians, which the amused and bewildered lady told on herself. She had given her opera box away for the occasion and then, having a friend to entertain, got two seats for the evening which were not together. But she made sure that since both were good she might be able to effect a change, there being but a single seat between her two. Sure enough on reaching the opera a little late, she observed that a man was occupying the seat next to her and between her and her guest. So presently in a low, kind voice she addressed him:

"Are you alone, sir?" she began in her honeyed Southern accent.

But he interrupted her with a warning gesture:

"Fade away," he whispered hoarsely, "my whole family is just back of us!"

THE Southern Garden of the Shirley and Westover type seems to have relied more on its pattern and its box hedges than on its masses of flowers. Perhaps even in the slave days of plenty of labor, of a kind, the succession of bloom in a hot climate was never fully compassed. It takes a special kind of hot house and cold frame and seed bed culture to make border planting, let alone parterre bloom a success. A blaze of color week in and week out needs vary skilled workers and rather a misty, moisty, climate, like England's.

Although every gardener will tell you circumstantially how to plant for successive blooming, he will apologize when you visit him for the things that have bloomed too soon, or have not yet bloomed in his own beds.

One of the women who read a very practical paper on rose culture at one of the sessions down in Richmond, and laid down a delightful plan that she said had been her grandfather's for a rose bed of twenty-five plants, confided to me at home after she had completed her paper, that it had occurred to her as the better part of wisdom before reading it to calculate how many inches of manure, soil, and mulch, etc., she had advised for a bed three feet deep. She found that she had filled the three-foot bed with fifty-six inches of material, and also that she had made a list of forty-two roses for a space only large enough to accommodate twenty-five.

I was amused at one of the most enthusiastic devisers of color schemes that I know. In past years she has had much to say about the horrors of magenta and pink and orange and pink or scarlet and magenta, until she saw a whole terraced hillside at Grasse in France, mass of pink and orange and magenta zealias. Since then she has realized that a "clash" of colors has a value that is exciting to participate in, if it is only to stand and watch the sunlight magnify into a glory and blaze.

Albany (Ny) Journal 5/20/24

Mr. Griffith As a Prophet.

Anything that David Wark Griffith writes concerning the movies is interesting. Recently in the pages of "Collier's" he ventured to make a few predictions as to the cinema 100 years from now. Not all of us will be here in 2024, but it may be that some of the things he speaks of will have come to pass before a century rolls by.

One hundred years hence, Mr. Griffith believes airplane passenger lines will operate moving picture shows. Pictures will also be shown on railroad trains which will be traveling two or three times as fast as they do now. Almost every family of good "taste" will have its private projection room in which miniatures of the greater films will be shown to the family. Will this interfere with the theaters? Not at all! In fact, cities of 20,000 will have more than a hundred first run picture houses. That would mean a theater for every 200 persons. Mr. Griffith may be wrong on that point.

"In the year 2024," he says, "the directors of the better order will be now graduated from schools and colleges devoting to motion picture direction. The actors and actresses will be given graduated from schools and colleges other devoted exclusively to the teaching and study of pantomime, acting or creating highly specialized roles in acting before the camera. This is inevitable.

Actors will then appear from the time they are born because the movies will be twice as high and the film theater will be twice as large. Movies will be made in natural colors and even the sets in their full size. Dancers for things to come in dancing in fact that a dance is devised that is exquisite very soon the United States Army, or at least a fair share of it, would be marching off to war playing one of the new dances.

Los Angeles (Cal) Times 5/22/24

Pueblo (Colo) News-Press May 21 1924

Variety (Ny) May 21 1924

Norwalk (Conn) Hour May 22 1924

Pasadena (Cal) Star-News May 22 1924

Pasadena (Cal) Herald May 22 1924

Moline (Ill) Dispatch May 24 1924

NEW FORUM THEATER

Erville Anderson as Justice Montague in "America" at the F...

Flushing (Ny) Journal 5/22/24

The Theatre on Broadway

By S. M. MINDELL

"AMERICA"

Never before have we been thrilled by a motion picture as we were last evening when we saw "America," D. W. Griffith's latest, at the 44th St. Theatre. This truly remarkable film is an epic of the indomitable spirit that carried our fore-fathers through the suffering of the Revolution, and made possible this great nation. Under the masterful direction of D. W. Griffith, this living, historical drama made us feel the great debt we owe to those men whose idealism freed America.

Griffith has altogether surpassed himself in this intense, soul-stirring spectacle. In it, he makes live for us the whole gamut of life of the early days of America. The placid life of the wealthy Virginian landowner, the growing discontent in Boston, the Court of George III, the first skirmish of the the revolution at Lexington, the battle of Concord, the signing of the Declaration of Independence, Valley Forge, are all repeated with such illusive fidelity that we forgot we are seeing a motion picture. It lives before one's eyes.

Into this vivid and exciting background, Mr. Griffith has woven a most charming and delicate love story.

The cast assembled for this production is most praiseworthy. Among those stars well known to the movie fan are, (to mention but a few) Lionel Barrymore, Carol Dempster, Louis Wolheim, Lucille Laverne, and Charles Mack. Neil Hamilton, one of the most handsome and likable heroes we've seen in months, personifies the heroic spirit of our American youth. Carol Dempster, the charming heroine, follows well in the footsteps of Mae Marsh and Lillian Gish, former Griffith stars.

The rest of the numerous cast deserves praise for their fine acting and vivid interpretation.

The photography and, lastly, the musical setting merit superlative commendation.

"America" has set a new high-water mark of motion picture achievement. You simply must see it!

Los Angeles (Cal) Times 5/22/24

THE THEATRE ON BROADWAY.

By S. M. MINDELL

"AMERICA"

Never before have we been thrilled by a motion picture as we were last evening when we saw "America," D. W. Griffith's latest, at the 44th St. Theatre. This truly remarkable film is an epic of the indomitable spirit that carried our fore-fathers through the suffering of the Revolution, and made possible this great Nation. Under the masterful direction of D. W. Griffith, this living, historical drama made us feel the great debt we owe to those men whose idealism freed America.

Griffith has altogether surpassed himself in this intense, soul-stirring spectacle. In it, he makes live for us the whole gamut of life of the early days of America. The placid life of the wealthy Virginian landowner, the growing discontent in Boston, the Court of George III, the first skirmish of the revolution at Lexington, the battle of Concord, the signing of the Declaration of Independence, Valley Forge, are all repeated with such illusive fidelity that we forgot we are seeing a motion picture. It lives before one's eyes.

Into this vivid and exciting background, Mr. Griffith has woven a most charming and delicate love story.

The cast assembled for this production is most praiseworthy. Among those stars well known to the movie fan are, (to mention but a few) Lionel Barrymore, Carol Dempster, Louis Wolheim, Lucille Laverne, and Charles Mack. Neil Hamilton, one of the most handsome and likable heroes we've seen in months, personifies the heroic spirit of our American youth. Carol Dempster, the charming heroine, follows well in the footsteps of Mae Marsh and Lillian Gish, former Griffith stars.

The rest of the numerous cast deserves praise for their fine acting and vivid interpretation.

The photography and, lastly, the musical setting merit superlative commendation.

"America" has set a new high-water mark of motion picture achievement. You simply must see it!

Bush Amber (Ny) News 5/22/24

BROADWAY THEATRES

"America"

Morning Telegraph (Ny) May 24 1924

WAR DEPARTMENT STOPS USE OF ARMY IN FILMS

There can be but one "America."

The United States war department has settled that. When D. W. Griffith producer of this great screen romance, conceived the idea of using United States regular army soldiers for his battle scenes, and Secretary of War Weeks, impressed by the historical value of "America," arranged to loan large units of the army for use as extras, both of them overlooked the fact that whenever Griffith does something a thousand lesser lights of filmdom try to follow suit.

Hardly had Griffith finished using the 18th and 19th Infantry for the battles of Lexington, Concord and Bunker Hill, and the famous Third Cavalry as Morgan's riflemen, than requests began to pour into the war department from film companies for the use of army units. It seemed as though, urged by the success of Griffith's picture, the entire film industry was about to deluge the country with Revolutionary War stories.

So thick and fast came these requests that it became apparent that if the war department followed the precedent established by Griffith, the entire army would be devoting its entire attention to motion pictures to the exclusion of all else.

So an order has been issued by the department, prohibiting any further use of regular army men in photoplays. And as Griffith declares that it is impossible to accurately restage the great conflicts of the War of Independence, except with highly trained regulars,—there can be but one "America."

Bird censuses are to be taken this summer by the United States department of agriculture and most of the work will be done by unpaid, volunteer observers.

Cleveland (O) Times 5/21/24

Wareham (Mass) Courier May 23 1924

Beckstill (Ny) Union 5/23/24

Silent Drama

BY KATHRYN KENNEY

THE theater was at one time far more in the grasp of commercialism than it is at the present time. The moving picture occupies the place which was held by the theater some years ago; that is to say, it is at present under the influence of money sans art and a higher form of intelligence.

The little theater movement was an answer to the threatened tawdriness and incoherency in the theater, and something of the same sort is beginning to evidence itself in the moving picture world.

Of course, a clientele is gradually being created for the better sort of play, composed for the greater part of those who ignored the silent drama altogether until a few outstanding pictures convinced them of the possibilities of artistry and effective results. It is for the producer to educate that part of the public who discriminate intelligently, and the time may come when a different variety of play will be shown at different theaters, a thing which has nearly come to pass with the serial, which has a distinct public and is invariably shown in certain houses.

Take the great expense involved in mob scenes as an instance. How many individuals have witnessed a mob scene in life corresponding to the several thousand-dollar crowds which run to everything from a fire to a guillotine in pictures? Once of that sort of thing is assuredly enough, and more than enough. Many directors imagine that an audience feels cheated unless all the extras in Hollywood earn a day's food in every picture in which it is possible to insert them. Seriously, a reflection of life is what the majority want, not an incitement to the senses through the medium of unheard-of grandeur, clothing and furniture.

Very few people live in negligee the greater part of the time in houses where a telephone connection becomes a necessity for the furtherance of conversation across the room. The homes of the wealthy are depicted as hotels on a large scale and ball rooms of the "nouveau riche" put Buckingham palace to shame. Yet when a picture such as "A Woman of Paris" or "The Marriage Circle" is created and shown to an ungrateful public there is a sense of disillusionment with many which is similar to the effects of reading philosophy after a round with the Elsie books. But to the educated and intelligent mind it is about as much of a let-down as the fact that there is no Santa Claus.

With the future of the screen will come beauty of line and expression, simplicity and an entirely new art. It will be a vocation for artists and not for laymen, and this future has been glimpsed through the efforts which stand revealed in the productions of D. W. Griffith, Chaplin and Lubitsch.

Hackensack (Nj) Record May 22 1924

ART OF MAKING PICTURES

THAT moving pictures can be made educational in character is recognized by the master of moving picture art, D. W. Griffith. If there were more directors like him pictures would not only be more artistically made, but they would also be devoid of cheap and gaudy features which characterize the majority of films today.

The great historical dramas, depicted with fidelity and truth, such as the "Birth of a Nation" and "America," are distinct contributions, both to literature and art.

Believers in the moving pictures as educational features of the life of today, lovers of truth, of beauty and of art, all unite in praise of such directors as appear to take their calling seriously and who render contributions equal to those rendered by the best writers and artists of all times.

They deplore the cheap and sordid effects of those directors and producers who pander to the sensual and sordid aspect of human affairs in order that box office receipts may be swelled to the greatest limit through the expenditure of the least money and the least effort.

Cheap pictures, like cheap literature, should be discouraged as much as possible. It cannot be expected that pictures will be any better than the source of production and it is a lamented fact that moving picture production is largely in the hands of men of little education, of little skill, who are entirely lacking in artistic spirit and who care nothing of the moral effect which the pictures will have on the audiences.

The public does not patronize such pictures from choice. It does so from necessity. It has been clearly shown by Mr. Griffith that real art can be made to pay and that the people appreciate good pictures when given the opportunity to see them. It is unfortunate that the opportunities are so rare, that so few actors are real artists and that so many of them are exploited for reasons which have nothing at all to do with histrionic ability, but rather because of their ability to appeal to the animal senses of their beholders.

It is time that moving picture production be lifted out of the class of a mere manufacturing enterprise and be placed where it belongs—in the category of the arts and sciences.

THE THEATRE ON BROADWAY

by S. M. Mindell

"AMERICA"

Never before have we been thrilled by a motion picture as we were last evening when we saw "America," D. W. Griffith's latest, at the 44th St. Theatre. This truly remarkable film is an epic of the indomitable spirit that carried our fore-fathers through the suffering of the Revolution, and made possible this great Nation. Under the masterful direction of D. W. Griffith, this lifing, historical drama made us feel the great debt we owe to those men whose idealism freed America.

Griffith has altogether surpassed himself in this intense, soulstirring spectacle. In it, he makes live for us the whole gamut of life of the early days of America. The placid life of the wealthy Virginian landowner, the growing discontent in Boston, the Court of George III, the first skirmish of the Revolution at Lexington, the battle of Concord, the signing of the Declaration of Independence, Valley Forge, are all recreated with such illusive fidelity that we forgot we were seeing a motion picture. It lives before one's eyes.

Into this vivid and exciting background, Mr. Griffith has woven a most charming and delicate love story.

The photoplay and, lastly, the musical setting merit superlative commendation.

"America" has set a new high-water mark of motion picture achievement. You simply must see it!

The Daily Union welcomes news of a social and personal nature but it is impossible for us to keep in touch with the various items under this head without your help. Therefore, when you have a bit of news which may be of interest to your friends do not fail to give us the details for publication. 'Phone 659, or send them in. We are always at your service, glad and willing to chronicle the social happenings of the community.

Exhibitors Herald Chicago May 24 1924

Italy Soon to Become Important Film Producer, Says Griffith

Banking Interests Want Him to Make Pictures Abroad Lytell Proves His Point

By JOHN S. SPARGO

NEW YORK, April 13.—That Italy is not yet ready but soon will be to take an important position in the motion picture making industry is the belief of D. W. Griffith, who has just returned from a brief survey of producing conditions there. Mr. Griffith's trip to Italy was to look over the field in connection with a proposition advanced by an Italian banking interest for him to make pictures in Italy.

"Italy must build practical studios before it can hope to compete with America, either in cost or quality of its motion pictures," said Mr. Griffith.

"The studios in Italy are duplicates of the American ones of ten years ago. My estimates showed it would be more expensive to make a picture there than in America.

Syracuse (Ny) Journal May 24 1924

Chicago (Ill) Post May 24 1924 | Camden (N.J.) Courier 5/24/24 | Saginaw (Mich) News-America 5/25/24 | Philadelphia (Pa) Public Ledger 5/25/24 | Philadelphia Record 5/25/24

'Lexington Aided America'

Lexington, Mass., is proud of its glorious traditions. So proud, in fact, that when representatives of a motion-picture producer broached the subject of restaging some of the historic scenes on Lexington Green of April 19, 1775, the whole town almost rose in its wrathful horror.

But when David Wark Griffith convinced Lexington that the scenes were for "America" the photodramatic romance of the War of American Independence, requested by the Daughters of the American Revolution, the modern minutemen of Lexington offered every possible facility.

This explains why the Lexington, Concord, and Boston scenes in Griffith's "America," now playing at the Auditorium, are accurate and authentic.

John L. E. Pell, author of "Down to the Sea in Ships," who made the historical arrangement of "America," the story of which was written by Robert W. Chambers, the novelist, was the emissary chosen by Mr. Griffith to secure the co-operation of the Lexington authorities.

"It was characteristic of us as New Englanders that we didn't warm up to the idea at all at first," said Edwin B. Worthen, president of the Lexington Historical society, in discussing the matter the other day.

"In fact, the very idea of using such a shrine as the Hancock-Clarke house as the locale for a motion picture caused a shiver to run down the backs of most of us. Lexington and its historic associations seemed too sacred to us to be reproduced on the screen."

Mr. Pell's request was a large one. He wanted the co-operation of the Lexington Historical society, the use of the Hancock-Clarke and other historic houses, the use of invaluable historical relics, and the services of historical experts. However, he got what he asked for, and the result is shown in "America."

Minute Men in "America," Chestnut St. Opera House

Philadelphia (Pa) Evening Public Ledger May 24 1924

Los Angeles (Cal) Sat. Night 5/24/24

There is a vehemence of patriotism and thrilling love of country instilled in one by D. W. Griffith's "America," which opened the impressive New Forum Theater, last week. Mr. Grifith has become over zealous in his production to the point of picturing British atrocities in the Revolutionary War and overstressing the feeling of enmity against England, but on the whole, it compares favorably with his best work. The simple-hearted, courageous makers of the United States are shown with fidelity in this film. If the picture does nothing more than inspire in Americans a greater love of country and renew and strengthen a wavering respect for the Constitution and the forefathers who made it possible, it will have achieved success. The first half of "America" is decidedly the better portion. The early rumblings of war are heard, the patriots are gathering in forces, the first little skirmishes are held. Paul Revere's ride is the most striking, single episode of the picture. It does not possess the thrill-power I had hoped for, after reading a number of eastern criticism. However, the ride is dramatic and drawn closely along historical lines. The scenes in the Virginia legislature, with Patrick Henry addressing the assembly, the outnumbered, loyal patriots lining up in the streets of Lexington, the indomitable courage of Washington's men at Valley Forge, are scenes that will long be remembered. Unmistakably, "America" has the stamp of Griffith burned into it, which, of course, does not detract. Neil Hamilton, Erville Alderson and Charles Emmet Mack offer the most convincing performances, although the entire cast gives evidence of [illegible] effort.

Chicago Sec News 5/24/24

Los Angeles (Cal) Examiner 5/24/24

Duluth (Minn) Herald 5/24/24

AN IMPORTANT DETAIL

In the scenes of D. W. Griffith's "America" at the Chestnut Street Opera House depicting the House of Burgesses in Virginia when its members and visitors are thrown into a state of great excitement by the news that a tax had been levied by England upon the shipments of tea into this country, Mr. Griffiths has introduced a detail of considerable significance. It is that of a black mask carried by Carol Dempster, in the character of the little Tory Nancy Montague upon her visit to the gallery of the House of Burgesses. At first glance some might take it to be a fan, but a closer scrutiny reveals its identity. The introduction of the mask shows only too clearly that it was the custom of the women of those days to cover up their faces when visiting in places of public.

ACTOR WILL POSE FOR STATUE OF WASHINGTON

Neil Hamilton, the new D. W. Griffith star in the romantic national picture "America," has been asked by Henry H. Kitson, the sculptor, to pose for a statue which has been ordered as a memorial for Washington's headquarters at Newburgh, N. Y.

Mr. Kitson is the sculptor of the famous statue of the Minute Man at Lexington Common.

After seeing Hamilton in the hero's role, he selected him as the ideal type of the American man.

Exhibitors Herald Chicago Sec May 24 1924

That's Out

Griffith has just got back from Italy where he says they have studios ten years behind the times. And they want to make pictures that cost about what pictures did five years ago.

Los Angeles (Cal) Times 5/24/24

CONCEPTION OF HISTORY ALL WRONG

D. W. Griffith's Research Into Revolutionary Era Shows Popular Errors

Hamilton posed by the [illegible] on the historical field of Washington crossing the Delaware is unconvincing, according to David Wark Griffith, who made the picture "America," starring at the Auditorium last week.

Los Angeles (Cal) Examiner 5/24/24

ITALY CONSIDERS ERIC PRODUCTION

Griffith Uncertain as to Whether to Undertake Task.

DISCUSSES HIS TRIP

D. W. Griffith is home from Italy, having gone there at the request of an Italian syndicate who wished to talk over with him the possibility of producing a big picture, which it was hoped would increase Italy's prestige in the film business. Mr. Griffith asserted that the trip was just as much to get a rest as to talk business. He said that Americans are speeding up Italian telephones and railroads, and that it was thought that an American producer might emulate his confreres in stimulating the production of pictures. He explained that at present there is no studio in Rome which would permit of making scenes such as are made in this country, but that the banking syndicate assured him that in three or four months they would have facilities in a new studio now building with a lighting system than can draw upon 3,000 amperes. The Banco Commerciale Italiana is back of the syndicate.

"Italy wishes to be a great world power," declared Mr. Griffith, "and they look upon the picture business as a wonderful institution and a remarkable medium for reaching the whole world. They had heard of 'America' and they liked the idea as it was outlined to them. They have voted a large sum of money for the purpose of a film production, but so far they have no adequate facilities for making the picture. However, negotiations are still pending, and there is a possibility of my returning. Of course Italian ideas are utterly different from ours.

Would Cost Less in Italy.

"I told them that my last picture cost more than $1,000,000 and that their American representative could go over my books. They were not dumbfounded at the stupendous sum, but it nevertheless made them scratch their heads when it was translated into lire. If they finish the new studio, it is their idea to make a picture bigger than has hitherto been produced. Settings would be much cheaper than the cost of constructing these in America, and then there is the question of 'extras.' In Italy extras receive about twelve lire a day, equivalent now to 53 cents. We have to pay them $5 to $7 a day. There is a catch about these Italian 'extras' however. They just appear for that amount. If they are left standing around one does not have to pay them any more than 53 cents, but supposing they are asked to run, or carry a heavy spear or even to applaud, they then are entitled to more money. In the event that these men are paid for each trifling performance from 12 to 100 lire, and I were to make forty retakes, the cost of production would be something to puzzle about, and we would require special auditors and bookkeepers to keep track of the 'extras' and their respective performances. In fact, one would imagine that referees would be necessary to determine the importance of each 'extra' and his work.

Protracted Luncheons.

"Italians are in the habit of taking two hours for luncheon. The importance of eating and drinking is far beyond that of making pictures! I don't know what I would be doing while they were consuming food and beverages for this protracted period.

"Then there is the question of imparting my wishes to the players. I can easily see that if I made a picture in Italy I would want American principals, as talking to Italians through an interpreter would be most unsatisfactory and extremely slow. Have you ever heard an interpreter translating English into Italian? I try tell the interpreter to tell the Italian it is raining and he appears to trace the rain down to Jupiter, call attention to floods caused by rain, to allude to umbrellas and raincoats, to refer to the consequent growth of plants and fields and the results of droughts, and then said four or five words which in Italy appear to make a whole chapter.

"One can readily imagine the difficulties that might ensue if I attempted to direct a picture with Italian actors, using all the instructions through an interpreter! Think of the flow of rhetoric of the 20-minute sentences which I would have to listen before my [illegible] words were intelligible to the players. No, I would certainly have American principals and do the best I could with the circumstances with the minor talent and 'extras.'

"I did not see Mussolini, but I met a high and mighty official of the Government, Cantalari, who, I believe, is consul. He is head of the armed Fascisti. He has an office in a barracks and armed sentries met me at the gate. The room in which I found Cantalari is decorated in black, relieved with touches of white. You can imagine its weird appearance. Just as I was taking a seat I noticed on a little side table a skull and some bones. I gather that they were placed there to remind one of the brevity of life. Still nor Cantalari appeared to be quite cheerful in these surroundings. He was in uniform and pulled forth a set of boxing gloves which, he said, he would put on with me. I made an appointment for the encounter in spite of his being a big, muscular man. My date with him is in May, 1925. Everything in this barracks was full of up-to-date 'pep,' the Italian idea of hustle and bustle. Everybody seemed to be running. They never walk, as that would be too slow. They salute on the run and it is perfectly en regle. I went to see Cantalari about 'movies,' but when I saw this barracks with all the men in black shirts scampering in all directions, saluting here and saluting there, some of them with the skull and cross bones on their black shirts (they are the musketeers) going on errands or arriving, some fast runners, some slowies, some slender and some plump, some with long legs and others with long bodies—you can picture the scene of haste and I may be pardoned for letting motion pictures fade instanter from my mind.

"They do not bother about Chaplin in Italy. At Leggi one man I saw told me that they didn't. They have 'The Kid' over there, and the player they explain in this production is not Chaplin, but Jackie Coogan. They are showing some American pictures in Roman theaters but they are far behind the times in their presentations."

Scene from "AMERICA" (film) CHESTNUT STREET OPERA HOUSE

Los Angeles (Cal) News 4/25/24 | Phila (Pa) North American 5/25/24

CAROL DEMPSTER in "AMERICA" (The Forum)

LionelBarrymore in "AMERICA" at CHESTNUT

Philadelphia (Pa) Public Ledger May 25 1924

Making Over History

It is unfortunate from the historical point of view that artists and writers choose the spectacular rather than the important events and incidents of a war as the subjects for their paintings and their writings. For it very frequently happens that the really important events of a great war, like those of human life in general, lack that spectacular quality which inspires the artist and the writer, and hence, being neglected, gradually pass from the ken of men. Minutiae, less events both important and spectacular have been overshadowed by events which might be termed "super-spectacular" and so have passed from memory.

So it probably is that one of the most important campaigns of the War of American Independence, having failed through to accord the Americans, has been almost forgotten. It has remained for David Wark Griffith, creating his America, the romance of the Revolution, now at the Chestnut Street Opera House to bring from the [illegible] dusty pages of history the story of Arnold's attempt to sell his country for the gold which he failed to make a whole country.

[illegible]

Columbus (O) Dispatch 5/25/24

To Be Only One "America"

—SAYS WAR DEPT.

There can be but one "America." The United States War Department has settled that. When D. W. Griffith, producer of this great screen romance, conceived the idea of using United States regular army soldiers for his battle scenes, and Secretary of War Weeks impressed by the historical value of "America," arranged to lend large units of the army for use as extras, both of them overlooked the fact that whenever Griffith does something a hundred times better of Hughes try to follow suit.

Hughes had Griffith [illegible] the Sixteenth and Eighteenth Infantry for the battles of Lexington, Concord and Bunker Hill, and the Sixteenth Field Artillery as Hessians. Then [illegible] begins to run out. The War Department from the beginning for the use of regular units in America as though urged by the success of Griffith's picture. The [illegible] the United States army [illegible] the Colonial and Revolutionary [illegible]

[illegible]

Washington Herald May 24 1924

Griffith Lands Wallhall's Art

[illegible]

Oklahoma (Okla) Oklahoman May 25 1924

GRIFFITH FINDS NEW 'SHEIK' FOR MOVIES

Neil Hmilton Expected To Take Valentino's Stuff.

A [illegible] and greater Valentino, a new "[illegible]" of the screen, has been discovered by David Wark Griffith, who discovered and "made" a majority of the greatest day movie stars.

The new heartsey in the film world is none other than Neil Hamilton, the sturdy, handsome, young American boy who plays the leading male role in Griffith's "America," the romance of the war of American independence now the Roxaltos in New York and Boston. Critics of both cities have joined together in forecasting a great future for young Hamilton, who [illegible] and Hamilton [illegible] is one of the outstanding artistic credits for Hamilton, whose portrayal of the young Hessian officer [illegible]

Although Hamilton discovered and made Hartsewood, the star, [illegible] Hamilton, and many other [illegible] the Hessian of Hessian, the [illegible] is no doubt that he [illegible] the role of Hamilton, who is the [illegible] of the Griffith [illegible] Revolutionary [illegible]

[illegible]

Los Angeles (Cal) Examiner

Philadelphia (Pa) Inquirer 4/25/24

Scene from "America" at Chestnut Street Opera House

Phila (Pa) Record 5/25/24

Pittsburgh (Pa) Gazette Times 5/24/24

FILM OFFER TO AID FOR MEMORIAL STATUE

[illegible]

Pittsburgh (Pa) Sun-Telegraph 5/24/24

Griffith Again in America

Talks of Italian Vis

Consulted With Bankers About a Picture Prod tion—Saw Cantalari and Made Engagement to Box With Him.

D. W. GRIFFITH, producer of "America," now playing its last week at the Chestnut Street Opera House, has returned from Italy, where he went at the request of an Italian syndicate to talk over the possibility of producing a big picture to add to Italy's prestige in the film business.

"Italy wishes to be a great world Power," he declared last week, "and they look upon the picture business as a wonderful institution and a remarkable medium for reaching the whole world. They had heard of 'America,' and they liked the idea as it was outlined to them. They have voted a large sum of money for the purpose of a film production, but so far they have no adequate facilities for making the picture. However, negotiations are still pending, and there is a possibility of my returning. Of course Italian ideas are utterly different from ours.

"I told them that my last picture cost more than $1,000,000 and that their American representative could go over my books. They were not dumfounded at the stupendous sum, but it nevertheless made them scratch their heads when the amount was translated into lire. If they finish the new studio that is to be erected in Rome, it is their idea to make a picture bigger than has hitherto been produced. Settings would be much cheaper than the cost of constructing these in America, and then there is the question of 'extras.' In Italy 'extras' receive about 12 lire a day, equivalent now to 53 cents. We have to pay them $5 to $7 a day. There is a catch about these Italian 'extras' however. They just 'appear' for that amount. If they are left standing around one does not have to pay them any more than 53 cents, but supposing they are asked to run, or carry a heavy spear or even to applaud, they then are entitled to more money. In the event that these men are paid for each trifling performance from 12 to 100 lire, and I were to make 40 retakes, the cost of production would be something to puzzle about, and would require special auditors and bookkeepers to keep track of the 'extras' and their respective performances. In fact, one would imagine that referees would be necessary to determine the importance of each 'extra' and his work.

"Then there is the question of imparting my wishes to the players. I can easily see that if I made a picture in Italy I would want American principals, as talking to Italians through an interpreter would be most unsatisfactory and extremely slow. Have you ever heard an interpreter translating English into Italian? I try tell the interpreter to tell the Italian it is raining and he appears to trace the rain down to Jupiter, call attention to floods caused by rain, to allude to umbrellas and raincoats, to refer to the consequent growth of plants and fields and the results of droughts, and then said four or five words which in Italy appear to make a whole chapter.

"One can readily imagine the difficulties that might ensue if I attempted to direct a picture with Italian actors, using all the instructions through an interpreter! Think of the flow of rhetoric of the 20-minute sentences which I would have to listen before my [illegible] words were intelligible to the players. No, I would certainly have American principals and do the best I could with the circumstances with the minor talent and 'extras.'

"I did not see Mussolini, but I met a high and mighty official of the Government, Cantalari, who, I believe, is consul. He is head of the armed Fascisti. He has an office in a barracks and armed sentries met me at the gate. The room in which I found Cantalari is decorated in black, relieved with touches of white. You can imagine its weird appearance. Just as I was taking a seat I noticed on a little side table a skull and some bones. I gather that they were placed there to remind one of the brevity of life. Still nor Cantalari appeared to be quite cheerful in these surroundings. He was in uniform and pulled forth a set of boxing gloves which, he said, he would put on with me. I made an appointment for the encounter in spite of his being a big, muscular man. My date with him is in May, 1925. Everything in this barracks was full of up-to-date 'pep,' the Italian idea of hustle and bustle. Everybody seemed to be running. They never walk, as that would be too slow. They salute on the run and it is perfectly en regle. I went to see Cantalari about 'movies,' but when I saw this barracks with all the men in black shirts scampering in all directions, saluting here and saluting there, some of them with the skull and cross bones on their black shirts (they are the musketeers) going on errands or arriving, some fast runners, some slowies, some slender and some plump, some with long legs and others with long bodies—you can picture the scene of haste and I may be pardoned for letting motion pictures fade instanter from my mind.

"They do not bother about Chaplin in Italy. At Leggi one man I saw told me that they didn't. They have 'The Kid' over there, and the player they explain in this production is not Chaplin, but Jackie Coogan. They are showing some American pictures in Roman theaters but they are far behind the times in their presentations."

D. W. GRIFFITH

Phila (Pa) Record 5/25/24

Pittsburgh (Pa) Post 5/24/24

FILM OFFER TO AID FOR MEMORIAL STATUE

[illegible]

Chicago (Ill) Journal 5/26/24

Chicago (Ill) News 5/26/24

Chicago (Ill) Journal 5/26/24

Chicago (Ill) Journal 5/27/24

Chicago (Ill) Journal 5/31/24

Chicago (Ill) News May 31 1924

Chicago (Ill) Herald May 30 1924

Los Angeles (Cal) Record 5/29/24

Los Angeles (Cal) Times 5/27/24

Los Angeles (Cal) Herald May 30 1924

Los Angeles (Cal) Herald May 31 1924

Mamaroneck (N.Y.) Paragraph May 29 1924

Bronx (N.Y.) Home News 5/30/24

Houston Texas Post May 30 1924

White Plains (N.Y.) Reporter 5/31/24

Fresno (Cal) Bee 5/31/24

Austin (Tex) Statesman 5/31/24

Seattle (Wash) Mail May 31 1924

Lynn (Mass) Item May 31 1924

My Liberty Magazine May 31 1924

Evening Sun Daily (N.Y.) 5/27/24

N.Y. Times Sq Daily May 27 1924

Neil Hamilton, who has the male lead in the Griffith picture "America," has been asked by Henry H. Kitson, sculptor, to pose for a statue which has been ordered as a memorial for Washington's Headquarters at Newburgh, N. Y. Mr. Kitson made the statue of the Minute Man on Lexington Common. Before starting work Mr. Kitson came from his studio at Framingham, Mass., to New York to see "America," with the idea of getting inspiration for his study. After seeing Hamilton in the film the sculptor pronounced him as a fine type of young American manhood.

PATRIOTIC LESSON SEEN IN 'AMERICA'

Historical Film Spectacle at Auditorium Called D. W. Griffith's Finest Effort.

By PAUL R. MARTIN.

David Wark Griffith has done many fine things since first he proved to a waiting world that the motion picture could be made the medium of better dramatic effort than those tiresome and inane things which were so much in vogue a dozen or so years ago, and he startled film patrons everywhere with "The Birth of a Nation." Yes, Mr. Griffith has done much since then, and the present writer, viewing "Orphans of the Storm" season before last was inclined to the belief that in this offering, the greatest possibilities of screen art had been realized.

Naturally, Mr. Griffith has had his followers with Cecil DeMille, whose "Ten Commandments" is now current at Woods, and with Rex Ingraham, whose "Scaramouche" was here a few months ago, standing at the head of the line. Then there, was "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," one of the greatest of all screen offerings, and one which should have endured in Chicago much longer than it did. The men who are responsible for these productions are all worthy of commendation for each has contributed of his own store of originality. But after it is all said and done, it is David Wark Griffith who was the pioneer in the production of screen spectacle, and a Griffith offering will always be worthy of serious consideration.

I have mentioned "Orphans of the Storm" and well I remember the feeling of awe that came over me as I witnessed this marvellous spectacle; and yet, it was nothing as compared to the emotions which fairly swept me from my feet when I attended "America" which Mr. Griffith is now presenting at the Auditorium. Here, in my opinion, is the greatest picture ever presented in America. Not that it is more elaborate than many others that come to mind. Not that it is better from the standpoint of acting, or photography or general effect, but great because it serves a great mission.

There are too many people in this country today who are inclined to apologize for the manner in which this land of ours won its nationhood. Too many, who now look askance upon revolution as we know it in terms of 1776. Too many who blush when they think of their hardy colonial ancestors lying in wait behind the stone walls that line the road from Lexington to Concord, and taking pot-shots at the British redcoats as they marched by, bent upon subduing a people that opposed taxation without representation and all forms of tyranny.

This attitude on the part of so-called Americans has been responsible for a revision of a lot of school histories; it has brought about a revival of toryism and it has had no small influence in putting a damper upon Americanism as it was known in those days when the nation's birth pangs were still fresh in the memory. International brotherhood is a splendid doctrine and one that is deserving of cultivation, but no nation should forget its origin. Because of this, "America" as conceived in the story of Robert W. Chambers and adapted for the screen by D. W. Griffith is serving a great and a useful purpose. It is stimulating the minds of those who have forgotten historical facts. It is an excellent text book for those who have been led astray in the matter of history.

"America," be it known, is a story of the War of the Revolution. Through it there runs romance, but its principal charm as well as its value is in the fact that it visualizes as printed words could never do, some of the stirring events of that period which followed close upon the heels of the Boston Tea Party and terminated in the surrender of Lord Cornwallis to General Washington. This picture is crowded with historical characters, and faithfully are these portrayed by splendid actors. Paul Revere's ride is as dramatic an episode as the screen has yet set forth, and the battle scenes—pigmy like as compared with those real scenes of carnage in "Powder River," but thrilling, every one of them. Would that there were more pictures like "America."

Nathan Holden is the central male figure of "America" and his love for the daughter of a prominent Tory, with the subsequent conversion of the Tory family to the American cause, gives the element of romance aside from its historical interest. However, it is not in this plot that the principal charm of this picture lies, but rather in its presentation of life as it was lived during the times of the Revolution, its portrayal of those figures who were leaders of the cause, and in the accuracy of its detail. Neil Hamilton is seen as Nathan Holden, while Mr. Griffith's newest star, Carol Dempster plays opposite him. Lionel Barrymore is Capt. Butler, the British officer-villain, with Louis Wolheim as his accomplice. It is interesting to note that Lucile LaVerne, who is scoring a triumph in "Sun Up" at the LaSalle, has a small character part.

One Actor's Start.

Charles Emmett Mack, whose performance in the role of young Montague is one of the outstanding features of D. W. Griffith's "America" now at the Auditorium theater, is a native of Scranton, Pa., where he attended St. Thomas' college.

While in college he saw the circus for the first time, and, lured by the apparently care-free gypsy life of the circus man, he decided that the moment he got his diploma he would run away from home and become a clown.

He carried out this resolve, joining a small tent show and later adding himself to Ringling Brothers' "greatest show on earth," with which he traveled for two seasons. He soon lost both his illusions as to circus life being care-free and easy and his desire for travel. But his desire for a histrionic career remained and he went into vaudeville. Finding even the traveling there too irksome, he joined a stock company and settled down to a real apprenticeship for theatrical work.

Struck by the opportunities which the silver sheet offered to young actors, Mack sought work in the studios and was finally successful in joining the Griffith forces, getting a small part in "Dream Street."

Since that time he has appeared exclusively under the Griffith banner.

His Films Abound

David Wark Griffith, master of the cinema, has his two greatest pictures on view this week and four notable screens are given over to his work. While his "America" sweeps along at the Auditorium, where it is shown twice daily, his famous "The Birth of a Nation" holds forth at the Woodlawn, Senate and Parkway.

"America" in 'Frisco August

Los Angeles May 26.

D. W. Griffith's "America" will have its premiere in San Francisco at the Curran early in August. It is scheduled to play there at least six weeks.

NEW COMMUNITY HOUSE, ALL LOCALLY PROMOTED, CAN'T FIGURE OVERHEAD

Forum in Los Angeles Cost $1,000,000—Sheriff in Box Office First Week—Griffith's "America" Guaranteed $75,000, High Record

Los Angeles May 26.

D. W. Griffith's "America," which opened last night at the Hancock for three days, is the best historical moving picture ever made. It is a splendidly done battle spectacle of the American Revolution, produced, as the captions tell, to show the sacrifices of our forefathers in their fight for liberty.

Although the love story that contains this piece is of little consequence, those interested in history will sit enthralled through the magnificence of this newest Griffith correspondence, which is a document that will tend to preserve for future generations an significant photographic record of conditions during the days of 1776.

The cinematography is the best that Griffith has contributed to the screen, particularly the showing of Paul Revere's midnight ride and the presentation of the battle of Bunker Hill and the assault of the British forces of [illegible] through the snow [illegible] that had been reddened by [illegible]

[illegible]

WAR ON OPPRESSORS JUSTIFIED BY PASTOR

Advising his hearers to see Griffith's picture, "America," now being shown at the Forum, and to study again the cause for which the patriots fought, Rev. William C. Isett, pastor of Amanda Chapel, preached yesterday on "See America First." An excerpt from the sermon follows:

"I am for peace, so much for peace that I am willing to lay down my life upon the battlefield if need be to obtain it and righteousness. I am no stranger to the battlefields of France, the sound of bursting shells or the horror of destructive death. There is a movement among the churches to abolish war, and I shall lend my aid with heart and soul because I have seen war face to face. But I do not believe war is contrary to the teaching of the Bible, or participation in it a sin. For if it is, then God commanded men to sin, and that is not within the range of my belief. War is terrible; it is horrible. It is one of the three greatest calamities than can come upon a nation. It is a judgment sent from God. But it is not sin, though sinful things are done in the cause of war. The only way to abolish war is to establish the Kingdom of God, no matter what it costs us. Just as the spirit of co-operation and force, if necessary, famine and pestilence have been stamped out of a great part of the world, so by this same spirit of goodwill and work will war be eliminated from society. It was selfish, ignorant greed which brought on the Revolutionary War, but out of it sprang the spirit of America—the spirit of liberty for all peoples."

D. W. Griffith's "America," which opened last night at the Hancock for three days, is the best historical moving picture ever made. It is a splendidly done battle spectacle of the American Revolution, produced, as the captions tell, to show the sacrifices of our forefathers in their fight for liberty.

Although the love story that contains this piece is of little consequence, those interested in history will sit enthralled through the magnificence of this newest Griffith correspondence, which is a document that will tend to preserve for future generations an significant photographic record of conditions during the days of 1776.

The cinematography is the best that Griffith has contributed to the screen, particularly the showing of Paul Revere's midnight ride and the presentation of the battle of Bunker Hill and the assault of the British forces of [illegible] through the snow [illegible] that had been reddened by [illegible]

[illegible]

NEW FORUM THEATER

Carol Dempster and Arthur Dewey as Nancy Montague and George Washington in D. W. Griffith's "America," Forum theater.

THERE CAN BE BUT ONE "AMERICA"

The United States War Department has settled that. When D. W. Griffith, producer of this great screen romance, conceived the idea of using United States regular army soldiers for his battle scenes, and Secretary of War Weeks, impressed by the historical value of "America," arranged to loan large units of the army for use as supers, both of them overlooked the fact that whenever Griffith does something a thousand lesser lights of filmdom try to follow suit.

Hardly had Griffith finished using the 16th and 18 Infantry for the battles of Lexington, Concord and Bunker Hill, and the famous Third Calvary as Morgan's Riflemen, than request began to pour into the War Department from film companies for the use of army units. It seemed as though, urged by the success of Griffith's picture, the entire film industry was about to deluge the country with Revolutionary War stories.

So thick and fast came these requests that it became apparent that if the War Department followed the precedent established by Griffith, the entire army would be devoting its entire attention to motion pictures to the exclusion of all else.

So an order has been issued by the Department, prohibiting any further use of regular army men in photoplays. Ar[illegible]s Griffith declares that it is im[illegible]e to accurately re-stage the geat co[illegible]s of the War of Independence, ex[illegible] with highly trained regulars,—the[illegible] can be but one "America."

Films of the Future

A movi[illegible] every home is the prophecy of [illegible] Wark Griffith, famous producer of motion pictures, who in Collier's peers into the future of the film industry. "One hundred years hence," writes Griffith, "I believe, the airplane passenger lines will operate motion-picture shows on regular schedule between New York and Chicago and between New York and London. Trains, which will be traveling twice or three times as fast as they do now, will have film theaters on board. Almost every home of good taste will have its private projection room where miniatures, perhaps, of the greater films will be shown to the family, and, of course, families will make their albums in motion pictures instead of in tintypes and 'stills.'

"By the time these things come to pass, there will be no such thing as a flicker in your film. Your characters and objects in pictures will come upon the screen (which by then may not even be white, and certainly may not be square, or look anything like what it does now), and they will appear to the onlookers precisely as these persons and objects appear in real life. That much discussed 'depth' in pictures, which no one as yet has been able to employ successfully, will long since have been discovered and adopted. The moving canvas will not appear flat, but if a character moves before a fireplace you will recognize the distance as between the character and the fireplace.

"Likewise, in landscapes, you will feel the proper sense of distance. Your mountain peaks will not appear to rise one on top of the other, but will appear exactly as if you stood and looked at them. Of course these are merely details that will require long and intense study and experiment, but they will come. In other words, from the standpoint of naturalness, motion pictures 100 years from now will be so nearly like the living person or the existing object pictured that you will be unable, sitting in your orchestra seat, to determine whether they are pictures or the real thing."

Carol Dempster

Famous Griffith star who has leading role in 'America' at the Forum.

LONG LEGS ON SHORT TORSO SAID TO DENOTE INTELLIGENCE

If you have a small body and long arms and legs the chances are you are highly intelligent and will find success in some kind of brain work.

If you have a large body and short arms and legs, brain work is probably not your forte, and you would do best to follow some manual trade, or at least a line of work requiring steadiness and accuracy rather than quickness of mind.

If you are of a normal type—that is, if your limbs are not disproportionately long or short in comparison with the size of your body—you may be either intelligent or unintelligent. Whether you are suited for brain work or manual labor can not be told accurately from your bodily measurements.

These in effect are the conclusions science has reached as a result of the latest inevstigations in the field of physiological psychology, says Henry E. Garrett, Ph. D., of the department of psychology, Columbia university, writing in Popular Science Monthly. Recently, he asserts, he and Dr. Sante Naccarati of New York, specialist in nervous and mental diseases, conducted a test of this theory among about 300 students of Columbia university, and the results tended to show that a very definite relationship exists between bodily structure and intelligence, this despite the fact that no very unintelligent individuals would be found among a group of college students.

In the test the length of each man's limbs was obtained—the combined length of one arm and one leg. This figure was then divided by the volume of his body, the result indicating to what body type he belonged. This result was then compared with each man's tested intelligence as indicated by his class work and the standing obtained in standard psychological tests. Of the men examined, says Dr. Garrett, 76 per cent of the small-bodied, long-legged men, 40 per cent of the normal men and 15 per cent of the large-bodied, short-legged men showed high intelligence. "It is surprising," writes Dr. Garrett, "how thoroughly the conclusions reached in the test seem to be borne out in the case of well known men. Henry Ford, John D. Rockefeller, General Pershing, Booth Tarkington and David Wark Griffith might be named as the outstanding Americans of this generation in their particular fields. All of them are long-legged men with short bodies. Washington and Lincoln and Woodrow Wilson likewise were of this type. President Coolidge, the late President Harding, Andrew W. Mellon, Tesla, Marconi, the Wright brothers, and a host of others are typically long-limbed men with small bodies.

"Edison belongs to the normal type. So did Theodore Roosevelt. So do David Belasco, Charles Evans Hughes and Elihu Root. The names of two other men occur to me—Jack Dempsey and Luis Angel Firpo. Not even their staunchest admirers would claim that they possess a much intelligence as any of the others I have mentioned. Both of them fall into the class of large-bodied, short-legged men."

As to the scientific reason for the apparent relationship between bodily proportions and intelligence, Dr. Garrett says the most tenable explanation is based on facts given by the study of the ductless glands, particularly the action of the thyroid gland in the neck. Activity or inactivity of this gland, he asserts, influences both the body type and the intelligence with the results that he gives.

Was King George III fat or lean? Pi[illegible] fans who have seen Harry Beaumont's "Beau Brummel," the Warner Brothers production starring John Barrymore in the part made famous by the late Richard Mansfield, find the George III in that picture a robust individual, whereas, those who witness David Wark Griffith's big drama based on the Revolution, "America," which comes for its local premiere soon, will find a distinctly different type of actor as George III, the English monarch who [illegible] in during America's fi[illegible]

Educational Value of Motion Pictures

BY JEAN F. WEBB, III

First Year High School Best Essay Submitted in Contest at Loew's State Theatre

The influence of the "movie" on modern school children is tremendous. The educational value of motion pictures is so great as to be inestimable, provided, of course, that the proper kind of pictures is selected—and there is now circulating a wealth of such pictures, embracing almost all of the subjects taught in our schools.

The important part which the motion picture plays in the historical education of the school children today is conceded by all. When [illegible] after having seen D. W. Griffith's great masterpiece, "America," but has a more profound impression of the tremendous sacrifice and indomitable courage by which our revolutionary ancestors won for the children we enjoy today, they could use to extract from a printed history?

Other wonderful pictures which present in showing among the period the correct [illegible] "Liberty" and the Rob Universal Film [illegible] called the "Cavalcade of America," which depicts thirty periods of American history.

As in the historical education which can be gleaned from the movies, we are far better than just [illegible] [illegible] the [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

Chicago Sec Post Camden (N.J.) May 24 1924 Courier 5/24/24 Saginaw (Mich) News-America 5/25/24 Philadelphia Pa Public Ledger 5/25/24 Philadelphia Record 5/25/24

'Lexington Aided America'

Lexington, Mass., is proud of its glorious traditions. So proud, in fact, that when representatives of a motion-picture producer broached the subject of restaging some of the historic scenes on Lexington Green of April 19, 1775, the whole town almost rose in its wrathful horror.

But when David Wark Griffith convinced Lexington that the scenes were for "America" the photodramatic romance of the War of American Independence, requested by the Daughters of the American Revolution, the modern minutemen of Lexington offered every possible facility.

This explains why the Lexington, Concord, and Boston scenes in Griffith's "America," now playing at the Auditorium, are accurate and authentic.

John L. E. Pell, author of "Down to the Sea in Ships," who made the historical arrangement of "America," the story of which was written by Robert W. Chambers, the novelist, was the emissary chosen by Mr. Griffith to secure the co-operation of the Lexington authorities.

"It was characteristic of us as New Englanders that we didn't warm up to the idea at all at first," said Edwin B. Worthen, president of the Lexington Historical society, in discussing the matter the other day.

"In fact, the very idea of using such a shrine as the Hancock-Clarke house as the locale for a motion picture caused a shiver to run down the backs of most of us. Lexington and its historic associations seemed too sacred to us to be reproduced on the screen."

Mr. Pell's request was a large one. He wanted the co-operation of the Lexington Historical society, the use of the Hancock-Clarke and other historic houses, the use of invaluable historical relics, and the services of historical experts. However, he got what he asked for, and the result is shown in "America."

Minute Men in "America," Chestnut St. Opera House

Philadelphia (Pa) Eve Public Ledger May 24 1924

Los Angeles (Cal) Sat. Night 5/24/24

There is a vehemence of patriotism and thrilling love of country instilled in one by D. W. Griffith's "America," which opened the imposing new Forum Theater, last week. Mr. Griffith has become over zealous in his production to the point of picturing British atrocities in the Revolutionary War and overstressing the feeling of enmity against England, but on the whole, it compares favorably with his best work. The simple-hearted, courageous makers of the United States are shown with fidelity in this film. If the picture does nothing more than inspire in Americans a greater love of country and renew and strengthen a wavering respect for the Constitution and the forefathers who made it possible, it will have achieved success. The first half of "America" is decidedly the better portion. The early rumblings of war are heard, the patriots are gathering in forces, the first little skirmishes are held. Paul Revere's ride is the most striking, single episode of the picture. It does not possess the thrill-power I had hoped for, after reading a number of eastern criticism. However, the ride is dramatic and drawn closely along historical lines. The scenes in the Virginia legislature, with Patrick Henry addressing the assembly, the outnumbered, loyal patriots lining up in the streets of Lexington, the indomitable courage of Washington's men at Valley Forge, are scenes that will long be remembered. Unmistakably, "America" has the stamp of Griffith burned into it, which, of course, does not detract. Neil Hamilton, Erville Alderson and Charles Emmet Mack offer the most convincing performances, although the entire cast gives evidence of sincerity and [illegible] effort.

Chicago Sec News 5/24/24

AN IMPORTANT DETAIL

In the scenes of D. W. Griffith's "America" at the Chestnut Street Opera House depicting the House of Burgesses in Virginia when its members and visitors are thrown into a state of great excitement by the news that a tax had been levied by England upon the shipments of tea into this country, Mr. Griffiths has introduced a detail of considerable significance. It is that of a black mask carried by Carol Dempster, in the character of the little Tory Nancy Montague upon her visit to the gallery of the House of Burgesses. At first glance some might take it to be a fan, but a closer scrutiny reveals its identity. The introduction of the mask shows only too clearly that it was the custom of the women of those days to cover up their faces when visiting in places of public.

Duluth (Minn) Herald 5/24/24

ACTOR WILL POSE FOR STATUE OF WASHINGTON

Neil Hamilton, the new D. W. Griffith star in the romantic national picture "America," has been asked by Henry H. Kitson, the sculptor, to pose for a statue which has been ordered as a memorial for Washington's headquarters at Newburgh, N. Y.

Mr. Kitson is the sculptor of the famous statue of the Minute Man at Lexington Common.

After seeing Hamilton in the hero's role, he selected him as the ideal type of young American manhood and asked him to pose as a model.

Exhibitors Herald Chicago Sec May 24 1924

That's Out

Griffith has just got back from Italy where he says they have studios ten years behind the times. And they want to make pictures that cost about what pictures did ten years ago.

Los Angeles Cal Times 5/24/24

CONCEPTION OF HISTORY ALL WRONG

D. W. Griffith's Research Into Revolutionary Lore Shows Popular Errors

Research placed by the producer seems on the important film of Washington crossing the Delaware is characterized according to David Wark Griffith, whose feature "America" is showing at the Auditorium. Griffith's research in the period had to be made after several disappointments.

Los Angeles Cal Examiner 5/24/24

ITALY CONSIDERS ERIC PRODUCTION

Griffith Uncertain as to Whether to Undertake Task.

DISCUSSES HIS TRIP

D. W. Griffith is home from Italy, having gone there at the request of an Italian syndicate who wished to talk over with him the possibility of producing a big picture, which it was hoped would increase Italy's prestige in the film business. Mr. Griffith asserted that the trip was just as much to get a rest as to talk business. He said that Americans are speeding up Italian telephones and railroads, and that it was thought that an American producer might emulate his confreres in stimulating the production of pictures. He explained that at present there is no studio in Rome which would permit of making scenes such as are made in this country, but that the banking syndicate assured him that in three or four months they would have facilities in a new studio now building, with a lighting system than can draw upon 8,000 amperes. The Banco Commerciale Italiana is back of the syndicate.

"Italy wishes to be a great world power," declared Mr. Griffith, "and they look upon the picture business as a wonderful institution and a remarkable medium for reaching the whole world. They had heard of 'America' and they liked the idea as it was outlined to them. They have voted a large sum of money for the purpose of a film production, but so far they have no adequate facilities for making the picture. However, negotiations are still pending, and there is a possibility of my returning. Of course Italian ideas are utterly different from ours.

Would Cost Less in Italy.

"I told them that my last picture cost more than $1,000,000 and that their American representative could go over my books. They were not dumbfounded at the stupendous sum, but it nevertheless made them scratch their heads when it was translated into lire. If they finish the new studio, it is their idea to make a picture bigger than has hitherto been produced. Settings would be much cheaper than the cost of constructing these in America, and then there is the question of 'extras.' In Italy extras receive about twelve lire a day, equivalent now to 53 cents. We have to pay them $5 to $7 a day. There is a catch about these Italian 'extras' however. They just appear for that amount. If they are left standing around one does not have to pay them any more than 53 cents, but supposing they are asked to run, or carry a heavy spear or even to applaud, they then are entitled to more money. In the event that these men are paid for each trifling performance from 12 to 100 lire, and I were to make forty retakes, the cost of production would be something to puzzle about, and we would require special auditors and bookkeepers to keep track of the 'extras' and their respective performances. In fact, one would imagine that referees would be necessary to determine the importance of each 'extra' and his work.

Protracted Luncheons.

"Italians are in the habit of taking two hours for luncheon. The importance of eating and drinking is far beyond that of making pictures! I don't know what I would be doing while they were consuming food and beverages for this protracted period.

"Then there is the question of imparting my wishes to the players. I can easily see that if I made a picture in Italy I would want American principals, as talking to Italians through an interpreter would be most unsatisfactory and extremely slow. Have you ever heard an interpreter translating English into Italian? You tell the interpreter to tell the Italian it is raining, and he appears to trace the rain down to Jupiter, call attention to floods caused by rain, to allude to umbrellas and raincoats, to refer to the most the consequent growth of plants and foliage and the results of droughts. You have said four or five words which in Italian appear to make a whole chapter.

"One can readily imagine the difficulties that might ensue if I attempted to direct a picture with Italian actors, giving all the instructions through an interpreter! Think of the flow of rhetoric of the 20-minute sentences which would have to listen before my words were intelligible to the players. No, I would certainly have American principals and do the best I could with the circumstances with the minor talent and 'extras.'

"I did not see Mussolini, but I visited a high and mighty official of the Government, Cantalari, who, I believe, is consul. He is head of the armed Fascisti. He has an office in a barracks and armed sentries met me at the gate. The room in which I found Cantalari is decorated in black, relieved with touches of white. You can imagine its weird appearance. Just as I was taking a seat I noticed on a little side table a skull and some bones. I gather that they were placed there to remind one of the brevity of life. Signor Cantalari appeared to be quite cheerful in these surroundings. He wore a uniform and pulled forth a set of boxing gloves which, he said, he would put on with me. I made an appointment for the encounter in spite of his being a big, muscular man. My date with him is in May, 1924. Everything in this barracks was full of up-to-date 'pep,' the Italian idea of hustle and hustle. Everybody seemed to be running. They never walk, as that would be too slow. They salute on the run, and it is perfectly en regle. I went to see Cantalari about 'movies,' but when I was this barracks with all the men in black shirts scampering in all directions, saluting here and saluting there, some of them with the skull and cross bones on their black shirts (they are the musketeers) going on errands or arriving, some fast runners, some clerks, some slender and some plump, some with long legs and others with long bodies, you can picture the scene of haste and I may be pardoned for letting motion pictures fade instanter from my mind.

"They do not bother about Chaplin in Italy. At least one man I saw told me that they did not. They have The Kid over there, and the player they exploit in this production is not Chaplin, but Jackie Coogan. They are showing some American pictures in Roman theaters, but they are far behind the times in their presentations."

Scene from "AMERICA" (film) CHESTNUT STREET OPERA HOUSE

Los Angeles (Cal) News 5/25/24 Phila (Pa) North American 5/25/24

CAROL DEMPSTER in "AMERICA" (The Forum)

CAROL DEMPSTER IN "AMERICA" — LILLIAN GISH IN "ORPHANS OF THE STORM" AT CHESTNUT

Philadelphia (Pa) Public Ledger May 25 1924

Making Over History

It is unfortunate from the historian's point of view that artists and writers choose the spectacular rather than the important events and incidents of a war as the subjects for their paintings and their writings. For it very frequently happens that the really important events of a great war, like those of human life in general, lack that spectacular quality which inspires the artist and the writer, and hence, being neglected, gradually pass from the ken of men. Ultimate, too, events both important and spectacular have been overshadowed by events which might be termed "super-spectacular" and so have passed from memory.

So it probably is that one of the most important campaigns of the War of American Independence, having failed to inspire the chroniclers, has long lacking perspective. It has remained for David Wark Griffith, producer of "America," the romance of the Revolution, now at the Chestnut Street Opera House, to bring to the forum the epic struggle to save the young nation of the North country and to show it where it belongs, among the decisive campaigns of the history of the United States.

Fog, rain, or storm and mobile, the men of Washington's command drove the Redcoats from the field of Trenton, and then, with the Hessians, marched to Princeton, where they drove the Redcoats from the field. Then they marched to Morristown, where they spent the winter, and from there they drove the Redcoats from the field of Bennington, and then they marched to Saratoga, where they drove the Redcoats from the field. Then they marched to Valley Forge, where they spent the winter, and from there they drove the Redcoats from the field of Yorktown, and then they marched to Philadelphia, where they drove the Redcoats from the field. Then they marched to Boston, where they drove the Redcoats from the field. Then they marched to Lexington, where they drove the Redcoats from the field. Then they marched to Concord, where they drove the Redcoats from the field. Then they marched to Bunker Hill, where they drove the Redcoats from the field. Then they marched to Saratoga, where they drove the Redcoats from the field. Then they marched to Valley Forge, where they drove the Redcoats from the field.

Chicago (Ill) Journal 5/26/24

PATRIOTIC LESSON SEEN IN 'AMERICA'

Historical Film Spectacle at Auditorium Called D. W. Griffith's Finest Effort.

By PAUL R. MARTIN.

David Wark Griffith has done many fine things since first he proved to a waiting world that the motion picture could be made the medium of better dramatic effort than those tiresome and inane things which were so much in vogue a dozen or so years ago, and he startled film patrons everywhere with "The Birth of a Nation." Yes, Mr. Griffith has done much since then, and the present writer, viewing "Orphans of the Storm" season before last was inclined to the belief that in this offering, the greatest possibilities of screen art had been realized.

Naturally, Mr. Griffith has had his followers with Cecil DeMille, whose "Ten Commandments" is now current at Woods, and with Rex Ingraham, whose "Scaramouche" was here a few months ago, standing at the head of the line. Then there was "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," one of the greatest of all screen offerings, and one which should have endured in Chicago much longer than it did. The men who are responsible for these productions are all worthy of commendation for each has contributed of his own store of originality. But after it is all said and done, it is David Wark Griffith who was the pioneer in the production of screen spectacle, and a Griffith offering will always be worthy of serious consideration.

I have mentioned "Orphans of the Storm" and well I remember the feeling of awe that came over me as I witnessed this marvellous spectacle; and yet, it was nothing as compared to the emotions which fairly swept me from my feet when I attended "America" which Mr. Griffith is now presenting at the Auditorium. Here, in my opinion, is the greatest picture ever presented in America. Not that it is more elaborate than many others that come to mind. Not that it is better from the standpoint of acting, or photography or general effect, but great because it serves a great mission.

There are too many people in this country today who are inclined to apologize for the manner in which this land of ours won its nationhood. Too many, who now look askance upon revolution as we know it in terms of 1776. Too many who blush when they think of their hardy colonial ancestors lying in wait behind the stone walls that line the road from Lexington to Concord, and taking pot-shots at the British redcoats as they marched by, bent upon subduing a people that opposed taxation without representation and all forms of tyranny.

This attitude on the part of so-called Americans has been responsible for a revision of a lot of school histories; it has brought about a revival of toryism and it has had no small influence in putting a damper upon Americanism as it was known in those days when the nation's birth pangs were still fresh in the memory. International brotherhood is a splendid doctrine and one that is deserving of cultivation, but no nation should forget its origin. Because of this, "America" as conceived in the story of Robert W. Chambers and adapted for the screen by D. W. Griffith is serving a great and a useful purpose. It is stimulating the minds of those who have forgotten historical facts. It is an excellent text book for those who have been led astray in the matter of history.

"America," be it known, is a story of the War of the Revolution. Through it there runs romance, but its principal charm as well as its value is in the fact that it visualizes as printed words could never do, some of the stirring events of that period which followed close upon the heels of the Boston Tea Party and terminated in the surrender of Lord Cornwallis to General Washington. This picture is crowded with historical characters, and faithfully are these portrayed by splendid actors. Paul Revere's ride is as dramatic an episode as the screen has yet set forth, and the battle scenes—pigmy like as compared with those real scenes of carnage in "Powder River," but thrilling, every one of them. Would that there were more pictures like "America."

Nathan Holden is the central male figure of "America" and his love for the daughter of a prominent Tory, with the subsequent conversion of the Tory family to the American cause, gives the element of romance aside from its historical interest. However, it is not in this plot that the principal charm of this picture lies, but rather in its presentation of life as it was lived during the times of the Revolution, its portrayal of those figures who were leaders of the cause, and in the accuracy of its detail. Neil Hamilton is seen as Nathan Holden, while Mr. Griffith's newest star, Carol Dempster plays opposite him. Lionel Barrymore is Capt. Butler, the British officer-villain, with Louis Wolheim as his accomplice. It is interesting to note that Lucile LaVerne, who is scoring a triumph in "Sun Up" at the LaSalle, has a small character part.

Neil Hamilton, who has the male lead in the Griffith picture "America," has been asked by Henry H. Kitson, sculptor, to pose for a statue which has been ordered as a memorial for Washington's birthplace at Newburgh, N. Y. Mr. Kitson made the statue of the Minute Man on Lexington Common. Before starting work Mr. Kitson came from his studio at Framingham, Mass., to New York to see "America," with the idea of getting inspiration for his study. After seeing Hamilton in the film the sculptor chose him as a fine type of young American manhood.

The Actor's Start.

Charles Emmett Mack, whose performance in the role of young Montague is one of the outstanding features of D. W. Griffith's "America" now at the Auditorium theater, is a native of Scranton, Pa., where he attended St. Thomas' college.

While in college he saw the circus for the first time, and, lured by the apparently care-free gypsy life of the circus man, he decided that the moment he got his diploma he would run away from home and become a clown.

He carried out this resolve, joining a small tent show and later adding himself to Ringling Brothers' "greatest show on earth," with which he traveled for two seasons. He soon lost both his illusions as to circus life being carefree and easy and his desire for travel. But his desire for a histrionic career remained and he went into vaudeville. Finding even the traveling there too irksome, he joined a stock company and settled down to a real apprenticeship for theatrical work.

Struck by the opportunities which the silver sheet offered to young actors, Mack sought work in the studios and was finally successful in joining the Griffith forces, getting a small part in "Dream Street."

Since that time he has appeared extensively under the Griffith banner.

Chicago (Ill) Journal 5/26/24

His Films Abound

David Wark Griffith, master of the cinema, has his two greatest pictures on view this week and four notable screens are given over to his work. While his "America" sweeps along at the Auditorium, where it is shown twice daily, his famous "The Birth of a Nation" holds forth at the Woodlawn, Senate and Parkway.

Times Sq Daily (N.Y.C.) 5/27/24

NEW COMMUNITY HOUSE, ALL LOCALLY PROMOTED, CAN'T FIGURE OVERHEAD

Forum in Los Angeles Cost $1,000,000—Sheriff in Box Office First Week—Griffith's "America" Guaranteed $75,000, High Record

Los Angeles, May 26.

[illegible]

"America" in 'Frisco in August

Los Angeles, May 26.

D. W. Griffith's "America" will have its premiere in San Francisco at the Curran early in August. It is scheduled to play there at least six weeks.

Austin (Tex) Statesman 5/27/24

D. W. Griffith's "America," which opened last night at the Hancock for three days, is the best historical moving picture ever made. It is a splendidly done battle spectacle of the American Revolution, produced, as the captions tell, to show the sacrifices of our forefathers in their fight for liberty.

Although the love story that sustains the piece is of little consequence, those interested in history will sit enthralled through the magnificence of this newest Griffith extravaganza, which is a document that will tend to preserve for future generations an unofficial photographic record of conditions during the days of 1776.

The photography is the best that Griffith has contributed to the screen, particularly the filming of Paul Revere's midnight ride and the presence of the battle of Bunker Hill and the scenes of the tattered forces of Lafayette and General Washington through the snow-covered country that had been ravished of its forces.

The identity of the chosen is kept a secret as far as the captions on the screen are concerned. However, Carol Dempster, Griffith's greatest heroine, was recognized. She did very good work. Another player easily recognized as Lionel Barrymore, who played in Jackie Coogan's picture, "Peck's Bad Boy," and the Lionel Barrymore of the Lionel Barrymore Company of the United States.

The work of those three who took part in the production, Nathan Hale, Paul Revere and young Montague was excellent, and it would have been difficult to determine which of the three performances was the best.

Chicago (Ill) Journal 5/27/24

Los Angeles (Cal) News 5/27/24

Los Angeles (Cal) Record 5/29/24

WAR ON OPPRESSORS JUSTIFIED BY PASTOR

Advising his hearers to see Griffith's picture, "America," now being shown at the Forum, and to study again the cause for which the patriots fought, Rev. William C. Isett, pastor of Amanda Chapel, preached yesterday on "See America First." An excerpt from the sermon follows:

"I am for peace, so much for peace that I am willing to lay down my life upon the battlefield if need be to obtain it and righteousness. I am no stranger to the battlefields of France, the sound of bursting shells or the horror of destructive death. There is a movement among the churches to abolish war, and I shall lend my aid with heart and soul because I have seen war face to face. But I do not believe war is contrary to the teaching of the Bible, or participation in it a sin. For if it is, then God commanded men to sin, and that is not within the range of my belief. War is terrible; it is horrible. It is one of the three greatest calamities than can come upon a nation. It is a judgment sent from God. But it is not sin, though sinful things are done in the cause of war. The only way to abolish war is to establish the Kingdom of God, no matter what it costs us. Just as the spirit of co-operation and force, if necessary, famine and pestilence have been stamped out of a great part of the world, so by this same spirit of goodwill and work will war be eliminated from society. It was selfish, ignorant greed which brought on the Revolutionary War, but out of it sprang the spirit of America—the spirit of liberty for all peoples."

NEW FORUM THEATER

Carol Dempster and Arthur Dewey as Nancy Montague and George Washington in D. W. Griffith's "America," Forum theater.

Paragraph 5/29/24

THERE CAN BE BUT ONE "AMERICA"

The United States War Department has settled that. When D. W. Griffith, producer of this great screen romance, conceived the idea of using United States regular army soldiers for his battle scenes, and Secretary of War Weeks, impressed by the historical value of "America," arranged to loan large units of the army for use as supers, both of them overlooked the fact that whenever Griffith does something a thousand lesser lights of filmdom try to follow suit.

Hardly had Griffith finished using the 16th and 18 Infantry for the battles of Lexington, Concord and Bunker Hill, and the famous Third Calvary as Morgan's Riflemen, than request began to pour into the War Department from film companies for the use of army units. It seemed as though, urged by the success of Griffith's picture, the entire film industry was about to deluge the country with Revolutionary War stories.

So thick and fast came these requests that it became apparent that if the War Department followed the precedent established by Griffith, the entire army would be devoting its entire attention to motion pictures to the exclusion of all else.

So an order has been issued by the Department, prohibiting any further use of regular army men in photoplays. Ar[illegible]s Griffith declares that it is im[illegible]e to accurately re-stage the geat co[illegible]ts of the War of Independence, ex[illegible] with highly trained regulars,—ther[illegible] can be but one "America."

Brooklyn (N.Y.) News 5/30/24

Films of the Future

A movie in every home is the prophecy of David Wark Griffith, famous producer of motion pictures, who in Collier's peers into the future of the film industry. "One hundred years hence," writes Griffith, "I believe, the airplane passenger lines will operate motion-picture shows on regular schedule between New York and Chicago and between New York and London. Trains, which will be traveling twice or three times as fast as they do now, will have film theaters on board. Almost every home of good taste will have its private projection room where miniatures, perhaps, of the greater films will be shown to the family, and, of course, families will make their albums in motion pictures instead of in tintypes and 'stills.'

"By the time these things come to pass, there will be no such thing as a flicker in your film. Your characters and objects in pictures will come upon the screen (which by then may not even be white, and certainly may not be square, or look anything like what it does now), and they will appear to the onlookers precisely as these persons and objects appear in real life. That much discussed 'depth' in pictures, which no one as yet has been able to employ successfully, will long since have been discovered and adopted. The moving canvas will not appear flat, but if a character moves before a fireplace you will recognize the distance as between the character and the fireplace.

"Likewise, in landscapes, you will feel the proper sense of distance. Your mountain peaks will not appear to rise one on top of the other, but will appear exactly as if you stood and looked at them. Of course these are merely details that will require long and intense study and experiment, but they will come. In other words, from the standpoint of naturalness, motion pictures 100 years from now will be so nearly like the living person or the existing object pictured that you will be unable, sitting in your orchestra seat, to determine whether they are pictures or the real thing."

Los Angeles (Cal) Herald May 30 1924

Carol Dempster

Famous Griffith star who has leading role in 'America' at the Forum.

Lynn (Mass) Item May 31 1924

Houston Texas Post May 30 1924

LONG LEGS ON SHORT TORSO SAID TO DENOTE INTELLIGENCE

If you have a small body and long arms and legs the chances are you are highly intelligent and will find success in some kind of brain work.

If you have a large body and short arms and legs, brain work is probably not your forte, and you would do best to follow some manual trade, or at least a line of work requiring steadiness and accuracy rather than quickness of mind.

If you are of a normal type—that is, if your limbs are not disproportionately long or short in comparison with the size of your body—you may be either intelligent or unintelligent. Whether you are suited for brain work or manual labor can not be told accurately from your bodily measurements.

These in effect are the conclusions science has reached as a result of the latest inevstigations in the field of physiological psychology, says Henry E. Garrett, Ph. D., of the department of psychology, Columbia university, writing in Popular Science Monthly. Recently, he asserts, he and Dr. Sante Naccarati of New York, specialist in nervous and mental diseases, conducted a test of this theory among about 500 students of Columbia university, and the results tended to show that a very definite relationship exists between bodily structure and intelligence, this despite the fact that no very unintelligent individuals would be found among a group of college students.

In the test the length of each man's limbs was obtained—the combined length of one arm and one leg. This figure was then divided by the volume of his body, the result indicating to what body type he belonged. This result was then compared with each man's tested intelligence as indicated by his class work and the standing obtained in standard psychological tests. Of the men examined, says Dr. Garrett, 76 per cent of the small-bodied, long-legged men, 40 per cent of the normal men and 15 per cent of the large-bodied, short-legged men showed high intelligence.

"It is surprising," writes Dr. Garrett, "how thoroughly the conclusions reached in the test seem to be borne out in the case of well known men. Henry Ford, John D. Rockefeller, General Pershing, Booth Tarkington and David Wark Griffith might be named as the outstanding Americans of this generation in their particular fields. All of them are long-legged men with short bodies. Washington and Lincoln and Woodrow Wilson likewise were of this type. President Coolidge, the late President Harding, Andrew W. Mellon, Tesla, Marconi, the Wright brothers, and a host of others are typically long-limbed men with small bodies.

"Edison belongs to the normal type. So did Theodore Roosevelt. So do David Belasco, Charles Evans Hughes and Elihu Root. The names of two other men occur to me—Jack Dempsey and Luis Angel Firpo. Not even their staunchest admirers would claim that they possess as much intelligence as any of the others I have mentioned. Both of them fall into the class of large-bodied, short-legged men."

As to the scientific reason for the apparent relationship between bodily proportions and intelligence, Dr. Garrett says the most tenable explanation is based on facts given by the study of the ductless glands, particularly the action of the thyroid gland in the neck. Activity or inactivity of this gland, he asserts, influences both the body type and the intelligence with the results that he gives.

Was King George III fat or lean? Film fans who have seen Harry Beaumont's "Beau Brummel," the Warner Brothers production starring John Barrymore in the part made famous by the late Richard Mansfield, find the George III in that picture a robust individual, whereas, those who witness David Wark Griffith's big drama based on the Revolution, "America," which comes for its local premiere soon, will find a distinctly different type of actor as George III, the English monarch who [illegible] in during America's fi[illegible]

White Plains (N.Y.) Reporter 5/31/24

Educational Value of Motion Pictures

BY JEAN F. WEBB, III

First Year High School Best Essay Submitted in Contest at Loew's State Theatre

The influence of the "movie" on modern school children is tremendous. The educational value of motion pictures is so great as to be inestimable, provided, of course, that the proper kind of pictures is selected—and there is now circulating a wealth of such pictures, embracing almost all of the subjects taught in our schools.

The important part which the motion picture plays in the historical education of the school children today is so seeded by all. What boy or girl after having seen D. W. Griffith's great masterpiece, "America," but has a more profound impression of the tremendous exertion and indomitable courage by which our revolutionary ancestors won for the freedom we enjoy today, than could ever be gained from a printed history?

Other masterful pictures which present in showing manner the periods the writers are "Barnaby Lee," "Valerie" and the Yale University Press series, called the "Chronicles of America," which depicts thirty episodes of American history.

As in the Biblical education which we be gleaned from the "movies," we do no better than point out that masterpiece film "The Ten Commandments," one of the greatest of the productions of the age, which is perhaps itself one of the most popular and which has for its theme, as the title suggests, the story of three thousand years which are outlined in Biblical Work of the same theme (the ancient picture) and all to get a clear conception of all that the film commandments mean.

To all the good features of an education in geography travelling through the world, that of the world that is shown in the movies, the world of the past, the world of the present, and the world of the future, the movies are unique in their ability to present the picture in a manner that is entertaining and instructive. Thus the movies are a great factor in the education of the youth of the world.

panies are now at work producing films of this kind and, in passing, I might mention these most most interesting and instructive films the Martin Johnson Aravelogues as excellent examples of their type.

As yet not much has been done along the line of placing educational material concerning the classics before our motion picture audiences, but Miss Mary Philbin has paved the way for future pictures of this type through the beautifully colored scenes of her new picture, "The Temple of Venus," in which she presents life in the courts of the goddesses Juno and Venus and the caves of the sea king Neptune.

And the great picture industry is still in its infancy, with many fields unexplored. In view of the foregoing facts it is quite apparent what an important factor in education the motion pictures is.

A romantic moment with Carol Dempster posing to the amusement of the photographer, the gentleman in the other side of the wall. In the days of "America" the boys were bashful. Auditorium.

Fresno (Cal) Bee 5/31/24

America's Department To Lead No More Soldiers

Chicago (Ill) News May 31 1924

NEIL HAMILTON is another "discovery" of D. W. Griffith. As Nathan Holden in "America" he proves that the discovering's still good. Whom does he resemble? All to other—Ralph Graves! Frances Peck.

Chicago (Ill) Journal 5/27/24

In America

Battle Creek (Mich) Moderne Weekly 5/31/24

My Liberty Magazine May 31 1924

Greenville (Ohio) Tribune May 28 1924

D.W. Griffith Makes "America" for D.A.R.

Patriotic Societies, Historical Experts and the U. S. Army Aid In Making An Unusual Picture.

Walter Butler (Lionel Barrymore) and Nancy Montague (Carol Dempster)

Carol Dempster and Neil Hamilton In a Love Scene

The Minutemen Prepare To Protect Historic Buckman Tavern

Samuel Adams Greets a Visitor to the Hancock-Clarke House, Lexington, Mass.

Miss Irma Harrison with the Drum Actually Used at the Battle of Lexington

WHEN the Daughters of the American Revolution suggested to David Wark Griffith that he make a photoplay based on the American Revolution, they started something.

As a result of this suggestion Griffith is not only making the desired film, but leading historians, patriotic societies, society women, descendants of Revolutionary heroes, and the United States Army itself is helping him, and if everything goes according to schedule "America" as the new film has been named, should surpass even the "Birth Of A Nation."

Probably no other film during its making ever created such widespread interest as that upon which Griffith is now working. This is due in part to its patriotic nature, which has already caused a revival of interest in Revolutionary times in the regions where the great conflicts of our first war were fought; and in part to the unusual way in which Griffith is making the picture.

Instead of building replicas of the historic buildings which must figure in any drama written about the Revolution, Griffith and his entire company of players, technicians and advisers are traveling from place to place in special trains, and taking their scenes on the actual sites, with thousands of the general public as spectators, and society belles, Revolutionary descendants, and the enlisted men of the United States Army as "supers."

So far this experiment of "letting the public in" to view the actual filming of a motion picture is working out admirably, even though in several cases—notably in reproduction of big battle scenes—private movie cameras men attempted to take "shots" of the scenes which Griffith staged at great expense, in order to sell them to movie companies, for use in moderate pictures. A number of such attempts were stopped by State troopers in New York, and the pirated rumors and film concealed until the new Griffith picture has been released.

The magnitude of Griffith's undertaking in "America" can perhaps best be understood by the fact that he plans to reproduce the major battles of the War of Independence with great fidelity to historical authority; that scenes of film had been shot at points and near towns where some fifty thousand people assembled to witness Gen. Washington's Army, pursued by the British Army, passed for the past time through the country of Revolutionary War times, camped more than a fortnight in Putnam County to appear in a film epic, and that when assembled the scenes will actually have cost more than a million dollars.

Although to date they visited the Dennis mansion of the American Institute of the Fine Arts, Hobart Gibson, poet, author and playwright, lived, and the Hall of Fame, New York, has had several appearances which are well worth the price of admission, and with popular fare in its stories of the Revolutionary period, Griffith has gone to the Revolutionary historical institutions for help in the preparation of his film. The company and its equipment have been at Tarrytown, Ossining, Yonkers, Mamaroneck, Rye, Port Chester, Greenwich, Stamford, Bridgeport, Fairfield, Westport, Norwalk, Stamford, Greenwich, Port Chester, Rye, Mamaroneck, Yonkers, Ossining, Tarrytown, Sleepy Hollow, Pocantico Hills, Ridgefield, Danbury, Bethel, Newtown, Hawleyville

Movie Weekly (NYC) March 29 1924

"D.W." puts "G.W." in the MOVIES

NOTED FILM DIRECTOR PRODUCES SCREEN VERSION OF REVOLUTIONARY TIMES CALLED "AMERICA."

David Wark Griffith, who directed and produced "America."

George Washington, the "father of his country," who appears in "America."

A dramatic scene from "America," with Dorothy Mackaill, as the girl, and Riley Hatch, as Brant, the Indian chief.

The surrender of Cornwallis at Yorktown—one of the fine spectacular effects of the new Griffith film.

The ride of Paul Revere—only not the midnight one, apparently, of the famous poem.

A battle scene from "America," in which British regulars and Continental soldiers meet.

Corsicana (Tex) Sun 5/8/24

"AMERICA" BEST HISTORICAL PLAY EVER SHOWN HERE

SPECIAL MUSIC SCORE BY TEN PIECE ORCHESTRA IS SPECIAL FEATURE

D. W. Griffith's America which opened at the Palace theatre last night for a three day run excels anything Griffith has ever presented in motion pictures and is the best historical moving picture ever shown here. It is a splendidlp done battle spectacle of the American Revolution, produced, as the captions tell, to show the sacrifices of our forefathers in their fight for liberty.

Although almost three hours is required to show the picture, one does not grow tired as the interest is kept up by the skillful shifting of the scenes from the meetings held in protest of taxation without representation, to the king's court in England and after the first shot is fired from the battle scenes throughout the war, to the home life of the colonists, closing with the inauguration of Washington as president of the United States.

Although the love story that sustains the piece is of little consequence those interested in history will sit enthralled through the magnificence of the newest Griffith extravaganza, which is a document that will tend to preserve for future generations an unofficial photographic record of conditions during the days of 1776.

The photography is the best that Griffith has contributed to the screen, particularly the filming of Paul Revere's midnight ride and the screening of the battle of Bunker Hill and the scenes of the tattered heroes of Lexington and Concord marching with Washington through the snow-covered territory that had been ravished by the British.

The identity of the players is kept a secret, as far as the captions on the screen are concerned, but a more ideal cast could not have been selected. Neil Hamilton plays the part of Nathan Holden, one of the principal characters of the play and to say that his acting was superb would be putting it mildly. Carol Dempster plays the part of the daughter of Justice Montague, a Tory, and is in sympathy with the American cause. She did good work. Lionel Barrymore is also in the cast and plays in his usual characteristic manner.

A ten piece orchestra under the direction of Chas. K. Davis, musical director of the D. W. Griffith corporation plays a splendid music score, especially arranged for the picture.

The performance begins tonight at 8:15. A matinee will be given Saturday and the performance Saturday night will close the engagement.

Newark (NJ) Evening Journal 5/27/24

IDEAL

Grand Junction (Colo) News 5/11/24

Films a Century Hence

A movie in every home is the prophecy of David Wark Griffith, famous producer of motion pictures, who in Collier's peers into the future of the film industry. "One hundred years hence," writes Mr. Griffith, "I believe, the airplane passenger lines will operate motion picture shows on regular schedule between New York and London. Trains, which will be traveling twice or three times as fast as they do now, will have film theaters on board. Almost every home of good taste will have its private projection room where minitures, perhaps, of the greater films will be shown to the family, and, of course, families will make their albums in motion pictures instead of in tintypes and stills."

"AMERICA"

Never before have we been thrilled by a motion picture as we were last evening when we saw "America," D. W. Griffith's latest, at the 44th Street Theatre. This truly remarkable film is an epic of the indomitable spirit that carried our fore-fathers through the suffering of the Revolution, and made possible this great Nation. Under the masterful direction of D. W. Griffith, this living, historical drama made us feel the great debt we owe to those men whose idealism freed America.

Griffith has altogether surpassed himself in this intense, soul-stirring spectacle. In it, he makes live for us the whole gamut of life of the early days of America. The placid life of the wealthy Virginian landowner, the growing discontent in Boston, the Court of George III., the first skirmish of the Revolution at Lexington, the battle of Concord, the signing of the Declaration of Independence, Valley Forge, are recreated with such illusive fidelity that we forgot we were seeing a motion picture. It lives before one's eyes.

Into this vivid and exciting background, Mr. Griffith has woven a most charming and delicate love story.

The cast assembled for this production is most praiseworthy. Among those stars well known to the movie fan are, (to mention but a few), Lionel Barrymore, Carol Dempster, Louis Wolheim, Lucille Laverne and Charles Mack. Neil Hamilton, one of the most handsome and likable heroes we've seen in months, personifies the heroic spirit of our American youth. Carol Dempster, the charming heroine, follows well in the footsteps of Mae Marsh and Lillian Gish, former Griffith stars.

The rest of the numerous cast deserves praise for their fine acting and vivid interpretations.

The photography and, lastly, the musical setting, merits superlative commendation.

"America" has set a new high-water mark of motion picture achievement. You simply must see it!

NY News 6/1/24

"AMERICA," D. W. Griffith's splendid picture of the Revolutionary period, enters into its fifth month at the Forty-fourth street theatre. Neil Hamilton (above) is Carol Dempster's leading man in the film.

San Antonio (Tex) Express May 10 1924

LIONEL BARRYMORE STARS IN "AMERICA"

Lionel Barrymore, who had an important part in D. W. Griffith's "America," now showing at the Majestic, is perhaps the most versatile of the famous three members of America's most celebrated theatrical family now on the stage and screen. Also he is the youngest. Previously he was in the theatre, one of the leading Maurice Barrymores, he has appeared in more than 100 stage productions and innumerable films.

His greatest stage success on the legitimate stage was in "The Famous Mrs. Fair," in which he had a year's run playing the lead, and was a year playing in Florence Reed's "Shadow Laughs."

In the part of Paul Revere, Mr. Barrymore is called upon to perform the most spectacular feat of any character in the film, the famous midnight ride. Mr. Barrymore's part in the film is that of a patriot who is a member of the Sons of Liberty, and who is in the thick of the fight for independence. He is also the lover of the girl, who is the sweetheart of Nathan Holden, the hero of the story.

Baltimore (Md) Catholic Review May 8 1924

HE IS PLEASING HERO IN THE FILM, "AMERICA"

NEIL HAMILTON

Covington (Ky) Post 5/1/24

Neighbors Soldiers for Film

United States War Department has issued orders that no soldiers shall be loaned for the making of motion pictures.

Following the production of "America," for the battle scenes of which United States regulars were used, preparations were made by other companies to damage the country with immoral pictures dealing with America, and many of the top men gave response to the War Department for the men of authority. It has been doubted that after all

Brilliant (Mich) Clear 4/25/24

Montgomery (Ala) Advertiser June 1 1924

Your LEGS as YARDSTICKS of Your BRAIN POWER

YOUR legs are a measure of your brain power. If you have a small body and long arms and legs, the chances are that you are highly intelligent and will find success in some kind of brain work.

If you have a large body and short arms and legs, brain work probably is not your forte, and you would do best to follow some manual trade, or at least a line of work requiring steadiness and accuracy rather than quickness of mind.

If you are of a normal type—that is, if your limbs are not disproportionately long or short in comparison with the size of your body—you may be either intelligent or unintelligent. Whether you are suited for brain work or manual labor cannot be told accurately from your bodily measurements.

These in effect are the conclusions reached as a result of the latest investigations in the field of physiological psychology.

Nine points has Hugh Gray experienced that the size and proportions of the body generally are a valid criterion of predicting the intelligence, it is reported in Popular Science Monthly by Henry E. Garrett, Ph.D., instructor of psychology, Columbia University.

To find whether you belong in the long-legged, short-legged, or normal type of man, you perform as follows:

First measure the volume of your trunk, doing it in three sections:

1. Measure length of chest from depth of chest and other forward coughs. Multiply by breadth.

2. Measure from chest bone to out of the arm, and depth of middle chest. Multiply by breadth.

3. Measure from out of one to the hip bone, and depth of middle chest. Multiply by breadth.

Measure your leg from the hip joint to the ankle bone. Multiply by the cube of the length of the leg.

Measure your arm from the shoulder joint to the wrist. Multiply by the cube of the length of the arm.

Add the results of the three measurements of the trunk and the measurements of the leg and arm. Divide the total by the height in inches. The result is your index number.

If your index number is 1,000 or more, you are a long-legged man. If it is 1,000 or less, you are a short-legged man. If it is 1,000, you are a normal man.

Mr. Garrett says that the long-legged man is the man of brain power, the short-legged man is the man of brawn, and the normal man is the man who is neither brain nor brawn.

"Nearly all the men who have made a name for themselves in the world are long-legged men," he says. "Among the long-legged men are Woodrow Wilson, Secretary of the Treasury, and one of the world's leading bankers, and William G. McAdoo, former Secretary of the Treasury, also must be included in the small-bodied, long-legged class. In the world of invention, Tesla, Marconi, the Wright brothers and a host of others are typically long-limbed men with small bodies.

"Edison belongs to the normal type. So did Theodore Roosevelt. So does David Belasco. Charles Evans Hughes and Elihu Root appear to be of the normal type, though removed from the short body, long-legged type by a narrow margin.

"Nobody will deny that all of these men are of superior intelligence, yet all but two or three of them are small-bodied, long-limbed men.

"The names of two other men never to me—Jack Dempsey and Luis Angel Firpo. They are almost as well known as any of the eminent men I have mentioned, yet not even their staunchest admirers would claim that they possess as much intelligence as any of those named in the previous paragraph. Both of them fall in the class of large-bodied, short-legged men of the low normal group.

"Now, this relationship between bodily proportions and intelligence cannot, of course, be merely accidental. There must be some scientific reason for it. Viola, an Italian scientist, offers the opinion that the man with the small body and long legs has advanced further in the scale of evolution than the normal man or the man with long body and short legs, just as the animals we know to-day show in their bodily conformation and abundant brain capacity an advance over the huge, unwieldy, short-legged prehistoric monsters."

Picture Play (NYC) Jun 1924

Toledo (O) Times Jun 1924

D. W. GRIFFITH BACK IN THIS COUNTY UNDECIDED ABOUT MAKING ITALIAN PICTURE

Washington Herald Jun 1924

Los Angeles (Cal) Examiner 6/24/24

Students Urged To See 'America'

NY World June 1 1924

Visual Education Magazine June 1924

The Films in Review

AMERICA

To say that AMERICA is a stupendous production is stating an evident fact mildly. Griffith has again demonstrated that he is the master of them all in using the screen to tell a story. And it is not every day that such a story,—the history of a vital period in a nation's development is portrayed.

Using as a foundation, a Revolutionary love story supplied by Robert Chambers, he has constructed an epic which is probably one of the greatest pictures ever presented to the public.

The romance, itself, is a simple one. Nathan Holden, a Boston courier and patriot, meets and loves Nancy Montague a charming member of the aristocratic Virginia family. Events bring her and her Tory father and brother to Lexington on the very day of the battle. The brother finds that his heart is with the rebels and joins them to fall gloriously at the battle of Bunker Hill. The bereaved father and sister find refuge upon an estate in upper New York where they are eventually trapped by the Indians in Fort Sacrifice and escape only after a thrilling rescue.

The plot, however, serves merely as a silver thread to hold together the scenes composing the narrative of the revolution. Here Griffith manifests his ability in knowing what to visualize. A flash here and a flash there, and any person with only the average amount of historical background has the story of the Revolution.

Each one of the scenes is marvelous in the perfection of its photography and general artistic composition. Many of the scenes are reproductions of famous paintings, faithful in every detail and many were filmed in the actual places where the original action occurred. New England highways, Boston streets, southern manors,—they are all here. It is appalling to consider the work involved in the mere mechanical details of such a production.

A recapitulation of but a few of the scenes will serve to show the scope of the film. Those which establish conditions leading up to the outbreak of hostilities include: Patrick Henry in his eloquence before the House of Burgesses; Samuel Adams and John Hancock in their patriotic labors; the infirm Pitt addressing the House of Lords in behalf of the injured colonies; pompous George III at his levee and in his closet, signing the Boston Port Bill.

The disrupted condition and internal strife in the colonies is brought out by the division and the tragedy in the Montagre family.

Then comes the march of the British to Concord and Lexington to capture military stores and those arch-traitors, Hancock and Adams. Two lights glimmer in the old church tower and Paul Revere is off on his immortal ride arousing the countryside. And when the redcoats march into Concord the next morning, the minute men are swarming before them. But what happened is written in every text book of American history.

ERVILLE ANDERSON AS JUSTICE MONTAGUE

This entire battle as well as that of Bunker Hill has been reproduced with a painstaking care for historical accuracy and with an effect that is most impressive.

BRITISH OFFICERS SECURE INDIAN SUPPORT

NANCY PRESENTED TO KING GEORGE III

History can never be a dead subject when life is breathed into it in such a forceful way. Anyone, young or old, who has seen this picture, will be able to reach across the years and feel a delightful intimacy with the past. And how can one know and understand life unless he has a familiarity with the life that has gone before.

After the scenes showing Washington receiving his commission as commander-in-chief of the American army and that showing the signing of the Declaration of Independence, the action is diverted from the main thoroughfare of the war to the depredations of the Indians and Tories in western New York.

This was a bloody, bitter time marked by the Wyoming Massacre and that of Cherry Valley. And in the visualization of this phase, Griffith has made an absorbing and hair-raising drama. Here we find Lionel Barrymore as the infamous Walter Butler leading his painted Indians and his renegade white men, worse in their degeneracy than any redman. It is rather strange to find this actor in what is really a minor role, but his art makes the interpretation memorable.

One discerns everywhere characteristic touches of Mr. Griffith's genius. Superb mob scenes are alternated with close-ups that give just the necessary emphasis. There is comic relief, not too much in evidence. There is rapidly sweeping action that keeps one breathless. Indeed there is almost too much rapid action for the picture is one perpetual climax.

Griffith has been criticised for not showing the entire war in detail as he showed the beginning. But how could he? A picture can't continue forever! Moreover, he carefully disarms just such criticism by announcing that he is endeavoring to show the spirit and the sacrifices that made independence possible rather than the struggle itself.

He does, however, show Washington at Princeton, at Valley Forge and at the surrender of Cornwallis, and closes his film in exquisite dramatic taste with a view of Washington taking the oath of office as our first president.

Griffith is not subtle but he can paint upon his silver canvas with a fine touch as well as with a broad one. He picks with almost never a failure the types best suited for the numerous roles. Of the work of the individual actors there is scarcely space to write. Carol Dempster as the heroine was not altogether convincing but the others were perfect, particularly Mr. Barrymore and Neil Hamilton as the young patriot.

It must not be concluded that there are no adverse criticisms to be made of this film for there are. For example, one misses here the warm human touch that distinguished The Birth of a Nation. When a picture is so inspiring in motive and execution, however, it is hardly worth while to hunt for the mote. Everyone should see AMERICA for it is a masterpiece for Americans.

Released by United Artists.

As She is Spoke

CAPT. HOLDEN EMISSARY TO VIRGINIA

Oakley M.P. Magazine Jul 1924

Each a Law Unto Himself

Drawings by John Decker

Reading (Pa) Tribune June 1 1924

YOUR LEGS as YARDSTICKS of Your BRAIN POWER

Your legs are a measure of your brain power. If you have a small body and long arms and legs, the chances are that you are highly intelligent and will find success in some kind of brain work.

If you have a large body and short arms and legs, brain work probably is not your forte, and you would do best to follow some manual trade, or at least a line of work requiring steadiness and accuracy rather than quickness of mind.

If you are of a normal type—that is, if your limbs are not disproportionately long or short in comparison with the size of your body—you may be either intelligent or unintelligent. Whether you are suited for brain work or manual labor cannot be told accurately from your bodily measurements.

These in effect are the conclusions arrived at by reason of a study of the latest investigations in the field of physiological psychology.

How science has found by experiments that the size and proportions of the body apparently supply a most reliable sign of predicting the intelligence is described in Popular Science Monthly by Henry E. Garrett, Ph.D., department of psychology, Columbia University.

To find whether you belong to the long-legged, short-legged, or normal type of man, you proceed as follows:

First measure the column of your trunk, dividing it in three sections:

1—Measure length of short bone, length of thigh and with thumbs length. Subtract the length of the thigh from the length of the short bone. If the result is less than one, you belong to the short-legged type. If the result is more than one, you belong to the long-legged type. If the result is one, you belong to the normal type.

Dr. Garrett says that in the long-legged type of man, the cerebrum is more developed than in the other two types. The cerebrum is the part of the brain which controls the mind. The short-legged type of man has a more developed cerebellum than the other two types. The cerebellum controls the body. The normal type of man has a more developed medulla than the other two types. The medulla controls the heart and lungs.

Dr. Garrett says that the long-legged type of man is the most intelligent, the short-legged type of man is the least intelligent, and the normal type of man is between the two.

Dr. Garrett says that the long-legged type of man is the most intelligent because the cerebrum is the most developed part of the brain, and the cerebrum controls the mind.

Dr. Garrett says that the short-legged type of man is the least intelligent because the cerebellum is the most developed part of the brain, and the cerebellum controls the body.

Dr. Garrett says that the normal type of man is between the two because the medulla is the most developed part of the brain, and the medulla controls the heart and lungs

Picture Play Mgzy June 1924

WHAT EVERY FAN SHOULD SEE.

"America—Series One—The Sacrifices" D. W. Griffith. History of the American Revolution as every school child would like to see it. The Battles of Concord, Lexington and Bunker Hill, the ride of Paul Revere, and the surrender of Cornwallis pictured in authentic and stirring fashion with an appealing love story woven through it all. Lionel Barrymore, Neil Hamilton, Charles Mack, Carol Dempster, and Louis Wolheim, as well as many others do splendid work in it.

Picture Play Mgzy Jun 1924

What the Fans Think that beautiful home which was supposed to belong to Caro! Dempster in the picture, and which they turned into a regular studio. A few minutes later Eddie Burns, the property man, came up to us. He stopped directly in front of me and told me Mr. Griffith would like to see me up at the house.

Friends, I have had some scares in my short life, but I don't believe my heart ever beat so fast as it did then. He repeated what he had said a couple of times or more before I comprehended, and when I did I didn't know what to do. There I stood with my mouth open and a wild light in my eyes, and I think I would have turned tail and run if there had not been such a crowd behind me. Finally I decided to follow Eddie and we went up to the house, where we met Mrs. Sutch, who told me, to my utter amazement, that Mr. Griffith wanted to use me in some scenes, and asked if I would like to work for him. At first I simply couldn't believe my ears, and she had quite a time making me understand that she meant what she said. I finally recovered my speech enough to say that I certainly would if I could get out of school, so it was settled.

Well, I went around to the back of the house, and who should I see but D. W. sitting in a chair with his hat cocked over his eyes, directing Carol Dempster and Neil Hamilton. He spoke to them in a low voice. No one who has ever heard D. W. direct can comprehend how fascinating his voice really is. It thrills and inspires you, and I really think it hypnotizes you to a certain extent—it did me, I'm sure.

Once when Mr. Hamilton did not do the scene quite to his satisfaction he got up and went over it for him. After a while he finished with him, and then Mr. Hamilton came over and sat down by me. He is a very nice young fellow and quite interesting to talk with, although he and Mr. Novello are both curious lads. Now, when I say this, don't think they are so peculiar because what I mean is that they like to ask questions. It was during Mardi Gras, and though we do not have parades in New Iberia, the kids do dress up in costume. He wanted to know why they did this, and then he asked me a lot of questions concerning Mardi Gras. They would not let us leave until dark, and told us to come back at ten o'clock the next morning.

To go into details and tell you all that happened during that eventful week would take entirely too much room.

I had several long talks with Mr. Griffith, and he is the most interesting man I ever talked with. I went to St. Martinsville, St. John's Plantation, with the company, and had a marvelous time. The Sunday we were in St. Martinsville people came there by the hundreds to look on, and, say! but it was nice to be inside the ropes with the rest of the world on the outside!

One of the nicest actors among them was Porter Strong, and I was so sorry to hear of his death. I talked to him one day for an hour or more, and he told me all about the way they made the snow scenes for "Way Down East."

Carol Dempster is a dear, and one of the friendliest girls I ever knew. She talked and laughed with me on location like any of my other girl friends, and naturally I like her immensely. Mae Marsh was ill part of the time, and so I did not get to see her as much as I did Miss Dempster. When Mr. Griffith introduced us, of course I was quite thrilled. She has light reddish hair, is rather small, but I do not think she looks so much like her pictures. She has a darling little girl, although I did not see her but once.

Neil Hamilton is very nice looking and I like him very much. One day, when I was waiting for my turn to come and was almost freezing, he took off his coat and handed it to me, and I was certainly grateful. Mr. Novello has a funny accent. He is very nice, and, of course, from his pictures you can see that he is quite nice looking.

But the one I am crazy about is Miss La Verne, who is a peach. She is so sweet and nice to every one that you just can't help liking her.

I have saved the one I liked best for the last, which, of course, is Mr. Griffith himself. He is so kind, and as Mrs. Sutch remarked once, more like the chauffeur than the head of the party. I shall never forget him, and of all the directors he is the greatest, and will remain the greatest, regardless of what jealous people may say.

DAISIE DELL GARBER.

401 W. Thomas Street, Hammond, La.

P. S.—I suppose you are wondering what on earth I did in "The White Rose." Well, it was I and not Miss Marsh that came through the gate in the rain, because she was sick with a cold. I am her size and height, and Mr. Griffith said I look something like her—although I can't see the resemblance myself. I was in some other scenes with Miss Dempster, but they, like worlds of others, were all left out when the picture was finally cut and assembled.

A Girl's Experiences in Mr. Griffith's Company.

Most of the letters to you are very interesting, but the ones I like best are the ones that tell about meeting actors and the impressions they made upon the writers.

I am going to write about a little experience I had with D. W. Griffith a year ago last January. I was then going to school in New Iberia, where so many scenes of "The White Rose" were shot. Well, when we heard that the great D. W. was coming to say that we were wild with joy is tame.

Kiddie, a pal of mine, and I went to their location on the very first day. We got up as close as we could and were trying to get a glimpse of them through a fence, when who should come down to the gate—the same one which Teazie went through in the rain—but D. W. and Miss Dempster.

By this time a great crowd had collected behind us, so we were hemmed in; we were almost inside the grounds.

D. W. stood there looking at the gate which he was having painted, and by some piece of good luck he glanced our way. He kept looking back at us and finally he, Miss Dempster, and Mrs. Sutch put their heads together, and we concluded from the way they glanced at us from time to time that they must be discussing us.

Finally they went back to the house,

In Defense of Vaudeville

Louisville (Ky) Courier-Journal June 1 1924

TO PRODUCE PICTURE IN ROME

D. W. GRIFFITH has accepted an invitation from an Italian syndicate of bankers to go to Rome for the purpose of conferring on the production of a series of pictures to be made there. The syndicate is headed by Comm. Andrea Sereo, member of the Mayor's Cabinet of Rome.

The action on the part of the bankers has the consent of the Italian Government.

In a statement issued by representatives of the syndicate, it says: "We feel the activity of Mr. Griffith in Italy will do much toward restoring the picture-making industry of Italy to its full health and prosperity."

This is the first time an American artist ever has been sought by another people to re-establish an art activity. In many instances American financiers and business men have been invited to reorganize a country's industries or economics, but this seems to be the first time an artist has been sought for that purpose.

No definite plans have been made regarding the nature of the story, but the syndicate wishes something after the manner of Mr. Griffith's "America," which has proven one of Griffith's greatest successes in popularity.

The art of persuasion—Griffith has at last fallen for it, and has gone to Italy to confer with a syndicate of Italian financiers for an elaborate motion picture production to be made in that country. The conference was arranged by Comm. C. Andrea Serrao, K.C.B.E., a government official of Rome, thru the services of his young nephew who lives here, and inasmuch as many syndicates of many countries have sought Mr. Griffith in vain, the accomplishment is considered quite a coup. The object of the undertaking is to rehabilitate the motion picture industry in Italy which was all but annihilated during the war. It is believed that Griffith, with financial backing assured, and with an American cast and perfectly appointed studios, can do just that. No story has been decided upon but it will be something as elaborate and enormous as "Faust," "L'Aiglon," "The Last Days of Pompeii," "The Quest of the Holy Grail." And apropos of getting rewarded, Griffith has just been awarded honorary membership in The Minute Men of Lexington, for his work in making "America." It is the oldest military organization in this country and members are direct descendants of the men who fought in the battle of Lexington.

Elizabeth N.J. Times June 1 1924

Your LEGS as YARDSTICKS of Your BRAIN POWER

YOUR legs are a measure of your brain power. If you have a small body and long arms and legs, the chances are that you are highly intelligent and will find success in some kind of brain work.

If you have a large body and short arms and legs, brain work probably is not your forte, and you would do best to follow some manual trade, or at least a line of work requiring steadiness and accuracy rather than quickness of mind.

If you are of a normal type—that is, if your limbs are not disproportionately long or short in comparison with the size of your body—you may be either intelligent or unintelligent. Whether you are suited for brain work or manual labor cannot be told accurately from your bodily measurements.

These in effect are the conclusions science has reached as a result of the latest investigations in the field of physiological psychology.

How science has found by experiments that the size and proportions of the body apparently supply a most reliable way of predicting the intelligence is described in Popular Science Monthly by Henry E. Garrett, Ph.D., department of psychology, Columbia University.

To find whether you belong to the long-legged, short-legged, or normal type of man, you proceed as follows:

First measure the volume of your trunk, dividing it in three sections:

1.—Measure length of chest bone, depth of chest and width between armpits. Multiply dimensions.

2.—Measure from chest bone to end of ribs, width and depth of middle chest. Multiply dimensions.

3.—Measure from end of ribs to hip bone, width and depth of waist. Multiply dimensions.

Add these three volumes to obtain total volume of trunk. Now measure the length of one arm and one leg.

Divide combined length of arm and leg by total volume of trunk. The result will give a fraction—your "morphologic index." If this is between .035 and .022, you belong to the short-legged type; if between .035 and .048, to the long-legged type. Normal is about .035.

Recently Dr. Sante Naccarati, of New York City, well-known specialist in nervous and mental disorders, conducted a test of this theory among about 300 student of Columbia University. The results tend to show unmistakably that a very definite relationship exists between bodily structure and intelligence, this despite the fact that no very unintelligent individuals would be found among a group of college students. If unskilled workers had been included, the relation between intelligence and bodily development almost certainly would have been more striking.

The result is called the "morphologic index," or guide to bodily structure. It tells instantly to what bodily type a man belongs, just as dividing a man's weight by his height would tell you whether he is too light or too heavy for his height.

Professor Garrett says that although the morphologic index is not a 100 per cent guide to intelligence, on the whole, comparison of the bodily measurements of the students with their tested intelligence showed undoubtedly that so far as the possession of general intelligence is concerned, the chances are very much in favor of the man who possesses a small body and long legs.

"It is surprising how thoroughly Dr. Naccarati's conclusions seem to be borne out in the case of many well known men," Professor Garrett points out. "Henry Ford, John D. Rockefeller, General Pershing, Booth Tarkington and David Wark Griffith might be named as the outstanding Americans of this generation in their particular fields. All of them are long-legged men with short bodies.

"Washington and Lincoln and Woodrow Wilson likewise were of this type. President Coolidge, the late President Harding, Andrew W. Mellon, Secretary of the Treasury, and one of the world's leading bankers, and William G. McAdoo, former Secretary of the Treasury, also must be included in the small-bodied, long-legged class. In the world of invention, Tesla, Marconi, the Wright brothers and a host of others are typically long-limbed men with small bodies.

"Edison belongs to the normal type. So did Theodore Roosevelt. So does David Belasco. Charles Evans Hughes and Elihu Root appear to be of the normal type, though removed from the short body, long-legged type by a narrow margin.

"Nobody will deny that all of these men are of superior intelligence, yet all but two or three of them are small-bodied, long-limbed men.

"The names of two other men occur to me—Jack Dempsey and Luis Angel Firpo. They are almost as well known as any of the eminent men I have mentioned, yet not even their staunchest admirers would claim that they possess as much intelligence as any of those named in the previous paragraph. Both of them fall in the class of large-bodied, short-legged men of the low normal group.

"Now, this relationship between bodily proportions and intelligence cannot, of course, be merely accidental. There must be some scientific reason for it. Viola, an Italian scientist, offers the opinion that the man with the small body and long legs has advanced further in the scale of evolution than the normal man or the man with long body and short legs, just as the animals we know to-day show in their bodily conformation and abundant brain capacity an advance over the huge, unwieldly, short-legged prehistoric monsters."

N.Y. Post 6-4-24

Before he finishes his work with films, D. W. Griffith plans to do one big picture without a love story.

"The time is soon to come," says the producer of "America," "when a few pictures—never a great percentage, but a few—can be made in which it will not be necessary to work out a love theme to insure popular interest. When that time comes, many big themes now denied the camera can be approached. The improvements in our audiences make this seem certain within our lifetime."

We always did say that Mr. Griffith is an original.

Variety (nyc) 6/4/24

The straight policy of the house benefited considerably by the enormous holiday business. The parade brought over 200,000 people to the "loop," who jammed the theatres. The name of the picture did not matter as long as there were seats available.

Estimates for last week:

Auditorium — "America" (United Artists). (3,641; $1.65.) Fourth week. Fell $2,000 below previous week, getting $14,324.

Newburgh (NY) News 6/4/24

WILL SHOW 'AMERICA' TO WEST POINT FOLK

Correspondence of The News.

West Point, June 4.—The Altar Society of the Catholic Chapel will present to the public on Thursday evening, in the Cadet Gymnasium the wonderful picture, "America." It is said this is the first and only time this picture will be seen off Broadway. Admission to this picture will be at a special rate to enlisted men and their families and members of the cadet corps. All others will be charged a larger sum, that is not [illegible]

Passaic (NJ) Herald 6/5/24

Griffith and His New Star Sail

David Wark Griffith (right), noted film producer, and Neil Hamilton, the latest movie find of Griffith, numbered among the celebrities who sailed for Europe on the liner George Washington. Producer and star are going to Germany to produce a film based on post-war period.

N.Y. Sun 6/5/24

Chicago (Ill) Journal 6/7/24

A Griffith Picture Without a Love Story

Before he finishes his work with the films D. W. Griffith plans to make one big motion picture without a love story, comparable in size to his famous "America," which is now approaching its sixth successful month at the Forty-fourth Street Theater.

"As an audience for motion pictures, we Americans are improving," he said. "Old age wants fairy tale ideals in its pictures, middle age seeks entertainment, youth asks for problems and stimulating plots. Where the audience presents all three ages, the producer must steal something from the satisfaction of each to interest the others.

"It is of course fundamental that people are only interested in the things they understand. Curiosity seldom extends further than to a new phase of an old subject. And there are only a few things of universal interest, of which love is the most definite. That is the romance of every one's life, love, and therefore all are interested in love.

"For that reason we included an episodic, colorful love story in 'America,' the love of an attractive young radical for a daughter of the old conservatives.

"But the time is soon to come when a few pictures, never a great percentage, but a few, can be made in which it will not be necessary to work out a love theme to insure popular interest. When that time comes, many big themes now denied the camera can be approached. The improvements in our audiences make this seem certain within our lifetime."

CAROL DEMPSTER shows a smiling face in David Wark Griffith's great film of the Revolutionary war, "America," the title of which is also that of the Auditorium.

Masons to Hold Three Flag Day Celebrations

Speeches at Manhattan Opera House, Academy of Music and St. George, S. I.

Three Masonic celebrations at the Manhattan Opera House, the Brooklyn Academy of Music and St. George, S. I., were announced yesterday for Flag Day, June 14, with special music and speaking programs. At the Manhattan Opera House the orators will be Justice Arthur S. Tompkins, of the Supreme Court, and William A. Rowan, grand master of Masons in the state.

A film prepared by D. W. Griffith, "Masons as Makers of America," will be shown. The Metropolitan Opera Company orchestra is to play. The Griffith film will show historic figures in Masonic activities—Washington, Franklin, Paul Revere, Paul Jones and the sponsors of the Boston Tea Party as well as the lodge members who sent Revere on his midnight ride.

Lieutenant-Governor Lane and Charles H. Johnson, grand senior warden of Masons in the state, will address the Brooklyn meeting. Joseph Newton will speak at the Staten Island

Toledo (O) News-Bee 6/5/24

My World Louisville (Ky) Courier-Journal Jun 1 1924 June 1 1924

THERE is one motion picture critic who always agrees with me concerning the merits of the films that come and go. He is a pretty smart fellow, this William Jennings Bryan. While talking with Mr. D. W. Griffith the other day I saw a letter from the Commoner lying on the producer's desk and inquired about it. Here it is:

"My Dear Mr. Griffith:

"I have just seen 'America' and, while still under the spell of the enchantment that it arouses, hasten to thank you for the great national service you have rendered in producing this inspiring picture. The subject is opportune, the historical incidents are admirably selected and the work is artistically done. There is great educational value in the reproduction of scenes portraying the social and economic life of Revolutionary days, in the Colonies and in Great Britain, and in recalling the famous speech of Patrick Henry, the signing of the Declaration of Independence, the Battles of Lexington, Concord and Bunker Hill, the suffering at Valley Forge, the sacrifices of the patriots, the crushing of the enemy, Lafayette as soldier and the heroism of the early patriots. The scenes passing through the eye are more vivid and more thrilling than impressions made by the printed page. Some you have already read, but the story of the battlefield is in advance. You have drama and music, you have humor to relieve the tension, you have heart to appeal to every sentiment. In this production you have given the patriots in miniature of those who made possible our government, should we willing to accept, pay their debts that which we have bought with their blood.

"I feel that the picture will be received all over the country in the spirit with which it is presented, as an entertainment and as a patriotic lesson. Where the national exposure of the patriots will stimulate patriotism, the personal appeal will stimulate the satisfaction of each in the service of all.

"It is of such fundamental importance that we are interested in things that interest us, that nothing serving further than to a new phase of an old subject. And there are only a few things of universal interest, of which love is the most definite. That is the romance of every one's life, love, and therefore all are interested in love.

"For that reason we included an episodic, colorful love story in 'America,' the love of an attractive young radical for a daughter of the old conservatives.

"But the time is soon to come when a few pictures, never a great percentage, but a few, can be made in which it will not be necessary to work out a love theme to insure popular interest. When that time comes, many big themes now denied the camera can be approached. The improvements in our audiences make this seem certain within our lifetime."

D. W. Griffith, the Dean of Directors, is due to make Louisville a visit during Home-Coming week. It is understood that Mr. Griffith will spend part of the "home-coming" time in [illegible] Grange and some of the [illegible]

My Telegraph June 1 1924

"America" due in the [illegible] Ashcraft took [illegible] people of Griffith's "America" [illegible] office out into the country this week and showed them on a morning in the [illegible] town in St. Mary's great orphanage at Five Points. He took along an orchestra of twelve men and gave a complete show.

My Times June 1 1924

Fairy Tales for Old Age

A [illegible] in the motion picture [illegible] David W. Griffith, before he gives his work on film, plans to make a big motion picture without a love story comparable to Hugo and produce it in "America." Mr. Griffith is [illegible] that American motion picture audiences are improving.

"As an audience for motion pictures, we Americans are improving," he said. "Old age wants fairy tale ideals in its pictures, middle age seeks entertainment, youth asks for problems and stimulating plots. Where the audience presents all three ages, the producer must steal something from the satisfaction of each to interest the others.

"It is of course fundamental that people are only interested in the things they understand. Curiosity seldom extends further than to a new phase of an old subject. And there are only a few things of universal interest, of which love is the most definite. That is the romance of every one's life, love, and therefore all are interested in love.

"For that reason we included an episodic, colorful love story in 'America,' the love of an attractive young radical for a daughter of the old conservatives.

"But the time is soon to come when a few pictures, never a great percentage, but a few, can be made in which it will not be necessary to work out a love theme to insure popular interest. When that time comes, many big themes now denied the camera can be approached. The improvements in our audiences make this seem certain within our lifetime."

Wichita Falls (Tex) Record News June 2 1924

Paul Revere's Ride Is Highlight Of "America," Showing at Palace Soon

Wichita Falls (Tex) Times

FREDERICK LUCIS WRITES ABOUT "AMERICA"

Frederick Lucis, famous New York journalist and brother of Jules Lucis, is a recent auditor, who impressions follow. Director Griffith's production, "America," is for all one week, "The Palace," beginning Thursday, June 5, is to show at the Palace Theatre for three days, beginning Thursday matinee and to end Friday and Saturday.

Mr. Lucis writes as follows:

[illegible] discovered America, but David Wark Griffith made the [illegible] The discovery was an accident, but the picture was [illegible]

[illegible] Lucis [illegible] what he saw and felt in the picture [illegible] to make a great [illegible]

[illegible] Tuesday night [illegible] "America" at the Palace Theatre some months ago. Purchasers are more or less interested in this picture [illegible] who came then after having been.

We have just heard something [illegible] this show that. [illegible] in a personal [illegible] D. W. Griffith and [illegible] creating a [illegible] [illegible] Griffith [illegible] Hollywood [illegible] Headquarters at Hollywood.

After making Hamilton in the film [illegible] Griffith [illegible] Hamilton [illegible] Hamilton [illegible] Griffith [illegible] Hamilton [illegible] Griffith [illegible] Hamilton [illegible] Griffith

America

"—My Country, 'Tis of Thee!"

Battle scene from Griffith's film masterpiece, "America."

By Frances Peck

It's a grand thing to be a movie critic when the screen opens up and divulges a picture like this!

"America" is the greatest picture D. W. Griffith has made since "The Birth of a Nation." He says:

"It's my historical tribute to George Washington!"

For a long time Mr. Griffith had such a picture in mind. Then, as if in answer to his half formulated plans, came the D. A. R. asking that—for them—he undertake the making of such a photoplay.

* * *

It seemed too good to be true to this man who is still paying the bills on "Intolerance." Promptly he set to work. The picture must have thrill, punch, but—most of all—accuracy. The thrill and punch didn't worry him. The "maker" of a thousand stars—director of photoplays innumerable—"thrill and punch" are all in the day's work to him. What DID worry him was the research work, at which he immediately got busy at the request of Will Hays, who has taken an active interest in the film.

And so—we have immortalized on the silversheet the ride of Paul Revere; the battle of Lexington—a dozen other battles staged with the help of the U. S. A., historical societies, etc., to the sweetly minor notes of an entrancing love story in which Carol Dempster is the heroine, Niel Hamilton the lover, and Lionel Barrymore the terribie "other man."

* * *

The producer personally visited every important battlefield in the Mohawk Valley. You know—the scenes where the Indian conflicts were so hot and heavy. Right on the ground where some of our most soul-stirring history occurred, "America" was filmed.

"America" sends you away proud and patriotic. The film is splendidly produced.

If you contemplate viewing other pictures—

"See 'America' first."

"AMERICA"

Produced and Directed by David Wark Griffith.

THE CAST

Nathan Holden	Niel Hamilton
Justice Montague	Erville Alderson
Nancy Montague	Carol Dempster
Charles Philip Edward Montague	Charles Emmett Mack
John Hancock	John Dunton
King George III	Arthur Donaldson
William Pitt	Charles Bennett
Thomas Jefferson	Frank Walsh
Patrick Henry	Frank McGlynn Jr.
George Washington	Arthur Dewey
Captain Walter Butler	Lionel Barrymore
Sir Ashley Montague	Sidney Deane
General Gage	W. W. Jones
Chief of Senecas, Hiakatoo	Harry Semalls
Paul Revere	Harry O'Neill
John Parker, Captain of Minute Men	H. Van Bousen
Major Pitcairn	Hugh Baird
Colonel Prescott	H. Koser
Major General Warren	Michael Donovan
Chief of Mohawks	Riley Hatch
Lord North	Emil Hoch

FANS' SAY SO

Come right out and tell the world!

Caroline J.: If you'll send a stamped, self-addressed envelope I'll send you the addresses you ask for.

* * *

Sally N.: Pardon me—but I can't see just what your question has to do with the motion picture business.

Next Week! About Barbara La Marr as "The Lady Known as Lou" in "The Shooting of Dan McGrew."

Denver (Colo) Times June 7 1924

Oklahoma (Okla) Oklahoman 6/8/24

Atlantic City (N J) Gazette 6/8/24

Orpheum

Neil Hamilton, the young man who plays the part of captain in the romantic Morgan's riders scenes of D. W. Griffith's great film "America," which opens at the Orpheum Sunday, is distinctive in that he is the first man of equal experience to be given so important a role. No other young actor has had such an opportunity unless backed by a record of successful efforts.

He is the son of an attorney now living in New Haven, Conn. Lynn, Mass., is his birthplace, and his education was gained in Athol, Mass.

His mother hoped he would enter the ministry; and guided this ambition by entering him for a five years course in a theological seminary.

Somewhat impulsive, with an ardent nature, Neil Hamilton realized such unrest that his mother liberated him from all promises and the family held council as to his future.

He said he wished to become an actor. Peculiarly his arguments were given strength by the prophecy of an old woman of local reputation as a seer who predicts he would be "famous when young and rich when old," if he followed acting seriously.

His introduction was a small part in "The Better 'Ole" on the stage, followed by several seasons of varied occupation. Once he as one of Henry Ford's $6-a-day young men in the River Rouge plant.

One afternoon D. W. Griffith sent for a well known stage actor to consider a part in one of his screen stories. The actor was under contract to others, but suggested Griffith try his room-mate whom he recommended as being very handsome.

Hamilton appeared, intensely nervous and most conscious of his slight experience in screen work.

His trial resulted in the business manager for Griffith asking Hamilton his terms for a three years contract. Then and there Hamilton broke up a serious rehearsal by leaping into the air and shouting. He calmed to the business of signing his paper, and immediately was given a part in "The White Rose."

To give him thorough training, Griffith made Hamilton act every little role in the picture during rehearsal.

When the Daughters of the American Revolution asked to have "America" made, Griffith decided that Hamilton was perhaps the most typically American of all the young men then available for the part.

So he was given the great acting part of Nathan Hodge, the Harvard graduate who falls in love with Mary, belle of Virginia.

His success has been so great that when "America" was shown, Griffith immediately received over a dozen offers for Hamilton's services, besides the new offers for foreign productions and some scenes in a picture now [illegible]

NEIL HAMILTON, one of the leading players in "America," Griffith's screen masterpiece, now showing at the Rialto Theatre.

Trenton (N J) Times

Los Angeles (Cal) News 6/8/24

NEIL HAMILTON
CAROL DEMPSTER
in "America"

Los Angeles (Cal) Times 6/8/24

Syracuse (N Y) Herald 6/8/24

Syracuse (N Y) Journal June 8 1924

Atlanta (Ga) Weekly Film Review June 7 1924

Los Angeles (Cal) Express 6/7/24

Oakland (Cal) Tribune June 7 1924

Chicago (Ill) Herald-Examiner 6/8/24

Chicago (Ill) Herald June 7 1924

Chicago (Ill) News June 7 1924

My World 6/7/24

Morning Picture World June 7 1924

GREAT PROFITS FOR 'AMERICA' AS A TOURING SHOW

Griffith Picture Is Doing Phenomenal Business Everywhere

"AMERICA" MAKES BRILLIANT ROAD SHOW RECORD AND REAL PROFITS

The theater attractions on the road this season have been recorded as one of the most unsatisfactory ever known. It is reported that as many as forty-six road attractions were withdrawn in the last week of April. Yet, despite this condition and the fact that the season was practically over, D. W. Griffith's "America" has gone forth and made a brilliant success and real profits.

Washington probably furnished the biggest grosses, taking more than $20,000 for the first two of the four weeks' run, leaving profits the [illegible] through out. The average [illegible] for the two weeks in Washington [illegible]

NEIL HAMILTON

The Road Show Record

Liberty Magazine (NY City)
July 26 1924

...pictorization of the surrender of Cornwallis at Yorktown, one of the many historic scenes ...America," which starts at the Broadway theater next Monday, and below—Lionel Barry... ...and Dempster, starring the production, and Neil Hamilton.

(over) Milwaukee (Wis) Cincinnati (O)
...Sentinel Post 6/11/24
...1924 June 10 1924

...ERICA" ✓

...n the policy of THE ...tments upon motio... ...because usually the... ...bearing upon schoo... ...ir students interest... ...abundant literature... ...monthlies and week... ...r pages entirely to...

...n not help but pause... ...W. Griffith's latest... ...erica". We thorough... ...all the cadets and to... ...is THE OYEZ. It be... ...an not help but live... ...forever.

...Ride", "The British ...n", "The Shot Heard ...f" at Concord Bridge, ...Weak Defending the ...Parliament", Edmund ...rst American Flag in ...Washington", (Walter ...ttle of Bunker Hill", ...of Cornwallis", ...d a hundred and one ...miliar to students of ...history are vividly por... ...torically correct back...

...In the attractive love ...on Holden and Nancy ...Carter whose father was ...cause of his life—a de... ...of the Majesty of Eng...

...a crafty quality which ...good photoplay. There ...nothing correct in all ...action, the thrills the ...conflict have zest and ...spirit of perpetual ...feather as he shows ...is one to have the ...and inspired ...and a better appre... ...events the results

CAROL Dempster, a favorite of the screen who stars in "America," D. W. Griffith's latest film.

Rochester (NY) Dem & Chron June 14 1924

Actors' Fame or Failure Depends on What They Are Called

By Eugene Segal

ROSE by any other name is not only smells as sweet, as the saying goes, but sweeter. Names do mean something, stage and screen folk discovered long ago. So they assumed or were given new names, not because acting is shameful profession, but because the effect of a name on the public mind can mean fame or obscurity for the actor.

David W. Griffith rechristened almost all of his stars. His reasons were three. First, there was the effect upon the actor of having a pretty name. There was the psychological effect on the audience. And finally it was necessary to have short names that would bill easily on posters and in electric lights.

Griffith did not take any name at random. He studied them, selecting the ones that connoted love, tenderness, pathos and wistfulness.

The motion picture industry abounds with aliases. Mary Pickford was born Gladys Smith.

Valentino once was known as Guglielmi.

Colleen Moore was Kathleen Morrison.

Bessie Love, whose name sounds phoney, used to answer to the name of Juanita Horton.

Marjorie Daw started life as Marjorie House.

Madge Bellamy's real last name is Philpott.

Viola Dana and Shirley Mason used to receive mail addressed to Flugarth.

In a little Texas town they still speak of Jetta Bitey, meaning Mary Miles Minter.

Lila Lee wrote Lila Appel on her schoolbooks.

Antonio Moreno originally was Montenegro.

Ramon Novarro's family name is Samaniego.

Wanda Hawley, one of the pretty names on the screen, isn't the name of the girl herself.

...ny Post

my News June 5
1924 asterpiece, "America."

Hamilton
Alderson
Dempster
tt Mack Dunton
onaldson
Bennett k Walsh
lynn Jr.
r Dewey arrymore
y Deane
. Jones
Semalls
O'Neill
Bousen
h Baird
Koser
Donovan
y Hatch
l Hoch

tington—ged with histori-sweetly
ing love

Known
McGrew."

story in which Carol Dempster is the heroine, Niel Hamilton the lover, and Lionel Barrymore the terrible "other man."

* * *

The producer personally visited every important battlefield in the Mohawk Valley. You know—the scenes where the Indian conflicts were so hot and heavy. Right on the ground where some of our most soul-stirring history occurred, "America" was filmed.

"America" sends you away proud and patriotic. The film is splendidly produced.

If you contemplate viewing other pictures—

"See 'America' first."

FANS' SAY SO

Come right out and tell the world!

Caroline J.: If you'll send a stamped, self-addressed envelope I'll send you the addresses you ask for.

* * *

Sam N.: Pardon me — but I can't see just what your question has to do with the motion picture business.

mantic Mexican's riders accom
W. Griffith's great film "Ameri which opens at the Orpheum Sunda is distinctive in that he is the fi man of equal experience to be gi so important a role. No other you actor has had such an opportunit unless backed by a record of succes ful efforts.

He is the son of an attorney now living in New Haven, Conn. Lynn,
Mass., is his birthplace, and his edu cation was gained in Athol, Mass.

His mother hoped he would enter the ministry; and guided this ambi tion by entering him for a five years course in theological seminary.

Somewhat impulsive, with an ardent nature, Neil Hamilton realized such unrest that his mother liberated him from all promises and the family held council as to his future.

He said he wished to become an actor. Peculiarly his arguments were given strength by the prophecy of an old woman of local reputation as a seer who predicts he would be "famous when young and rich when old,"
if he followed acting seriously.

His introduction was a small part in "The Better 'Ole" on the stage, followed by several seasons of varied occupation. Once he as one of Henry Ford's $6-a-day young men in the River Rouge plant.

One afternoon D. W. Griffith sent for a well known stage actor to con sider a part in one of his screen studies. The actor was under con tract to others, but suggested Griffith try his room-mate whom he recom mended as being very handsome.

Hamilton appeared, intensely nervous and most conscious of the slight experience in screen work.

His trial resulted in the business manager for Griffith asking Hamilton his terms for a three years contract.
Then and there Hamilton broke up a serious rehearsal by leaping into the air and shouting. He calmed to the business of signing his paper, and immediately was given a part in "The White Rose."

To give him thorough training
Griffith made Hamilton act every noble role in the picture during re-

When the Daughters of the American Revolution asked to have "America" made, Griffith decided that Hamilton was perhaps the most typically American of all the young men then available for the part.

So he was given the great part of Nathan Hedge, the Revolutionary cadet who falls in love with Tory, beside of Virginia.

His success has been so great that when "America" was shown, Griffith immediately received over a dozen offers for Hamilton's services, both from film officers for foreign productions and some account in a picture

Angeles (Cal) Oakland (Cal)
Press 6/7/24 Tribune
June 7 1924

Chicago (Ill)
Herald-Examiner
6/8/24

Chicago Tribune 6/8/24

Denver (Colo) Times June 1 1924

Denver (Colo) News June

Boston (Mass) Post 6/8/24

Lexington (Ky) Leader 6/8/24

Boardwalk Illustrated News Atlantic City (N J) 6/9/24

Los Angeles (Cal) Herald 6/9/24

Milwaukee (Wis) Sentinel June 10 1924

Cincinnati (O) Post 6/11/24

Atlantic City (N J) Press 6/10/24

Los Angeles (Cal) Record 6/14/24

Rochester (N Y) Dem & Chron June 14 1924

N Y Post 6/14/24

Chicago (Ill) Post June 12 1924

Cincinnati (O) Billboard 6/14/24

Salem (Ore) Capital Journal 6/10/24

British Surrender Shown in 'America'

The dramatic picturization of the surrender of Cornwallis at Yorktown, one of the many historic scenes in the film play, "America," which starts at the Broadway theater next Monday, and below—Lionel Barrymore (at left), Carol Dempster, starring the production, and Neil Hamilton.

PRESIDENT COOLIDGE PAYS TRIBUTE TO MOVIES IN CONFERRING ABOUT MAKING OF 'AMERICA'

"America," D. W. Griffith's magnificent portrayal of the Revolutionary days, will be shown at the Broadway theater for one week, commencing June 16. Above—The battle of Lexington, a scene from the picture. Below—Actors who play important roles in the production. Left to right—Charles E. Mack, Louis Wolheim and Carol Dempster.

D. W. Griffith plans, sometime before he dies, to make a big motion picture without a love story, comparable in length and production to "America." Mr. Griffith believes that American motion picture audiences are improving.

"Old age," says Mr. Griffith, in a recent interview, "wants fairy tale ideals in its pictures; middle age seeks entertainment, and youth asks for problems and stimulating plots. Where the audience represents all three ages, the producer must steal something from the satisfaction of each to interest all.

"But the time soon is to come when a few pictures—never a great percentage, but a few—can be made in which it will not be necessary to include a love theme to insure popular interest. When that time comes, many big themes now denied the camera can be approached. Improvements in our audiences make this seem certain within our lifetime."

Mr. Hamilton, who has the m lead in the Griffith picture "America has been asked by Henry H. Kits sculptor, to pose for a statue wh has been ordered as a memorial Washington's Headquarters at Ne burgh, N. Y. Mr. Kitson made statue of the Minute Man on

"America" has come to the Board walk. D. W. Griffith's feature photo-play started a limited engagement at the Savoy Theatre on Saturday afternoon, June 7th, during which Atlantic City theatregoers will have the rare privilege of witnessing one of the screen masterpieces of moving picture history.

Though there are now ten "America" companies being offered in the leading cities, this attraction will not visit any other theatre in Atlantic City this season, for its popularity has necessitated an extension of its engagement in the places where it was originally presented. At this time the film is being shown in New York, Chicago, Boston, Pittsburgh, Baltimore, Washington, Buffalo, Detroit, Cincinnati and Cleveland.

This romance of a hundred million people is from the story written by Robert W. Chambers, which dealt with the thrills and outstanding heroes of the American revolution.

The Savoy Theatre management introduced the continuous performance plan in an effort to make it possible for every man, woman and child of Atlantic City and the thousands of visitors to see the showing at a time convenient to them. The first showing begins at 11 A. M., and the last showing will end at 11 P. M.

The picture, besides having its scores of thrills and being full of romance, is a practical history lesson of which many teachers and pupils of the Atlantic City and nearby schools will take advantage.

The ride of Paul Revere flinged on the road over which he dashed, even in cases where the erection of monuments of modern improvements made the shooting of massive scenes impossible. Griffith included scenes of the actual historical sites, weaving them into the action of his story.

But perhaps of all the innovations in the filming of "America," the most profound was the use of large units of the regular army of the United States in several battle scenes. Infantrymen and cavalrymen fled in the garb of British grenadiers and in the buff and blue of Washington's Continental Army marched through the pictures. It is the first time that units of the regular army have posed before the motion picture camera. In making the scenes in which the soldiers appear Griffith had the aid of Army officers in charge of troops in and during the Revolution.

Many battles of the war were fought the day that we heard "Paul Revere's Ride" in the engagement which changed the fortunes of the Colonies in their struggle for independence. Among the battles which are depicted in "America" are the battle of Lexington, the battle of Bunker Hill, the surrender of Cornwallis, the signing of the Declaration of Independence, the battle of Yorktown, the battle of Saratoga, the battle of Trenton, the battle of Princeton, the battle of Brandywine, the battle of Germantown, the battle of Monmouth, the battle of Stony Point, the battle of Cowpens, the battle of King's Mountain, the battle of Guilford Court House, the battle of Eutaw Springs, the battle of Fort Ticonderoga, the battle of Fort Mifflin, the battle of Fort Clinton, the battle of Fort Montgomery, the battle of Fort Lee, the battle of Fort Washington a masterpiece, "America."

Ny News June 5
1924

iel Hamilton
ille Alderson ol Dempster mmett Mack
John Dunton
y Donaldson rles Bennett
Frank Walsh
McGlynn Jr.
rthur Dewey
l Barrymore
dney Deane
W. W. Jones
arry Semalls
arry O'Neill
Van Bousen
Hugh Baird
H. Koser
el Donovan
Riley Hatch
Emil Hoch

Lexington—staged with A., histori-
the sweetly rancing love

ndy Kanen
McGrew."

story in which Carol Dempster is the heroine, Niel Hamilton the lover, and Lionel Barrymore the terrible "other man."

* * *

The producer personally visited every important battlefield in the Mohawk Valley. You know—the scenes where the Indian conflicts were so hot and heavy. Right on the ground where some of our most soul-stirring history occurred, "America" was filmed.

"America" sends you away proud and patriotic. The film is splendidly produced.

If you contemplate viewing other pictures—

"See 'America' first."

FANS' SAY SO

Come right out and tell the world!

Caroline J.: If you'll send a stamped, self-addressed envelope I'll send you the addresses you ask for.

* * *

Sally N.: Pardon me — but I can't see just what your question has to do with the motion picture business.

matic ... W. Griffith's great film "A ... which opens at the Orpheum ... is distinctive in that he is ... man of equal experience to ... so important a role. No other actor has had such an opp... unless backed by a record of ... ful efforts.

He is the son of an attorney living in New Haven, Conn. ... Mass., is his birthplace, and his ... cation was gained in Athol, Mass.

His mother hoped he would ... the ministry; and guided this ... tion by entering him for a five ye... course in a theological seminary.

Somewhat impulsive, with an ar... future, Neil Hamilton realized ... unrest that his mother liberated ... from all promises and the family ... council as to his future.

He said he wished to become ... actor. Peculiarly his arguments ... given strength by the prophecy of ... old woman of local reputation as ... seer who predicts he would be ... mous when young and rich when ... if he followed acting seriously.

His introduction was a small ... in "The Better 'Ole" on the ... followed by several seasons of va... occupation. Once he as one of ... Ford's $6-a-day young men in ... River Rouge plant.

One afternoon D. W. Griffith ... for a well known stage actor to ... der a part in one of his ... stories. The actor was under ... tract to others, but suggested Gri... try his room-mate whom he re... mended as being very handsome.

Hamilton appeared, intensely ... ous and most conscious of his ... experience in screen work.

His trial resulted in the busi... manager for Griffith asking Hamil... his terms for a three years con... Then and there Hamilton being ... serious rehearsal by leaping into ... air and shouting. He calmed to ... business of signing his paper, ... immediately was given a part in "... White Rose."

To give him thorough ... Griffith made Hamilton act ... suitable role in the picture during ...

When the Daughters of the ... Revolution asked to have ... made, Griffith decided ... Hamilton was perhaps the ... sympathetic American of all the ... men then available for the part.

So he was given the great ... part of Nathan Hale, the ... patriot who hate to ... They, people of Virginia.

His success has been so great ... while "America" was shown, ... immediately received over a ... offer for Hamilton's services, ... the two offers for foreign productions ... with some money in a picture ...

Los Angeles Cal. Herald 6/7/24
Oakland (Cal) Express 6/7/24
Volume June 7 1924
Chicago Sec Herald-Examiner 6/8/24

Chicago (Ill) Tribune 6/8/24

Denver (Colo) Times June 9 1924

Denver (Colo) Post

On The Black List.

Dear Mr. Editor: This is certainly a kick on the ... don't pass judgment on my language.

There are a number of stars I object to. First and foremost is Corinne Griffith. She usually has an expression on her face which would lead us to believe that having a pain in her tummy is as awful thing. Witness her open mouth, lowered lids, and eyebrows pointed skyward. However, she's clever.

Nita Naldi comes next on my black list. She's frightfully fat! And the vulgar easer she affects! Priceless! But she, also, can be clever.

Barbara La Marr—Ah! The beautiful siren! What can you see in her work to justify superlatives? I think she's beautiful, but I can't see her brains. (Cat) Also it's no fun to go to a theater with a wonderful young man just to let him satisfy his loved glimpses of her. I should retaliate by taking him to see handsome Richard Dix or Milton Sills.

I shouldn't blame any man for admiring the following women: Anna Q. Nilsson, Irene Rich (bless her), Florence Vidor (nice lady), Betty Compson, Mary Pickford, Alice Terry, Claire Windsor (beautiful), Bebe Daniels, Lois Wilson, and Pola Negri. They are all beautiful and talented women, don't you think?

Now comes the hardest kick. I must hide my face and point a wavering finger of shame at the stars and their imitators posing as in nude. Even the baby stars, a wisp of silk, a Spanish comb, tra! la! Or some young woman draping herself around the sandy shore in little or nothing by way of covering. Almost every motion picture magazine is filled with photos of this kind. Well, an' it's me that's after havin' my own opinion of them gir-ruls.

I think D. W. Griffith is the one and only, at least I have seen no greater promise in any other director since I stepped down these shores. I'm inclined to think there never will be. He could give us more, I know, but he's afraid all the people wouldn't understand his work as he sees it. Perhaps some day he'll strike a happy medium.

I think I've said enough—but first I want to register one last kick—and that is Gloria Swanson. I can't see any ability in her whatever. She's merely a curiosity with most, I think. Her nose is too long (Meow!), and I don't like her snobbishness! Can't think of another thing. O, yes: lots of praise for Miss Mae Tinee, nee Miss Frances Peck? She's the snappiest little piece on earth. MOLLY O.

Boston (Mass) Lexington (Ky) Post 6/8/24 Leader 6/8/24

D. W. Griffith plans, sometime before he dies, to make a big motion picture without a love story, comparable in length and production to "America." Mr. Griffith believes that American motion picture audiences are improving. "Old age," says Mr. Griffith, in a recent interview, "wants fairy tale ideals in its pictures; middle age seeks entertainment, and youth asks for problems and stimulating plots. Where the audience represents all three ages, the producer must steal something from the satisfaction of each to interest all.

"But the time soon is to come when a few pictures—never a great percentage, but a few—can be made in which it will not be necessary to include a love theme to insure popular interest. When that time comes, many big themes now denied the camera can be approached. Improvements in our audiences make this seem certain within our lifetime."

Los Angeles (Cal) Herald 6/9/24

Neil Hamilton, who has the m... lead in the Griffith picture "America" has been asked by Henry H. Kitson, sculptor, to pose for a statue wh... has been ordered as a memorial ... Washington's Headquarters at Newburgh, N. Y. Mr. Kitson made the statue of the Minute Man ...

Boardwalk Illustrated News Atlantic City (N J) 6/9/24

"America" has come to the Boardwalk. D. W. Griffith's feature photoplay started a limited engagement at the Savoy Theatre on Saturday afternoon, June 7th, during which Atlantic City theatregoers will have the rare privilege of witnessing one of the screen masterpieces of moving picture history.

Though there are now ten "America" companies being offered in the leading cities, this attraction will not visit any other theatre in Atlantic City this season, for its popularity has necessitated an extension of its engagement in the places where it was originally presented. At this time the film is being shown in New York, Chicago, Boston, Pittsburgh, Baltimore, Washington, Buffalo, Detroit, Cincinnati and Cleveland.

This romance of a hundred million people is from the story written by Robert W. Chambers, which dealt with the thrills and outstanding heroes of the American revolution.

The Savoy Theatre management introduced the continuous performance plan in an effort to make it possible for every man, woman and child of Atlantic City and the thousands of visitors to see the showing at a time convenient to them. The first showing begins at 11 A. M. and the last showing will end at 11 P. M.

The picture, besides having its scores of thrills and being full of romance, is a practical history lesson of which many teachers and pupils of the Atlantic City and nearby schools will take advantage.

The role of Paul Revere, famed on the road over which he dashed, even in cases where the erection of monuments of modern improvements made the shooting of massive scenes impossible. Griffith included scenes of the period historical sites, weaving them into the action of his story.

But perhaps of all the innovations in the filming of "America," the most astounding was the use of large units of the regular army of the United States in several battle scenes. Infantrymen and cavalrymen—but in the garb of British grenadiers and in the half and fife of Washington's Continental Army—swept majestically through the action. It is the first time that units of the regular army have been used in motion picture work. Not only did the Government authorize the use of the soldiers before the motion picture camera, but in making the pictures in which the soldiers appear, Griffith had the whole of Fort Myer, Virginia, the regular home of the famous 3rd Infantry, and marines in duty during the filming.

Major Guthrie of the 3rd Infantry, who has been head of the Fort Myer Infantry School of Arms, photographed in the uniforms of the grenadiers of the Revolutionary period, was in charge of the military operations at Fort Myer. Major Guthrie was in the battle of Bunker Hill, the Battle of Trenton, the Battle of Princeton, the Battle of Germantown, the Battle of Brandywine, the Battle of Monmouth, the Battle of Yorktown, and was with Washington at Valley Forge.

Chicago (Ill) Post June 12 1924

British Surrender Shown in 'America'

The dramatic picturization of the surrender of Cornwallis at Yorktown, one of the many historic scenes in the film play, "America," which starts at the Broadway theater next Monday, and below—Lionel Barrymore (at left), Carol Dempster, starring the production, and Neil Hamilton.

Massanutten (Va) Academy Sentinel June 10 1924

Milwaukee (Wis) Sentinel June 10 1924

Cincinnati (O) Post 6/11/24

"AMERICA"

It has never been the policy of THE OYEZ to pass comments upon motion pictures or players because usually they have little or no bearing upon school life and those of our students interested can always find abundant literature on the subject in monthlies and weeklies devoting their pages entirely to this subject.

However, we can not help but pause to comment on D. W. Griffith's latest master-piece, "America". We thoroughly recommend it to all the cadets and to everyone who reads THE OYEZ. It is a picture which can not help but live in your memory forever.

"Paul Revere's Ride", "The British March to Lexington", "The Shot Heard 'Round the World" at Concord Bridge, "Pitt, III and Weak Defending the Colonies Before Parliament", Edmund Burke, "The First American Flag in Battle", "George Washington", Walter Butler, "The Battle of Bunker Hill", "The Surrender of Cornwallis", George III and a hundred and one other incidents familiar to students of American short history are vividly portrayed in a historically correct background.

In the play is the attractive love story of Nathan Holden and Nancy Montague, the latter whose father was until the latter years of his life a loyal subject of His Majesty of England.

America has never quite which gave to make a good character. There is the historical setting correct in all its details, the action, the thrills, the heart which a beautiful love story and [illegible] which offers no hindrance to the progress of the plot and [illegible] the theatre [illegible] and inspired [illegible] what to see [illegible] portrayal of Mr. Griffith's. The motion has placed the [illegible] in the hands of Neil Hamilton and Carol Dempster in the principal characters. It is enough that each has been given a chance to portray a people experience. Patrick Henry and Thomas Jefferson are the characters also in the picture and the leading [illegible] is the signing of the Declaration of Independence. It is [illegible] that [illegible] Washington [illegible] the battle of Bunker Hill [illegible] Washington [illegible] Valley Forge [illegible] Yorktown [illegible] Washington [illegible] Mount Vernon [illegible] Washington [illegible] Washington [illegible] Washington

Denver (Colo) News 6/11/24

GRIFFITH'S FAMOUS SCREEN CLASSIC 'AMERICA' WILL OPEN AT BROADWAY THEATER MONDAY

A striking scene from D. W. Griffith's celebrated production, "America," to be shown at the Broadway thea next week—Patrick Henry delivering his famous speech before the Virginia assembly—and below (at le Carol Dempster and Lionel Barrymore, who play the leading roles, and Neil Hamilton, another star in famous cast.

Mammoth Film Revolution Is Said to Surpass 'The Birth of a Nation,' Masterpiece of Productions.

Seats go on sale tomorrow at the box office of the Broadway theater for D. W. Griffith's "America," the romance of the American revolution, which begins an engagement there of seven days next Monday evening.

Griffith's newest masterpiece has been acclaimed by critics thruout the country as his finest work, even surpassing "The Birth of a Nation," which has stood preeminent among all pictures productions in points of sparkling interest and genius of direction.

Cast Is Strong.

"America" touched on the most inspiring chapters of the struggle of the Revolutionary for independence and is a graphic portrayal of the scenes of American high adventure, filling the story in thrilling sequences and woven with a beautiful romance that shows the sure touch of Griffith genius.

Griffith has assembled an unusually strong cast, with a number of popular stars, and he has used as extras many descendants of the heroes who had active parts in the struggle. Patriotic societies flocked to his aid when the picture was being made, and he not only secured the services of many descendants of patriots, but used in the picture a great number of Revolutionary relics, donated for his use by those who held them as patriotisms.

The amphitheatre at the Broadway will be on exactly the same scale as that of the theatre in New York; a full summer orchestra will give the special musical score which is arranged by Hugo Grial and perfected synchronized to the pictures.

Incidents Correct.

No efforts were spared to make the historical incidents as correct as possible. The villages of Lexington and were designed from authentic drawings and descriptions by eyewitnesses of the day. The halls there at Lexington are exact reproductions of the original. It is said that Mr. Griffith had to secure numerous permits before he could film the famous Paul Revere's ride, as he was the first to have taken a camera to the scene of the famous ride. Paul Revere has never before been photographed, yet Griffith, after long search, found a man who bears a striking resemblance to the famous patriot and who was willing to take the part. This "discovery" is quite a sensational one, considering the fact that Griffith has had a nationwide search for a suitable actor for the part. Paul Revere has never before been photographed, yet Griffith, after long search, found a man who bears a striking resemblance to the famous patriot and who was willing to take the part. This "discovery" is quite a sensational one, considering the fact that Griffith has had a nationwide search for a suitable actor for the part.

Charleston (SC) News + Cour June 15 1924

FILMS OF THE FUTURE

(From Collier's.)

A movie in every home is the prophecy of David Wark Griffith, famous producer of motion pictures. "One hundred years hence," writes Mr. Griffith, "I believe, the airplane passenger lines will operate motion picture shows on regular schedule between New York and Chicago and between New York and London. Trains, which will be traveling twice or three times as fast as they do now, will have film theaters on board. Almost every home of good taste will have its private projection room where miniatures, perhaps, of the greater films will be shown to the family, and, of course, families will make their own home movies instead of letters and diaries."

By the time these things come to pass, there will be no cells cling as a flicker in your film. Your characters and objects in pictures will come upon the screen (which by this time will not be square, and certainly may not be square) or look anything like what it does now), and they will appear to the spectator precisely as these persons and objects appear in the actual world. The actors will be seen in their natural colors, and the sound of their voices will be heard. The actors will be seen in their natural colors, and the sound of their voices will be heard.

Kansas City (Mo) Journal-Post 6/15/24

They've Changed Their Names to These

Kate Fillmore has two dogs named.

The name she was christened upon the two times he married.

Colleen Moore has discovered Richard Barthelmess.

Monte Love was born twelve months.

Barbara Kent was Barbara Shaw, Gertrude Astor used to Phillips.

Tom Mix has three Mexican Jumping Beans.

Lila Lee was born Lee.

Richard Barthelmess used to be Richard Barthelmess.

Monte Blue was Monte Blue.

Pauline Frederick was Beatrice Fredericks.

Lionel Barrymore used to be Lionel Barrymore.

Denver (Colo) Times June 14 1924

Denver (Colo) Times June 15 1924

Days of Washington Feature Broadway Picture

The memorable ride of Paul Revere, the inauguration of Washington, the battle of Lexington and scenes of other historic stories of Revolutionary days combine to make "America," D. W. Griffith's latest film masterpiece, a marvel of moving picture art. Denverites will see it when it begins a week's showing at the Broadway theater next Monday. These pictures show Washington's inauguration, Paul Revere on the ride to call the countryside to arms, and two stars of the great cast—Neil Hamilton and Carol Dempster.

Flint (Mich) Journal 6/15/24

Cincinnati (O) Comm'l-Tribune June 15 1924

GRIFFITH TO FILM GREAT LOVE STORY

According to the dispatch of Miss Laura W. Griffith, before he sailed to work on the film, he plans a big motion picture original love story, comparable in magnitude and production to "America." Mr. Griffith believes that American motion picture audiences are improving.

"Right here," says Mr. Griffith, "there have been times in the history, when the mass entertainment and youth have had preference and amusing pictures. Where the audience regularly sit down upon the producer, some great something from the production of back to life."

A [illegible] Photoplay [illegible]

Milwaukee (Wis) Journal 6/15/24

BY MARY MAC

Carol Dempster is pretty Nancy Montague, the sweetheart of Nathan Holden, in Griffith's magnificent film-drama of the American Revolution, America, which comes to the Garrick Sunday and which had the most brilliant and successful advance showing ever staged in Milwaukee at the theater Friday night. Neil Hamilton plays Holden.

A capacity audience clapped and cheered the "rebels" in their struggle for national freedom as though the War of Independence had been an event of yesterday. The handclapping grew into a near-frenzy as hearts responded to the hoofbeats of Paul Revere's gallant white-faced steed along the turnpikes from Boston to Lexington.

Lexington. Concord. Bunker Hill. Valley Forge. Yorktown. They're the milestones in this most glorious film story of pride and sacrifice.

We'll tell you more about it in the review Monday. Then, if you have seen it at the opening Sunday, you'll agree that it packs a terrific wallop.

A flag day parade was staged Saturday afternoon by the American Legion, starting at the court of Honor and finishing at the Garrick.

My News 6/15/24

TILTING THE MOVIE WORLD

In the past few people have ever been in doubt as to whether they should go to see a picture produced by David Wark Griffith. We don't believe any one who ever saw one of his pictures was disappointed. He has been a pioneer along the film trails and always the consummate artist in the effects produced.

David Wark Griffith

In recent years folk who patronize the moving picture theatres—and who does not?—have been treated to several wonderful pictures produced by others. But nothing that ever flashed across the screen in any picture surpassed some of the scenes in "The Birth of a Nation." It is a classic of the screen, as proved by a recent revival.

It will not be surprising, then, if the movie world is tilted a trifle by the news that Griffith has signed an agreement to produce a picture for the Famous Players corporation. It is the first time he has done such a thing. It will be the first time the vast expense of producing a Griffith picture will be placed on other shoulders than those of Griffith himself.

The movie world may slip on its axis a bit, but we think it is to be congratulated. Famous Players is to be congratulated, too, but most of all we felicitate the moviegoing public, which deserves to see more good things on the screen than it has any opportunity of seeing.

Griffith deserves kind words from the public and we prefer to say them now instead of following the usual custom of waiting until he dies.

Milwaukee (Wis) Sentinel 6/15/24

Los Angeles Times 6/15/24

Denver (Colo) News June 15 1924

Tacoma Wash / Los Angeles Cal Times 6/15/24 / Rochester (N.Y.) Herald 6/16/24 / Los Angeles (Cal) Record 6/18/24 / Rome (N.Y.) Sentinel June 18 1924 / Ledger 6/15/24

VIEWS OF GRIFFITH ON ITALY

American Producer Sought by Italian Syndicate to Direct World's Greatest Film Production

D. W. Griffith has returned from Italy, having gone there at the request of an Italian syndicate which wished to talk over with him the possibility of producing a big picture which it was hoped would increase Italy's prestige in the film business. Mr. Griffith asserted that the trip was just as much a pleasure as to talk business. He said that Americans are speeding up Italian telephones and railroads, and that it was thought that an American producer might emulate his confreres in stimulating the production of pictures. He explained that at present there is no studio in Rome which would permit of making scenes such as are made in this country, but that the making syndicate assured him that in three or four months they would have facilities in a new studio now building with a lighting system that can draw from 5,000 amperes. The Banco Commerciale Italiana is back of the syndicate.

"Italy wishes to be a great world power," declared Mr. Griffith, "and they look upon the picture business as a wonderful institution and a remarkable medium for reaching the whole world. They had heard of 'America,' and their liked the idea as it was outlined. They have voted a large sum of money for the purpose of film production, but so far they have no adequate facilities for making the picture. However, negotiations are still pending and there is a possibility I may return.

Of course Italian films are entirely different from ours.

Japanese Staggers Them

I told them that my last picture cost more than $1,000,000 and that their American representative could go over my books. They were not dumfounded at the stupendous sum, but it nevertheless made them scratch their heads when it was translated into lire. When they finish the new studio, it is their idea to make a picture bigger than has hitherto been produced. Settings would be much cheaper than the cost of constructing these in America, and then there is the question of 'extras.' In Italy extras receive about 12 lire a day, equivalent now to 53 cents. We have to pay them $5 to $7 a day. There is a catch about these Italian extras, however. They just appear for that amount. If they are left around one does not have to pay them any more than the 53 cents, but supposing they are asked to run, to carry a heavy spear, or even to ambad, they then are entitled to more money. In the event that these men are used for each trifling performance from 12 to 100 lire, and I were to make mistakes, the cost of production would be something to puzzle about. And we would require special auditors and bookkeepers to keep track of the extras and their respective performances. In fact, one would imagine that referees would be necessary to determine the importance of each 'extra' and his work.

Protracted Luncheons

"Italians are in the habit of taking two hours for luncheon. The importance of eating and drinking is far beyond that of making pictures! I don't know what I would be doing while they were consuming food and beverages for this protracted period.

"Then there is the question of imparting my wishes to the players. I can easily see that if I made a picture in Italy I would want American principals, as talking to Italians through an interpreter would be most unsatisfactory and extremely slow. Have you ever heard an interpreter translating English into Italian? You tell the interpreter to tell the Italian it is raining, and he appears to trace the rain down to Jupiter, call attention to floods caused by rain, to allude to umbrellas and raincoats, to refer to the mud, the consequent growth of plants and foliage, and the results of droughts. You have said four or five words which in Italian appear to make a whole chapter.

"You can readily imagine the difficulties that might ensue if I attempted to direct a picture with Italian actors giving all the instructions through an interpreter. Think of the 'Orchestra' of the 20-minute sermon to which I would have to listen before my poor words were intelligible to the players. No, I should certainly prefer the American principals and do the American scenes with American talent and 'extras.'

"Not an Mussolini, but I visited a high and another official of Fascismo, who had read of the proposed picture and was very much interested in it. He said it would be a good thing for Italy to have such a picture made, and he promised me every assistance."

Lionel Barrymore and Carol Dempster in "America," Forum.

Chicago (Ill) Journal 6/18/24

"America," D. W. Griffith's proud achievement, will conclude its six weeks' engagement at the Auditorium theater Sunday night with the unique record of doing much better at the finish than at the start.

By agreement with the Chicago Opera association, when the original contract was signed, this great romance of the American people will not be shown at any other Chicago theater during 1924.

Undoubtedly it was at first believed that "America" was a series of historic incidents without any definite cohesion. Yet again the wizardry of Griffith has been displayed. Even the "love interest" is based on the vivid romance of the patrician beauty of the Old Dominion, Ethelyn Byrd, who lived at Westover-on-the-James, the stately colonial mansion pictured in the early part of the film.

Beginning [illegible] public uncertainty, "America" ends with public enthusiasm. It is only plain truth to say that old and young, rich and poor, citizen and alien, applaud [illegible]

Denver (Colo) News 6/14/24

"America" Drawing Crowds to Broadway.

Proof that a motion picture does not necessarily have to be based on everyday occurrences, somewhat exaggerated, and with a love story predominating in order to draw huge crowds and hold them breathless throut the showing of the film, is shown in the success which D. W. Griffith's super-film "America" is gaining in its showing at the Broadway theater this week.

The throngs that are filling the theater to witness this production are seeing a picture that will remain long in their minds as something worth remembering and worth discussing. And, aside from that the picture is carrying to the adult mind the thrill that came to them when, as school children, they read about the stirring days of the American revolution in their history books.

In this picture Griffith has incorporated a world of romance without sacrificing facts. It is one thing to take a battle scene for a motion picture, and it is quite another thing to take a scene of battle of Lexington, Concord, and Bunker Hill, and make those scenes entertaining. Griffith proved in his "Birth of a Nation" that he knows how to do it, and in "America" he has proved it again.

Denver (Colo) Post 6/17/24

FILM 'AMERICA' CHARACTERIZED AS MARVELOUS PHOTO

[illegible]

Rochester (N.Y.) Herald 6/16/24

Daughters and Sons of Revolution Hear Rev. Clinton Wunder Review "America," Historical Pictureplay

Daughters and Sons of the American Revolution received personal invitations to attend Baptist Temple last night to hear Rev. Clinton Wunder, who spoke on the theme "Shall the Dollar Rule America?" A good deal of the material for the sermon resulted from the visit of Rev. Mr. Wunder to Chicago last week, at which he witnessed an exhibition of D. G. Griffith's latest motion picture entitled "America."

This film was made at the special request of the Daughters of the American Revolution, and has been called "The Romance of a Hundred Million People." In describing the film last night, Rev. Mr. Wunder said:

"It is so vivid, so powerful. It is not so much the glory of the picture, the genius of the builder, the skill of the players, the alternating currents of laughter and drama, the superb sequence of events, the appeal of straight souls, the epic grandeur of a Nation's birth, but around it all and over it all the actual sacred struggle of our common mother, America.

Suggests Great Sacrifices.

"This picture play suggests in a small way the great sacrifice made by our forefathers that America might become a free and independent nation. The battle lines at Lexington are an exact reproduction of the original as to numbers, 300 British against 77 Americans. Replicas of Paul Revere's lantern were actually hung in the old North Church for the signal.

"The people of the Southern states endured much, but the people of the Northland lived and worked and struggled through the war in constant fear of death that hovered in every wood and covert. Through all this vast country, towns and districts were destroyed with fire and sword in the hand of the Tories, Hessians and Regulars. With the visitations of the enemy, death, torture, burning at the stake, mutilations and horrors that cannot even be suggested, were inflicted upon men, women and children, time and time again; and, with tremendous courage, the people rebuilt their homes, restored their fields, only to have them destroyed.

"The American forces that held the North lost 10,000. Unknown, unsung, they lie on this vast plain, sacrificed on this great altar. They suffered at the hands of the Tories and the Indians unmentionable tortures. With every man's scalp worth $7.00 (more than $100 by comparison today), death of the Americans meant commercial success as well as triumph with arms. And the women for whose scalp no bounty was offered were often times burned in their homes.

"Shall the Dollar Rule America?" Malefactors of great wealth often escape the law, or, being tried, often escape conviction. Men sell their brains to illegal traffic. Women sell their bodies for dollars. A mess of pottage is still being exchanged for the soul. Crime increases because often money insures immunity or a light sentence. All America doubts the conviction of two educated, but degenerate, youths because $15,000,000 backs their defense. Thousands idle at Palm Beach, Newport, or on the California Coast spend money they have never earned, while thousands of babies die for want of milk and care.

Democracy at Crossroads.

"No nation can serve God and Mammon. Our democracy is at the cross-roads. The dollar beckons us to go one way. God invites to the other road. Which shall we take? If we continue to follow the dollar, we mortgage our national soul beyond power to pay and the debt of interest will plunge us in ruin.

"Let us return to the ways of our fathers, to their fortitude, their spirit of sacrifice, their integrity and their morality. Let us learn a lesson from Abraham of old. God said to him 'Fear not, I am thy shield and thy exceeding great reward.' And we read that 'Abraham believed in God.' The beginning of a great people was marked by the truth of a great leadership. The Children of Israel faced opposition, obstacles and opportunity, and so did young America, and so does our nation today. The secret of Israel's growth and power was their belief in God and their Godly leaders. So with America's early beginnings and growth. The great leader of the Jews was first called Abram meaning 'lofty father,' but later he was known as Abraham, meaning 'father of a multitude of nations.' America has passed the goal of individual national pride and now faces her God sent duty to become the father of a multitude of nations. If she is to fulfill her destiny, then not the dollar but God must rule within her borders."

Hearing To Be Held.

Hearing will be given tomorrow by the City Civil Service Commission on appeals from ratings filed by Frank J. Carey and Earl G. Hartell, candidates for the position of superintendent of playgrounds. Both Carey and Hartell were placed below the first three candidates on the list, so that their names will not be certified to Commissioner of Parks Riley, under present conditions, unless the appeals are effective in securing a change of rating.

MINISTER HITS AT RULE OF DOLLAR

Arraignment of "wealthy malefactors who escape conviction" and "Palm Beach and Newport idlers who spend money they never earned, while thousands of babies die for want of milk," was uttered by the Rev. Clinton Wunder, pastor of Baptist Temple, in his sermon last night.

Members of Daughters and Sons of the American Revolution attended the meeting at the personal invitation of the Rev. Mr. Wunder. His sermon, "Shall the Dollar Rule America," was inspired, the speaker said, by D. W. Griffith's current motion picture, "America."

"Malefactors of great wealth often escape the law, or, being tried, often escape conviction," he said. "Men sell their brains to illegal traffic. Women sell their bodies for dollars. A mess of pottage is still being exchanged for the soul.

"Crime increases because often money insures immunity or a light sentence. All America doubts the conviction of two educated, but degenerate, youths because $15,000,000 backs their defense. Thousands idle at Palm Beach, Newport, or on the California Coast spend money they have never earned, while thousands of babies die for want of milk and care."

Hinman and Forbes—two foremost authorities on financial affairs—write daily for the Rochester Journal and The Post Express.

Denver (Colo) Times June 20 1924

America of '76 Relives in Broadway Film

Carol Dempster as Nancy Montague in D. W. Griffith's "America" at the Forum.

Los Angeles (Cal) Record 6/19/24

NEW FORUM THEATER

Los Angeles (Cal) Record June 22 1924

NEW FORUM THEATER

It was not a short time ago that this paper was constrained to protest against Mr. Griffith's profanation of the story of Paul Revere as related by the good Mr. Longfellow. In the film "America," Revere is made to dash through all sorts of wild country, escaping from the British most miraculously—and all that sort of thing. Whereas there is nothing whatever in Mr. Longfellow's stirring narrative to lead one to suppose that he ever left the highways. Indeed, since he was out to alarm the countryside, it might seem safe to assume that he would find most of the folk along the highway, where also would be the church bells to sound the "alarum."

But now comes the Windy City correspondent with the assertion that General "Hell and Maria's" ancestor rode along with Revere. Again the poet gives no hint of it. He relates that Paul left "his friend" over in Boston while he himself "silently rowed to the Charlestown shore," there to await the hanging of the lanterns in the belfry of the Old North Church. On the instant one lantern flashed out Paul was in saddle; as the second appeared there was "a hurry of hoofs in a village street," etc. Three or more generations of Americans have thus been brought up to think of this patriot riding like wildfire alone through the night, shouting his warnings, stopping now and again to pound at doors, and leaving behind him the alarum bells summoning the Minute Men to action. But now (Hell and Maria!) there were two of them—ruining the whole story.

It must be conceded that there is some basis for the Dawes claim. Most of the historians seem to have thought less of the importance of Paul Revere's feat than the poet, but Lossing, in his "Field-Book of the Revolution," in telling the story of the British raid says:

"Warren and his friends had anticipated this and left. Paul Revere and William Dawes had just rowed across the river to Charlestown, with a message from Warren to Hancock and Adams at Lexington. They were almost captured at Charlestown Neck by the guard, but escaped, and reached Lexington, thirteen miles northward of Boston, a little after midnight. (Longfellow puts it at 1 o'clock.) * * * Hancock and Adams were aroused and their safety being regarded as of the utmost importance they were persuaded to retire to Woburn. Revere and Dawes pushed on toward Concord to give the alarm there."

Harper's "Encyclopedia of United States History," however, leaves Dawes completely out of it and moves the point of Revere's alleged escape from capture to a point that seems quite unreasonable. To quote:

"The president of Congress (Joseph Warren) chose Revere as one of his trusted messengers to warn the people of Lexington and Concord of the expedition sent thither by Gage (April 18, 1775) and to tell Adams and Hancock of their danger. He was made a prisoner while on his way from Lexington towards Concord, but was soon released."

For years a controversy has waged over Whittier's poem on "Barbara Frietchie." Some assert she never lived; that there never could have been any such episode; that Stonewall Jackson would not have ridden at the head of his troops. Others contend that a woman of that name lived and that Whittier had at least some basis of truth for the poem. Similarly, Thomas Buchanan Read's thrilling verses on "Sheridan's Ride" in connection with the battle in the Shenandoah Valley, has been under keen attack with respect to historical accuracy.

The Sentinel has little patience with the iconoclasts who would destroy these poems and others like them. The poets have always been allowed their "license." There would seem to be a sharp distinction between the writing and popular use of such tales on the one hand, and the inclusion of the same versions in the school or other histories, on the other. Mr. Hirshfield, down in New York, wants all the pretty fictions left in the histories—which is to discredit such books in the minds of those students who later come to inquire [illegible] facts.

In the case of "Hell and Maria" it would seem to particularly bad taste for the concerned managers to include the Paul Revere episode in the film, though there can be no possible objection to emphasizing the courage and resource relative of the Revere and Dawes. But Paul Revere has enough of a backbone to be a true Highwayman, never—Mr. Lossing to such having a prominent ancestor—[illegible] the country—without having to stand on the much beaten Boston highway, especially those of Revolutionary Dawes prominence and reputation of the [illegible] of the [illegible]

Los Angeles Cal Record June 22 1924

NY American June 22 1924

Film Daily N.Y. City June 22 1924

The Movies 100 Years From Now

By DAVID WARK GRIFFITH

Reprinted by permission of Collier's, The National Weekly.

They say I am a realist—a man who functions best when reproducing in the films life as he sees it or knows it. Whereupon the editor promptly assumes that fantasy will be perfectly easy for me, and propounds a question that scarcely can be answered by anything other than a dream. Fortunately, I have my fancies.

"What," asks the editor in substance, "will be the status of the motion pictures one hundred years hence?"

I have wondered that very thing many times myself, and since I am one of those persons who sometimes respond to their own imagery with answers, I can at least give an opinion. I may qualify this by adding that it is the opinion of one who has devoted a large part of his life to the subject.

In the year 2024 the most important single thing which the cinema will have helped in a large way to accomplish will be that of eliminating from the face of the civilized world all armed conflict. Pictures will be the most powerful factor in bringing about this condition. With the use of the universal language of moving pictures the true meaning of the brotherhood of man will have been established throughout the earth. For example, the Englishman will have learned that the soul of the Japanese is, essentially, the same as his own. The Frenchman will realize that the American's ideals are his ideals. All men are created equal.

It is not to be presumed that I believe one hundred years from now the pictures will have had time to educate the masses away from discord and unharmony. What I do mean to say is, by that time war, if there is such a thing, will be waged on a strictly scientific basis, with the element of physical destruction done away with entirely. My theory is that conflict, if and when it arises, will find itself governed by scientific rules and regulations to which both sides of the controversy will subscribe. Armies outfitted with boxing gloves, man to man, may, I think, go into "battle" to determine the victor. I am not smiling with you now. I am quite sincere. It will be a matter of science and fair play to the last letter. I am just as sincere when I predict that after the "battle" the warriors will repair to a prearranged cold-drink canteen and have grape juice. Just as the old English debtors' prison was wiped out by education, so will armed conflict be wiped out by education.

Not So Many Close-Ups

There is little question that a century ahead of us will find a great deal more of the so-called intimate drama presented on the screen, although there will always be a field set apart for the film with a vast background such as "The Birth of a Nation" and "America."

You will walk into your favorite film theatre and see your actors appearing in twice the size you see them now, because the screens will be twice as large, and the film itself twice as large also. With these enlargements, "close-ups" will be almost eliminated, since it will be relatively easy to picture facial expression along with the full figure of the performer. It will always be necessary to picture the face in pictures. It is the face which reflects the soul of a man.

Our "close-ups," or "inserts," as I call them, are sometimes cumbersome and disconcerting. I invented them, but I have tried not to overuse them, as many have done. It is a mechanical trick, and is of little credit to anyone.

We shall say there are now five elaborate first-run picture theatres on one New York street, Broadway. In 2024 there will be at least forty. Cities of 1,000 will average at least six. Cities of 20,000 and thereabout will have over a hundred. By virtue of its great advantage in scope, the motion picture will be fitted to tell certain stories as no other medium can. But I must add that the glory of the spoken or written word in the intimate and poetic drama can never be excelled by any form of expression.

In the year 2024 our directors of the better order will be men graduated from schools, academies, and colleges carrying in their curriculum courses in motion-picture direction. Our actors and actresses will be artists graduated from schools and colleges either devoted exclusively to the teaching and study of motion-picture acting or carrying highly specialized courses in acting before the camera. This is inevitable.

I am well aware of the fact that the present cumbersome and haphazard method by which screen talent is selected (and by screen talent I mean to say directors, designers, actors and camera men) will not endure long. Time will find this matter adjusted upon a basis of merit and equipment.

Probably on an average of a dozen times each week persons ask me if I think color photography in the motion pictuers will be perfected and made practical. Most assuredly, I do think so. Certainly all color processes and tint methods at present in use are wrong. They are not arrived at with any degree of inventiveness, and they cannot last. At present the colored pictures we see are made by the use of gelatines on the film or by the use of varicolored lenses which fly before the film. Thus we find a great lack of harmony and accuracy. I am willing to confess that I have tried them. But I should be the last to speak of my color effects seriously. We have been merely exploring and speculating.

Only through one method will color be naturally and properly given to objects and persons in the motion pictures. This is a method which will record the natural tints and colors as the picture is being photographed.

Speaking Movies Are Impossible

Of course, to the man or woman untrained in these lines, this seems remote and hardly possible. Still, consider the conquering of the air—the discovery of a means whereby the human voice may be projected through air three thousand miles! When we realize what has been done in the wireless it seems utter folly to suppose that color photography—natural, permanent color photography—may not be found for the films. One hundred years from now the color of a woman's eyes and hair, the tint of the sea, the hues of the rainbow itself will be a natural part of every motion-picture play.

On the other hand, I am quite positive that when a century has passed, all thought of our so-called speaking pictures will have been abandoned. It will never be possible to synchronize the voice with the pictures. This is true because the very nature of the films foregoes not only the necessity for but the propriety of the spoken voice. Music—fine music—will always be the voice of the silent drama. One hundred years from now will find the greatest composers of that day devoting their skill and their genius to the creation of motion-picture music.

There will be three principal figures in the production of a picture play—the author first, the director and music composer occupying an identical position in importance.

A Movie in Every Home

We do not want now and we never shall want the human voice with our films. Music, as I see it within that hundred years, will be applied to the visualization of the human being's imagination. And, as in your imagination those unseen voices are always perfect and sweet, or else magnificent and thrilling, you will find them registering upon the mind of the picture patron, in terms of lovely music, precisely what the author has intended to be registered there. There is no voice in the world like the voice of music. To me those images on the screen must always be silent. Anything else would work at cross purposes with the real object of this new medium of expression. There will never be speaking pictures. Why should there be when no voice can speak so beautifully as music? There are no dissonant r's and twisted consonants and guttural slurs and nasal twangs in beautiful music. Therefore the average person would much prefer to see his pictures and let the voice which speaks to him be the voice of music—one of the most perfect of all the arts.

I seem a little emphatic on this particular point, and I mean to be.

In the year 2024 we shall have orchestras of many kinds playing for the pictures. Each motion-picture theatre will have several orchestras of diversified character. The big, robust, outdoor pictures will have more than one orchestra in attendance at all times. String quartets will play for the mood of a string quartet; sighing guitars and thumpety banjos will play for their mood in the picture play; symphonic orchestras of greater proportions than we now dream of will be employed for moods to fit the sublime and the grand.

We have scarcely an inkling of what the development of music is going to be in the film play.

It really seems to me a little bit humorous now to realize how narrow a place in our everyday life the film is playing, despite the great rise in attendance in the last few years. One hundred years hence, I believe, the airplane passenger lines will operate motion-picture shows on regular schedule between New York and Chicago and between New York and London. Trains, which will be traveling twice or three times as fast as they do now, will have film theatres on board. Almost every home of good taste will have its private projection room where miniatures, perhaps, of the greater films will be shown to the family, and, of course, families will make their albums in motion pictures instead of in tintypes and "stills." Steamships will boast of first runs, which will be brought to them in midocean by the airplanes, and I may add that almost all subjects in our schools will be taught largely with the use of picture play and the educational animated picture.

By the time these things come to pass, there will be no such thing as a flicker in your film. Your characters and objects in pictures will come upon the screen (which by then may not even be white, and certainly may not be square, or look anything like what it does now), and they will appear to the onlookers precisely as these persons and objects appear in real life. That much discussed "depth" in pictures, which no one as yet has been able to employ successfully, will long since have been discovered and adopted. The moving canvas will not appear flat, but if a character moves before a fireplace you will recognize the distance as between the character and the fireplace. Likewise, in landscapes, you will feel the proper sense of distance. Your mountain peaks will not appear to rise one on top of the other, but will appear exactly as if you stood and looked at them. Of course these are merely details that will require long and intense study and experiment, but they will come. In other words, from the standpoint of naturalness, motion pictures one hundred years from now will be so nearly like the living person or the existing object pictured that you will be unable, sitting in your orchestra seat, to determine whether they are pictures or the real thing.

Radio Has Its Own Place

By a perfection of the studio lighting system, film will be as smooth before the eye as if it were a stationary lighted picture. By that time the studios will have changed greatly, and instead of actors being forced to work before great blinding lights, which now at times register 117 degrees of heat, we shall have "cold" lights. We are experimenting in these already. Our studios will be great spreading institutions, as large as many of the cities surrounding New York. I think that one hundred years from now there will be no concentrated motion-picture production such as our Hollywood of today. Films will be made in various cities, most of which will be located near to New York.

It nettles me at times when I am asked if I do not think that in time the popularity of the motion pictures will subside. It seems to me ridiculous. As ridiculous as to assume that the popularity of music, or painting, or acting on our spoken stage will go out.

No. I not only do not think the popularity of motion pictures will decrease; I am already on record as predicting that the popularity of pictures will increase and keep on increasing. Consider my own "Birth of a Nation." It was revived two years ago, after having been off for ten years, and it was as great a success in revival as in the original. The popularity of motion pictures (which are a natural form of dramatic expression) will ride higher and higher as the quality of motion pictures rises higher and higher. One hundred years from today we shall have novelists devoting all their energies toward creating motion-picture originals. By this I mean that the novelists giving their exclusive time to the films will create characters and situations and dramatic plots in terms of pictures. Motion-picture historians will have been developed, and they will be a great help to production. Motion-picture artists of all kinds will have grown up. It will all make for a more natural, dignified, sincere result, because we shall have all our different branches devoting their time and efforts toward the completion of a single object—a motion picture.

I have no hesitancy in saying that the radio has claimed its share of amusement audiences. Unquestionably it has kept many persons away from both the films and the spoken stage. It is a great, useful discovery—a glorious medium. One hundred years from now there will be no confusion as between the radio and the motion picture. There cannot possibly be a connection nor a conflict. It is just possible there may be conflict as between radio and spoken stage, but never between radio and film. Each occupies its own exclusive place in our lives.

Seats Not Less Than $5

Now let us prepare for a small-sized shock. One hundred years from today it will cost perhaps twice as much as it costs today to see the really first-class cinema. It is perfectly proper that it should. Time, effort, energy, and preparation put into pictures at that time will have advanced greatly. I am just honest enough to say that I do not at the moment understand how more time, effort, energy, and preparation could have been put into my own pictures; but, then, for the average large picture play this will hold true. The average supposedly high-class film play in 2024 will be on view at not less than $5 a seat.

In looking into the crystal I have seen many things which I have not touched upon here. Perhaps they would be too tedious to bring out and discuss. But of one thing I may place myself on record plainly and without qualification. The motion picture is a child that has been given life in our generation. As it grows older it will develop marvelously. We poor souls can scarcely visualize or dream of its possibilities. We ought to be kind with it in its youth, so that in its maturity it may look back upon its childhood without regret.

Shamokin (Pa) Dispatch 6/27/24

BREAKER BOY TAKES PART IN GRIFFITH'S "DREAMSTREET"

Charlie Mack, Once a Slate-picker Boy at Scranton, Wins Fame in Role of Devoted Brother in D. W. Griffith's "Dream Street"

D. W. Griffith's latest production, "Dream Street," is the distinctive picture that has been featured with much success at the Majestic theatre since Wednesday and will be continued today.

The picture is a dramatic comedy and deals with the interesting and picturesque lives of characters of the London streets and lanes.

While the local is laid in London town, the kind of people pictured are to be found anywhere on the planet. They are are poetic dreamers of life who look through wistful, hazy windows upon the street of dreams.

The chief character is Gypsy Fair, a music hall dancer; her father is a stool pigeon of Scotland Yard. There are two brothers devoted to each other, "Spike" and "Billie" McFadden.

The former is the conqueror of the males with his fists and brawn while he has a golden baritone voice that wins the girls of the picturesque neighborhood. The weaker brother is a slave to the smiles of Gypsy Fair.

The dual influence of good and evil are shown with thrilling effect as these poetic people struggle through the fogs and mists of their narrow streets out into the romance of sunshine and love.

A stealthy Oriental, a street psalmist, a pawnbroker and officers of Scotland Yard are among the many character contributions to a most entertaining and absorbing dream story.

Griffith Loses "[illegible]" for the Screen; E[illegible] Gloria Swanson

BY ADELLA O. PARSONS

THERE is many a slip 'twixt cup and lip and no one knows that better than D. W. Griffith. Last week Norma Harris drew up a contract for the sale of the motion picture rights of "The Outsider," which D. W. was eager to put on the screen.

Mr. Griffith took his pen in hand and was all ready to sign his name when he discovered that the contract would not permit him to release "The Outsider" until May, 1925. This little offensive line upset the whole deal. Mr. Griffith had planned to have "The Outsider" ready for the market next Winter, and so, as far as he was concerned, the contract was made null and void.

It is a well known fact that D. W. had set his heart on making this picture. The price of $[illegible]000 did not even prevent the making the purchase. But the time limit was too great and now he is again in the market hunting for a vehicle to take its place. He may make the story that he bought while was abroad, but even that is tentative.

[illegible] HILLS A-PL[illegible] "AMERICA," PICTURE

[illegible] Which L[illegible] Praises as Gr[illegible] Coming to Or[illegible]

Who would not b[illegible] see Paul Revere, [illegible] ride on his famo[illegible] volutionary fathe[illegible] steed had been s[illegible] church steeple to [illegible] expedition of t[illegible] and Lexington [illegible] hope for, but th[illegible] making the picture [illegible] coming on Mond[illegible] ...ster. The Liter[illegible] this picture that [illegible] are the "Birth of [illegible] one that has [illegible] runs in the la[illegible] ...ngh, for instance [illegible] weeks at $2 a seat [illegible] long in advance.

As would be gue[illegible] the picture tells th[illegible] history of the Uni[illegible] fort has been made [illegible] every bit of histo[illegible] and from the fire [illegible] nation, the scene[illegible] times just as they [illegible] The pictures were [illegible] part on the actual [illegible] depicted. Spectator [illegible] of Concord and L[illegible] church just as it [illegible] vere's day, the b[illegible] Hill, the actual s[illegible] of Cornwallis, the [illegible] erous Colonial hap[illegible] which Morgan's ri[illegible] fame, etc.

Large forces of [illegible] dressed in the re[illegible] fantrymen, played [illegible] George III's min[illegible] course there were [illegible] hats, buff coats [illegible] of the garb worn [illegible] his men. George [illegible] person of a carefu[illegible] pears as well as [illegible] Joseph Brant, th[illegible] Revere, mounted [illegible] that few can rid[illegible] other historical c[illegible]

Seeing this pict[illegible] almost let go and [illegible] in Revolutionary [illegible] Colonials line up [illegible] fire the shot hea[illegible] For him, the Brit[illegible] and William Pitt [illegible] cause. For him t[illegible] the slopes of Bu[illegible] again. For him, [illegible] incarnate their [illegible] him, spirited Co[illegible] the spirit of re[illegible] George and patri[illegible] liberty.

It is a Yankee [illegible] and intended to [illegible] the thrill every[illegible] in learning thes[illegible] books. Lionel Ba[illegible] "villain role." T[illegible] players, and D. [illegible] no expense in [illegible] every setting a[illegible] make the produ[illegible] as living through[illegible] of those stirrin[illegible]

Film Daily N.Y. June 25 1924

Frankfort (Ind) News 6/26/24

GRIFFITH TO MAKE HIS NEXT PICTURE ACROSS ATLANTIC

Producer Will Sail With His Company on July 4

D. W. Griffith will produce his next picture in Europe. The decision came rather quickly. Early this week he decided to produce "Dawn," an original story by Geoffrey Moss, an English writer, who has written many of Great Britain's best sellers. The locale is a foreign one, most of the exterior being laid in Germany and England.

A call went out to the members of the Griffith company who are under contract, including Carol Dempster and Neil Hamilton. They were told to be ready to sail for Europe on the George Washington, July 4. There will be twelve members in the Griffith company. Frank Puglia, who only recently returned from Florence, where he played an important part in "Romola," Lionel Barrymore picture, will be in the cast.

Vilma Banky, who made her first appearance in this country in D. W. Griffith's "America," is now in Hollywood where she is being kept busy by the movie producers who want her for their pictures.

Film Daily N.Y. June 22 1924

The New Forum Theater Has Many Special Days Arranged in Advance

Delegations from organizations and commercial establishments of every type are arranging special days at the Forum, at Pico and Norton, where D. W. Griffith's "America" is playing an indefinite engagement. The production, pronounced Griffith's best, and the new playhouse, a magnificent example of Roman architecture, are proving an irresistible combination to playgoers.

The Los Angeles Ministerial Association, Blackstone's Store, the D. A. R. and affiliated societies, and several other organizations have already sent delegations to the Forum. Many others are preparing to do so.

Navy Day will be observed on June 26, at afternoon and evening performances, when the fleet officials and hundreds of jobs from the battle fleet will attend in uniform. Arrangements for taking care of the crews scated in the audience sailors were made through Lieut. Commander E. D. Washburn, Jr., U. S. S. California.

June 24 is Sons of the Revolution Night at the Forum, when the members of this organization will turn out in a body. General Charles H. Whipple, president, and Elmer A. Hanger, secretary, are in charge of the arrangements. Roger M. Andrews, vice president of the S. of R. and vice-president of the Citizens National Bank, will make a four-minute talk at the performance.

June 21 will witness the attendance of a delegation of Western Union messengers at the evening performance, a curious contrast, the seven messengers being the famous rider of Paul Revere, through which news of the coming of the British was spread and the boys who complete the transportation of a modern fast telegram.

Tuesday, July 14, will be Southern California Telephone Company night. The performance on this evening will be for the benefit of the Lone Wolf Colony, a resort for tubercular patients supported by the employees of the company near Victorville. As a feature of this performance, a one-act playlet will be presented by the S. C. T. Co. Employees' Dramatic Club. Arrangements for this affair are in the hands of W. H. Fairbanks, president of the board of directors of the Lone Wolf Colony.

July 15 will be New England day at the Forum. The Maine, New Hampshire and Massachusetts State Associations will crowd the showhouse of America on that night, and a special feature will be the presentation of the Boston Tea Party, the burning of the Gaspee, the Battle of Lexington, the battle of Bunker Hill, the surrender of Cornwallis, the battle of the Monitor and the Merrimac, the capture of Fort Ticonderoga, the battle of Gettysburg, the battle of Lookout Mountain, the battle of Chickamauga, the battle of Shiloh, the battle of Antietam, the battle of Vicksburg, the battle of Chattanooga, the battle of Atlanta, the battle of the Wilderness, the battle of Cold Harbor, the battle of Petersburg, the battle of Appomattox, the battle of Manila Bay, the battle of Santiago, the battle of San Juan Hill, the battle of Chateau Thierry, the battle of Belleau Wood, the battle of Argonne, the battle of Ypres, the battle of Verdun, the battle of Ypsilanti, the battle of Kalamazoo, the battle of Bangor, the battle of Portland, the battle of Boston, the battle of Lexington, the battle of Concord, the battle of Bunker Hill

Lancaster (Pa) Newspaper Herald 6/28/24

THRILLS A-PLENTY IN "AMERICA," GREATEST PICTURE OF ITS KIND

In Which Literary Digest Praises as Greatest in Years Coming to Orpheum Monday.

Who would not be glad of a chance to see Paul Revere, in the actual reality, ride on his famous trip to warn the revolutionary fathers that the signal lantern had been swung in the old church steeple to tell of the impending expedition of the British to Concord and Lexington? That is too much to hope for, but the next best thing is seeing the picture, "America", which is coming on Monday to the Orpheum theater. The Literary Digest says of this picture that it is the greatest since the "Birth of a Nation." It is the one that has had such a tremendous run in the large cities. In Pittsburgh, for instance, it has run for weeks at $2 a seat and always sold out long in advance.

As would be guessed from the title, the picture tells the story of the early history of the United States. The effort has been made to reproduce, from every bit of historical data available and from the fire and poetry of imagination, the scenes of those stirring times just as they really did happen. The pictures were made for the most part on the actual scene of the events depicted. Spectators see the battlefields of Concord and Lexington, Old North church just as it stood in Paul Revere's day, the battlefield of Bunker Hill, the actual site of the surrender of Cornwallis, the exact scene of numerous Colonial happenings, the fields on which Morgan's riflemen won undying fame, etc.

Large forces of American soldiers, dressed in the redcoats of British infantrymen, played the part of King George III's minions. And then of course there were Colonials, in cocked hats, buff coats and the other parts of the garb worn by Washington and his men. George Washington, in the person of a carefully chosen actor, appears as well as George III. There is Joseph Brant, the Indian chief, Paul Revere, mounted on a horse so wild that few can ride him and numerous other historical characters.

Seeing this picture, the spectator can almost let go and imagine himself back in Revolutionary times. For him, the Colonials line up at Concord bridge and fire the shot heard round the world. For him, the British Parliament meets and William Pitt defends the colonial cause. For him the classic struggle on the slopes of Bunker Hill takes place again. For him, Morgan's rangers reincarnate their rides and raids. For him, spirited Colonial dames display the spirit of rebellion against King George and patriots live and labor for liberty.

It is a Yankee Doodle picture, made and intended to revive in Americans the thrill everyone of them has felt in learning these things from schoolbooks. Lionel Barrymore appears in a "villain role." There are other noted players, and D. W. Griffith has spared no expense in obtaining the use of every setting and property needed to make the production almost the same as living through and seeing the events of those stirring times.

Oakland (Cal) Post-Enquirer 6/28/24

Photoplay to Be Sermon Subject

"D. W. Griffith's motion picture, 'America,' will be the subject of the sermon by the Rev. Clarence Reed at First Unitarian church tomorrow morning at 11 o'clock. Where ever he journeyed in the east, Reed said he found people talking of this photoplay which had been highly recommended by the Daughters of the American Revolution and other patriotic societies. He believes that the movies are doing for the people today in the realm of the drama, what the printing press has promised for the diffusion of literature. Moving pictures are the public school and theater of the masses. He will discuss in his sermon the following questions: 'Why do the people go to the movies?' 'What is the most significant fact about the movies?' 'What is the moral influence of the movies?' 'Should movies be censored?'

Tampa (Fla) Tribune June 28 1924

Minneapolis (Minn) Journal 6/29/24

The Question as to Whether the Reissue of an Old Film Success Pays in the Long Run Seems to Be Answered by "The Birth of a Nation" Revival.

By LOUELLA O. PARSONS.

SOME years ago I wrote an interview at a time when the old think-tank was working only on one cylinder. I started the interview with an abject apology, and ended it in the same way, expressing my regret that I had written such a dull story.

The Sunday editor read the interview and sent for me. I expected to have him tell me that as an interviewer I was a good saleswoman. Instead, he looked at me over his glasses and said:

"The next time you have an inferiority complex, keep it to yourself. Our readers are not interested in how bad your story is. They can find that out for themselves. As a matter of fact, your story is all right, but your apology is the worst thing I have ever read in any newspaper."

* * *

"I ALWAYS remembered what that editor said, and yesterday, when I sat myself down to my typewriter, I was about to speak of the warm weather and the tricks the temperature plays with one's inspirational power. Then I remembered my readers. It was not any hotter for me on Broadway than it was for those whose only sight of a green tree or a flower bed is in Central Park or else in a story book.

So, while I was fighting a battle with myself to keep from talking on the heat and other kindred subjects, I happened to glance at my mail. Among my letters I found a number of requests for re-issues. I was interested, because I had done nothing to bring about these letters. Usually an avalanche of mail is occasioned by some article in my columns, but these correspondents seemed to be inspired only by their own interest in asking for pictures that have passed and gone.

* * *

ONE of my readers wrote:

"I am curious to know something about the revival of old motion pictures. Do they pay in the long run? Will David Wark Griffith be justified in blowing the accumulated dust of five years from 'Broken Blossoms' and bringing it back to entertain the public, which is looking forward to new pictures? How about it? Have revivals proved a financial success? Will the public patronize a picture that they know is old and give it the same consideration as a new production right off the griddle? I contend that no revival is worth the effort. What do you think?"

Our correspondent believes in working only for to-day and letting to-morrow take care of itself. What incentive has a producer for making a fine production if it is to flicker across the screen only for a few weeks, and in a short time is retired as old, decrepit and useless? No, I cannot agree with Anne D., our correspondent. I believe in revivals, providing the right pictures are resurrected.

* * *

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" is almost a national institution. They tell me that when it played at the Cameo a few weeks ago it did a very good business. The Broadway Theatre for its Convention Week programme had three comedies—one with Buster Keaton, one with Charlie Chaplin and one made by Mack Sennett. A peep in at this theatre early in the week convinced me that whoever had this idea realized that all the world likes to laugh, even when the weather is hot.

While we are on the subject of revivals, following an item that appeared in the Movie-Go-Round, I had many letters asking me to try and persuade Mr. Griffith to bring back "Broken Blossoms." At the same time I received a letter from one of my readers in New Jersey asking if there was any possibility that "Humoresque" would ever be shown again.

There has been a regular crusade for the Wallace Reid films. I have been swamped with letters after I printed the one sent to me by R. H. Walsh—far too many to publish. It almost looked like propaganda circulated by some one with a financial interest in the picture. I hate to be suspicious, and I want to say that I am only mentioning this in passing. So please read it and forget it.

* * *

PERHAPS the reason Anne D. feels that reissues are bad business is because she has seen some of the earlier pictures of Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks and William S. Hart. Some of these are pretty sad and in no way worthy of comparison with their present work. It seems to me that after a star has reached a certain place in the film world and has improved his work, it is not playing the game right to bring back the old pictures that are amateurish and poor in comparison with his later pictures.

I think there is much to be said for and against reissues, and I shall be very glad to have some more letters on this. I think the compliment paid the late Wallie Reid is a fine one, inasmuch as most of those people believe they can do honor to him by looking at his films again.

Whether there is any moral to all this I am unprepared to say. It is too hot to describe in any kind of weather, anyway.

AFTER the convention dies down perhaps we will pay more attention to our art. Last week there were so many social affairs for the visiting newspaper women and delegates that all those who did not know whether they were Democrats or Republicans were in danger of being ostracized. Perhaps this week the politicians will have to pay more attention to the movies or write for the movies.

The constant change in our amusement world, for instance, some of the players who were prime favorites last different times on the motion screen to-day are appearing on the legitimate stage. Some of them succeeded and have become stars in the legitimate, but many of them are not. Some of them are doing a little vaudeville and are appearing in the movies. Some of them are doing nothing at all. I am glad to say that I am not in the minority.

Perhaps the reason Anne D. feels that reissues are bad business is because she has seen some of the earlier pictures of Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks and William S. Hart. Some of these are pretty sad and in no way worthy of comparison with their present work. It seems to me that after a star has reached a certain place in the film world and has improved his work, it is not playing the game right to bring back the old pictures that are amateurish and poor in comparison with his later pictures.

I think there is much to be said for and against reissues, and I shall be very glad to have some more letters on this. I think the compliment paid the late Wallie Reid is a fine one, inasmuch as most of those people believe they can do honor to him by looking at his films again.

Whether there is any moral to all this I am unprepared to say. It is too hot to describe in any kind of weather, anyway.

San Francisco (Cal) Argonaut 6/28/24

St. Paul (Minn) Pioneer Press June 29 1924

Toronto (Canada) World 6/29/24

CAROL DEMPSTER

As she appears in D. W. Griffith's film "America". This drawing is the work of Hap Hadley, who visited Toronto with one of the Shubert vaudeville troupes two years ago. He did some sketches while in the city for The Mail and Empire.

Kittanning (Pa) Times 6/30/24

COLUMBIA THEATRE JULY 3, 4 & 5

HARRY O'NEILL AS "PAUL REVERE" IN D.W. GRIFFITH'S "AMERICA"

Los Angeles (Cal) Examiner 6/30/24

BEAUTY AND BRAINS

Does Fame make [illegible] David Wark Griffith thinks [illegible] of the successful act he has started on their road to fame would seem to bear him out. Did you know, for instance that Mary Pickford's name was Gladys Smith; Rudy Valentino was born Guglielmi; Gish is not Lillian's and Dorothy's real name; Colleen Moore was formerly Kathleen Morrison; Bessie Love was Juanita Horton; Marjorie Daw was Marjorie House. Madge Bellamy's real name is Philpott. Viola Dana and Shirley Mason were originally named Dalgrath; Mary Miles Minter is really Julia Riley. Norman Kerry is a Kaiser. Lila Lee was originally named Appel. Two of our most popular heros, Antonio Moreno and Ramon Navarro, at one time answered to the name of Montesgudo and Samaniegos respectively. And, whom do you think was named Selma Pittack? Wanda [illegible]

Left to right they are: Carol Dempster in "America" at the Forum; Eva Gordon in "The Chechacho" at the California (Freulich photo), and Lois Wilson in "The Covered Wagon" at Grauman's Third and Broadway.

Los Angeles (Cal) News 6/29/24

Photoplay magazine Chicago 7/24

AMERICA—D. W. Griffith.—Almost another "Birth of a Nation." Not quite perhaps, but an epic film, nevertheless. Of absorbing interest to every American citizen.

I can easily observe their admonition to refrain from applause, on page one of the Book of Rules which goes with the show.

There is about fifty times as much meat in the film "America" as there is in the live show "The Miracle," and the best matinee seats are only $1.10. Of course it is "just a movie," but it is a rip-snorter. "The Miracle" is intended to intimidate, and you won't enjoy it unless you allow yourself to be intimidated. "America" is intended to entertain, and of course, as at all movies, you have to allow yourself to be entertained. It is "The Birth of a Nation" done over in the costumes of another war, the Revolutionary I believe they called it. The costumes of that war were nothing to brag about, but it was quite a little war in spite of that, and a very useful one, too, in many ways. (Helped put the United States on the map. This point is brought out in the film. It is meant to suggest "in a small way" the great sacrifices made by our forefathers that we might become a free nation. And it succeeds.)

There is a story of a boy and a girl, and the usual David Griffith minuetto, such as, if my memory serves me aright, a kitten playing with a ball of yarn. Or maybe it is a duck. And there is the ride of Paul Revere, done for the first time on any road in broad, blinding daylight, several hundred feet of thrill, and there are battles and Valley Forge, and Indian fights galore. George Washington and Lionel Barrymore are two of the principal actors, and delicate Carol Dempster and Neil Hamilton are two more.

I know Lionel Barrymore is in it because a woman behind me said nine times: "That is Lionel Barrymore."

Lionel plays the villian, Captain Walter Butler, and finally dies with his face in a mud puddle.

Oakland (Cal) Post Enquirer 7/1/24

Halifax (N.S.) Arcadian Recorder July 1 1924

MOVIES MOLD IDEALS, SAYS REV. REED

D. W. GRIFFITH said that he was credited with being a Smith booster, when as a matter of fact he was neutral and had no preference for a Presidential candidate. It all happened during the Smith parade when the convention hall had become a bedlam. Mr. Griffith looked for an exit and the only one he could see was to the path of the parade, so in order to get out he had to join the Smith delegation. But that he would not change for Governor Smith, but coming from the South, he admits he also likes William McAdoo.

Flushing (N.Y.) Journal July 3 1924

The Film a Century Hence.

A movie in every home is the prophecy of David Wark Griffith, famous producer of motion pictures, who, in fathoming peeks into the future of the film industry. "The business has been wrong," says Mr. Griffith, "I believe the average manager has still separate motion picture theatres in regular industry between New York and Chicago and between New York and London. Twice when will the travelling rates or three times as fast as they do now, will have the theatre of tomorrow. Small small units of good taste will have to all pictures, perhaps of the greater part will be made in the homes and of course, nothing will make [illegible] to motion picture instead of the theatre and [illegible]

The Theatre on Broadway

By G. H. MINDELL

"HOSEA"

The Theatre Guild's production of "The Miracle" at the Lyceum will play under their management all summer. In the fall the directors will take over the said rights of the play and must not run concurrently.

Miss Florence Johns, the last [illegible] who was last seen in "Lollipop" in conjunction with the Ned Sparks pitch, the Ziegfeld Follies, will be [illegible] in the new play, "Hosea," which the Theatre Guild will produce in the fall. Miss Johns will be [illegible] in the Theatre Guild's production of "Liliom" and will be [illegible] in the Theatre Guild's production of "Hosea" [illegible]

[illegible] Miss Carol Dempster, who has played many important roles in Griffith pictures, and Paul Rasch, the new leading man, will [illegible] in January. Further [illegible] Griffith's production [illegible] "Sally of the Sawdust" [illegible] and [illegible] the [illegible] Theatre [illegible] [illegible] the [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

FRANKLIN REPOSITORY, CHAMBERSBURG, PA. June 30, 1924

D.W. Griffith Makes "America" for D.A.R.

Patriotic Societies, Historical Experts and the U. S. Army Aid In Making An Unusual Picture.

Walter Butler (Lionel Barrymore) and Nancy Honeyman (Carol Dempster)

Carol Dempster and Neil Hamilton in a Love Scene

The Minutemen Prepare To Protect Historic Buckman Tavern

Miss Irma Harrison with the Drum Actually Used at the Battle of Lexington

(Center) United States Regulars in Homespun, Refight The Battle of Bunker Hill

WHEN the Daughters of the American Revolution suggested to David Wark Griffith that he make a photoplay based on the American Revolution, they started something.

As a result of this suggestion Griffith is not only making the desired film, but leading historians, patriotic societies, society women, descendants of Revolutionary heroes, and the United States Army have been helping him, and if everything goes according to schedule "America" as the new film has been named, should surpass even the "Birth Of A Nation."

Probably no other film during its making ever created such widespread interest as that upon which Griffith is now working. This is due in part to the patriotic nature, which has always caused a revival of interest in Revolutionary times whenever shown, the great sentiment our first war were responsible for in part to the unusual interest in the picture.

Instead of building replicas of the historic buildings which must figure in any drama written about the Revolution, Griffith and his entire company of players, technicians and advisers, are traveling from place to place in special trains, and taking their scenes on the actual sites, with thousands of the general public as spectators, and actual relics, Revolutionary Continentals, and the enlisted men of the United States Army as "extras."

By this department of "letting the public in" to view the actual filming of a motion picture is spoiling not admirably, even though to several score satisfy the reproduction of the battle Bunker Hill made patriots men attempted to take "shots" of the scene which throws doubt on great expense in order to sell them for great companies, for use in motion pictures. A number of such attempts have appeared in Moving Pictures in New York and the general opinion and filmed with the new Griffith picture has been created.

The numerous of Griffith's adversaries in "America" are, perhaps, due to interest in the fact that he plan to celebrate the 150th birthday of the Wed in Philadelphia with great display in Historical pageantry. Part of the fun of the fun has been said of the great Revolutionary Pageant of Philadelphia, and the people of Philadelphia are expecting to stage a great celebration of the Revolutionary Pageant, and have contributed the money for the Pageant.

Although it would seem that such a Pageant would be a great boon to Griffith, it is not so, because the Pageant is to be staged in Philadelphia, and the Pageant is to be staged in Philadelphia, and the Pageant is to be staged in Philadelphia, and

Milwaukee (Wis) Journal 7/3/24

The Easy Fourth

Those who have seen Mr. Griffith's picture, America, have come away with more than a recaptured thrill of youth. They have felt the seriousness of those men and women who took a course that meant bitter war. We have grown used to talking of the "glorious Fourth," but the men who made it were not thinking of the glory. Their noble phrase, "We mutually pledge to each other our lives, our fortunes and our sacred honor," was not a bit of rhetoric.

How rich they were! How rich any man is who has something that is worth putting everything else in the balance to hold! Now we sing gaily enough, "Let independence be our boast." But we leave it at a boast. It has cost so little—no need to pledge our lives and fortunes. We will not even walk around the corner to see that our independence is not usurped by whatever ward heeler is most active in our precinct. Four years ago less than half of those who had the right to vote exercised that privilege.

Our independence! No one questions it. As human things go, this republic is the surest thing in the world. For proof, look at the price its obligations bring on the market.

We cannot see ourselves pictured in those grim fathers who undertook to spend their lives and fortunes. There are things worth fighting for but we say, "Let them go." And men with our commissions go to national gatherings and cannot think of any principle so sacred they will not straddle it.

How rich they were—those fathers of the nation. They felt they had something so worth while that no price was too great to pay for holding it. We think it almost too much trouble to turn someone out of office for proving unfaithful to a trust. Yet in our time we have paid a part of that price of lives, though we have not insisted on getting in return what these lives were given for.

They made a glorious Fourth, and we feel lazily proud of them, as though they had insured its glory for all time. For us the easy Fourth, its worst perplexity the wonder how best to use an extra holiday. It is so easy to see a foe from the outside; so hard to persuade ourselves that independence can be endangered from within, and all this comfort threatened by our carelessness.

Times Sq Daily (Inpty) 7/5/24

"AMERICA" CUT FROM 12 TO 9 REELS

Objectionable Matter to English in Griffith Film Deleted Over There

London, July 2.

"America," the D. W Griffith picture, just arriving and in 12 reels, has been cut down to nine.

In the deletions to all of the matter considered objectionable to the English.

The picture in its reduced state will be exhibited in the Provinces as a test before being shown in London.

San Francisco (Cal) Call-Post 7/5/24

From the motion picture industry comes a plausible plea for a greater use of the motion picture to disseminate the doctrines of Americanism. David Wark Griffith believes that a motion picture reaching seventy millions of Americans, seen by people of Great Britain, Russia, Japan and the Continent, is the greatest instrument for propaganda available in this generation.

He quotes the words of Martin Littleton, who calls the motion picture "a college whose curriculum is relieved of tedium." Mr. Littleton writes of the picture "America":

What a wholesome, uplifting breath of Americanism blowing from end to end of a century. It is a new public school where compulsion will be unnecessary—a forum where advertisement of the contest can be dispensed with—a college whose curriculum is relieved of tedium.

At last a library whose volumes flame into color, whose characters leap from the pages and go into action, and whose philosophy is revealed in prayer and tears—laughter and love.

"A picture to be effective for the purpose of instilling the principles of Americanism must not reek of propaganda," said Mr. Griffith. "It must be merely a veracious recital of American history, told in pictures that have beauty to hold the imagination and a story sufficiently romantic to hold the interest of the average audience.

"There is no more dramatic chapter in historical annals than the record of America, brimming with heroism and adventure, awe inspiring in the courage of its men nad women of all generations.

"It is only necessary to visualize our great heritage to quicken latent impulses of patriotism and nobility," continued Mr. Griffith. "The best and most enduring cure for radicalism and syndicalism is the knowledge of American history. The best way to teach American history to the masses is through motion pictures," said the man, whose picture productions have bared the throbbing heart of this great Republic."

An American Lineage.

There is no one in the motion picture industry better qualified to discuss this subject than David Wark Griffith. Not because he stands in the forefront of his profession, not because of the artistry of his productions, but because David Wark Griffith can best depict America as an American.

His great grandfather fought in the Revolutionary War. His father, Brigadier General Jacob Wark Griffith, an intimate friend of "Little Joe Wheeler," fought in the Confederate army, and was wounded seventy times.

"In America" many scenes are made in an old Southern mansion. This is the Shirley Carter Manor house of Virginia, the home of D. W. Griffith's grandmother, and the first manor house erected in the United States.

A patriot more proud of his fighting American blood than of all the honors his pictures have brought him, Griffith expressed himself last week as keenly alive to the need of a better understanding among American people. He believes that most of the unrest can be dissipated by use of motion pictures, pictures whose simple stories intelligently and entertainingly unfolded, will bring home the fallacy of the agitators' arguments, the futility of conflict and the rich rewards of mutual helpfulness and consideration. His diagnosis of a malarial world is that we do not know one another's problems, that sympathy and forebearance will follow understanding.

This argument from the motion picture world has at least the charm of reasonableness and practicability.

Asbury Park (N J) Press July 6 1924

Carol Dempster in D. W. Griffith's "America"

Worcester (Mass) Gazette 7/9/24

San Francisco (Cal) Examiner July 6 1924

Milwaukee (Wis) Journal 7/9/24

Milwaukee (Wis) Sentinel & Telegram July 13 1924

San Francisco (Cal) Chronicle

Columbus (Ohio) State Journal July 14 1924

Cleveland (Ohio) News 7/6/24

Italy Wins Griffith; Plans Fascisti Epic?

RUMORED NOTED DIRECTOR WILL LIVE ABROAD; MARY AND DOUG TO RETURN

By Monroe Lathrop.

LOS ANGELES, July 5.—Private letters from persons close to David Wark Griffith intimate that the great director will soon quit America indefinitely.

Italy has captured his imagination and for its part the attraction is mutual.

Mussolini's Fascisti want a great epic picture and have picked Griffith as the man to give it to them.

The alliance of the twain, with its government backing, is understood to be of such big scope that Griffith may stay for years.

Italy is surging with youthful, turbulent forces, and its dramatic possibilities have mightily appealed to Griffith.

Besides, he feels that in detaching himself from the other producing forces in recent years he has made a mistake.

He wants to get back into the "thick of things" and the prospect of doing it with a vengeance he believes exists among the modern Romans.

Mussolini is the most dynamic character in Europe today and is bent upon making the eagles of imperial Rome fly again.

Griffith believes there is tremendous picture material there.

It is believed that he held back information of what he did on his recent visit to Italy, and that big things are planned with the Fascisti.

And with the hint that Griffith may go abroad comes word that, finding no more worlds to conquer, Mary and Doug are coming home from Europe.

The famous stars will make the Olympic games in Paris their final fling in Europe.

According to a letter from Mary they will sail July 9 or 14.

When the letter was written the pair were motoring from Denmark to the French capital.

Receptions outdoing those marking royal tours have marked their progress to the north of Europe.

First they motored through Germany, with Berlin as their destination.

From there they went by train and boat to Norway and toured Norway and Sweden.

After Christiania and Stockholm ovations the stars went to Copenhagen and thence by automobile through Denmark and Holland to Paris.

"The entire trip has been delightful," writes Mary, "but it has tired us and we long for familiar American scenes and people."

Neither of the stars announce any plans, although Mary says she will be ready to start work on October 1.

She has Ernest Lubitsch secured for a story, "preferably with lots of comedy."

Los Angeles (Cal) Express July 5 1924

Baltimore (Md) American 7/8/24

NEIL HAMILTON IN D.W. GRIFFITH'S AMERICA

Grandson of Ibsen Plans Viking Film

TANCRED IBSEN, the grandson of Hendrik Ibsen, is now in this country. The purpose of his visit here is to interest American producers in the idea of filming a big historical spectacle built around the exploits of the Scandinavian Vikings. He has already taken his project to D. W. Griffith, who seems to be suffering from an embarrassing number of flattering offers.

However, Griffith likes the idea of filming a Viking story and is considering it among his plans for next year. Meanwhile Commander Serrao, representing the Italians, is rushing to this country for more talks with Griffith.

Huntington (W Va) Herald-Dispatch July 9 1924

"BIRTH OF A NATION" SHOWN

ASHLAND, Ky., July 5.—David Wark Griffith's incomparable "Birth of a Nation" is being shown to capacity audiences at one of Ashland's movie theatres after having been first released approximately ten years ago. It has made history both through its popularity and in the production and technical departments of the industry. "Long shots" and "close ups" were first effectively employed in its filming. It is interesting, too, to again see the work of the players who take the principal roles. Many of them have attained fame, and several are dead. Few would recognize the fighting blacksmith of the picture for the late Wallace Reid, debonair hero of the films. The film being used here is an excellent reprint, but as so often happens with a long picture, its presentation is marred by the speed with which it is projected.

Detroit (Mich) News 7/6/24

Los Angeles (Cal) News 7/9/24

GRIFFITH PHOTOPLAY TO CLOSE JULY 19TH

St Louis (Mo) Globe-Democrat July 6 1924

St Louis (Mo) Times Sq Daily (Inpty) 7/10/24

Rochester (N Y) American 7/17/24

Neil Hamilton Film Star, Dies Suddenly

Pittsburgh Post 7/11/24

Milwaukee (Wis) Sentinel & Telegram July 13 1924

San Francisco (Cal) Chronicle

MOVIE PROPHECY

Made By D. W. Griffith, the Famous Producer.

Believes Screens of the Future Will Be Just Double the Size of Those of Today—There Will Never Be Speaking Pictures, in His Opinion—A View of Future Directors and Screen Players.

In a recent issue of Collier's, David Wark Griffith tells what he thinks the movies will be like 100 years from now. As a forecast it makes interesting reading and says in part: "In the year 2024 the most important single thing which the cinema will have helped in a large way to accomplish will be that of eliminating from the face of the civilized world all armed conflict. Pictures will be the most powerful factor in bringing about this condition. With the use of the universal language of motion pictures the true meaning of the brotherhood of man will have been established throughout the earth. . . . All men are created equal. . . .

Larger Pictures Ahead.

"There is little question that a century ahead of us will find a great deal more of the so-called intimate drama presented on the screen, although there will always be a field set apart for the film with a vast background, such as 'The Birth of a Nation' and 'America.' You will walk into your theatre and find your actors appearing in twice the size you see them now. Screens will be twice as large and the film twice as large also. With these enlargements close-ups will be almost eliminated, since it will be relatively easy to picture facial expression along with the full figure of the performer. It will always be necessary to picture the face in pictures. It is the face which reflects the soul of man.

Future Directors and Actors.

"We shall say there are now five elaborate first-run picture theatres on one New York street, Broadway. In 2024 there will be at least 40. Cities of 1,000 will average at least six. By virtue of its great advantage in scope, the motion picture will be fitted to tell certain stories as no other medium can. But I must add that the glory of the spoken or written word in the intimate and poetic drama can never be intimate and poetic drama can never be excelled by any form of expression.

In the year 2024 our directors of the better order will be men graduated from schools, academies and colleges carrying in their curriculum courses in motion-picture direction. Our actors and actresses will be artists graduated from schools and colleges either devoted exclusively to the teaching and study of motion picture acting or carrying highly specialized courses in acting before the camera. This is inevitable.

Color Photography.

"Probably on an average of a dozen times each week persons ask me if I think color photography in the motion pictures will be perfected and made practical. Most assuredly. I do think so. Certainly all color processes and tint methods at present in use are wrong. They are not arrived at with any degree of inventiveness, and they cannot last. At present the colored pictures we see are made by the use of varicolored lenses which fit before the film. Thus we find a great lack of harmony. I am willing to concede that I have little [illegible] But I should be the last to speak of [illegible] efforts seriously. We have been merely exploiting and speculating.

"Only through one method will color be naturally and properly given to motion and science in the motion picture. This is a method which will develop a film so sensitive that it will record the natural tints and colors of the pictures in being photographed.

Speaking Pictures Absurd.

"On the other hand, I am quite positive that when a century has passed, all thought of our so-called speaking pictures will have vanished.

"We do not want them, and we certainly shall want the human voice with our [illegible] Music, as I see it, which has the power, will be added to the enjoyment of the human senses [illegible] and in our imagination [illegible] and voices are [illegible] power of the orchestra and chorus will find their rightful place in the world of the photo-play. In [illegible] of lovely music, perhaps sung, [illegible] that has intruded to the [illegible] there. There is no value of the word [illegible] the voice of music. In the [illegible] images of the screen [illegible] great. Anything you would want [illegible]

COURAGE

"I am the master of my fate,
I am the captain of my soul."
—HENLEY.

David W. Griffith decided what his life work should be, but he had to alter his plans many times and undergo severe hardships on the way to attainment.

As a boy in La Grange, Ky., he listened in wonder to stories read by his sister, and resolved to be a great writer. At eighteen he left public school and started as a reporter on a Louisville newspaper.

Assigned to write theatrical notes, he saw a play for the first time in his life, and made up his mind to be a dramatist. Told that all great playwrights started as actors, he obtained a place with a stock company. The salary was small, and he ran an elevator in a dry goods store to provide a living.

Next he was an actor with a traveling company, earning $18 a week in season. During one summer he sold books. In another between-season period he shoveled ore in the hold of a ship.

After several years on the road, he went to New York to be a writer. Success finally came with the acceptance of a poem, a story and a play. The play was rewritten, but failed.

Seeing a moving picture, he resolved to be a scenario writer, prepared a picture play and sold it to a producing company, but never heard its fate. He wrote one for the Biograph company, and was paid $15. Then he decided to be a movie picture director.

Although he received little encouragement, he "hung around" the Biograph studio until the illness of a director gave him a chance. He introduced new ideas. The producers did not like them, but the public did, and for six years he made one and two reel pictures.

At thirty-three he started making "The Birth of a Nation." Originally it was planned to cost $50,000, but expenses ran ten times that amount, and he had to spend all his time away from the studio raising money. Then came the fight to save the picture from suppression. That cost him $300,000 in attorneys' fees, but the success of the production made motion picture history.

Griffith made other large films, became rich, and now, at forty-three, is reported to have said he will make only two more big productions, then retire.

Cincinnati (Ohio) Post 7/15/24

Grandson of Ibsen Plans Viking Film

TANCRED IBSEN, the grandson of Hendrik Ibsen, is now in this country. The purpose of his visit here is to interest American producers in the idea of filming a big historical spectacle built around the exploits of the Scandinavian Vikings. He has already taken his project to D. W. Griffith, who seems to be suffering from an embarrassing number of flattering offers.

However, Griffith likes the idea of filming a Viking story and is considering it among his plans for next year. Meanwhile Commander Serrao, representing the Italians, is rushing to this country for more talks with Griffith.

Cincinnati (Ohio) Post 7/15/24

Not long ago Mr. David Wark Griffith, in Collier's, predicted that one of the important things the motion pictures would accomplish in the next 100 years would be the elimination of wars between nations and also between institutions. Already Mr. Griffith's prophecy seems to be coming true. Yale and Harvard through the films are getting together. I learn that Prof. George Pierce Baker of Harvard, noted authority of the drama and of play construction, has written an original script for the Yale University Press, which is making the "Chronicles of America" in pictures.

As a matter of fact, this is an announcement of more than ordinary significance. It will, no doubt, be more marked in its interest among the patrons than among the producers. Mr. Baker's influence upon the picture play in all probability will be beneficial in a big way—even perhaps artistically. It will mean little to the film makers who are flooding the markets at this time with claptrap.

Prof. Baker's debut into the field of pictures is for the purpose of writing "The Eve of the Revolution" for the "Chronicles" series, and he has been assisted with it by James P. Monroe, ex-President of the Lexington Historical Society. The picture will trace the "exciting days immediately preceding the outbreak of hostilities in the War of Independence, and will reveal the state of mind of the early patriots by recreating such incidents as the Stamp Act, "Taxation without Representation," the Boston Massacre, the Boston Tea Party, the rides of Paul Revere and William Dawes, jr., the artillery clashes at Lexington and at Concord and the retreat of the British."

It is understood that Kenneth Webb, who directed "Wolfe and Montcalm," "The Declaration of Independence" and "Alexander Hamilton," will have charge of Prof. Baker's story.

It is going to be interesting to see what can be done along this line by men whose aims are high and whose only hopes are those of raising the standard of the picture play. I feel more uncertainty in Mr. Webb's ability to better the patriotic scenes made by Mr. Griffith in "America," and that Mr. Griffith himself would be the last to deny anything he has so done in the past with patriotism.

Wherever may be the outcome of this latest acquisition of interest to the films, it is good to see such men as Prof. Baker showing signs of interest. As a fellow academic, I point him into the game. I hope he gets a good film account and a fine one.

A SATURDAY MORNING RECORD OF CAMBRIDGE AND HARVARD AFFAIRS

THE CAMBRIDGE TRIBUNE

CLEAN AND RELIABLE IN ITS NEWS and LITERARY DEPARTMENTS

VOL. XLVII—No. 6 | CAMBRIDGE, MASS., SATURDAY, APRIL 5, 1924 | Second Section Pages 9 to 12

HIGH LIGHTS IN AMERICAN HISTORY; WHAT THEY MEAN

TRIBUNE'S "AMERICA" ESSAY CONTEST GOES OVER WITH A BANG—SEVENTEEN ESSAYS FROM WELLINGTON SCHOOL

The Tribune's offer to Cambridge school youth of choice seats to see Griffiths' great picture of the American Revolution now being shown at the Majestic Theatre, provided they send in an acceptable essay of 400 words or under on "The High-Lights of American History and What They Have Meant to Our Country," drew fire last week from the Wellington School pupils who sent in a large number of compositions—those published this week winning tickets—others to follow next week from Wellington and other schools.

This is a good contest and along the right lines, as the Wellington School essays show, and the Tribune hopes that the other schools will catch the Wellington stride. We shall want photo of winners and their review or criticism of the picture "America," after they have seen it—so keep the ball rolling, boys and girls,—it's good practice in journalism and maybe you'll develop into a successful writer.

Mr. Palmer of Palmer Publishing Company, Boston, and editor of "Education," a magazine which goes to teachers all over the world, told our editor that he got his first inspiration to write, as a school boy, right here in Cambridge in the Wellington School, when he competed for a prize offered to the school children of Cambridge by the Humane Society, and won it.

His essay was published by the Humane Society, in fact and was sent all over the world. It was about birds. Now your essays to the Tribune on David Wark Griffith's great historic picture and your criticism of same and of the motion picture business will give you, boys and girls, an opportunity to get before the public with your ideas and you may rest assured that your essays will be noted with great interest by Tribune readers all over the city. It will be great practice for you and may be an entering wedge for you, as it was to Mr. Palmer, for making a living with your brain and pen, and ideas. And your essays will cause your elders to do some thinking.

The discovery of America is an important event, because it was the beginning of American History.

The Revolutionary War is important because it showed the British that we were determined to be free and have the rights that other countries had.

The Declaration of Independence was important because it gave us our independence.

The Civil War was important because it stopped the slavery from the south and after the war united the country.

The Monroe Doctrine was important because it gave the old world to understand that we were not to meddle with their affairs, nor they to meddle with our affairs.

The war of 1812 is important because it was our second war for independence it gave us our independence, on sea. After that war other countries respected us more and we could trade freely.

The Emancipation Proclamation is important because it freed the slaves. It freed all the black men that were still at war against the Union.

The Women's Suffrage Amendment was important because it gave women a right to vote. They could have their rights but they never did.

The Prohibition Amendment was important because it stopped the saloon, or importing of intoxicating liquors in the U. S.

THERESA SOLDA

Three Hundred years ago England planted civilization of the old world upon the eastern border of the United States. Through all these years the American people, the sons of the early colonists and the new comers from Europe, have built a civilization, developing the rich resources of our country and improving the governmental ideals left us by our forefathers.

America was discovered by an Italian, Columbus, and named after the Italian navigator, Amerigo Vespucci, who was the first to prove the real shape of the earth. Columbus was a great navigator, and was the first to sail across the Atlantic Ocean. He was a great man, and he was the first to prove that the earth was round. He was the first to prove that the earth was round. He was the first to prove that the earth was round. He

TRIBUNE'S "AMERICAN ESSAY GOES OVER WITH A BANG

(Continued from page 9)

War. We went to war because the Germans were sinking and destroying our ships. So in the latter part of the year Woodrow Wilson then a president of the United States asked Congress to declare war on Germany. It was done and our country went to war. Later our government did not have enough to pay for the materials the soldiers needed. So the the government issued five Liberty Bonds asking for money. One year later a peace conference was held in Paris France. They all agreed to have everlasting peace with the European countries.

FRANK MARANKEWICH.

The discovery of America is important because it taught the people that the world was round it gave the settlers that came here a chance to live life anew in this new world. It was their children and children's children that that worked so hard to give this new nation a strong foundation which it has to-day.

The drawing of the compact in the cabin of the Mayflower is important because they declared themselves loyal subjects of the king and at the same time the right to make laws which they needed for the good of the colonoy.

The Mason and Dixon line is important because it marked the boundary between the states of Pennsylvania and Maryland. It also marked the boundary line of the free and slaves states formed from the thirteen original states.

The signing of the Declaration of Independance is important because it made us independant of Great Britian and formed the new nation known and honored all over the world as the United States of America.

The Revolutionary war and the war of 1812 were important. The Revolutionary war made us independent on land; the war of 1812 made us independent on sea. These two wars showed other nations of the world that we were able to stick up for ourselves on both land and sea.

The Constitution of the United States was important because it gave the nation a head, the president, whose term is four years and if relected four years more. It also gave Congress which consists of the House and the Senate the right to make laws and best of all the rights to enforce them.

The Monroe Doctrine is important because it stands for the rights of the nations of both North and South America. It taught the nations of Europe not to meddle into the affairs of the American continents and we would not meddle into their affairs.

The building of the Erie canal in New York was important because it opened up trade between the east and west and made transportation cheaper.

The discovery of gold in California is important because it gave us firmer possession of the Pacific coast for all time. It also increased the amount of gold in circulation and started enormous trade and commerce all over the world. When the precious metal gave out people started to cultivate the land and used it for farming. This of course started large plantations.

JAMES McCURDY.

America was discovered in 1492 by Columbus it is important because it showed us the world was round and made known a land of wonder and the beginning of American history.

In 1607 Virginia was settled by the English it is important because it was the first permanent settlement in the U. S.

In 1636 Harvard Colledge was found and many public schools were opened it is important because it started education and made this an educational country.

The revolutionary war broke out in 1775 and lasted until 1776 it was important because it made us indepent of England.

The Declaration of Indepence is important and it was to show that we were independant.

The Cotton gin was invented in 1793 by Eli Whitney it is important because it made it a leading production of the country and gave us an early start in commerce.

The steamboat was invented in 1807 by Robert Fulton it is important because it made means of travel easier and cheaper.

The Monroe Doctorine" was made by James Monroe it was important because it made foreign countries relieze that they should leave American property alone.

The Telegraph was invented by Morse in 1844 it was important because it made messages shorter time to send.

In 1844 Comordore Perry went over to Japan with a great many gifts for the government. It was important because it was the first white man ever to enter Japan and from that time till now white people still enter.

The Civil War broke out in 1861 and lasted till 1865 the war was north against the south it was important because it made all the negros or slaves free and they are free forever.

In 1836 Professor Alexander Graham Bell invented the telephone it was a step farther than the one Morse had taken It is important because it made means of comunikation quicker and cheaper.

In 1917 the world war broke it was America, Russia, France, and England fighting against Germany it was important because it made Germany give us the rights which it was trying to take away from us.

ALICE TUCKER.

The coming of the Pilgrims was important because they came over to a wilderness to worship God as they thought best. It was the beginning of America's courageous carreer.

The Declaration of Independence was signed July 4, 1776. Many of the noted men signed this document. If successful it would separate them from the mother country. If unsuccessful it would be like signing their death warrant. It proved to be a success.

The Constitution enabled us to band our laws together and make us a stronger nation. It was important because it showed us that if we worked harder we would be a stronger nation.

The Revolutionary War began April 19, 1775. This great war for Independence lasted six years. The Battle of Saratoga was the turning point of this war. It was important because it entirely broke up the plans of the British.

The Monroe Doctrine was a written document stating that the Old World should not interfere with the affairs of the New World and the New World should not interfere with the affairs of the Old World.

Slavery was one of the biggest questions in the history of the United States. It was a question to free the slaves from bondage and it applied the saying, "All men are created equal." The South now found out the evil she had done and was glad it was over. In honor of this Lincoln made a speech called "The Gettysburg Address."

The Civil War was brought on by Slavery and State Sovereignty. It began April 1861 and ended April 1865. It was important because it was one of the things that helped to break up slavery.

The Emancipation Proclamation was a written document issued by Lincoln. It was important because it stated that on the following New Year's Day all slaves would be free.

The Panama Canal Zone was bought from France by the United States. We then decided to make a passage through the solid mass of rock. The workers devoted the first few years in clearing the germs away. A few years later it was done and was called the Panama Canal. It was important because it saved money and time. It is still used by all foreign countries and also our country.

The World War started in 1914, but we did not enter it until 1916. the reason for our entering was because the Germans torpedoed the Lusitania. This was a terrible war because practically the whole world was fighting. It was important because the Allies gained Alsace Lorrainne.

Women Sufferage was introduced in 1898 and was adopted by four states, Idaho, Colorado, Wyoming and Utah. Later five more states adopted it, Washington, California, Oregon, Arizona and Kansas. This question was whether women should vote or not. Now most all the states let the women vote. This question was important because most everybody in the Union was stirred up especially the women.

Prohibition was a law stating that no intoxicating liquors could be sold into or in this country. This law was put into the constitution as the eighteenth amendment, on Jan. 19, 1919. It was important because it stopped the sale of all intoxicating liquors.

IRENE CUMMINGS.

In 1492 Columbus discovered America. It taught people that the earth was round not flat as they thought. Five years later John Cabot discovered the continent of North America.

A few years later De Soto discovered the Mississippi River.

In 1585 English colonization began.

In 1607 the English settled Jamestown.

Twelve years later Representative Government was started.

In 1620 the Pilgrims settled Plymouth.

Six years later Manhattan Island was purchased.

Four years later the Puritans settled Boston.

In 1636 Harvard College was established by John Harvard who left thousands of volumes of books.

Three years later the first printing press was made.

In 1647 Public Schools were started. They were rood log cabins compared to our large buildings.

In 1704 the first newspaper was established.

One year later the first Continental Congress was started.

In 1775 the battle of Lexington and Concord was started. The battle of Bunker Hill also was then started.

In 1776 the Declaration of Independance was made by Thomas Jefferson.

From 1777 to 1781 Burgoyne and Cornwallis surrendered.

In 1781 Articles of Confederation was made.

In 1787 the Constitution was adopted.

Three years later the first census was made.

In 1791 the first United States bank was started.

In 1801 Fulton's submarine was made. It was not used in war because people thought it was cruel.

Seven years later Fulton made a steamboat.

In 1819 the purchase of Florida was made.

In 1823 the Monroe Doctrine was made by Monroe who was president during that time.

In 1825 the Erie Canal was opened by Governor Clinton. It made trade with the west easier.

In 1830 the first passenger railroad was made.

In 1844 the first Telegraph line was made from Baltimore to Washington. That same year Goodyear vulcanized rubber.

In 1845 the horse reaper and mower was invented.

One year later ether came in use and Howe's sewing machine and Hoe's cylinder printing-press was invented.

In 1861 the Civil War begun. That same year while the war was going on the Machine Gun was invented.

In 1865 the new process for steel making.

Two years later the purchase of Alaska was made.

In 1869 the first railroad to the Pacific was made.

In 1872 Otis passenger elevator was invented.

Two years later the typewriter was invented.

In 1876 the telephone was invented.

In 1888 the trolley cars were in use.

In 1896 wireles telegraph was invented.

In 1899 automobiles came in use.

In 1903 Wright's aerplane was invented.

In 1914 the Panama Canal was opened for ships to use.

In 1917 war was declared with Germany.

I think that all these inventions and other things are a great help to the American nation. Without some of these inventions life would be very hard.

GRACE GASTON.

The Discovery of America meant the beginning of the American History. It was a haven of refuge for people who desired to begin life anew. It opened a continent with unestimable riches which had profited the nation who had sowed their seeds there. They built houses, cleared forests, fought Indians and had fought all kinds of hardship. They are known throughout the world and honored everywhere. This nation is called the United States.

The Declaration of Independence showed England clearly that the Americans resolved to be free and independent. The men who signed it were earnest and their determination could not be doubted.

The Battle of Saratoga was the turning point of the Revolutionary War. It secured for the Americans aid from France which insured for the Americans their independence from England.

The Louisiana Purchase secured the attention of the people in the land beyond the Mississippi River. The land beyond the Rocky Mountains possessed unestimable riches. Poor people could afford to settle there and raise products. Many rich minerals were taken from the earth which is at present very valuable. Trade and industry was stimulated because products kept coming from there. It encouraged immigrants to come here to seek their fortune with rich prospects in view.

The War of 1812 made the United States independent on sea. Other nations were forced to respect any ship bearing American colors because they knew that interference would prove disastrous as result of the fighting with England by the United States. Trade and industry sprang up. As soon a product was manufactured it was exported without fear of having it seized.

The Civil War united the people and it taught them the sacredness of the Union.

The Proclamation of Emancipation set free from bondage slaves and gave them the rights of American citizens and they could enjoy prosperity without interference from anyone.

The Homestead Act gave away rich tracts of land at an absurd price. It increased immigration to a large extend and gave everyone equal opportunities to succeed.

The nineteenth and twentieth century inventions advanced the United States because it made labor easier, quicker, and skillfuller. It increased manufacturing to a very large extend and will be one of the greatest boon to the advancement and prosperity of the United States.

BENJAMIN ADLER.

In 1492 Columbus discovered America.

In 1620 the Mayflower sailed from Plymouth, England. On November of the same year the compact was drawn up. It said, "They would be loyal subjects of the King of England." Then John Carver was elected first governor.

Harvard Collage was founded in 1636, at Cambridge, Massachusetts.

When America was trading with France and Spain. England stationed ships along our coast. This was the bgeinning of the revolution. The last battle was the surrender of Howe.

Up to July 4, 1776 the thirteen colonies were subjects to the King of England. On March 1, 1781 we adoped a constitution.

Richard Henry Lee offered to Congress the Declaration of Indepence on June 1776.

General Gage having learned that the patriots had stored power at Concord, sent his men by the way of Lexington and there arrest Samuel Adams and John Hancock. But Adams and Hancock were not to be found in Lexington. Just before daybreak of April 19 the British marched on the village green at Lexington where the minute men had collected. Pitcairn's men fired first. Seven Americans fell. Pitcairn's men retreated toward Boston, but all the Patriots arose and fired upon them as they retreated. Not many regulars got back to Lexington.

General Gage planned to beseize Bunker Hill before the Americans would get it. On the morning of the 17 of June, when Gage awoke and found Prescotts men there. The British made two attacks but fell back. The third time they were successful. because the Americans had fired their last round of ammunition.

Napoleon Bonaparte was afraid that when war broke out, England would take Louisiana so he sold it to the United States for $15,000,000.

When the Spanish government found trouble was likely to break out any time they sold Florida to the United States for 5,000,000.

The Monroe Doctrine stood for the rights of the nation, both North and South. England was not to meddle with our affair and we would not bother about her affairs.

Texas took up arms against Mexico and made herself independent Texas asked to be annexed to the United States and therfore did so.

The first battle of the Civil War was at Bull Run where the Union men lost. The war lasted three years.

The important event in President Wilson's administration, was the establishment of the Federal Reserve Bank. This meant that every National Bank could borrow money when needed from the Federal Reserve Bank.

In 1918 our men went to Germany. They had many hard battles to fight. They had so many hard and fearful battles that they cannot be discussed. But in spite of all these we won, because we were fighting for liberty.

JOHN DUFFY.

When Columbus discovered America he opened the eyes of the world. Every nation looked here and the English after much struggling established colonies on the best part of the continent.

But England fell for it's big weakness, to dominate, losing control of the desperate colonies. Taxing them without representation in parliament and taxing too high caused the colonies to revolt under Washington who whipped the "red coats" by pure grit.

The war of 1812 came just as our country began to lax. The states were fighting among themselves but when England again infringed upon our rights, we as a nation now, rose up and fought for our freedom.

Then came industry and good will proving that the people of the United States of America were hard working and thankful to God but the Monroe Doctrine showed Russia (and any other nation that it might concern) that we were awake. Russia intended to inhabit the vicinity of Alaska but President Monroe issued a proclamation saying that "America is for Americans."

The Civil war was the crisis of the lose feeling in the United States and proved to the Southeners that we must all "stick" together and act human. But after all the bloodshed and loss of property, our nation grew as it had never grown before.

The World war found the United States with the right spirit, "Justice at Any Cost" when the boys went "over there" and fought against the "rulers by might."

The United States of America started growing by living up to the laws of God, ruling itself by the people, and giving freedom of religion, speech and rule. May it continue to do so.

EDWIN GAMMON.

America needs loyalty in the hearts of her people.

George Washington, the father of our country, as a boy was honest and loyal to his parents and as President of the United States, loyal to his country.

Only loyalty to a great cause made the sufferings and privations of the winter at Valley Forge endurable. His army was suffering with cold and starvation and yet their faith in the Commander in Chief was such that they stayed. The paid British soldiers were well equipped but the morale in their army was low and Washington took advantage of it. While the Hessians drank and caroused he and his men were out living and putting to action a plan which won the war.

Washington's ideal, tested and proved worthy, formed the cornerstone of a great nation which today takes its place among the powers of the world.

MARY SHEEDY.

SOAP EXHIBITION AT CHILDREN'S MUSEUM

A new exhibit which is attracting much attention is one illustrating the manufacture of soap, which was prepared by Lever Brothers Company especially for use in the Cambridge Museum for children.

This exhibit shows in graphic manner the assembling of the ingredients of soap from five continents, and gives an idea new to most people of the many industries tributary to the final industry of soap-making. A careful study of this exhibit adds romance to washing one's hands, an industry which is much encouraged by the Museum among its young visitors.

Lever Brothers Company is the second Cambridge firm to furnish the Museum with an exhibit, the American Rubber Company having already given a most interesting set of materials to illustrate "The Story of a Rubber Shoe." It is hoped that as time goes on many other Cambridge firms may be similarly represented at the Museum.

Read the TRIBUNE regularly. You will find many articles of especial interest from week to week.

Eight Years in Inman Square
T. J. DESMOND
CUSTOM SHOE MAKING AND REPAIRING
I Make a Specialty in Shoes for Deformed Feet. Supports Made to Order—Guaranteed.
238 HAMPSHIRE ST. Just off Inman Square. Hours 8 to 6

R. PINANSKY
TAILOR
1261 Cambridge Street
READY MADE SUITS, COATS AND DRESSES

Res. 88 Thorndike Street
Arlington, Mass.
L. P. GILL
HAIR DRESSER
206 Hampshire Street
Cambridge, Mass.

SHOE REPAIRING
LEONARDO SEVERINI
SHINE PARLOR
LADIES and GENTLEMEN
1022 Camb. St., Next Inman Theatre

Bluffied (W Va) Telegraph
July 6 1924

D.W. Griffith Makes "America" for D.A.R.

Los Angeles (Cal) Record
July 15 1924

Patriotic Societies, Historical Experts and the U. S. Army Aid In Making An Unusual Picture.

Praise for the Sex Film Which Is Soon and Again To Die a Natural Death

By W. WARD MARSH

THE world may love a lover for a time but eventually wearies of him if he be too passionate in his declarations and intent. He and his sweetheart have held the screen almost since its inception and now they have a firmer grip on it than they have had since such celluloid nightshades as Theda Bara, Louise Glaum and a few others caused strong men to weaken and, figuratively, fall apart.

On the eve of heralding the new conqueror, the Western picture, popular novels and Elinor Glyn have had much to do with the present period in the evolution of the photo play.

The Western was temporarily put in abeyance by the tales of the flapper, synthetic liquor, and follow-the-leader.

FLAPPER STRIPPED OF MOST OF HER ORIGINAL SIN

The tales were alluring because they appealed to the great group of readers who loved adventure and misadventure and who perhaps wooed virtue more through fear than love. The precious jewel apparently was kicked back into the toad's head by the flapper who didn't give dam' for anybody or anything so long as she was completely and continually thrilled. Her saving grace in the stories (she had many others on the screen) was that at the close she was discovered to be a pure, misguided young thing and a quite fit companion for the man 10 years her senior who had scoffed at the bright lights and had followed the goodly ways of his forbears.

The flapper was stripped of most of her original sin by the screen. On it she appeared as a prankish chicken who had kissed and had been kissed promiscuously, loved not at all until the right man appeared, and in all seemed to be a charming young thing modeled after grandma's pattern, and grandma lived in this age.

The sentiment largely has been false in the stories and on the screen. As for the virtue of the flapper, the discussion leads to platonic love which rarely, if ever, exists.

Flapper Still Lives

The rage of the flapper has not wholly died down. You will find her so long as she is popular with the reading public. In real life, if she be as wild as she is in stories, she is a pitiable child because she finds that when she breaks the conventions, she is as much an outcast as the lady of the streets. She may repent; both may repent, but gossip trails them to the final fade-out.

Perhaps spanking would have made her a better girl, but there was none to administer corporeal rebuke, as you will see in this evolution process.

Youthful love and flapper love were the forerunners of the sex picture of which we are getting too many now, but, the fall from grace has been a slow and subtle and a demanded one. When the flapper began, she was discovered as a girl who took her fun where she found it. If her parents were introduced, they were shown as a worrying, fussing pair, but as the stories progressed, you found that mamma had her sheik and that papa maintained an uptown apartment for a chorus lady for reasons of his own.

As the screen progressed (?), the parents came to the foreground, with their petting parties (of a decidedly more serious nature than the children's affairs) and the youthful pairs were relegated to the background.

As the stories are now, the parents are invariably the leading players and in many cases the children, if there be any, are too young to define with any clarityt the meaning of sex. The stories of today deal with people around the "dangerous age" which may be the second year of matrimony or very much later on.

Sex Picture Is Boon

I would not have you guess that I am condemning the flapper picture. It has been just as much a part of the screen's growth as the costume picture and the modern child has been more to the general liking. The worst charge against the precocious infant is that she and her contemporaries have played the vanguard for the sex picture, which I do not condemn as I once did.

In a measure of retraction, I believe now that the sex picture is a great boon to the industry. That belief may be somewhat explained by the old wheeze in which a fellow said that he liked to hit himself on the head with a hammer because it felt so good when he stopped. When the sex pictures cease to predominate, the new rulers, experience shows, are better stories and infinitely better pictures.

Another point may be scored in favor of the sex picture. It is adult entertainment; at least intended for adults, and if you took your children to see "A Woman of Paris," "The Marriage Circle" or the genuinely offensive "Six Days" and "Three Weeks," you did not follow my advice.

If the sex picture had taught the public that the picture show is not for the small child, it would have performed a novel service. Unhappily, I do not believe that it has done this.

I can think of two instances only when the type of picture has been distasteful—and I have named those. Nearly all in this class have been handled delicately and most of them have been "relieved" by a nice sense of humor. Lubitsch did it in "The Marriage Circle." Even Chaplin's "A Woman of Paris" carried a smile now and then, bitter as it may have been, but Chaplin did not rely on humor.

"Why Men Leave Home," was made by an expert director. "Men" has a shallow story at bottom, but the director and Pola Negri filled it deftly with life.

Stepping Stones to Better Things

So much for a few examples of the "sex picture" against which I direct considerable praise, because it is and has been the stepping stone to better things—or, if you prefer, the pendulum's limit in its swing in the wrong direction.

But this kind of film is on the wane again. A part of the public is getting a bit fed up with violently passionate stuff and it is asking in a modest way, "Must the screen have a love story to tell?"

D. W. Griffith holds out the most hope in reply to that question. In a recent interview in the Morning Telegraph (New York), the great director was quoted as saying:

"It is, of course, fundamental that people are only interested in the things they understand. Curiosity seldom extends further than to a new phase of an old subject. And there are only a few things of universal interest, of which love is the most definite. That is the romance in every one's life, love, and therefore all are interested in love.

"But the time is soon to come when a few pictures, never a great percentage, but a few, can be made in which it will not be necessary to work out a love theme to insure popular interest. When that time comes, many big themes now denied the camera can be approached. The improvements in our audiences make this seem certain within our lifetime."

Simpler stories along with the great men and ladies of the celluloid west (Paramount has bought Zane Grey's book shelf) will dominate the screen before long. And why? Simply because many organizations throughout the country are crying in unison that they don't want the public fed any more sex stories. And, further, because Will H. Hays, the referee, is beginning to put his foot down on these stories—because Mr. Hays is watching the public's pulse and finds that sex pictures aren't good for the blood pressure.

But condemn the sex picture if you like, but after you have finished with it remember that it is an important step in the evolution of the photoplay and nothing thus far has been advanced to take its place in the particular periods of its history.

Atlanta (Ga) Film Review 7/19/24

AMERICA

(United Artists)

GREAT CONTRIBUTION TO ART AND HISTORY

Nathan Holden	Neil Hamilton
Justice Montague	Erville Alderson
Miss Nancy Montague	Carol Dempster
Charles Philip Montague	Charles Emmett Mack
Samuel Adams	Lee Beggs
John Hancock	John Dunton
George Washington	Arthur Dewey
W lliam Pitt	Charles Bennett
Captain Walter Butler	Lionel Barrymore
Thomas Jefferson	Frank Walsh
Patrick Henry	Frank McGlynn, Jr.

It would be difficult to understand how any American—either by birth or adoption—could sit before D. W. Griffith's "America" without experiencing a new reverence for his country——a country born of suffer ng, of war and the blood of patriots. To David Wark Griffith, master producer, "America" represents years of patient and loving study; it is the result of a deep-laid ambition to give to his country the greatest romance that this nation has produced—the romance of its own be ng.

For years Mr. Griffith had patiently accumulted data bearing upon the subject, but it was not until the Daughters of the American Revolution, more than a year ago, urged him to undertake the work of filming the story that he decided to embark upon the great undertaking.

Then with the infinite pat ence that has always gone hand in hand with his enormous capacity for work Mr. Griffith began to build "America." The picture does not pretend to be a history of the period, but historically it is absolutely accurate. Rather than a chronological recital of facts it is a vivid and moving drama, colored with romance, and having its foundation in a period of Amer can history vital, moving and compelling.

It begins with the early American colonists protesting against England's tax levy; it shows William Pitt in Parliament speaking in defense of the American colonists and declaring himself against "taxation without representation". And then with swiftly moving incidents it brings the Boston Tea Party, the punishment meted out by English governors; the formation of the Minute Men, the resistance at Lexington and Concord when 77 farmers armed with rifles, picks, scythes and fired with their eternal conception of right, held back 188 British regulars. And on it goes through the bloody war when England, determined to conquer her rebellious colonists, invoked the aid of war-like Indians, on through the dreadful winter at Valley Forge when the sublime faith of George Washington fortified his suffering soldiers and prevented disintegration of the little army. The story sweeps on until Cornwallis surrenders at Yorktown, until the battered nation binds up its wounds, and staunch in its declaration of independence, strengthened by success, proclaims George Washington president.

Throughout the compelling drama there runs a romance as tender and appealing as ever Griffith wove a romance—Carol Dempster as the daughter of a Royalist, and Neil Hamilton as a young Colonist who fights for the new flag—the stars and stripes of America.

"America" like "The Birth of a Nation", possesses the glory that time cannot dim; it is the story of our forefathers who suffered that their country might endure, and that it might have liberty and freedom. It is a great picture, produced by the genius of the screen; it holds traditions dear to American people; it breathes the very spirit of rugged honesty, of sturdy patriotism, of brave men and courageous women. It is entertainment, but it is much more. It is a living document to which every American will respond, and it is a picture that should find a place in every theater in this broad land.

Mr. Ward News 7/20/24

Stars He Launched May Come Back to Fold

By MILDRED SPAIN.

A new and striking chapter in film history is the signing of David Wark Griffith, the Barrie of the screen, by Famous-Players Lasky corporation. By this keen stroke Famous-Players have set all filmdom on its mettle. What will it finally mean?

They point out:

First.—The United Artists will probably dissolve into thin air or ally themselves with powerful companies. William S. Hart is acknowledgly out of the picture field. Charles Ray has signed with his old producer and discoverer, Thomas Ince. Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks will probably continue to make independent productions, but will release through Paramount.

David Wark Griffith

Adolph Zukor

Rumors have been rife as to the last statement ever since Mary testified before the federal trade commission that Adolph Zukor had told her that he would give her $2,000,000 to quit pictures. This was just after her break with them.

Harold Lloyd and Charley Chaplin will be the only two left in the lone man field. Chaplin doesn't make enough pictures to have their release a vital matter.

Second.—We may expect the millennium in pictures. Griffith has always been the screen's greatest director and worst financier. For every artistic success there must be a box office success. Unusually the two are in no way related. He can now make pictures to his heart's content without thinking of the piper.

Third—The astute Mr. Zukor will be the agent to assure Griffith every story, actor, or country he needs to make his pictures.

The story of David Wark Griffith is indelibly written with the history of motion pictures. He was the first director to gain public notice. He was a maker of such famous stars as Mary Pickford and Blanche Sweet. He saw the pictures as a painter sees his subject. The box office was as annoying to Griffith as the cost of paints would be to the artist.

Like Kipling's cat, Griffith has always walked alone. Few people know Griffith, the man, intimately. He is the inveterate dreamer. The prophet who has never been fully appreciated by his own people.

Lillian Gish — Mary Pickford — Blanche Sweet — Carol Dempster

Stars Griffith helped to make.

The absent-minded professor of the comic strips.

Some time ago Griffith was told he owned—not owed—$30,000 in a Los Angeles safe deposit vault. He couldn't remember! The bills, thirty of them, had lain for three years without being claimed. They had to tear down the bank before Mr. Griffith was reminded of his fortune.

The pictures Griffith has made have been a queer alternate of beautiful dramas and out-and-out thrillers such as "One Exciting night."

When "The Birth of a Nation," that classic piece of work, was released, many people came to Griffith and begged him to make another. They would buy stock. So he made another classic, "Intolerance." It is always listed with the truly big pictures of all times. But in the patter of the studios it was a "flop." A flop is anything that doesn't bring in the bacon.

The same investors who begged him to let them in on his next picture now whined:

"Why did you do it?"

"All right," said Griffith wearily. "I'll take up the notes."

He's still paying for that artistic blunder—if there is such a thing.

His finances have always been in chaos. Once an interviewer asked him to list his holdings.

"I own a felt hat five years old and a lemon ranch," he told the interviewer dryly.

Thomas Ince — Doug Fairbanks — Charles Ray — William S. Hart

Producers and actors concerned in Griffith merger.

And it has been ever thus. Because of his supreme indifference to money matters, his new contract calls for all notes to be taken up by Famous Players. The amount tops the $300,000 mark. But even here they tell a peculiarly Griffithesque tale.

"Anything you put down will be quite all right, Mr. Zukor," Mr. Griffith said.

When he was filming "America" he was the victim of the "bonus boys." The bonus boys, as any and producers can tell you, are the bane charks of the picture business. They fasten on 10 and 20 per cent. interest from their money. It's very simple. Just go to them for a few thousand, pay the enormous amount of interest, and the money is yours.

The bonus boys tied Griffith until he couldn't have Washington cross the Delaware. The original Washington didn't have to pay [illegible]

Toronto (Ont) Star Wired 7/27/24

DAVID W. GRIFFITH DESERTS AMERICA

IT seems a little beyond understanding that the most sensational cinema maker in America should be obliged to go to foreign studios in order to earn a livelihood. And still we understand this is what has happened in the case of David Wark Griffith. A few days ago he sailed on the Leviathan for Germany, where he and his little staff of principals will produce a film under the management of a Berlin company. This was necessitated because Mr. Griffith could not find a producer in America who was willing to meet his terms.

From the standpoint of real accomplishment, no terms which Mr. Griffith might set could be too high. And still, faced by this director's tremendous success in the films, and also realizing that no picture ever made by him has lost money, picture men have failed to take advantage of his talents. Since he finished "America", it has been more or less of an open secret that Mr. Griffith was ready to join some reputable concern with a view to turning out several shorter subjects within the next year or so.

The story of how he struggled on in the making of "America", beset by financial inadequacy, lack of studio equipment and the like is known to each of Mr. Griffith's close associates. At one time, Lionel Barrymore, one of the principals, realizing that unless Mr. Griffith was able to enlist aid from financial quarters within a few days the whole film would go by the Board, [illegible] word to the producer that he, Barrymore, would work on without pay rather than see failure overcome him. For days and weeks, the big picture was made under circumstances extremely discouraging. Only about half enough mechanics, camera assistants and technical workers were at his command.

Then came the day when "America" was given its premier, and the success which crowned it is a matter of record. Even then, the director found it would be impossible for him to carry on with the plans he had set for himself and he again sought some means of raising financial assistance with which to go into a second phase of the American historical drama.

So far as we know, there will be no second phase. One of them took all the money Mr. Griffith could scrape together, and it will be months before it will be returned through the box offices.

Meantime, he has, in a way, looked for a job. At first it seemed that Italy would engage him to do a national spectacle, but this scheme failed. Now he is on his way to Germany, and no one knows when he may return.

There is a ray of hope, however. There is a rumor that shortly after Mr. Griffith returns from Germany he will direct an impo[illegible]

El Paso (Texas) Times 7/27/24

Last week when I wrote about the D. W. Griffith contract with Paramount [illegible] to me as if there was a strong possibility of United Artists merging with some other company because of shortage of films to distribute.

At the time I wrote the story I said I thought Famous Players-Lasky was the logical company for a merger, since D. W. Griffith had gone to it, and both Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks had conferences with Adolph Zukor prior to their sailing.

Since I wrote the story conditions have changed, and it now looks as if United Artists will not dissolve.

Mr. Fairbanks, who, with Mary Pickford, returned from Europe Monday said Mr. Griffith was under contract to United Artists for three years and that Charlie Chaplin also has a contract with this company.

Harold Lloyd of the Griffith office speaking for Mr. Griffith in the absence of D. W. and Albert Ince, said that Mr. Griffith would make three pictures for Paramount. Aside from that he said nothing is certain, as regard to which studio Griffith and Ince shall work.

Mr. Bulletin July 31 1924

ON THE SCREEN

VD

[illegible]

Mr. Ward News 7/18/24

TILTING THE MOVIE WORLD

In the past few people have ever been in doubt as to whether they should go to see a picture produced by David Wark Griffith. We don't believe any one who ever saw one of his pictures was disappointed. He has been a pioneer along the film trails and always the consummate artist in the effects produced.

David Wark Griffith

In recent years folk who patronize the moving picture theatres—and who does not?—have been treated to several wonderful pictures produced by others. But nothing that ever flashed across the screen in any picture surpassed some of the scenes in "The Birth of a Nation." It is a classic of the screen, as proved by a recent revival.

It will not be surprising, then, if the movie world is tilted a trifle by the news that Griffith has signed an agreement to produce a picture for the Famous Players corporation. It is the first time he has done such a thing. It will be the first time the vast expense of producing a Griffith picture will be placed on other shoulders than those of Griffith himself.

The movie world may slip on its axis a bit, but we think it is to be congratulated. Famous Players is to be congratulated, too, but most of all we felicitate the moviegoing public, which deserves to see more good things on the screen than it has any opportunity of seeing.

Griffith deserves kind words from the public and we prefer to say them now instead of following the usual custom of waiting until he dies.

Portland (Me) Portland Herald July 18 1924

Neil Hamilton, the star of the picture, "America," left last week on the George Washington accompanied by his wife for a tour of the Continent. While on the other side he will make several pictures of a historical trend.

David Wark Griffith, the most noted director in the film industry, is among those who are leaving for Europe. When he arrives he will immediately start work upon a picture which one of the foreign companies is desirous of producing under his supervision.

Kansas City (Mo) Gate City 7/21/24

A MENACE TO HOLLYWOOD.

Joseph Urban, who has for the time devoted general art work to undertake motion picture scene planning and designing, says that the sunlight arc can be made to give just as complete and satisfactory results in photographing pictures as does California sunlight. There will perhaps be suggestions that Mr. Urban, who works in New York City, is prejudiced; that he does ill justice to California's sweetness and light. But the fact remains that more and more pictures are being made in studios and less in the open; the saving of time and expense is great and thus far no one has found flaws in the pictorial result.

If the time comes when a majority of picture scenes are made in electrically lighted studios, it will mean that studios can be located wherever the picture producers desire. And it is fair to assume that a goodly number of producers will choose other locations than Hollywood. D. W. Griffith has already said publicly that he will make pictures elsewhere than at Hollywood, except when that location offers special advantages, which he declares to be infrequently true. On the whole, there is reason to believe that the motion picture industry will be just as efficient, and probably in some ways more wholesome, if it can be conducted in a large number of suitable locations instead of in one segregated area.

Chicago (Ill) News 7/17/24

D. W. Griffith has signed a contract to produce pictures for the Famous Players-Lasky corporation, according to a New York wire.

Providence (RI) Journal 7/20/24

FILM WORKERS HONORED

[illegible]

Film Daily July 27 1924

Won't Do "Peter Pan"

[illegible]

Berkeley (Cal) Gazette 7/19/24

SUIT LOOMS OVER NOTED DIRECTOR

[illegible]

Boise (Idaho) Statesman 7/27/24

Detroit Free Press

HOLLYWOOD FILM LETTER

Griffith Signing With Independent Producers — Daughter and Mary Pickford

Jean Herald 7/27/24

Philadelphia Star

Philadelphia Inquirer

Philadelphia Ledger

Movie Producer Aids Babes' Free Milk Fund

Indianapolis Star 7/27/24

Indianapolis Times

Indianapolis News

CLIPPING FROM JUL - 1924
PICTURE PLAY (N. Y.)

The Glory that is Griffith's

Known to every one as the leader of mo of the greatest screen players, yet his most known. We take pleasure in presenting

By Helen

Photo by Frank Diem

The latest photograph of D. W. Griffith.

As we rode down Broadway, theater signs began flashing on, cutting the dusk with great glowing patches of light. Theater after theater displayed announcements of motion pictures and above, huge posters announced important film spectacles to come. We recalled that it was less than nine years ago that a man named D. W. Griffith caused a sensation by announcing that he was going to show a picture called "The Birth of a Nation" in one of the regular theaters. And now this same D. W. Griffith was still a few steps ahead of the rest of the motion-picture industry. "America—Series One—The Sacrifices," his latest picture, which had opened a few weeks before, attested that.

"Who but Griffith," I inquired, "could tackle a job as big as that?"

"Well, on your right is Cecil De Mille's 'Ten Commandments,'" the press agent who was leading me to an interview commented. "That was a pretty big job, wasn't it?"

"Not comparable at all. In the inspired words of one of our readers, 'Fans are used to seeing the Ten Commandments broken in the movies. Mr. Griffith can always be counted on to give us something new.' You can't get away from his influence," I mused idly as we sped along. "'The Birth of a Nation' even now is the standard by which every motion picture is measured. Almost every important innovation in pictures was introduced by him; the cut-back, the close-up, the fade-out, out-of-focus photography, colored inserts. I wouldn't be surprised if some one told me that up in that experimental laboratory of his he perfected the first animated cartoons and slow-motion photography!"

"And the actors," my companion chimed in. "What a lot of the biggest ones he trained."

As we plodded up the steps of the Fox studio to Elmer Clifton's office, we began to enumerate them. "Mary Pickford, Lillian and Dorothy Gish, Blanche Sweet, Lionel Barrymore, Mary Alden, Henry Walthall, Richard Barthelmess, Constance Talmadge, Mae Marsh, Seena Owen, Alma Rubens, Colleen Moore, Pauline Starke——" We

A snapshot of D. W. Griffith and Elmer Clifton taken when they were making some boating scenes.

It Never Happened Before!

The writer of this article went to the Fox studio one afternoon recently to interview Elmer Clifton, director of "Down to the Sea in Ships," "Six-cylinder Love," and "The Warrens of Virginia," a big coming attraction. They started talking about D. W. Griffith, reminiscing, arguing, and analyzing the man and his work enthusiastically. The interviewer made a few futile efforts to change the subject to Mr. Clifton and his work, and only brought forth more reminiscences about D. W. Griffith.

"Why write an interview with me? I should think motion-picture fans would like to know these things about Mr. Griffith," Mr. Clifton suggested.

So here is Mr. Griffith as seen through the eyes of a director whom he trained and a reporter who has had the privilege of knowing him and watching him at work on many of his productions. Aside from revealing Mr. Griffith in a new and interesting light, it tells you a little about Elmer Clifton, the most unusual and least self-centered subject the interviewer ever met.

Continued from page 63

The Glory that is Griffith's

never seen any one else do. He can not only tell an actor what to do but give him the underlying reason for it and the emotional key of the scene at one and the same time. Lots of directors can go on a set and play a scene, showing an actor the effect they want, but the best the actor can do then is to copy what the director did without knowing why. While Mr. Griffith is playing a scene, without blurring a single effective gesture or bit of business, he can explain to you the psychological basis for what he is doing and tell the whole thing in a dramatic tone that gives the mood of the scene. He gives an actor every chance to work things out in his own way, but he gives the actor a definite idea of what he wants first. The actor learns not only through his mind what Mr. Griffith is driving at, but through his eyes and his emotions as well. If he can't act the scene with that help he is hopeless.

"An actor in a Griffith production has everything in his favor. He has confidence in his director and he knows just what is expected of him."

Some people feel that Mr. Griffith dominates the players in his company. In fact, there is a rather maudlin legend that has been circulated for years which credits Mr. Griffith with a sort of hypnotic influence over them. In all the time I have spent in the Griffith studio I have never found any basis for this peculiar story, but it interests me as showing the air of mystery and awe that surrounds him.

Of all the things that have interested me about the Griffith studio, the most unique is the air of good fellowship. In some miraculous way he has managed to bring the lazy, friendly air of an old Southern mansion into this place that buzzes with activity. People who used to work with him are always dropping in to visit. No one ever seems impressed with his own importance there and I believe that it is because Mr. Griffith himself is the most unassuming of men at his work.

"Was it like that when he was making 'Intolerance' and there were so many of you working as his assistants?"

I wish that words could reproduce Elmer Clifton's laugh of surprise.

"Oh, we were friendly enough, but naturally the competition was terrific. I think he played us against each other to bring out our best work. No matter how simple and trivial a thing was that Mr. Griffith delegated one of us to do, we would try to do it so as to attract his attention. Even after we discovered that when he seemed most attentive he was really thinking of something far away.

"I have never known another man with his peculiar mood of abstraction, or his habit of asking for advice that he doesn't need and wouldn't use. I remember dozing off in the projection room one day when Mr. Griffith was running a film to see where he could cut it. I would wake up with a start when he said, 'Do you think that scene a little long?' I'd gather that he did and just say, 'Yes, a little long I think,' and go back to sleep. It was all decided in his mind, as I could tell from the way he put the question.

"His wonderful energy is what used to impress us most. After working all day out on the lot he would go in the projection room and watch film by the hour. The rest of us who hadn't been working at all compared to what he had done would fall asleep after about fifteen reels, but Mr. Griffith would go on.

"Mr. Griffith is an opportunist. He seems to sense the mood of his players the minute they come into the studio, and if they are depressed he doesn't attempt to make gay, light-hearted scenes. When he is going to make a big, emotional scene sometimes he gets his actors terribly nervous and distracted before he ever starts it. The day that Lillian Gish did the famous closet scene in 'Broken Blossoms,' for instance, she came to the studio in the morning and waited around all day. She was all keyed up, eager to get to work and expecting to start at any minute. It was evening, and she was almost a nervous wreck before that scene was ever begun.

"Maybe it does seem unnecessarily severe, but nobody ever thinks to complain of the demands made on him by Griffith. No matter what he asks of you, he is giving infinitely more himself."

Perhaps, after all, that is the secret of the great influence Mr. Griffith has had on pictures. No matter what he demanded of others, he was always ready and able to give more himself. And if the Cliftons and the Neilans and the Dwans whom he trained more by example than by actual teaching can imbue their associates with the same devotion to work and spirit of adventure that he gave them, then the future of motion pictures is bright.

Omaha Neb News 7/27/24

"America" Is Not Just History

But Historical Incidents Are Exact in Detail

"America," D. W. Griffith's latest historical photoplay, coming August 9 to the Brandeis theater, under auspices of the American Legion, is not a series of historical incidents, but a drama in which those incidents are woven.

"The picture play is merely an attempt to mirror in a small way the great sacrifice made by our forefathers that America might become a free and independent nation," is Griffith's introduction.

"It is in no sense an attempt to portray the story of the Revolutionary war, as that story is too tremendous to be told fully by many photoplays, much less by one.

"No efforts have been spared to have the historical incidents as correct in details. The villages of Lexington and Concord were designed from the Doughty drawings, and descriptions given by writers of the day.

"In the conflict at Lexington and Concord Minute Men, despite the great numbers engaged, our records show the exact number killed.

"The battle lines at Lexington are exact reproductions of the original as to numbers, dress and uniforms, weapons.

"The details of Paul Revere's ride are historical, nothing being left to chance."

Arthur Dewey as George Washington in "America"

Oakland Cal Tribune 7/27/24

NEW YORK, July 26.—Great things are pacing over the cinema horizon. The day has come when money and real talent are joining hands. Nothing, I think, which has happened in the last year is of greater importance to the cinema than the acquisition by Famous Players-Lasky of the directing genius, Griffith.

Here is a motion picture producer who admittedly is one of the world's great artists, who, on the other hand, has achieved extremely successful box office results. Here is the man who made back and shoulders above any other picture producer in this or any other country, by agreeing to devote his talents to producing the type of picture he wants to produce, bring the world's greatest cast of actors, the most expensive, the most elaborate, the most costly, the most pretentious, the most artistic, the most beautiful, the most perfect in every detail, the most thrilling, the most gripping, the most human, the most universal, the most, the most, the most

Los Angeles (Cal) Times & Review 7/30/24

Indians are always picturesque figures on the screen and a number of them are certain to be seen in the new historic films.

The Battle of Bunker Hill and other important events of the Revolutionary War were important factors in the appeal of D. W. Griffith's "America."

Historical characters were well portrayed in "America," as this glimpse of George Washington's inauguration indicates.

Brklyn. M. P. Magazine August 1924

Cleveland (O) News-Leader 8/3/24

Passion Players May Be Seen in Photoplay

By Monroe Lathrop.

THERE'S many a slip—when David Wark Griffith went to Rome to confer with the Italian Commercio Syndicate in reference to filming such pictures for them as would bring back the film prestige that Italy enjoyed before the war, we feared we had lost the star director to the old world, for a time at least. But Mr. Griffith, with a master's eye, was quick to see difficulties and has returned to America to think it over—there was no studio equipped electrically for big production and furthermore as D. W. does not speak Italian, it looked more like a riot to him than anything else when he thought of having to direct thru an interpreter. To complicate matters still more, the cast was to be a mixed one, Italian-American.

However, fast on Mr. Griffith's heels when he returned to this country came Commander G. A. Serrao, representative of the Syndicate, to offer additional persuasion—among them a big modern studio that is nearing completion. Mr. Griffith evidently realizes the novelty of this movie venture, backed as it is by the Banca Commercio and indorsed by the government of Italy. While in Italy, he saw the country under Mussolini and his special guests, and the reinstitution series with all sorts of leaders and more authentic reality than they have ever before, was so inspiration to him and won his sympathy.

Extremely pleased, his staff apparently lifted no voice from his lips and added his pounds to his weight. The days that he doesn't smile Italian leaders send to show their countrymen something of their wonderful money on the Mississippi. They may be producing "Ben Hur" or "Ben Hur" or "Ben Hur" or

Omaha (Neb) Film Review August 9 1924

Chicago (Ill) Journal August 11 1924

In his lavish and historically notable "America" D. W. Griffith proves again that he is a master of direction with but few equals. Neil Hamilton is seen here as Nathan Holden: Charles Emmett Mack as young Montague invites him to a duel. In the center Lionel Barrymore in the role of Captain Butler is trying court to Carol Dempster, the lovely Nancy Montague whom Nathan Holden loves. On the right, Nathan Holden delivers a message from the colonists.

"America" an Artistic Achievement

D. W. Griffith Scores Another Triumph in Historic Film

D. W. Griffith, so 'tis said, lives in two scantily furnished rooms and remains poor in spite of his spectacular screen successes.

But he need ask nothing more of life, so long as he can make history live all over again, true in fact and sentiment, as he has done in "America."

PHOTOPLAYS.

revolutionary war film which opened a two weeks' engagement at the Brandeis Saturday.

Spontaneous applause burst forth time after time as Omahans watched Griffith's stirring war scenes, Griffith's tender love scenes, Griffith's clever touches of humor, Griffith's inimitable photography.

The players do not stand out as superb actors. They are merely part of the story. Carol Dempster is a beautiful but a trifle too flutter heroine. Neil Hamilton, a handsome, cleancut hero, the type which Griffith almost invariably selects. Except for a few differences in countenance, they might be Lillian Gish and Dick Barthelmess all over again. Charles Emmett Mack, as Carol's dashing young brother, gets killed off early in the war, but is handsome enough to survive as one of the outstanding parts of the picture for all that. As the cruel General Butler, Lionel Barrymore does the best bit of acting in the play.

In perpetuating the revolutionary war, Griffith chose a little-stressed phase, the Indian massacres of the northwest. Those who witness the film vote that he has done for the settlers of that section what Longfellow did for Paul Revere, and by the way, Griffith's Paul [illegible] is no slouch!

NO ROUGH EDGES IN "BETWEEN FRIENDS"

Omaha (Neb) News August 10 1924

Houston (Texas) Chronicle August 10 1924

Art and Old Hokum

TWO productions, other than those put on at the change theatres, were presented last week. One was notable for its superb artistic effort, and the other for its execrable acting and absurd story. The first is Marion Davies's "Janice Meredith," and the other is "Love and Glory."

"Janice Meredith" is something the producers can speak of with an unrestrained pride, while "Love and Glory," is a production which will disappoint many and cause some of those who see it to turn up their noses at the motion picture industry.

Marion Davies's new picture is an exquisite historical romance, incidentally adapted from Paul Leicester Ford's novel. It possesses wonderful charm and in many instances is thoroughly thrilling. There are, it is true, certain sequences which duplicate those put forth by David W. Griffith in his pictorial success, "America," which have not all the drama Mr. Griffith injected into his episodes. But if Mr. Griffith had never made Paul Revere's ride this spectacle in "Janice Meredith" would be one of its outstanding features. Like the Valley Forge chapter, it is cleverly produced, but does not strike home with the same gripping effect accompanying those sequences in Mr. Griffith's production. On the other hand, the story of "America," and incidentally the acting, is not nearly as impressive as that in "Janice Meredith." The cast in the latter film is superior, and the fortune spent on its production is obvious without being flamboyant. The money was devoted to taking the company to suitable locations, in having the costumes that radiated splendor, especially in those sequences of the Howe ball in Philadelphia and the French Court, and in realistic interiors and an impressive cast.

The exteriors of the old Colonial mansion in which the Meredithis live are unusually picturesque. In fact the work on this production is studious and beautiful.

The introduction shows the reproduction of the Boston Tea Party, the lighting and action of which are extremely effective.

No expense has been spared in the roll wigs of male and high wigs of female actors. Nothing could be much more reaplendent than the sight of Holbrook Blinn as the distinguished dandy, Lord Clowes. This excellent actor as the scoundrel of the story rises to every occasion with subtlety of expression and graceful gestures.

7,500 Persons Employed.

It is claimed that more than 7,500 persons took part in this photoplay. Scores of red-coats are seen marching, also a number of men garbed as Hessians, and the steel-hearted minute men. While Mr. Mason Hopper, the director of "Janice Meredith," has shown his ability in producing certain stretches, he cannot compete with Mr. Griffith when it comes to picturing a battle scene. All these episodes of fighting were brought out with great artistry by Griffith, while Mr. Hopper has apparently decided to give the Men and little more.

Marion Davies is lovely in most of the scenes, and the costumes enhance her exceptional charms. She has infused into the spirit of the story with zest and emotion, with an intimate knowledge of the parts in the character she impersonates, and unquestionably had good luck in the success of the portrayal. Her sincere and wholesome, pitiful and outspoken and vehement, girl is an excellent type of America's young women.

[illegible]

Even since the "Birth of a Nation" marked the dawning of a new day in motion pictures—the day of the super-production—the releases of its producer, D. W. Griffith, have been watched with eager interest.

Now, with a flutter of flags, comes "America," revolutionary war film requested by the D. A. R. organization.

It opens today at the Brandeis.

The critics claim that it is a photoplay without an anachronism.

Everything absolutely authentic, even to the spirit of '76—that's "America" all through.

The drum used by the Minute Men is the original one.

A number of the flint-lock guns used in the picture actually served in that historic encounter at Lexington.

The tower of Old North church, electrically wired for the first time, was actually used in the scenes of Paul Revere's ride.

At Lexington and Concord, the photoplay shows the exact number killed.

The battle lines at Lexington are exact reproductions of the original as to numbers, 800 British against seventy-seven Americans.

Neil Hamilton and Carol Dempster enact the romance of revolutionary days, the hero a dashing rebel, the heroine a loyalist of one of the most famous families of nobility.

Arthur Dewey takes the part of George Washington, Frank Walsh that of Thomas Jefferson, Frank McGlynn Jr. that of Patrick Henry, and Harry O'Neill that of Paul Revere.

The Omaha screen calendar teems with triangles that get untangled, history and romance. In the first-mentioned class, Lou Tellegen, famous for his love affairs off-stage, appears in opposite roles in "Single Wives," at the Rialto, and "Between Friends," at the Sun. In one, he is the wronged husband. In the other, he is the seducing lover.

lieving Charles Fownes dead, goes over to a body stretched on a sideboard and laughs when she discovers that it is not the man she imagined. Possibly this was meant to be a hysterical laugh, but, like irony in speeches, it is difficult of expression and should therefore be supplanted by a title.

One of the best performances in "Janice Meredith" is rendered by George Siegmann, who portrays the rôle of Colonel Rahl, the Hessian Colonel. The subtitles give him the hissing, guttural, Teuton accent. He exhorts his officers to drink and poohpoohs the idea of the Revolutionists approaching from the far bank of the Delaware. Later he is flabbergasted at the knowledge that the indomitable Washington had crossed the Delaware and is marching on Trenton. There are therefore flashes of Washington on his boat midst ice and water, mearing the opposite bank, and then "shots" of Colonel Rahl, tibulous and corpulent, flinging his arms about in agonizing despair. [illegible] have nearly as great an effect as fleetingly [illegible] word of it were merely flashed on the screen.

Washington's unexpected success dazes Rahl and his brutes.

The one feeble point in Washington crossing the Delaware is that although it must have been fairly cold to have ice in the water, Washington is too much made up to show a scintilla of the effect of the frosty temperature on his physiognomy. As in the first stages of most presentations, there are many places where this picture should be cut. The Valley Forge incidents are dwelt upon at far too great a length, and there are close-ups in a number of other places that ought to be shortened, if not eliminated entirely. As we said in our criticism, the sight of Washington praying at such great length does not make nearly as great an effect as fleetingly flashed on the screen.

Bridgeton (N.J.) News 8/12/24

New Orleans (La) Item 8/17/24

Chicago (Ill) Herald-Examiner 8/17/24

San Francisco (Cal) Examiner 8/17/24

"DON'T FIRE, BOYS, UNTIL YOU SEE THE WHITES OF THEIR EYES," portrayed in the Battle of Bunker Hill in "America," in return engagement at the Majestic.

Bronx (N.Y.) Home News 8/10/24

D. W. Griffith, motion picture producer, will go to England in an effort to persuade British censors to allow his picture, "America," to be shown in England, according to London dispatches. The picture was suppressed in England, because it was said to be "calculated to foment ancient grudges between Britons and Americans."

Houston (Tex) Post 8/10/24

Syracuse (N.Y.) Herald-Journal 8/12/24

PAUL REVERE'S RIDE A THRILLING SCENE

Epic of American History Is Presented At Majestic Theater

Reading (Pa)

Duluth (Minn) Herald 8/16/24

Iowa City (Iowa) Daily Press 8/16/24

GREAT PHOTOPLAY IS "AMERICA"

D. W. Griffith's Masterpiece of the Screen Seen by Many People Last Evening

D. W. Griffith's "America" is a great picture, a wonderful picture, and great audiences saw it last night. Many pronounced it superior to Griffith's "Birth of a Nation."

It will be shown again tonight and tomorrow night, thus affording opportunity for many more to see it.

It has remained for David Wark Griffith, in creating his "America," the titanic romance of the Revolution, to bring from oblivion the great struggle to save the green fields of the North Country, and to place it where it belongs—among the decisive struggles of the history of the United States.

Fate, aided by artists and models, has made Washington's venture across the frozen Delaware one of the best known incidents of the Revolution. From a historian's angle, however, this was a minor incident indeed, when compared with the battle in the North Country. Two lives were lost when Washington's forces crossed the river. Ten thousand men, women and children were slaughtered when Capt. Walter Butler, Capt. Hare and their band of ruthless, natured Tories and Indians swept through the North Country, bent on carrying the green, which alone could keep Washington's Army supplied with food.

Confronted with the gigantic task of bringing the high points of the Revolution within the two and one half hours allotted, Griffith, with the skill of reading historian, has chosen the more of the war in Northern New York and Western Pennsylvania rather than the better known but comparatively unknown battles and incidents which at least battles and events made famous in "America" also by Griffith, has taken the best of living actors, [illegible] Nature's gifts of [illegible] and [illegible] Revolutionary [illegible] with [illegible] and [illegible] and [illegible] and

(Above) — Carol Dempster in "America" at Keith's Capitol

Omlor Urges Youngstown Folks to See "America"

American Legion Leader Says Photoplay Is Great and Real Lesson in History of Country

D. W. Griffith's "America," which opens an engagement at the Park theater today, is not only a great dramatic romance, one of the most thrilling photoplays of the decade, but it is a splendid lesson in American history and has the backing of patriotic societies and educators wherever shown. Joseph Omlor, one of the leaders in the American Legion, is one of the few Yongstown people who have seen the production as its local showing marks its premier in Ohio and he has sent the Vindicator the following letter giving his ideas of the picture:

"Even in this day of stirring events and magnificent accomplishments, every once in a while we see something that particularly impresses us and makes us feel that it is our duty to tell our friends so that they can avail themselves. This is exactly how I feel regarding the film spectacle 'America' which comes to the Park theater soon and which I saw recently in Louisville Kentucky.

"I have seen D. W. Griffith's other films and thought that he had reached the pinacle of his art but in the present spectacle he seems to have been inspired.

"Through the columns of your paper you should urge every parent to take the children to see this vivid unfolding of our early pages of history. It is something that no school teacher or school child should miss. It is not only history but real thrilling adventure and as exciting as any film I ever saw. As events of an exciting nature transpired I found myself on the edge of my chair and mopping my brow.

"What particularly struck me was the stupendity and the seeming auenticity of everything until I read in the program that Mr. Griffith was thenticity of everything until I read aided in the production by such bodies and people as Daughters of the American Revolution, Secretary of War Weeks, Governor Trinkle of Virginia, Brigadier Gen. Sir Percy Sykes of the British Army, Paul Revere Historical Society, Massachusetts Historical Society the 16th and 18th United States Infantry and a score or more just as prominent. The endorsement and co-operation of these people is something that money could not buy had not the spectacle been made with the expense and setting it deserves.

"Again I say, urge your readers to attend it and they'll thank you. It is the finest entertainment I have ever witnessed."

GRIFFITH SPECTACLE OPENS FOR RUN AT PARK

Farewell Week At Idora—New Down Town Attractions Please

AMERICA, the David Wark Griffith historical production at the Park theater for a week's run, is a fit successor to The Birth of a Nation and other tremendous spectacles which have made the Griffith name the synonym for supreme excellence. The United States government, several foreign governments and practically every patriotic organization in the land co-operated in efforts to make this picture a true reflection of the events which are portrayed in the narrative.

Youngstown is given the distinction of being a "key city" in this engagement, which is the first in Ohio. Officials of the distributing company are in the city to witness the opening and the picture is screened with a special orchestra.

Many distinguished players appear in the important acting parts. Lionel Barrymore plays Walter Butler, the perfect villain; Carol Dempster is Nancy Montague, the heroine, and Neil Hamilton is a handsome juvenile lead. Louis Wolheim has a striking character role which rivals his success in The Hairy Ape.

The scenes depicting early settlement days are visualized with startling lealism.

Against the hordes of redskins and painted Tories, who invaded the peaceful valleys, the little colonies of settlers made brave stands, and no portion of history is so replete with records of individual heroism as that which tells of this campaign, from which Griffith has drawn some of his most telling and most dramatic scenes.

LEGION ENDORSES "AMERICA" FILM

Local Post Suggests Cut Prices for Children At Showing Here

The following letter was sent to the management of the Mishler theatre by the Charles R. Bowers post, American Legion, endorsing the D. W. Griffith film masterpiece, "America"

Mishler Theatre,
Altoona, Pa.

Gentlemen:—

It is with pleasure and anticipation [illegible] the [illegible] Part of Altoona learns that you are bringing in Altoona the great historical motion picture, "America."

As you likely know, the United States Government, general officers of the United States Army and most of the leading patriotic authorities of the country gave their help in the making of this picture. It is considered to be the most authentic and complete prepared picture ever made and for this reason the men of the American Legion hope that every school child of the city will be encouraged to see the picture. With this thought in mind we would suggest that some arrangement be made by which admission for children be made as low as possible so that every child may have an opportunity to see the production.

At this time, when there are controversies about questionable teaching in many school districts throughout the nation, a great educational [illegible] of true history [illegible] "America" was filmed for other and higher purposes than merely a money making, and it merits first the support of the entire community.

Sincerely yours,
J. Harry Shiffler,
Commander.

"America," Now Showing at Park, Is Greatest Griffith Production

Diversity of Entertainment on Hipp Program

Revolutionary Facts Shown In Splendid Screen Triumph

By J. B. SHEAR

Every few years D. W. Griffith, photoplay director and producer extraordinary, gives to the American public a great screen classic, a modern depiction of worn, historical facts. His latest production, "America," which began a one week engagement at the Park theater Sunday, is a super-classic, a remarkably accurate and dramatic record of events during the immortal Revolution and a gigantic film masterpiece which will survive through ages, one that only the genius and courage of Griffith could so wonderfully portray. "The Birth of a Nation," "Intolerance," "Broken Blossoms" and "Way own East" were extraordinary works of art, but "America," based on fact and not fancy, is the greatest of all, its merits breathing forth a commanding summons that every red-blooded American see the master triumph of film productions.

"America," written by the well known author, Robert W. Chambers, and historically arranged for the screen by John L. E. Fell, is truly an historical, dramatic success, one that will echo through the ages to come and be favorably commented upon in after years as the most splendid and faithful reproduction of actual facts ever recorded on the screen.

In this stupendous production there is no attempt made to assume that the complete story of the Revolution is being portrayed, but only suggests in a small way the great sacrifice made by our forefathers that America might become a free and independent nation. Nevertheless, the incidents of that great struggle which are so graphically portrayed are presented as correctly as possible, no labor or expense having been spared to make the production as accurate and perfect as possible.

Due to the terrific heat only a small crowd witnessed the first showing of "America" at the local theater Sunday, and only a slightly larger crowd last evening. However, when a theater audience sits on seat edges, eyes staring and mouths gaping, a peculiar and creepy silence being broken only occasionally by a momentary outburst of applause, then the subject of that interest is usual, it is thrilling, gripping and exciting.

How few of us realise that those zealous patriots of 150 years ago suffered, the torture they bore, and the privations they endured that the rightful independence of a new and growing nation might be established. "America" portrays exactly and without semblance of exaggerat' just what those sacrifices were and the spirit that carried those brave, fearless Colonists to glorious success.

Charles Emmett Mack in D. W. Griffith's "America," big feature at the Park.

Eddie Cantor May Appear on the Screen for D. W. Griffith

BY LOUELLA O. PARSONS.

EDDIE CANTOR is going into the movies. Yesterday afternoon he and Albert Grey, general manager of the D. W. Griffith Company, spent two hours talking about the type of play that would fit Mr. Cantor and just what will happen if negotiations forming the Eddie Cantor Productions Company materialize.

I saw Mr. Cantor at the Carroll Theatre after the "Kid Boots" performance Tuesday evening, and at that time he had made up his mind to accept the Griffith offer providing the financial terms are mutually satisfactory.

Mr. Cantor said that he felt that any picture that Mr. Griffith might have a supervising interest in would be a success and that he hoped that the deal would go through.

Cantor Accepts Griffith Offer

By LOUELLA O. PARSONS

NEW YORK, Aug. 29.—Eddie Cantor is going into the movies. He and Albert Grey, general manager of the D. W. Griffith Company, spent two hours talking about the type of play that would fit Mr. Cantor and just what will happen if negotiations forming the Eddie Cantor Productions Company materialize.

I saw Mr. Cantor at the Carroll Theatre after the "Kid Boots" performance, and at that time he had made up his mind to accept the Griffith offer providing the financial terms are mutually satisfactory.

MR. RUPERT HUGHES TO D. W. GRIFFITH

Dear Mr. Griffith:

Your picture "America" has shaken me up and stirred me so deeply in many ways that I must express my profound homage.

You have combined so many [illegible] so greatly that your generosity in [illegible] amazing as your infinite [illegible] detail of every sort.

There were so many thrills, heartbreaks and triumphs that it is ridiculous to praise any one thing.

But the whole sequence in which the son is brought to the bedside of the wounded father by that divine deliverer, the daughter, OVERWHELMED ME AS ONE OF THE GREATEST ACHIEVEMENTS BY ANY OF THE ARTS FROM THE GREEK TRAGEDY ON.

The extraordinary tangled skein of Miss Dempster's acting, with every thread sincere and distinct and true like anybody's else, also quite conquered me.

(Signed) RUPERT HUGHES

The picture, "America," filmed by David W. Griffith, has been banned in England, so we learn, but it has been decided to release the film there under the title, "Love and Sacrifice," and eliminate certain sequences that might be objectionable in that country.

Griffith Introduces Distinct Novelties In "America"

Master Producer Who Has Done Wonders For Pictures Has Added Many New Things in His Latest Production

D. W. Griffith, responsible to a greater degree than anyone for innovations in the making of photoplays and father of the motion picture as a vehicle for art, has again made a radical departure from established custom in the filming of "America" which will be shown at Mishler theatre next week.

In fact, it may be safely stated that "America" includes more novelties in motion picture production than any the impressionable with which motion pictures have revolutionized the theatre world.

Because of the fact that the photoplay and performance of the many scenes of our most prominent patriots, representatives of the various groups of the United States and that formed the nucleus of the United States of America, Mr. Griffith has brought to the screen the most authentic and dramatic story of the birth of our nation.

In this and in numerous other ways a history of events in the United States in several hundred years ago is presented in the use of real Revolutionary and aristocrats, and in the use of British Regulars, and of Washington's Continental Army, which appeared in the film.

It is the first time that such a dramatic story has been produced in the United States, and the first time that such a production has been made in the United States, and the first time that such a production has been made in the United States, and the first time that such a production has been made

Buffalo (N.Y.) Express 8/31/24

GRIFFITH FILM HAS BEEN SHUT OUT OF BRITAIN

It appears that Britishers are still rather touchy over the Revolution.

NOBILITY IN FOLLIES

Daughter of peer and daughter of churchman take to the stage; those million dollar legs.

By DAVIS EDWARDS.

London, Aug. 30.—One is surprised because the British still are touchy on the subject of the American Revolution. When I was a boy I used to loathe the very word British, for I had been reading the history of the Revolution. [illegible] Englishman in my home town raised the Union Jack defiantly on the Fourth of July we were all delighted because the farmers of the region came with their shotguns and utterly destroyed the flag.

But I am infinitley surprised because America has been actually forbidden public showing in the British theaters. The film was re-edited and titled, too, for British showing, being called here Love and Sacrifice, but still they will not let it show.

It was not the British board of film censors which forbade its showing at Plymouth the other night, either. It was the theater owners there. After that, although it has been passed, the board refused a certificate.

But Griffiths is not easily daunted. Nobody can prevent him from giving a showing to the press if he doesn't charge admission and he proposes to do that. So we probably shall see a good deal of free advertising of this picture and very likely may see it, changed, perhaps, on screens all over England in the end.

America, or Love and Sacrifice, is not an attack on Britain. It shows up the soldiers of the wicked George rather freely, but nobody in England ever mentions the American Revolution now without admitting that the whole thing was the fault of a certain small group of English home politicians led by a German king and not at all of the colonists in America.

Nobility in Follies.

Gladys Ross, now playing in Stop Flirting, is actually the daughter of a peer of England, Admiral Sir John Ross. She is by adoption, also, the niece of that famous soldier, the late General Townshend. She isvery beautiful, very clever and when at the beach seem to be wearing rather dark brown stockings, when, in fact, is merly wearing sunburn—which indicates that she is fond of beaches.

Million dollar legs.

And this reminds us of a matter of which I hesitate to speak, but which I must no longer keep to myself and hide from an anxious world. Yes, it is true. Mlle. Jeanne Mistinguette actually did insure her legs for a full million dollars when she flew over to England the other day. "My legs are my fortune, sir," she said. Just as the girl in the verses said the same thing of her face.

They are wonderful legs, no doubt. I have seen as much of them as she shows on the stage, which is as much as she could possibly show outside of a bathtub, and I admit their value.

The insurance company which gave her the great policy before she started on the numerous air trips to London which her new contract with a London manager requires, carefully investigated the salary really paid to her and found that a million dollars is not too high a figure to place on whatever may have caused this splendid income.

It is curious, however, that Mlle. Mistinguett, clever as she is, should have been willing to admit by taking out the policy that her attractiveness and profit-making possibilities upon the stage are all due to the grace and beauty of her legs. One would have thought she would have claimed something for her clever mind and facial beauty.

Omaha (Neb.) News August 31 1924

D. W. GRIFFITH JOINS PARAMOUNT; FIRST MOVIE TO BE LIKE 'BROKEN BLOSSOMS'

David Wark Griffith, maker of "The Birth of a Nation," and other famous photoplays, is to be a director for Famous Players-Lasky corporation, according to an announcement by that company.

His first production, yet tentative, is said to be along the lines of "Broken Blossoms."

Mr. Griffith is now completing a film in Germany and as soon as he returns will release through Paramount.

GLORIA WILL MAKE FIRST FILM ABROAD

Gloria Swanson is going to make her first motion picture abroad.

She has completed "Her Love Story" and will go to France to make "Madame Sans-Gene," for Paramount.

Picture Play (N.Y.) Sep 1924

"America"—D. W. Griffith. The story of the American Revolution filmed in the grand manner, with an appealing love story interwoven. Not as sensational as "Orphans of the Storm" or "Way Down East," but worthy of a place among Griffith's "big productions."

Chicago (Ill.) Herald-Examiner 8/31/24

Sioux City (Iowa) Journal Press 8/31/24

The picture, "America," filmed by David Wark Griffith, has been banned in England, so we hear, but it has been decided to release the film there under the title, "Love and Sacrifice," and eliminate certain sequences that might be objectionable in that country.

Mail Sep 3 1924

"AMERICA" SCORES REAL HIT AT KEARSE THEATRE

D. W. Griffith's Newest Work Regarded as Greatest; Thrilling Battle Scenes Depicted; George Washington and Love Interest From Important Parts of Play

ROMANCE of breath-taking variety, teems as "America" flashes on the screen. D. W. Griffith's newest picture is, the Gallery God believes, his greatest one. It's so compelling that it seems to breathe. The audience forgets it is an audience and feels that it has a part in the struggle for freedom that is being depicted on the screen.

"America" opened at the Kearse theatre yesterday. Manager Triskett reported a sell-out at the afternoon performance. The evening house was nearly of capacity proportions.

There's nothing of the hysterical in the bid for fame that "America" makes. There's flag-waving, surely. There's a continuation of the history lessons we left behind in the schools. But these elements are necessary to the story. They are not inserted for the purpose of bringing applause. They do win applause, but so does the whole play, and on its merits.

Essentially, D. W. Griffith has taken the story of the revolution, its beginnings, its episodes and the welcomed surrender of Lord Cornwallis. The sufferings of Valley Forge are shown. The battle of Bunker Hill and other battles are thrilling. One sees the midnight ride of Paul Revere. The crimes committed by Captain Walter Butler form a stirring part of the play.

Love Element

Through all he story runs a delightful love incident. That comes in the affair of Nathan Holden and Miss Nancy Montague. (Neil Hamilton and Carol Dempster.) Holden is a most determined Minute Man, handles his part perfectly, and wins thereby the audience's sympathy in his, at first hopeless, admiration for Nancy. It took a splendid actress to portray the Miss Montague role, and Griffith has that person in the play's leading lady. There's character and personality in plenty in Miss Dempsey, and she is most lovely in her part.

Lionel Barrymore is seen in the Captain Butler role. It's a cruel role that Barrymore plays, and his smile which can be so mean on occasion, puts over his share of the story in excellent fashion.

Charles Emmett is another to win sympathy. He is cast as the brother of Miss Nancy, a foppish fellow who proves true blue. He's a Virginian, and the idling son of a wealthy man. But he shows his mettle when the strife comes.

Griffith has lifted the soul of George Washington from musty history. "America." It is the soul of that great man about which the play's action drifts.

Stirring Scenes

The stirring scenes of war, with its sudden death and sorrow, the thrilling midnight ride and the heavy battles, all are, of course, highly important parts of the play. Without them it would be meaningless. Yet the G. G. was most fascinated with the love element, and with the character of George Washington. The delight which may be found in either of these incidents is well worth the time spent in watching the whole play.

It is also well to remark that the story is well knit together. There are many angles, many characters and places which have important bearings on the narrative, but they are closely bound each to the other.

Ray Jan Shellabarger and his orchestra capably handled the score. The incidental music is of the excellent sort Griffith always has with his plays, with one exception. There's no tune, or even a line or so that continues to jinkle through the score, and is retained in one's memory while passing from the theatre.

It's interesting that the headline part of the news reel which is shown before the feature starts is a number of views of the arrival of the Prince of Wales, a descendant of King George III, who is shown in a not at all complimentary fashion in "America."

The young lady on the Gallery God's right said she was "thrilled to death" with "America." She best liked the work of Neil Hamilton, as will all other young ladies who see the play, the G. G. supposes.

Pictures (Bc) 9/9

GRIFFITH BEGINS FIGHT IN LONDON ON FILM CENSOR

(Special Cable to DAILY NEWS).

London, Sept. 4.—D. W. Griffith, the American movie producer, who arrived in London last night from France to see why his revolutionary war picture, "Love and Sacrifice," has been banned in England, attempted to prove today that is it not anti-British by showing it before an audience of London newspapermen. In the United States the film was called "America."

"I see no reason why the picture should be objectionable to the British and I consider it arbitrary that one man—T. P. O'Connor—should have the final decision," Mr. Griffith told THE NEWS today. When Americans hear how the picture has been treated here

D. W. Griffith — T. P. O'Connor

Producer and the censor who barred photoplay.

I am afraid they will take it rather hard."

When it was suggested that the British might consider the portraying of Indians hired by the British to fight colonists as likely to stir ill feeling between the nations, Mr. Griffith said:

"It might in America if anywhere, but why should it here?"

Mr. Griffith sails for New York Saturday.

(Copyright: 1924: The Chicago Tribune).

(Other picture on page 16)

COURT RESTORES

HOKUM OR NOT, 'AMERICA' GOOD

Griffiths' Finesse Shown in Picture Tempered to British Taste

This generation of Canadians who have not been brought up to thrill at the stirring "Ride of Paul Revere" nor to wince at the shot "that was heard around the world," may not raise as much patriotic gooseflesh over "America," shown at the Orpheum, as dyed-in-the-wool Americans, whose forebears threw off the yoke of English oppression in that stirring year of grace, 1776.

Certainly they will not get as much kick out of the present version, which obviously has been tempered to British taste with a meticulous and sometimes almost ridiculous care.

But, even robbed more or less of its essential appeal to patriotism, "America" is still good entertainment and good picture drama.

D. W. Griffith embodies in it all the standard Griffith features which, hokum or not, never fail to get under the skin.

There is the regular Griffith heroine torn between love and duty. There are the cleverly-directed mass scenes. There is the typically Griffith dash of horsemen. And there is the typically Griffith acting.

Lionel Barrymore, as the renegade Captain Butler, creates a type that will be remembered.

Romance, drama and plenty of action combine to make a film that, accompanied by first-class music, well rendered, will rank as one of the big pictures of the day.

San Francisco (Cal) Examiner 9/4/24

Washington (D.C.) Herald Sep 3 1924

Griffith Wants London To Lift Ban on 'America'

BERLIN, Sept. 2.—With the last scenes of his new picture, "The Dawn," largely laid in Germany, completed, David Wark Griffith, known as America's greatest film director, left today for London to try to have the ban lifted on his "America," the showing of which in England was stopped by the British government.

"I have invited the newspaper men of London to see the picture and act as a jury to decide if there is anything in it that could make for bad feeling between the two countries," said Griffith.

BRITISH BAN U.S. REVOLT FILM

By KARL H. VON WIEGAND, (Chief Correspondent Universal Service.
(Special Cable Dispatch.)

BERLIN, Sept. 2.—With the last scenes of his new picture, "The Dawn," which are largely laid in Germany, completed, David Wark Griffith, known as America's greatest film director, left this afternoon for London to try to have the ban lifted on his "America," the showing of which in England was stopped by the British government.

Concerning the picture, Griffith said:

I have invited the newspaper men of London to see the picture and act as a jury to decide if there is anything in it that could make for bad feeling between the two countries.

I was particularly careful to avoid even well known historical facts and incidents in America's struggle for independence that were not a credit to the Britain of that day because I did not want in any way to offend the British people or nation of today.

Naturally I could not show the British as having won our war for independence.

The famous director paid a high tribute to German hospitality, saying:

Not even Queen Alexandra of England, whom I consider one of the greatest hostesses in the world, was kinder, or more considerate or more courteous than the German people I met in my work.

Chicago (Ill.) Herald-Examiner 9/21/24

Too Much Presentation

A great many theaters throughout the country are proud—and justly so—of the elaborate prologues, stage effects, and musical programs that introduce their pictures. This is all very nice, but it can be carried too far, and it frequently is. It is bad enough for some people to have to sit through a Hawaiian medley, selections from Gilbert and Sullivan and a cornet solo in order to see an "Our Gang" comedy. There are often times when The Observer reflects that he would gladly swap all the fancy prologues in the world for a few more comedies like "Black Cyclone" of Mack Sennett's. But the climax, so far as he is concerned, came when an out-of-town theater manager sought to improve D. W. Griffith's "America" by putting in it the very things that Mr. Griffith must have labored months to eliminate. In the first place, he added hastily in thirty-six long subtitles interpolating the prologue, what Mr. Griffith had carefully expressed in four short lines. This he followed up by a massive scene representing the House of Lords. Are one to infer from an show of theatrical training houses that one of the latest ways to lure an audience's attention is to incorporate a debate of a political character in a picture? Nothing, that is what this Omaha theater manager did, and the result was that for the time the manager and the house were in the unfortunate position of being what it was all about.

Picture Play (Ny) Sep 1924

Sioux City (Iowa) Journal Sep 4 1924

Surprise for Griffith

Suggestion for Captain Hibben.

Copyright, 1924, by Star Company.

David Wark Griffith, who makes moving pictures, isn't allowed to show his picture "America" in England. It seems that Mr. Griffith emphasized the War of Independence too strongly. He says, "I could not show the British as having won our war for independence."

Some of our American statesmen, and some of our American history books, easily make it seem that the English won that war. Or, anyhow, WE didn't win it, in their opinion. They still consider us a British colony.

Captain Paxton Hibben, who holds a commisssion in the army reserve, is requested by his superiors to "talk over his beliefs." They want to find out if he is fit to remain in the army reserve, and think his "beliefs" are too radical.

It might be a good idea for Captain Hibben to talk over the Constitution of the United States with his superior officers. They ought to begin the proceedings by reading that Constitution, particularly the part that is supposed to give American citizens, including reserve officers, the right to think and say what they please.

Picture Play (Ny) Sep 1924

GRIFFITH FIGHTS BAN ON FILM IN LONDON

British Are Said to Have Misunderstood Over Picture Dealing With the War of 1776.

[illegible]

LONDON, Sept. 4.—David Wark Griffith is making a strong fight to get the ban on his film, "Love and Sacrifice," removed. It was shown privately today at the Prince's Restaurant, Piccadilly, and it is hoped that it may yet be permitted to appear at the Alhambra Theatre.

The film, which when it was put on in the United States was called "America," treats of the War of Independence, and it was felt that it involved some one in authority here that it might arouse ill feeling between the two countries, who was invited during the war to make a propaganda film for the British Government, but refused.

Mr. Griffith has always been an independent and has had much trouble in financial difficulties. If Griffith had been willing to make films that would please those thought he would be a rich man.

Mr. Griffith is the son of a Colonel who served in the Civil War, and his father was a Virginian.

Picture Play (Ny) Sep 1924

Pictures (Bc) 9/9

HOKUM OR NOT, 'AMERICA' GOOD

Griffiths' Finesse Shown in Picture Tempered to British Taste

This generation of Canadians who have not been brought up to thrill at the stirring "Ride of Paul Revere" nor to wince at the shot "that was heard around the world," may not raise as much patriotic gooseflesh over "America," shown at the Orpheum, as dyed-in-the-wool Americans, whose forebears threw off the yoke of English oppression in that stirring year of grace, 1776.

Certainly they will not get as much kick out of the present version, which obviously has been tempered to British taste with a meticulous and sometimes almost ridiculous care.

But, even robbed more or less of its essential appeal to patriotism, "America" is still good entertainment and good picture drama.

D. W. Griffith embodies in it all the standard Griffith features which, hokum or not, never fail to get under the skin.

There is the regular Griffith heroine torn between love and duty. There are the cleverly-directed mass scenes. There is the typically Griffith dash of horsemen. And there is the typically Griffith acting.

Lionel Barrymore, as the renegade Captain Butler, creates a type that will be remembered.

Romance, drama and plenty of action combine to make a film that, accompanied by first-class music, well rendered, will rank as one of the big pictures of the day.

San Francisco (Cal) Examiner 9/4/24

Milwaukee (Wis.) Sentinel Sep 1924

Contends That "America" Contains Nothing to Offend Sensibilities of England.

[illegible]

Vol. III Number 1 — Rolland Reviews — September 1, 1924

Paul Revere's Ride: "The Bombs Are Coming!"

America

A Motion Picture presented by David Wark Griffith and released by United Artists

WHEN a motion picture causes the enthusiasm aroused by "America," it must be an ordinary picture, it must be something even beyond the more or less common million dollar super-picture. "America" is.

First of all, "America" is a Griffith picture and a picture as good as, if not better than, any Griffith has ever made.

There are two stories in "America." One, of the romance and sufferings of a young Virginia belle, and the other running parallel in the text is a bit of the story of America's struggle for freedom, that will that whether to detract or add to history, which has made the reputation of David Wark Griffith what it is today, and presented to the American people "Lest we forget the price of liberty paid in blood and tears."

Take it as you will then, "America" is either the thrilling story of Nancy Montague with a picture of the American Revolution as a background, or the thrilling story of the Revolution with the story of Nancy Montague as a humanizing relief.

The stories of romances and sacrifices, even good stories, are fairly common in motion pictures, and what is more, you may ask, have the battle scenes and incidents of the Revolution for the average motion picture audience of today?

Does there anyone who has ever attended school in America who has not been gathered and thrilled with the story of Paul Revere's ride, who has not admired Longfellow's immortal poem with excited impatience?

Mr. Griffith makes this story live for you in "America."

Who has not heard of Washington's suffering at Valley Forge?

Mr. Griffith actually gives you some idea of this suffering in his screen picture.

Who has not heard of Lexington and the shot heard round the world?

Mr. Griffith shows what led up to this shot and pictures vividly the scene when the shot was fired.

Clarksburg (W Va) Exponent 9/4/1924

ONE OF FILMDOM'S FIVE BEST HERE NOW

Next Week Valentino's New Picture Will Be in Town —Some Ed Meredith Comment.

By E. E. MEREDITH

The five greatest and best photoplays of all time are not easily determined, being largely a matter of individual preference, but there are five which are so outstanding that the placing of them at the top of a list of film accomplishments to date will not give general offense to movie fans and photoplay authorities and may possibly represent the opinion of the great majority. The five:

1—"The Birth of a Nation."
2—"The Covered Wagon."
3—"Way Down East."
4—"The Miracle Man."
5—"The Four Horsemen."

This list has two pictures which are the work of David Wark Griffith, whose latest accomplishment "America," was seen here last week. It has one production of James Cruze, who has given the motion picture world several fine offerings. It has the production of Rex Ingram which brought Rudolph Valentino into an established place in picturedom and the picture which started Thomas Meighan on his remarkable career.

David Wark Griffith might have another picture in the list if six were named. That one is "Intolerance." In many ways it was one of his greatest productions, which means a notable accomplishment of all time, but it is marked up against "Intolerance" that it was not a financial success and the picture was later divided into two pictures which was a confession of lack of something on the part of the producer. "Intolerance" may have been too deep, too complicated, for the general public.

"The Birth of a Nation" portrays an important phase in the history of this government, which is proclaimed its "birth" by this title. "The Covered Wagon" marks the tinking of the east and the west and is also historical. "Way Down East" carries fans from the south or the west to New England. "The Miracle Man" represented modern thought and was highly moral. "The Four Horsemen" gave a faithful picture of the World war.

Some authorities might place "The Covered Wagon" first. But the fact that "The Birth of a Nation" was the first great picture and such an outstanding success makes it deserve that honor to a greater extent. Doubtless "The Birth of a Nation" and "The Covered Wagon" will live forever. The other three pictures selected will hardly be shown in their present form a hundred years from now. James Cruze, who made "The Covered Wagon" out of Emerson Hough's story which first ran as a serial in the Saturday Evening Post is now working on another Hough historical story, "North of 36."

Douglas Fairbanks, who has done some wonderful work in pictures, is not included in the list. Neither is Mary Pickford, favorite of fans in Northern West Virginia and the country generally. Neither is Theodore Roberts, whose cigar is a trademark of the movies. Neither is Harold Lloyd, whose forte is comedy. Neither is Jackie Coogan, who is greatest of kid stars. Neither is Norma Talmadge, nor Gloria Swanson, nor Hobart Bosworth, nor dozens of others. Rudolph Valentino is more identified with "The Four Horsemen" than Thomas Meighan with "The Miracle Man" but both got in on three Dustin Farnum, Lewis Stone, and others through their splendid work in the films named.

Rudolph Valentino, whose return to the film after two years absence is a great event to the fans, may have a place among the five pictures which have meant most to the movie world. Valentino's work in "The Four Horsemen" was what brought him into prominence, Lewis Stone and others through their splendid work in the films named.

Rudolph Valentino, whose return to the film after two years absence is a great event to the fans, may have a place among the five pictures which have meant most to the movie world. Valentino's work in "The Four Horsemen" was what brought him into prominence, Lewis Stone and others through their splendid work in the films named.

be given consideration and doubtless the list itself, or arguments in support of it, will make some interesting reading for movie fans. Address Movie Editor, The Exponent, Clarksburg.

* * *

Chicago (Ill) Post 9/5/24

Griffith's New Protege

Neil Hamilton.

"That boy should become as popular as Valentino."

When David Wark Griffith, who has made more film stars than any other man, pointed at Neil Hamilton and made that statement, the entire film world, and the mighty army of girl worshipers of handsome matinee idols, sat up and took notice.

For they knew that the man who made the Gish girls, Blanche Sweet, Mae Marsh, Robert Harron, Richard Barthelmess and scores of other favorites of film fans, could pick a star better than any living man. And those who had seen young Neil Hamilton as the sturdy, virile, handsome hero of Griffiths' picture, "America," now playing at Orchestra hall, under the direction of Lubliner & Trinz, fully agreed with him.

No one who has witnessed young Hamilton's superb performance of the character of Nathan Holden can doubt that a great future awaits ahead of this screen lover, or that he will go down in motion-picture history as the typical American hero. Here is no foreign-looking actor dependent as much upon his costume as his good looks to smite the hearts of matinee maidens; but an ideal type of young American manhood, with a real ability to act.

Probably unique in the annals of the screen world is the character of Neil Hamilton. Trained for a career as a clergyman, after studying theology for four years, he forsook this chosen path for one before the motion picture camera. His training, his outlook on life, his character, his ideals are all as different from those of the average movie actor, as his reaction to success is different from that of the typical matinee idol.

There is something of the theologian, something of the poet, a touch of the dreamer, and considerable of the idealist about Hamilton. He possesses a saving grace of humor, which should prevent disaster from turning his head.

Chicago (Ill) Tribune 9/5/24

Griffith Seeks to Remove British Ban on Movie "America"

[illegible]

Milwaukee (Wis) Leader 9/5/24

GRIFFITH SEEKS TO LIFT BRITISH BAN ON PICTURE

[illegible]

Denver (Colo) Post 9/5/24

British Ban Revolutionary Film

(By New York Times-Chicago Tribune Special Leased Wire. Copyrighted.)

LONDON, Sept. 5.—D. W. Griffith, American movie producer, who arrived in London Wednesday from France to see why his revolutionary war picture, "Love and Sacrifice," has been banned in England, attempted to prove yesterday that it is not anti-British by showing it before an audience of London newspapermen. In the United States the film was called "America."

"I see no reason why the picture should be objectionable to the British, and I consider it arbitrary that one man—T. P. O'Connor—should have the final decision," Griffith said. "In America we do not manage it that way. If the picture could receive a hearing before a jury and was then refused a license I would feel there was nothing more to be said. I have treated the Revolutionary War with impartiality."

When it was suggested that the British might consider the portraying of Indians hired by the British to fight colonists as likely to stir ill feeling between the nations, Griffith said:

"It might in America if anywhere, but why should it here?"

Florence (SC) News-Review Sep 6 1924

Vivid Story of America's Birth Thrillingly Told in Film Here

See America First! One cannot describe that greatest Griffith picture given its first screening in Florence yesterday at O'Dowds theatre. To the people of the South this picture has an especial appeal for there are few among them who cannot show a family dating back to this time.

A warning here! If you look for a weak, trashy love story don't go! It is the story of the sheer, agonizing birth of our Country. And back of one of the sweetest love stories ever filmed there lies a greater one. Griffith has rached deep into the heart of America to show the frenzy that love of country uses to make heroes of men. No man or woman can see this picture and go away not a better American.

In the story, Carol Dempster as Nancy Montague, lends to the clear-cut, cameo-like portrayal of the little Virginia aristocrat, a wistful, fragile beauty that has no equal on the screen today. Many times the sheer beauty of this child like little lady, combined with her superb portrayal of a scene, causes the spectator to have the fearful paniky feeling that he tears in his eyes are not so far away.

Neil Hamilton, as Eben Holden, lends an able support as the young rebel against the King to whom little Miss Nancy is still loyal. His god-by at her window is espiecally good.

Lionel Barrymore as the villianous Captain was TOO GOOD. I will never like Lionel Barrymore again. Anyone who can so successfully picture the hateful Captain Butler—must have a bad streak in 'im! Orville Anderson, as Justice Montague gave his role a dignity and deftness early in the picture and a tragic bit in the latter part that marks him will cast.

Charles Philip Edward Montague, his son enacted by Charles Emmett Mack, was splendidly portrayed and—especially so his death upon the field at Bnuker Hill.

The lighter vein was handled by Edward Scanlan as a servant in the house of Montague. He loved peace and quiet and sought it unceasingly But no quicker did he land somewhar than the lid blew off with a bang and noise annoyed him Numerous other roles were well taken.

History or books cannot place before you so great a portrayal of the Birth Of America as has David Wark Griffith in his picture.

Chicago (Ill) Herald & Examiner Sep 6 1924

SUGGESTING THAT YOU DON'T MISS "AMERICA"

'Tis a Goodly Romance, Polly Wood Thinks, Filled With the Things Cinematic That D. W. Griffith Always Does So Well

BY POLLY WOOD.

If you missed "America" when Mr. Griffith first revealed it at the Auditorium I would suggest that you hurney around to Orchestra Hall and look at it now. It isn't the best thing that "D. W." ever did, but it is filled with the things cinematic that he performs so well.

The sighs and glances of young love, so delicate in its shadings that it might have come out of some poet's book rather than from the showshop.

The physical thrill of Paul Revere's ride, giving satisfaction to the patriotic events that are our very own and making the famous verse of Longfellow seem full strength of it.

The tactics of men who go to war—a frail youth, bleeding and dying, who pushes a keg of powder against a battlefield that he cannot see may win their fights the battle strength between mighty eight colonial forces who tried to stop the United States from King George the Third, a refugee mother who makes flags for the living out of the clothes of the dead.

* * *

As for the critics, we have no complaint in covering the story of the Revolution in England. The last act of our history, but even now we are pressed for the backgrounds. So long back in time is "America" that all that could make girls [illegible] that we cherish today—freedom.

Perspicuously it imbues the lackadaisical spectator with the spirit of '76, that indomitable American spirit that would not be quenched by overwhelming odds when the entire world dolefully shook its head in the negative at the audacity of the American colonies defying Britain.

For nearly two hours we sat on the very edge of our seat, hardly daring to breathe lest something slip out fascinated gaze. We thrilled to each scene. When a pitifully small handful of raggedly uniformed American volunteers, armed with stubby rifles, blocked the path of 800 trained, well-fed, warmly clothed soldiers, and refused to budge, we felt like shouting.

When Tory renegades and hostile Indians massacred helpless American women and children, we felt an urge to commit violence on the persons of the marauders.

When Cornwallis surrendered at York, when Washington magnanimously refused to subject the British general to the humiliation of surrendering his sword, we were impelled to applaud vociferously.

Throughout the tremendous spectacle there is woven delicately a love story, a romance of the American revolution, that grips the very heartstrings of the spectator.

"America" is a picture that will linger indelibly in the minds of all who witness it. It is a picture that shatters all precedents in screen productions. It is a picture that every true, red-blooded American should see. It is a picture that will entrance, enthrall the spectator, take him through the darkest period of American history, sway his emotions with an imperceptible but dynamic force. It is truly the greatest masterpeco of all masterpieces Griffith has yet produced. It is a picture that every school child studying or who has studied American history should by all means see.

J. L. MEDDOFF.

Montreal Gazette 9/8/24

GRIFFITH IS FIGHTING FILM BAN

Answers British Objections to Picture "Love and Sacrifice"

[illegible]

London, September 4.—David Wark Griffith is making a strong fight to get the ban on his film, "Love and Sacrifice" removed. It was shown privately today at the Francis restaurant, Piccadilly, and it is hoped that it may yet be permitted to appear at the Alex Theatre.

[illegible]

Milwaukee (Wis) Journal 9/8/24

ENGLISH BAN ON FILM [illegible] Griffith's Pic

[illegible]

Memphis (Tenn) Commercial Appeal Sep 6 1924

GRIFFITH IN LONDON

[illegible]

Toledo (O) News-Bee Sep 6 1924

D. W. GRIFFITH has decided to visit London en route to the United States from Germany for a particularly good reason. His "America" is in London under the title "Love and Sacrifice" but has been banned by the censor.

New Orleans (La) Times-Pic Sep 7 1924

GRIFFITH OBJECTS TO BAN ON PICTURE

One-Man Censor in England Is Arbitrary, Producer Says.

BY GEORGE GODDE

[illegible]

Baltimore (Md) American 9/8/24

Cumberland (Md) News 9/9/24

"America" Has Double Appeal

By Genevieve Harris.

It is sometimes said that the reason American audiences do not show the same enthusiasm for the historical play or picture as Europeans do is that history does not color their lives so much as it does in European countries, where the events actually took place. Perhaps this is true. In that case, a picture which goes back into the history, not of some foreign country, but of our own United States, should have a double appeal to all Americans.

"America," D. W. Griffith's latest production, which is being shown for the first time at popular prices at Orchestra hall, undoubtedly owes some of its popularity to that reason. The stirring events of revolutionary times are not only dramatic and picturesque episodes in a spectacular production. They are part of our own background of history. The ride of Paul Revere, so wonderfully portrayed in the film, is part of our childhood, for what American boy or girl hasn't learned and recited that beloved poem in which Longfellow told the story?

That it should be D. W. Griffith who made this screen record of the beginning of American history is very fitting when we remember that his first great success was "The Birth of a Nation," another American theme. In the time since that first production was made, motion pictures have taken many strides forward and "America" has been produced on a scale undreamed of even ten years ago.

Because it is something more than just another historical picture, "America" was made with as much attention to accuracy as to dramatic effect. Documents and pictures and historical relics were studied for months before a single scene was taken. Every aid which government archives could give were offered to Mr. Griffith, thru the co-operation of the Daughters of the American Revolution, who had, in fact, suggested the subject to the great producer.

But "America" is not only a vivid historical document. It is a human drama as well and its love story, based on a true story of the time, is as beautiful as any invented by a fiction writer.

To interpret the roles of the young lovers Mr. Griffith chose Carol Dempster, already well known as a player in his productions, and Neil Hamilton, a handsome young actor, not so well known as yet, but destined almost certainly for a big success. The famous Lionel Barrymore plays an important role in the picture, that of the evil Capt. Butler, one of the worst characters in history.

It is not in the spirit of war enthusiasm that "America" has been made. It is not a plea for the "spread-eagle," flag-waving patriotism. It is instead a lesson in the sacrifice thru which a country was born and it shows that only thru the loyal, self-sacrificing spirit of its citizens that a country can remain great.

18 Surprise for Griffith

Suggestions for Capt. Hibben.

Copyright, 1924, by Boston American Publishing Company.

David Wark Griffith, who makes moving pictures, isn't allowed to show his picture, "America," in England. It seems that Mr. Griffith emphasized the War of Independence too strongly. He says, "I could not show the British as having won our war for independence."

Some of our American statesmen, and some of our American history books, easily make it seem that the English won the war. Or, anyhow, WE didn't win it, in their opinion. They still consider us a British colony.

Capt. Paxton Hibben, who holds a commission in the army reserve, is requested by his supporters to "talk over his beliefs." They want to find out if he is fit to remain in the army reserve, and think his "beliefs" are too radical.

It might be a good idea for Capt. Hibben to talk over the Constitution of the United States with his superior officers. They ought to begin the proceedings by reading that Constitution, particularly the part that is supposed to give American citizens, including reserve officers, the right to think and say what they please.

Huntington (W Va) Herald Sep 10 1924

"AMERICA" THRILLS AT SPECIAL PRODUCTION AT STRAND YESTERDAY

Latest and Most Stupendous of Griffith Productions, Soon To Be Offered At New Fourth Avenue House; Privately Presented Yesterday.

To calculate New York critics by terming "America," the latest screen masterpiece of David Wark Griffith, the "greatest picture of all time," would be platitudinous.

But to state that we do not concur wholeheartedly with the New York critics would be an utter falsehood.

Yesterday, through the courtesy of the Strand theater management, we witnessed a special showig of Griffith's newest titanic production, which will enthrall Huntingtonians at the Strand ten days hence.

It is stupendous. It is magnificent. It is captivating. It is fascinating. Adjectives to describe its appeal, its entrancing qualities are futile. Better to simply state that it is a Griffith production, conceived and staged by the artist of filmdom who every now and then revolutionizes the screen industry.

"America" deals with the American revolution, depicting vividly the terrible hardships endured by the American colonies to gain their freedom from a tyran nation. Graphically it leads the spectator through the almost unbearable tortures suffered by the American colonies that they might have what we cherish today—freedom.

Perspicuously it imbues the lackadaisical spectator with the spirit of '76, that indomitable American spirit that would not be quenched by overwhelming odds when the entire world dolefully shook its head in the negative at the audacity of the American colonies defying Britain.

For nearly two hours we sat on the very edge of our seat, hardly daring to breathe lest something slip out fascinated gaze. We thrilled to each scene. When a pitifully small handful of raggedly uniformed American volunteers, armed with stubby rifles, blocked the path of 800 trained, well-fed, warmly clothed soldiers, and refused to budge, we felt like shouting.

When Tory renegades and hostile Indians massacred helpless American women and children, we felt an urge to commit violence on the persons of the marauders.

When Cornwallis surrendered at York, when Washington magnanimously refused to subject the British general to the humiliation of surrendering his sword, we were impelled to applaud vociferously.

Throughout the tremendous spectacle there is woven delicately a love story, a romance of the American revolution, that grips the very heartstrings of the spectator.

"America" is a picture that will linger indelibly in the minds of all who witness it. It is a picture that shatters all precedents n screen productions. It is a picture that every true, red-blooded American should see. It is a picture that will entrance, enthrall the spectator, take him through the darkest period of American history, sway his emotions with an imperceptible but dynamic force. It is truly the greatest masterpece of all masterpieces Griffith has yet produced. It is a pieture that every school child studying or who has studied American history should by all means see.

J. L. MEDDOFF.

Albany (N Y) News 9/8/24

A Virginia Aristocrat Stopping in Albany

CAROL DEMPSTER.

Here is the aristocratic Nancy Montague, Virginia belle of Colonial days, who loved the plain farmer-patriot, Nathan, even though he was a rebel against King George and she a loyal Virginian. Nancy Carol Dempster in D. W. Griffith's "America" which stays on at the Lelanding this week. She is a great favorite with film standby, having appeared in "The White Rose" and "One Exciting Night." But her best role so far is here and she makes a charming picture of quality in the Griffith picture.

My Film Daily Sep 14 1924

Ban May Remain

British Censors Not Expected to Pass "America"—Picture Deemed Unsuitable for England

[illegible]

FREEMAN

[illegible]

Milwaukee (Wis) News Sep 10 1924

Surprise For Griffith

Suggestion for Captain Hibben.

David Wark Griffith, who makes moving pictures, isn't allowed to show his picture "America" in England. It seems that Mr. Griffith emphasized the War of Independence too strongly. He says, "I could not show the British as having won our war for independence."

Some of our American statesmen, and some of our American history books, easily make it seem that the English won the war. Or, anyhow, WE didn't win it, in their opinion. They still consider us a British colony.

Washington (D C) Times 9/10/24

THE GATE-POST

By Harold Phillips

[illegible]

My Copy American Sep 14 1924

Baltimore American 9/8/24

Surprise for Griffith

Suggestion for Captain Hibben

[illegible]

Philadelphia Ledger 9/10/24

D.W. Griffith Makes "America" for D.A.R.

Patriotic Societies, Historical Experts and the U. S. Army Aid In Making An Unusual Picture.

Walter Butler (Lionel Barrymore) and Nancy Montague (Carol Dempster)

The Minutemen Prepare To Protect Historic Buckman Tavern

Samuel Adams Greets a Visitor to the Hancock-Clarke House, Lexington, Mass.

Miss Irma Harrison with the Drum Actually Used at the Battle of Lexington

Carol Dempster and Neil Hamilton In a Love Scene

(Center) United States Regulars in Homespun, Refight The Battle of Bunker Hill

WHEN the Daughters of the American Revolution suggested to David Wark Griffith that he make a photoplay based on the American Revolution, they started something.

As a result of this suggestion Griffith is not only making the desired film, but leading historians, patriotic societies, society women, descendants of Revolutionary heroes, and the United States Army itself is helping him, and if everything goes according to schedule "America," as the new film has been named, should surpass even the "Birth Of A Nation."

Probably no other film during its making ever created such widespread interest as that upon which Griffith is now working. This is due in part to its patriotic nature, which has already caused a revival of interest in Revolutionary times in the regions where the great conflicts of our first war were fought; and in part to the unusual way in which Griffith is making the picture.

Instead of building replicas of the historic buildings which must figure in any drama written about the Revolution, Griffith and his entire company of players, technicians and advisers, are traveling from place to place in special trains, and taking their scenes on the actual sites, with thousands of the general public as spectators, and society belles, Revolutionary descendants, and the enlisted men of the United States Army as "supers."

So far this experiment of "letting the public in" to view the actual filming of a motion picture is working out admirably, even though in several cases—notably in reproduction of big battle scenes—pirate movie camera men attempted to take "shots" of the scenes which Griffith staged at great expense, in order to sell them to small companies, for use in mediocre pictures. A number of such attempts were stopped by State troopers in New York, and the pirates' cameras and films confiscated until the new Griffith picture has been released.

The magnitude of Griffith's undertaking in "America" can, perhaps, best be understood by the fact that he aims to reproduce the major battles of the War of Independence with actual fidelity to historical accuracy; that 25,000 feet of film has been used already, and more than 25,000 persons have appeared in the scenes; that thousands of regular army soldiers drafted for the purpose through the courtesy of Secretary of War Weeks, present more than a fortnight in Putnam County to appear in a few minutes, and that when completed the picture will actually have cost more than a million dollars.

Although he had long contemplated the dramatic possibilities of the American Revolution as the basis for a photoplay, Griffith has been engaged for more than a year in laying the foundation for the work. The work has taken him all over the country, and he spent many months in Washington, where he was in close touch with the Daughters of the American Revolution, and with the Society of Colonial Dames, and other patriotic societies, which gave him every assistance in the work.

Perhaps the most important of these societies, which gave Griffith an opportunity to see a dozen cameras in action, and to learn through watching a faithful reproduction of scenes in the struggle for liberty something of the stuff of which the Minutemen were made.

Some idea of the interest with which the filming of "America" is being followed may be gained from the fact that historical societies and descendants of Revolutionary heroes in sections where scenes were being taken, brought forth the one from the cases and treasure chests of their museums, the other from family vaults, invaluable relics of the Revolution, ranging from pistols, spurs, and drums, to garments and costumes crumbling with age, and offered them to Griffith for use in his picture. Because of this enthusiasm it has been possible to use as "props," in "America," historical relics never before photographed, instead of present day replicas.

Griffith's aim in preserving historical accuracy has been achieved largely through the establishment of a special bureau of research. This innovation, which has proven so successful, that the motion picture industry is contemplating establishing a similar institution under the directorship of Will H. Hays, consists of historians and scholars who were busy for months before the filming began, delving through the principal public and private collections of books, documents and prints for minute information.

Although it would seem that every detail regarding such a well known incident as Paul Revere's ride through Middlesex to warn the Minutemen of the coming of the British forces in command of Major Pitcairn, would be authenticated and the knowledge of every school child, the research workers found that such was not the case. Despite the fact that Revere's ride has been sung and in prose and verse, even schoolboys and historians had authority to question what is thought was a very important historical event. Perhaps it was because of Revere's modesty about the work he did, which, while of nothing through authorship, is worth much to the country. Perhaps it was because the Revere family lost its papers in the burning of Revere's home in Boston, or perhaps it was because of the fact that Revere himself was a very modest man.

During the filming of the battle scenes, Griffith had gathered about him a group of men who are to be found in the library of almost every home in America, the descendants of Revolutionary heroes, who were present at the battles of Lexington and Concord, Bunker Hill, Saratoga, Yorktown, Valley Forge, Monmouth, Stony Point, Paoli, Brandywine, Germantown, Princeton, Trenton, Cowpens, King's Mountain, Guilford Court House, Eutaw Springs, Camden, Fort Moultrie, Fort Ticonderoga, Fort Mifflin, Fort Mercer, Fort Clinton, Fort Montgomery, Fort Lee, Fort Washington, Fort Schuyler, Fort Stanwix, Fort Ticonderoga, Fort Lafayette, Fort Hamilton, Fort Schuyler, Fort Hancock, Fort Wadsworth, Fort Tompkins, Fort Greene

Evening Star 9/12/24

GRIFFITH SEEKS TO AVERT FILM WAR OVER LONDON SHOWING OF "AMERICA"

Many Objections Voiced After Private Showing of Film—British Patriots May Seek to Delete "Taxation-Without-Representation" Clause—Griffith to Stand Firm on That Point.

London, Sept. 4—Motion picture circles in America are anxiously awaiting the decision of the British exhibitors in the matter of showing the Griffith feature, "America."

Whether or not this film will be readily acceptible for showing to English audiences without any ill feeling arising is still in doubt, although David Wark Griffith, the producer, who is here now, declares that the film is of such a nature that it can give no offense to even the most patriotic Englishmen.

"America" was first booked for the Scala, one of the principal London cinema houses. But before the film was shown on the screen at this theatre, there was a private showing of it at Prince's Restaurant here. It was viewed by many prominent civic officials.

There was, even after this showing, a difference of opinion whether or not it would offend English film-goers. In answer to that, Griffith stated: "Nobody who has any brains can be anti-British, and surely I am not anti-British merely because in this film I have attempted to show the folly and asininity of all war.

"I understand that one of the objections taken to the picture is that it shows the employment of Indians under the British flag, by the villain, Captain Butler. He is represented as an American renegade who attaches himself to the British forces, and for his own purposes, plots against them."

Besides this point of the film, there are numerous other details of the story to which it is expected there will be objection by the English. Another criticism is founded on the use of the word "Tory." That of course was used during the Revolution as a term for loyalists to the British cause, but it is still employed in British politics to designate one of the prevailing parties. It is feared that there will be a misunderstanding, and that offense may be caused by the use of "Tory" in the historical American sense.

There is one point of objection, however, that appears to be the bone of contention between those for the film and those against it; that is, the statement in the film that the War of Independence was one fought against the then existing "taxation without representation." It is expected that Griffith will stand firm, and any request to have that delated from the film will meet with absolute refusal by the producer.

G. V. FOLLIES FACTS

Chicago (Ill) Tribune 9/14/24

Voice of the Movie Fan

By Way of Approval.

Dear Mr. Tinee: My family and I saw D. W. Griffith's "America" and enjoyed it immensely. I would recommend that everybody see it, because it shows exactly how our forefathers had to struggle in order to gain independence for this country. Every crook and murderer ought to see "America" too, as they ought to be ashamed to disgrace this cuntry for which so many lives were given and so much blood was shed.

I am not an American myself, but still I honor this country and try to obey the laws of the United States. I think that no good word in the English language is good enough to describe D. W. Griffith's "America."

Three cheers for America.

Shame to its law breakers.

MARGUT.

Stratford (Ont) Beacon-Herald Sep 16 1924

David Wark Griffith is making a strong effort to get the British ban on his film, "Love and Sacrifice," removed. It was shown privately at the Prince's Restaurant, Piccadilly, and it is hoped that it may yet be permitted to appear. The film, which when it was put on in the United States was called "America," treats of the War of Independence.

Michigan City (Ind) Dispatch 9/10/24

Difficulties In Making Battle Scenes.

It is one thing to take a battle scene for a motion picture. And it is quite another thing to take a scene of the battles of Lexington, Concord, and Bunker Hill and make those scenes absolutely correct to the smallest detail. But that, according to Edwin B. Worthen, president of the Lexington Historical Society, is what D. W. Griffith has done in "America" at the Tivoli theatre.

Mr. Worthen, who is a banker in Lexington, aided Mr. Griffith through the loan of necessary data, and of invaluable Revolutionary relics, including the rifles, flintlocks, powder horns and other implements actually used in the battle of Lexington, in making "America."

"Scenes taken on the spot where Hancock and Adams sought the hospitality of Parson Clarke—the Hancock-Clarke House where the two men were strengthened in their immortal task by the sound counsel of the Parson, and from which that patriot witnessed the massacre on Lexington Common—the same drum that summoned those humble farmers to immortality—the gun, the powder horns they wore, stored relics kept for all time as an inspiration to future Americans—here was real drama in thrill me.

"The here portrayed Brave James Parker as he was—the man who for the cause he could serve did from a British jail cell—wounded, trying to goad his captors into a shot that would terminate in the King's courts. You have made this cause live. Parker, the idol of his little band, the man who said 'If this cause cost me it begin here.'

"My friends, Lexington salutes you and to your handiwork, 'America,' I say, that upon you in your glorious work of telling the story of the heart of our forefathers and in your mission of teaching a higher and a [illegible]

San Francisco (Cal) Call Post 9/18/24

Vivid Story of America's Birth Thrillingly Told in Film Here

[illegible]

GRIFFITH IS PLEASED WITH HIS SPECTACLE

Changes Made Since Premiere Now Satisfy Director That 'America' Is Complete Production — 'Babbitt,' George Arlis And Wray Picture Of Tropics Included In Picture Bill.

By DENNIS R. SMITH

When New York saw its premiere of "America" it witnessed a production with which David Mark Griffith was dissatisfied but the spectacle at it comes to the Grand today for a four day run has the complete approval of its maker.

As originally shown, the closing scenes of the picture were rushed through with such speed that the last reels showed defects caused by the undue haste. It is a matter of film history that the haste at the finish was so great that when the first reel was being projected before a selected audience, the last reel was being edited in the cutting room and sections were being rushed to the theater as they were completed.

After the first showing, however, Griffith completely reedited the latter part of the picture, retaking several scenes and adding some new material until the closing reel now contains some of the most stirring action in the whole spectacle.

It is a picture with which Griffith is now completely satisfied, which means that the master maker of films considers it a perfect production.

Griffith's mastery of emotion and of stirring action is well known. In addition "America" bears the stamp of complete authenticity for the story was written by Robert Chambers who is better informed on early American history than any other fictionist and it was made with the active cooperation and supervision of the Daughters of the American Revolution and their historical authorities.

For the most part the scenes were filmed in the approximate locations made famous in early American history.

No pictures have approached the productions of Griffith for long runs. His "Birth of a Nation" is still being shown in many sections and his "Intolerance," after it was divided into three district pictures, had a run of several years. Some of his smaller productions are still being shown after a number of years and practically everything he had made has had lasting qualities.

"America" has characteristics which would seem to make it an enduring epic.

Lincoln (Nebr) Journal 9/18/24

Tickets for "America" On Sale Today at the Orpheum.

Mr. Rupert Hughes, the great novelist, says: "America" has shaken me—overwhelmed me as one of the greatest achievements by any of the arts from the Greek tragedy on. D. W. Griffith's latest production, "America," will appear at the Orpheum all next week.

Great Sale for "America."

The Heilig announces the advance reserved seat sale for D. W. Griffith's "America." Seats are now available at Sherman Clay Company, Weisfield and Goldberg's and at the theatre.

The Northwest premiere of the great play will be held Friday night of this week.

Jimmonville (Sask) Enterprise 9/11/24

Surprise for Griffith

Suggestion for Captain Hibben.

David Wark Griffith, who makes moving pictures, isn't allowed to show his picture "America" in England. It seems that Mr. Griffith emphasized the War of Independence too strongly. He says, "I could not show the British as having won our war for independence."

Some of our American statesmen, and some of our American history books, easily make it seem that the English won the war. Or, anyhow, WE didn't win it, in their opinion. They still consider us a British colony.

Captain Paxton Hibben, who holds a commission in the army reserve, is requested by his supporters to "talk over his beliefs." They want to find out if he is fit to remain in the army reserve, and think his "beliefs" are too radical.

It might be a good idea for Captain Hibben to talk over the Constitution of the United States with his superior officers. They ought to begin the proceedings by reading that Constitution, particularly the part that is supposed to give American citizens, including reserve officers, the right to think and say what they please.

Rochester (N Y) Journal Sep 16 1924

Surprise for Griffith

Suggestion for Captain Hibben

[illegible]

Sioux City (Ia) Journal 9/14/24

Milwaukee (Wis) Telegram 9/14/24

Barring the Spirit of '76

David W. Griffith, the American motion picture producer, is learning to his cost that there are some Britons of tenacious memory who are disposed to fight the American revolutionary war over again.

Mr. Griffith's film, "America," was to be produced in England under the title of "Love and Sacrifice," but it was vetoed by the British censor. The spirit of 1776 got on the nerves of this official. All efforts to persuade him to remove the ban have been unsuccesful so far.

The film, it is objected, might cause a "misunderstanding." It is hard to see how any misunderstanding is possible over the historical fact that Great Britain lost her American colonies 150 years ago. The fact is generally and perfectly understood in England, and it seems to be too late now for any censor to try to keep it secret.

Something might be said in excuse of a protest against certain scenes in which the British appear not exactly as heroes. But Mr. Griffith was amused by the request to eliminate even the historical slogan: "No taxation without representation." If the censor is opposed to this sentiment, he had better suppress the speeches and writings of Edmund Burke and other eminent British statesmen who openly sided with the Americans on this issue.

The incident is interesting as an example of the mysterious working of the film censor's mind. This gentleman, apparently, is in a minority of one with regard to the American picture. If his views were generally shared by the people of England, of course there would be no market for the film, and Mr. Griffith would not be wasting his time trying to force it on a hostile public. But the producer expects to make money, seeing that the public is receptive and has no fear of "misunderstandings." The censor, however, undertakes to do the thinking for the British public.

The stupidity of the British wartime censor who went so far as to garble Kipling's poetry is closely rivaled by this specimen of motion picture censorship.

Sep 13 1924 Washington (DC) Times

Surprise for Griffith

Suggestion for Captain Hibben.

David Wark Griffith, who makes moving pictures, isn't allowed to show his picture "America" in England. It seems that Mr. Griffith emphasized the War of Independence too strongly. He says, "I could not show the British as having won our war for independence."

Some of our American statesmen, and some of our American history books, easily make it seem that the English won the war. Or, anyhow, WE didn't win it, in their opinion. They still consider us a British colony.

Captain Paxton Hibben, who holds a commission in the army reserve, is requested by his supporters to "talk over his beliefs." They want to find out if he is fit to remain in the army reserve, and think his "beliefs" are too radical.

It might be a good idea for Captain Hibben to talk over the Constitution of the United States with his superior officers. They ought to begin the proceedings by reading that Constitution, particularly the part that is supposed to give American citizens, including reserve officers, the right to think and say what they please.

Boston Mass American Sep 16 1924

Surprise for Griffith

Suggestion for Captain Hibben

[illegible]

Huntington (W Va) Advertiser Sep 1924

Seat Sale For Great "America" Begins At The Strand Monday; Famous Author Praises Picture

Robert W. Chambers Says the Early Struggles in This Country Have Never Been Revealed Before—Wonder Film Here Week of September 22

In the making of any work of art one faces it squarely and tries to avoid squinting at it from eccentric angles or peeping furtively at it upside down.

To take America as a subject and do anything with it in fourteen reels or in fourteen hundred reels, is impossible, because the pre-historic and historic eras stretch across too many aeons.

Nor is it possible to say very much about a single phase of our history in the space of time allotted for an evening's entertainment.

Our picture is not a history of the English occupation of America, not even a narrative of the Revolutionary struggle for liberty.

What Mr. Griffith and I have attempted to do is to show something of the devotion and self-sacrifice of those who established our Republic.

We believe that in the present era of unrest we Americans ought to remember what it cost to win our freedom and establish this government.

We believe that our liberty, won through years of untold suffering and self-sacrifice is worth preserving; worth guarding from secret and insidious attacks at home, worth defending against treachery and overt aggregation from without our gates.

"Lest we forget," is the keynote of our picture. "Be it remembered," its summing up.

From the very beginning it was plain to Mr. Griffith that no one picture could begin to cover the story of the eight years' war known as the American Revolution.

It takes sheer genius to look over so vast a mass of material and select essentials which must be framed by the limits of an evening's entertainment. Mr. Griffith made his selections, and within that frame was begun the picture of the sacrifice offered by our forefathers upon the bloody tar of liberty.

Because some among us, and within the borders of the Republic as well as outside, had drifted away from belief in and devotion to those simple early principles upon which our government was formed, our picture was contrived and designed to reawaken dormant patriotism by visible reminder of what it cost to make us the free people that we are today.

Now, when it became known what were our purposes in making this picture we began to receive cordial encouragement from Federal and State authorities and from patriotic societies everywhere throughout the nation.

The United States Army authorities generously offered us a regular regiment—a superb one—to aid us. This splendid regiment arrived in Westchester where we were on location, and with their disciplined ranks and under their own live officers we staged and fought the battles of Bunker Hill and Johnston Hall.

They looked superb in their British and Continental uniforms and after a few rehearsals became so thoroughly imbued with the spirit of the scene that they seemed no longer modern regulars acting parts in a play but the men of the Revolution themselves.

It was a thrilling sight to see those long lines of scarlet marching doggedly up Bunker Hill, halting now and then to deliver a volley—out of real flintlocks—then, drums beating, plod on upward toward that silent, sinister redoubt of raw earth above, only to reel down hill again enveloped in the flame and smoke of the devastating American musketry.

All this in brightest sunshine—just as it had been that terrible day a hundred and fifty odd years ago—and in the same formation, same uniforms and marching over the same sort of ground toward exact replicas of trenches and redoubts behind which our ancestors waited and held their fire until they could see "the whites of their eyes."

And at the Battle of Johnston Hall in Northern New York there was the famous hedge fence held by Butler's Rangers, Sir John's Greens, McDonald's kilted Highlanders, and the naked, painted Indians of the great Iroquois Confederacy. And there, as on that fateful day so long ago, Col. Willett led his militia, riflemen, regulars, lorries, and rangers against these American Tory partisans of England. There was one single field piece; then came our men up the hill from Johnston, sweeping all before them; then ensued the hand-to-hand combat at the hedge fence.

There, as happened so long ago, a sudden panic seized the Americans and they ran from a victory already gained—ran, despite the curses and entreaties of their galloping officers—ran all the way to Johnston village a mile away.

And again, as it once happened, Willett and his officers halted them, argued pleaded, ridiculed, shamed them until, drums beating, back they marched, broke into a yelling charge, drove the enemy, hurled them back into the wilderness, and broke their power forever.

Here the scourage of the North Walter Butler, died as he had died beside that little spring of water on the banks of the stream—which still crossed.

Well, only such a genius and master of his profession as Mr. Grifith ever could have designed and executed so perfectly this vast picture of the past.

Grifith is the head, brains, inception, executive of everything. Without this really great artist there would have been only a caricature, not an authentic and magnificently dramatic picture representing the sacrifice of our ancestors offered as the price of liberty of mind and body.

It is because he is every inch an artist, a born leader, and every inch a man, that Griffith accomplishes what he does and stands alone at the very peak of pictorial achievement.

In pictures the staff and company are what the director is. Respect, confidence, belief in him, make them efficient. I have never heard Mr. Griffith's voice raised in anger or reproach. I never heard him blame anybody except himself for any mishap or accident. He shoulders everything with a boyish laugh, or gay and humorous comment. He is the effortless courage, generosity and smiling equanimity that inspires—that gets good work out of mediocrity, that heartens and encourages self distrust, that never asks of anybody anything which he is not ready to do himself. This man has no vanity; his modesty is real; he is the hardest worker I have ever known; he is both kind and exactly just; and though always he spares others he never spares himself.

Where, in this picture, he and I have not agreed, usually I find that he is right. Often he generously yields his judgment to mine—which never, however, convinces me that I am entirely right.

Canton (O) News 9/8/24

FOOTLIGHT AND FILM

"AMERICA" IS TRIBUTE TO GRIFFITH'S SKILL

History, Accurately Portrayed, Becomes Background For Beautiful Love Story In Picture Of Nation's Struggle For Freedom — Stirring Action Is Equalled By Appeal Of Intimate Scenes.

By DENNIS R. SMITH

Against a background of the revolutionary war, David Wark Griffith has filmed a beautiful love story with his characteristic skill in "America" which opened a four day engagement in the Grand Sunday.

He probably has never made a picture which provided such a wide range for his diverse talents. It has sweeping spectacle, stirring action and intimate scenes of dramatic tensity, all handled with the skill of which Griffith is master and each serving to emphasize the other.

It is not a history of a revolution. Certain incidents connected with the birth of the American nation have been used and in all such instances historical accuracy has been jealously observed but there is no attempt to show the struggle of the colonies in its entirety. The battle of Lexington and Concord are pictured and there are glimpses of Valley Forge and a few intervening incidents but the story passes over with more shadows the period intervening between the signing of the Declaration of Independence and incidents immediately connected with the surrender of Cornwallis.

The entire picture seems to have been made with commendable elegancy. The private backgrounds are convincing, actual settings of historic interest having been used in many instances. As to numbers of men engaged and many other incidents the picture is contrary to accurate history.

Through the somewhat intricate plot the picture never loses sight of the romantic story which provides most of its appeal. It is the story of the love of a young farmer, one of Washington's patriots, for an orphaned girl the ward of the Tory, the character of a Tory and the home of the staple [illegible]

This young American, Parker, [illegible] and appears in numerous [illegible] in the battle scenes to place a heroic part and deeper tragedy in the story [illegible] which the picture finds.

The film is divided into the [illegible] and the Tory part, which [illegible] the romantic story is [illegible] The opening of the picture [illegible] the defeat of the Indians in the French and Indian wars and their [illegible] the battle of Bunker Hill and the battle of Lexington and Concord. The story of the Tory family and their [illegible] the defeat of the colonists is [illegible] Lexington, Valley Forge and Yorktown [illegible] the surrender of Cornwallis. The story of the Tory family is [illegible] the story of the young American [illegible] the story of the Tory family [illegible] the story of the young American [illegible] the story of the Tory family [illegible] the story of the young American [illegible] the story of the Tory family

Wash Times Sep 14 1924

STAR RISES TOWARD OPERATIC STAGE

Miss Carol Dempster.

MISS CAROL DEMPSTER, the "Nancy Montague" of David Wark Griffith's stirring epic of Revolutionary days, is a daughter of California. Studying dancing at the Dunsmuir school, she had [illegible] herself a career as a classical terpsichorean and went into motion pictures through chance. [illegible] of a number of young dancers sent to [illegible] studios in California by the Dunsmuir school. In "Intolerance," Mr. Griffith was deeply impressed by her delicate beauty, and at his suggestion she gave up her dancing career for one in the screen world. Under his tutelage she developed until in "One Exciting Night," and "The White Rose," she achieved signal successes. While mastering the art of acting for the silent drama, Miss Dempster has continued her vocal studies, and may at a not far distant date appear on the operatic stage her triumph in "America."

Wash Times Sep 14 1924

NEW YORK HORSE USED BY REVERE

[illegible]

TYATT IS CYCLONIC

[illegible]

of black eyes. And in working up a dramatic conflict naturally an author looks for melodramatic contrasts. That is why Robert W. Chambers, who wrote the story, selected Walter Butler to symbolize leader in the battle of autocracy against freedom. According to Fiske, the historian, Butler was the only character in all history in whom he could find no single redeeming trait.

And since Mr. Chambers claims his incidents are historically correct, there is nothing to do but to regard the Captain Walter Butler character as a regrettable phase of American and world history that he did not create the idea of the Revolution.

[illegible]

Mr. Manager

"America" First!

Wash Herald 9/18/24

Mr. American 9/17/24

England's Refusal to Show His 'America' Checks D. W. Griffith in Making Historical Film Plays

By LOUELLA O. PARSONS.

DAVID WARK GRIFFITH gave as his opinion yesterday that England's refusal to permit "America" to be shown in London will act as a check on producers making historical plays. I went to call on him shortly after he landed in New York and he said that from the report he received from his London agents he had reason to believe there was something more back of England's attitude toward "America" than a censor board. Mr. Griffith said:

LOUELLA O. PARSONS

"There is certainly nothing immoral in 'America.' The censors gave as their reason for rejecting the picture that it might cause bad feelings between England and America. Those to whom I talked said the decision to bar my picture came from a political power higher up. I thought it might mean the Foreign Office. I personally will hesitate a long time before I attempt to make another historical picture. France did not want to show 'Orphans of the Storm' and now England's action makes the financial risk too great."

"Dawn," the picture which took Mr. Griffith and a company of seventeen to Germany, where the interiors were made, will be finished at Mamaroneck. Carol Dempster and Neil Hamilton have the leading roles. Contrary to reports, no scenes were filmed in England.

In answer to my question, Mr. Griffith, who, by the way, looked tanned and extremely well, said he expected to make two pictures for Paramount. He said he had no idea of any trouble with United Artists until he received a cable.

Mr. Griffith said he had then signed an agreement to make pictures for a period of three years for United Artists; this included "America" and "Dawn." He said it was merely a letter signed at the request of Douglas Fairbanks to assure exhibitors that United Artists was not going to pieces. He continued:

"I could not sign a contract alone. It would be necessary for the D. W. Griffith Company to sign any real contract."

Although Mr. Griffith was firm in his hope that his next picture following "Dawn" would be made under auspices of Famous Players-Lasky, he said he was sure it would not be Marie Corelli's "Sorrows of Satan."

Mr. Graphic 9/20/24

Miss Dempster in "America" at the Rialto

Sep 20 1924

BRITISH FOR AMERICA TALK

Sep 21 1924

Sacramento

Sep 21 1924

Filmograph Los Angeles (Cal) Sep 13 1924

THE MASTER

DAVID WARK GRIFFITH.

Kansas City (Mo). Star. Sep. 16 1924

18

NY Times Sep 21 1924

ART IN MAKING FILM "AMERICA" CREATED SPIRIT OF REVOLUTION

Regiment of Regulars as Redcoats and Continentals in Historic Setting Gave Vivid Picture of '76.

By ROBERT W. CHAMBERS.

IN the making of any work of art one faces it squarely and tries to avoid squinting at it from eccentric angles or peeping furtively at it upside down.

To take America as a subject and do anything with it in fourteen reels or in fourteen hundred reels is impossible, because the prehistoric and historic eras stretch across too many aeons. Nor is it possible to say very much about a single phase of our history in the space of time allotted for an evening's entertainment.

Our picture is not a history of the English occupation of America, not even a narrative of the Revolutionary struggle for liberty.

What Mr. Griffith and I have attempted to do is to show something of the devotion and self-sacrifice of those who established our Republic.

From the very beginning it was plain to Mr. Griffith that no one picture could begin to cover the story of the eight years' war known as the American Revolution.

Now, when it became known what were our purposes in making this picture, we began to receive cordial encouragement from Federal and State authorities and from patriotic societies everywhere throughout the nation.

A Regiment Offered.

The United States Army authorities generously offered us a regular regiment—a superb one—to aid us. This splendid regiment arrived in Westchester, where we were on location, and with their disciplined ranks and under their own live officers, we staged and fought the battles of Bunker Hill and Johnston Hall.

They looked superb in their British and Continental uniforms and after a few rehearsals became so thoroughly imbued with the spirit of the scene that they seemed no longer modern regulars acting parts in a play but the men of the Revolution themselves.

It was a thrilling sight to see those long lines of scarlet marching doggedly up Bunker Hill, halting now and then to deliver a volley—out of real flintlocks—then, drums beating, plod on upward toward that silent sinister redoubt of raw earth above, only to reel down hill again enveloped in the flame and smoke of the devastating American musketry.

All this is in the brightest sunshine—just as it had been that terrible day a hundred and fifty-odd years ago—and in the same formation, same uniforms and marching over the same sort of ground toward exact replicas of trenches and redoubts behind which our ancestors waited and held their fire until they could see the "whites of their eyes."

The Hedge Fence.

And at the Battle of Johnston Hall in Northern New York there was the famous hedge fence held by Butler's Rangers, Sir John's Greens, McDonald's kilted Highlanders and the naked, painted Indians of the great Iroquois Confederacy. And there, as on that fateful day so long ago, Colonel Willett led his militia, riflemen, regulars, lorries and rangers against these American Tory partisans of England. There was one single field piece; then came our men up the hill from Johnston, sweeping all before them; then ensued the hand-to-hand combat at the hedge fence.

Then, as it happened, so long ago, a groundless panic seized the Americans and they ran from a victory already gained—ran, despite the curses and entreaties of their galloping officers—ran all the way to Johnstown village a mile away.

And again, as it once happened, Willett and his officers halted them, argued, pleaded, ridiculed, shamed them until, drums beating, back they marched, broke into a yelling charge, drove the enemy, hurled them back into the wilderness and broke their power forever.

Here the scourge of the North, Walter Butler, died as he had died beside that little spring of water on the banks of the stream.

Griffith is the head, brains, inceptive, executive of everything. Without this really great artist there would have been only a caricature, not an authentic and magnificently dramatic picture representing the sacrifice of our ancestors offered up on the altar of liberty of mind and body.

It is because he is every inch a leader, an artist and every inch a man that Griffith accomplished what he does and leaving aside all the very good of particular endeavorers.

I believe the staff and company are with the director in Hollywood, Calif., have never heard Mr. Griffith raise his voice in anger or reproach. I have never heard him utter a word of complaint for any reason or profane. He practically performing with a horse team, or day and hammering Hammer, he is the director, manager, scenarist and cutter-editor, the man who gives gold, sight and substance to the visions of others, who takes their crude ideas and fashions them into a perfect whole, who takes a piece of pasteboard and makes it a castle, who takes a piece of canvas and makes it a mountain, who takes a piece of glass and makes it a river, who takes a piece of ground and makes it a battlefield, who takes a few hundred people and makes them a nation, who takes a few years and makes them a history.

Mr. Griffith says:

Now, in this country, as well as in Europe, there is a great deal of talk about "propaganda." Well, I have made a picture which I believe is the most patriotic picture ever made in this country. I have made it because I believe it is my duty to do so, and because I believe it will do good. I have made it because I believe it will be a good thing for the people of this country to see what their ancestors did for them, what they suffered, what they endured, what they gave up that they might have a country and that we might be free.

OPERA HOUSE ENTIRE WEEK OF SEPT. 22nd

5—SUPERFINE ACTS—5
MATINEE—News 2:15; Vaudeville 2:30; Picture 3:40—Prices 20c, 30c and 50c
EVENING—Vaudeville 8:15; Picture 9:15
Prices 30c, 50c and 83c
REDUCED RATES TO SCHOOL STUDENTS

NOTICE All Public School Students possessing red cards can obtain admission by the presentation of this card and the payment of 30c for the best seats at any matinee except Saturday. The picture will not begin until 3:40 for the purpose of permitting all students of all schools to arrive in due time for the picture. Students will be admitted, however, as early as 3:15.

D.W. Griffith Makes "America" for D.A.R.

Patriotic Societies, Historical Experts and the U. S. Army Aid In Making An Unusual Picture.

Walter Butler (Lionel Barrymore) and Nancy Montague (Carol Dempster)

Carol Dempster and Neil Hamilton In a Love Scene

The Minutemen Prepare To Protect Historic Buckman Tavern

Samuel Adams Greets a Visitor to the Hancock-Clarke House, Lexington, Mass.

Miss Irma Harrison with the Drum Actually Used at the Battle of Lexington

(Center) United States Regulars in Homespun, Refight The Battle of Bunker Hill

WHEN the Daughters of the American Revolution suggested to David Wark Griffith that he make a photoplay based on the American Revolution, they started something.

As a result of this suggestion Griffith is not only making the desired film, but leading historians, patriotic societies, society women, descendants of Revolutionary heroes, and the United States Army itself is helping him, and if everything goes according to schedule "America" as the new film has been named, should surpass even the "Birth Of A Nation."

Probably no other film during its making ever created such widespread interest as that upon which Griffith is now working. This is due in part to its patriotic nature, which has already caused a revival of interest in Revolutionary times in the regions where the great conflicts of our first war were fought, and in part to the unusual way in which Griffith is making the picture.

Instead of building replicas of the historic buildings which must figure in any drama written about the Revolution, Griffith and his entire company of players, technicians and advisers, are traveling from place to place in special trains, and taking their scenes on the actual sites, with thousands of the general public as spectators, and plenty better, Revolutionary soldiers and the actual men of the United States Army as actors.

As for this experiment of "letting the public in" to view the actual making of a motion picture, it seemed at first impossible, such things as secret rooms, notable as innovations of big battle scenes, were merely camera men and actors in the story of the time which Griffith sought to tell in order to get those present somewhere, for use in the picture. A number of spectators were prepared by Griffith in New York and Philadelphia and they came and they saw and they stayed.

Instead of hiring a number of actors to play the parts of Washington, Lafayette, Lee, Arnold, Burgoyne, Tarleton, Cornwallis, Clinton, Gates, Greene, Morgan, Washington, Lee, Jefferson, Franklin, Hancock, Adams, Hancock, Revere, Dickinson, Hancock, Adams, Hancock, Revere, Dickinson, Washington, Washington, Washington

N.Y. Graphic 9/23/24

"America" Thrills at Capitol With Romance and War

By Regina Cannon

It may seem hypercritical to mention a production by so great an artist as D. W. Griffith in anything but unqualified superlatives. But one must wish there could have been more of the love story and less of warfare in the production of "America," this week's offering at the Capitol Theater.

The impression left on the beholder is one of endless indeterminate battles. But perhaps we need it to remind us of the storm and stress in which our country and its ideals have been forged. Whatever else may be said, we must admit that the filming of "America" is one of the most stupendous undertakings ever attempted in the history of motion pictures, and for that all true Americans must feel indebted to David Wark Griffith.

Neil Hamilton

With his usual meticulous attention to detail Mr. Griffith has filmed each scene in the exact location of its original enactment. Unquestionably the thrill par excellence is found in the midnight ride of Paul Revere, the story of which is known to every schoolboy, even if the older generation may have forgotten it.

Washington makes his entrance in the romantic atmosphere of the Montague household, where, as an officer in the British army, he is an honored guest. A fine touch in the picture is contained in the unbroken friendship of the Montagues and Washington, even though the Montagues remain Tory long after the Father of His Country has become the inspired leader of the Revolutionary Forces.

Carol Dempster is cast as the daughter of the Montagues and gives a creditable portrayal, as does also Charles Emmett Mack as her brother, who later joins Washington's army. Nathan Holden (Neil Hamilton) the farmer boy who loves Nancy Montague enlists your sympathy not only for the role itself, but also for his interpretation of it. Incidentally, Mr. Hamilton is easily one of the handsomest men on the screen.

Of course the big part is that of Captain Walter Butler. Here we have Lionel Barrymore in one of his memorable picturizations. The role calls for everything that is bad and Lionel has them all to the nth degree. "He's a villain"—women and licker being his chief diversions. The fact that he comes to a bad end is incidental. That is the fate of all bad men—in pictures. The point to be made here is that Mr. Barrymore's portrayal leaves nothing to be desired.

LIONEL BARRYMORE AND CAROL DEMPSTER

One marvels at the amount of research work that must have been done to produce this, said to be the greatest historical picture so far attempted. We are told that even in the numbers of killed and wounded on both sides, the reproduction has been exact.

When the signing of the Declaration of Independence is seen America is born, and it must be a cold-blooded citizen who can witness this patriotic event without feeling his heart swell and his pulse quicken.

A final bit of advice—See America First!

N.Y. Post 9/25/24

Just Back to America to See "America"

LIONEL BARRYMORE

In the Griffith Film at the Capitol Theatre

N.Y. World 9/28/24

THERE are two things about which it is quite useless to argue. One is censorship and the other is the British attitude toward anything American in the cinema. Still the action taken by the English censor board banning Mr. David Wark Griffith's "America" in that country is so amazing that not only are American writers throwing up their hands in utter bewilderment but the English are somewhat nonplussed themselves.

It is agreed upon by pretty nearly everybody that there is nothing definitely anti-British in the film itself, although it embraces in its melodramatic story some striking scenes of Revolutionary War incident. Burlesque tramps the British censorship boards then when it is recalled that Mr. George Bernard Shaw's "The Devil's Disciple" ridicules Gen. Burgoyne and the entire English military organization of the period from beginning to end, and this play has free access to any stage in the world.

* * *

I FIND in the Sphere (London), in the column conducted by S. R. Littlewood, titled "The Art of the Cinema," this further drollery:

"My own attitude on this matter is, I confess, one of unjust and prejudiced indifference. To me the one thing that counts is that I am so wearied of having these American films imposed upon us, stifling the birth of what might be a noble and beautiful art in England itself, that any excuse for there being one American film less is—from that point of view, at any rate—a welcome one."

Chicago (Ill) Oct 4 1924 Exhibitors Herald

Fair Play by English Censors

Word has just arrived from England to the effect that a ban on Mr. D. W. Griffith's "America" originally imposed some time ago by the British censor has been lifted and that the picture will now be permitted to play throughout England.

The production was offered to the British market under the title, "Love and Sacrifice," and after its first viewing it was held to be a subject not suited for exhibition in the English halls. The incident occasioned considerable comment in the English newspapers and in the trade press, the general objection being registered was that if the picture was really intended for exhibition for England certain graphic incidents concerning the conduct of British soldiers in the Revolutionary war should not have been included.

The passing of the picture without, it is understood, any material changes is somewhat unexpected, because it will be recalled by all who have seen the subject as "America" that had Mr. Griffith intended it to be shown in England no one would ever suspect this fact from the treatment accorded certain phases of the production.

Some rather strong declarations concerning the incident have been published in the English trade press, both concerning the idea of showing the picture in England and also concerning the frenzied efforts of the Griffith organization to get it on the English screens. It is only natural that the Griffith organization should have made a strong effort to get the censors' permission to exhibit it, but, at the same time, we wonder how this could have been done with any great hope of getting it passed.

But the fact that it has been passed strikes us as a very fine example of fair play which must be interpreted to mean that the [illegible] was prompted by a most [illegible] spirit of tolerance.

Baltimore (Md) All in the Family Sep 30 1924

N.Y. News 9/27/24

GRIFFITH GENIUS SCINTILLATES IN "AMERICA," A MASTERPIECE

By MILDRED SPAIN.

Title: "AMERICA."
Type: HISTORICAL DRAMA.
Directed by D. W. GRIFFITH.
Produced by UNITED ARTISTS.
Presented in the CAPITOL THEATRE.

To Griffith belongs the distinction of filming the two great historical pictures we have had. First, "The Birth of a Nation," and now, "America."

Both are sheer triumphs of directorial genius.

Fortunately, I didn't see "America" when it was released last spring. I say, fortunately, because perhaps I should have missed some of the thrill by repetition. But only perhaps——

There is something so splendid, so epic, about the sacrifice of the first Americans for their liberty that, seen through the eyes of the camera and not through the pages of a book, it becomes a memorable picture.

Griffith's document begins with the unrest over unjust taxation and carries the thread of a love tale and the history of the war to the election of George Washington in New York.

The audience applauded every fine picture, every battle scene. Especially it appreciated the somber, though beautiful, death scene of a young British fop who was carried away by the spirit of Washington to the side of America.

Lionel Barrymore

Because of the similarity of theme and treatment there are bound to be comparisons with "Janice Meredith."

Very well.

Paul Revere's ride seemed far more spirited in "America" than in "Janice." Then, too, the scene at Valley Forge was more realistically shown in Griffith's masterpiece.

It seemed far more plausible for the boy and girl in the Griffith picture to meet in remote places than it did in "Janice."

But—there was more humor in "Janice" and Marion Davies gave more reason to believe that she was a great belle than Carol Dempster.

As for Neil Hamilton of "America" and Harrison Ford of "Janice" they look somewhat alike. And, what is more, they acted their roles similarly. Only one painted pictures of the Virginia belle and the other wrote her poems.

Lionel Barrymore was superb as Capt. Walter Butler, the British officer, who sought to smooth girls in his charms as he did men in his treacherous measures.

Charles Emmett Mack made a name for himself as the British fop who fought for America, remembering the spirit of George Washington.

Thus we have such a film as "America" as long as it is up to the people to appreciate it. You won't be disappointed. No one could be.

Neil Hamilton and Carol Dempster

18 F&D INSURES "AMERICA"

"AMERICA," the D. W. Griffith production portraying the early history of this country, was recently insured for $50,000 through the Omaha Branch Office, by Hamilton & Company, a local insurance firm. The policy was written July 1st, effective at the United Art Studios in New York, to continue until after the showing of the film in Omaha, during the week beginning August 11th.

According to Joseph Emmerling, personal representative of D. W. Griffith in Omaha, Mr. Griffith deemed it advisable to take every precaution possible to protect his newest and biggest picture owing to the enormous cost of the production, combined with the shortage of film.

San Francisco Call Examiner Sep 24 1924

My Country, 'Tis of Thee!

Carol Dempster, as she appears in the role of Nancy Montague in "America," D. W. Griffith's new historical romance, coming to the Imperial Friday.

Exhibitors Herald Chicago (Ill) Oct 4. 1924

Toledo (O) News-Bee 9/24/24

ENGLISH CENSORS BAN GRIFFITH'S NEW PICTURE

By WILLIAM PHILIP SIMMS, Foreign Editor, Washington Bureau.

The British movie censors have banned David Wark Griffith's latest picture, "Love and Sacrifice."

Something of a furore was created in England by the announcement because it was known that it had to do with the American Revolution. The natural assumption was that it contained matter offensive to British subjects.

Griffith, now in London, denied this. He swore he gave a private showing to the London press. Every critic I have met concludes the Americans of the picture [illegible] British the villains.

The story deals with the love of a girl whose father is a loyalist, her sweetheart, patriot, during the good and wicked characters, going back in dark and gloomy colors the colonists sympathetic to the British or both, but positive in the cause the revolution.

[illegible] IS SILENT

The issue of the ban was joined [illegible] Hughes, ambassador to Great Britain, [illegible] the film. The British government refused to permit the film to be shown in the theaters.

[illegible] out. The United States [illegible] of this city have had in operation in Britain the [illegible] each year [illegible] the other country—the home of [illegible].

The British censorship [illegible] sensational furnishes and [illegible] British [illegible] British [illegible] British

Seattle (Wash) Times Sep 25 1924 San Francisco (Cal) Chronicle Sep 28 1924

GRIFFITH PLAY THRILLS

Carol Dempster in "America."

D. W. Griffith's "America" continues to thrill audiences at The Imperial. Carol Dempster contributes some beautiful scenes in the love story part of the play.

--o-- --o-- D. W. Griffith's "America" at the Imperial

San Francisco Call Chronicle 9/27/24 Reel Life Stories (NYC) Oct 1924

San Francisco Call Roanoke (Va) Examiner 9/27/24 Times 9/28/24

NOTED GRIFFITH FILM OPENS AT IMPERIAL

IMPERIAL THEATER—"America," a D. W. Griffith production from the story of Robert W. Chambers.

THE CAST:

Nancy Montague ..... Carol Dempster
Lionel Barrymore ..... Lionel Barrymore
Nathan Holden ..... Charles Emmett Mack
Jonathan Holden ..... Riley Hatch
Robert Montague ..... Neil Hamilton
Thomas Dixon ..... Joseph Swickard
Jack Montague ..... Erville Alderson
Jonathan Holden, Jr. ..... Charles Bunnell
Mark Tarleton ..... Mack Swain
Hessian Officer ..... Walter Rodgers
Hessian Officer ..... Lee Shumway
Hessian Officer ..... Frank Nelson
Hessian Officer ..... Frank Leigh
Hessian Officer ..... Jack Mower
Hessian Officer ..... Charles Hill Mailes
Hessian Officer ..... Frank Puglia
Hessian Officer ..... Charles Stevenson
Hessian Officer ..... Frank Ellis
Hessian Officer ..... Frank Ellis
Hessian Officer ..... Frank Ellis

Ny Graphic 9/23/24 Ny Post 9/25/24 Ny World 9/28/24 Chicago (Ill) Exhibitors Herald Oct 4 1924

"America" Thrills at Capitol With Romance and War

By Regina Cannon

It may seem hypercritical to mention a production by so great an artist as D. W. Griffith in anything but unqualified superlatives. But one must wish there could have been more of the love story and less of warfare in the production of "America," this week's offering at the Capitol Theater.

The impression left on the beholder is one of endless indeterminate battles. But perhaps we need it to remind us of the storm and stress in which our country and its ideals have been forged. Whatever else may be said, we must admit that the filming of "America" is one of the most stupendous undertakings ever attempted in the history of motion pictures, and for that all true Americans must feel indebted to David Wark Griffith.

Neil Hamilton

With his usual meticulous attention to detail Mr. Griffith has filmed each scene in the exact location of its original enactment. Unquestionably the thrill par excellence is found in the midnight ride of Paul Revere, the story of which is known to every schoolboy, even if the older generation may have forgotten it.

Washington makes his entrance in the romantic atmosphere of the Montague household, where, as an officer in the British army, he is an honored guest. A fine touch in the picture is contained in the unbroken friendship of the Montagues and Washington, even though the Montagues remain Tory long after the Father of His Country has become the inspired leader of the Revolutionary Forces.

Carol Dempster is cast as the daughter of the Montagues and gives a creditable portrayal, as does also Charles Emmett Mack as her brother, who later joins Washington's army. Nathan Holden (Neil Hamilton) the farmer boy who loves Nancy Montague enlists your sympathy not only for the role itself, but also for his interpretation of it. Incidentally, Mr. Hamilton is easily one of the handsomest men on the screen.

Of course the big part is that of Captain Walter Butler. Here we have Lionel Barrymore in one of his memorable picturizations. The role calls for everything that is bad and Lionel has them all to the nth degree. "He's a villain"—women and licker being his chief diversions. The fact that he comes to a bad end is incidental. That is the fate of all bad men in pictures. The point to be made here is that Mr. Barrymore's portrayal leaves nothing to be desired.

LIONEL BARRYMORE AND CAROL DEMPSTER

One marvels at the amount of research work that must have been done to produce this, said to be the greatest historical picture so far attempted. We are told that even in the numbers of killed and wounded on both sides, the reproduction has been exact.

When the signing of the Declaration of Independence is seen America is born, and it must be a cold-blooded citizen who can witness this patriotic event without feeling his heart swell and his pulses quicken.

A final bit of advice—See America First!

Just Back to America to See "America"

LIONEL BARRYMORE

In the Griffith Film at the Capitol Theatre

THERE are two things about which it is quite useless to argue. One is the censorship, and the other is the British attitude toward anything American in the cinema. Still the action taken by the English censor board banning Mr. David Wark Griffith's "America" in that country is so amazing that not only are American writers throwing up their hands in utter bewilderment but the English are somewhat nonplussed themselves.

It is agreed upon by pretty nearly everybody that there is nothing definitely anti-British in the film itself, although it embraces in its melodramatic story some striking scenes of Revolutionary War incident. Burlesque tramps the British censorship boards then when it is recalled that Mr. George Bernard Shaw's "The Devil's Disciple" ridicules Gen. Burgoyne and the entire English military organization of the period from beginning to end, and this play has free access to any stage in the world.

* * *

I FIND in the Sphere (London), in the column conducted by S. R. Littlewood, titled "The Art of the Cinema," this further drollery:

"My own attitude on this matter is, I confess, one of unjust and prejudiced indifference. To me the one thing that counts is that I am so wearied of having these American films imposed upon us, stifling the birth of what might be a noble and beautiful art in England itself, that any excuse for there being one American film less is—from that point of view, at any rate—a welcome fact."

Baltimore (Md) All in the Family Sep 30 1924

Fair Play by English Censors

World has just arrived from England to the effect that a ban on Mr. D. W. Griffith's "America" originally imposed some time ago by the British censor has been lifted and that the picture will now be permitted to play throughout England.

The production was offered to the British market under the title, "Love and Sacrifice," and after its first viewing it was held to be a subject not suited for exhibition in the English halls. The incident occasioned considerable comment in the English newspapers and in the trade press, the general objection being registered was that if the picture was really intended for exhibition for England certain graphic incidents concerning the conduct of British soldiers in the Revolutionary war should not have been included.

The passing of the picture without, it is understood, any material changes is somewhat unexpected, because it will be recalled by all who have seen the subject as "America" that had Mr. Griffith intended it to be shown in England no one would ever suspect this fact from the treatment accorded certain phases of the production.

Some rather strong declarations concerning the incident have been published in the English trade press, both concerning the idea of showing the picture in England and also concerning the frenzied efforts of the Griffith organization to get it on the English screens. It is only natural that the Griffith organization should have made a strong effort to get the censors' permission to exhibit it, but, at the same time, we wonder how this could have been done with any great hope of getting it passed.

But the fact that it has been passed strikes us as a very fine example of fair play which must be interpreted to mean that the [illegible] was prompted by a most [illegible] spirit of tolerance.

Exhibitors Herald Chicago (Ill) Oct 4 1924

GRIFFITH GENIUS SCINTILLATES IN "AMERICA," A MASTERPIECE

By MILDRED SPAIN.

Title: "AMERICA."
Type: HISTORICAL DRAMA.
Directed by D. W. GRIFFITH.
Produced by UNITED ARTISTS.
Presented in the CAPITOL THEATRE.

To Griffith belongs the distinction of filming the two great historical pictures we have had. First, "The Birth of a Nation," and now, "America."

Both are sheer triumphs of directorial genius.

Fortunately, I didn't see "America" when it was released last spring. I say, fortunately, because perhaps I should have missed some of the thrill by repetition. But only perhaps——

There is something so splendid, so epic, about the sacrifice of the first Americans for their liberty that, seen through the eyes of the camera and not through the pages of a book, it becomes a memorable picture.

Griffith's document begins with the unrest over unjust taxation and carries the thread of a love tale and the history of the war to the election of George Washington in New York.

Lionel Barrymore

The audience applauded every fine picture, every battle scene. Especially it appreciated the somber, though beautiful, death scene of a young British fop who was carried away by the spirit of Washington to the side of America.

Because of the similarity of theme and treatment there are bound to be comparisons with "Janice Meredith."

Very well.

Paul Revere's ride seemed far more spirited in "America" than in "Janice." Then, too, the scene at Valley Forge was more realistically shown in Griffith's masterpiece.

It seemed far more plausible for the boy and girl in the Griffith picture to meet in remote places than it did in "Janice."

But—there was more humor in "Janice" and Marion Davies gave more reason to believe that she was a great belle than Carol Dempster.

As for Neil Hamilton of "America" and Harrison Ford of "Janice" they look somewhat alike. And, what is more, they acted their roles similarly. Only one painted pictures of the Virginia belle and the other wrote her poems.

Lionel Barrymore was superb as Capt. Walter Butler, the British Ranger, who sought to smooth girls in his charms as he did men in his treacherous maneuvers.

Charles Emmett Mack made a name for himself as the British fop who fought for America, remembering the name of George Washington. Why we have such a film as "America" at hand if is up to us to appreciate it. It wasn't so successful. No one could be.

Neil Hamilton and Carol Dempster

18 F&D INSURES "AMERICA"

"AMERICA," the D. W. Griffith production portraying the early history of this country, was recently insured for $50,000 through the Omaha Branch Office, by Hamilton & Company, a local insurance firm. The policy was written July 1st, effective at the United Art Studios in New York, to continue until after the showing of the film in Omaha, during the week beginning August 11th.

According to Joseph Emmerling, personal representative of D. W. Griffith in Omaha, Mr. Griffith deemed it advisable to take every precaution possible to protect his newest and biggest picture owing to the enormous cost of the production, combined with the shortage of film.

San Francisco (Cal) Examiner Sep 24 1924

My Country, 'Tis of Thee!

Carol Dempster, as she appears in the role of Nancy Montague in "America," D. W. Griffith's new historical romance, coming to the Capitol Theater.

Exhibitors Herald Chicago (Ill) Oct 4 1924

United Artists

America, a D. W. Griffith production.—A wonderful picture and will give satisfaction anywhere in the United States. United Artists gave us a square deal both in permitting us to book it at our date and, using we paid a good price for it, they didn't tie up our year's profit by forcing us to buy a whole block of pictures we didn't care to have. This picture will draw people into your theatre who have never been there before and their criticism will be that it is a 100 per cent picture historically.—M. A. Long, Grand theatre, Alvin, Texas.

America, a D. W. Griffith production. Great. Wonderful picture. Failed to draw the crowds. Only the man like this kind of picture. High rental on this picture. May go big in the larger cities, but in cities of thirty thousand I have my doubts. It takes Brock, Griffith to produce big pictures. In my own mind he is the greatest producer in the business. Will lose money on it.—Harry Van Nuy, Reviews theatre, Ada, Okla.

One to Eight. A D. W. Griffith production. [illegible] a family. Full of pep and all that. Cast and price is right. Will please all.—Harris Amusement theatres, Hugo, Okla.

Toledo (O) News-Bee 9/24/24

ENGLISH CENSORS BAN GRIFFITH'S NEW PICTURE

By WILLIAM PHILIP SIMMS, Foreign Editor, Washington Bureau.

The British movie censor has banned David Wark Griffith's latest picture, "Love and Sacrifice."

Something of a furore was created in England by the announcement because it was known that it had to do with the American Revolution. The natural assumption was that it contained matter offensive to British subjects.

Griffith, now in London, denied that. He proposed to give a private showing to the London press. Every reporter I have read emphasizes the sincerity of the picture, rather than its art.

The story deals with the love of a girl, whose father is a loyalist, for a Revolutionary patriot. Both are good and virtuous characters, giving rise to dark pitfalls during the progress of the romance between loyalists and patriots.

[illegible]

SEASON IS SPENT

The season of [illegible] is spent. The [illegible] is [illegible] to [illegible] the [illegible] of [illegible] the [illegible] of [illegible] the [illegible] of

Seattle (Wash) Times Sep 25 1924 San Francisco (Cal) Chronicle Sep 28 1924

GRIFFITH PLAY THRILLS

Carol Dempster in "America."

D. W. Griffith's "America" continues to thrill audiences at The Palace. Carol Dempster contributes some beautiful scenes in the love story part of the play.

--o-- --o-- D. W. Griffith's "America" at the Imperial

San Francisco Cal Chronicle 9/27/24 Reel Life Stories (Ivy C) Oct 1924

'AMERICA' HAS BATTLE THRILL

Griffith Patriotic Spectacle at Imperial Stirs Spectators' Pulse

By GEORGE C. WARREN

There is much to make one proud he is a citizen of these United States in D. W. Griffith's "America," which was revealed for the first time here yesterday morning at the Imperial Theater, drawing an early crowd that filled the house and applauded madly when victory sat on American arms. The struggles of those hungry, half-naked, ill-armed men fighting for principle, for their homes and freedom, stirs the blood and makes the heart beat faster as one watches Griffith's masterly management of his great theme.

But there is more in "America" than an appeal to patriotism, which indeed is only the background for the real story of the love of Nathan Holden, Massachusetts farmer, for Nancy Montague, Virginia belle and daughter of a proud old cavalier family.

Robert W. Chambers, who wrote the story and also the subtitles, is a master in his field of romance as Griffith is in his of visualization, the combination bringing to us a picture that is a worthy companion to Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation," which also had to do with wars and dangers and romance.

The subject it seems inspired the director as nothing else has since he turned Thomas Dixon's partisan story of the South into a national epic, the result in the case of "America" being a massive and magnificent presentation of the meeting of the forces of liberty with those of oppression.

GRIFFITH MIRACLE

Griffith has performed another of his miracles in fusing a romantic tale of love with the vast theme of the American Revolution and making the amalgamation seem natural and even a part of the scheme of things.

Paul Revere's ride is one of the episodes that stand out in memory with burning clearness, a marvelous bit this, that makes the pulse throb and the breath catch, and exquisite in its pictorial values, Revere riding through wooded stretches of moonlit roadway, leaping fences and streams, dodging those sent to trap him and delivering his ringing call "To arms!" so that the spectator is ready to leap out of his seat and join the patriots in their gathering for the defense of their rights.

The battles at Concord and Lexington are vivid things, and Bunker Hill stamps itself on the memory with its hillside strewn with the dead British mercenaries, and its valiant struggle by the patriots to hold their own against hopelessly superior forces.

THRILLS IN BATTLES

Griffith has always been a master in maneuvering battle scenes, and he has not lost his cunning, whether the fight be a long way off or close by.

The Valley Forge scenes and those in the Mohawk valley are striking and picturesque examples of the director at his best.

A cast that is entirely adequate and sometimes brilliant carries the central story, the love tale, with Carol Dempster as a lovely, if somewhat attenuated, Nancy, playing with a maturity of purpose and positiveness of technique which are surprising when one remembers former work of the lady.

Neil Hamilton is a fiery lover, Lionel Barrymore plays the evil butler so that one hates the sight of him, Charles Emmett Mack is fine as the Tory lad turned patriot, his death scene especially fine; Riley Hatch makes the slender role of Joseph Brant stand out for its dignity and strength, and Harry O'Neill rides like a fury as Paul Revere.

Love in Revolutionary Days

Lionel Barrymore and Carol Dempster as Tories in D. W. Griffith's "America," which opened at the Imperial Theater yesterday.

Fairmount (N Y) Times Sep 30 1924

"AMERICA" PRONOUNCED A GREAT PICTURE BY MANY ORGANIZATIONS

By ALICE A. HALL

Roanoke (Va) Evening Times 9/28/24

NOTED GRIFFITH FILM OPENS AT IMPERIAL

IMPERIAL THEATER—"America," D. W. Griffith production from the story of Robert W. Chambers.

THE CAST:

By THOMAS DUNAIN.

"AMERICA" HERE ALL THIS WEEK

D. W. Griffith's Photo-Drama of Revolution At Academy of Music

ENDORSED BY D. A. R.'S

Teachers In Schools Invited to Attend Opening Engagement Monday Night

Enthusiastically endorsed by the public schools of Roanoke and by the several local chapters of the Daughters of the American Revolution, D. W. Griffith's "America," the photodrama of the Revolutionary War, will open a week's engagement at the Academy of Music Monday night.

To take the heroes of the American Revolution from the pages of history and place them, alive and colorful, in the hearts of Roanoke school children, in order that they may appreciate the sacrifices made by our forefathers for freedom and democratic institutions under which we live, superintendent of schools C. C. Wampler has given "America" his strong approval and all the teachers in Roanoke schools have been invited to attend in a group at the opening performance.

This [illegible] Columbus (Ohio) Citizen Oct. 1 1924

BRITISH Story of A

BY WILLIAM PHILIP SIMMS.

THE British movie censor has banned David Wark Griffith's latest picture, "Love and Sacrifice," shown in the United States under the title "America."

Something of a furore was created in England by the announcement because it was known that it had to do with the American Revolution. The natural assumption was that it contained matter offensive to British subjects.

Griffith, now in London, denied this. To prove it he gave a private showing to the London press. Every report I have read emphasizes the friendliness of the picture, rather than the contrary.

* * *

THE story deals with the love of a girl, whose father is a loyalist, for a revolutionist. Griffith divides his good and wicked characters, giving some to each side, patiently trying to make his audiences sympathize with individuals on both, but justifying, of course, the revolution.

The censor did not make public his motive for refusing to permit the film, so everybody is guessing. The London Spectator suggests three possible reasons:

1. The Board of Censors may have considered that, at the moment, it is inopportune to pass films showing any revolt of colonies against a ruling power.

2. It might have been considered anti-American in tendency.

3. The board may have objected to the pictures showing the horrors of war.

* * *

IF the first reason is true, then one was [illegible] [illegible] the French revolution, although [illegible] the record why was not the "Reign of Terror" banned, showing, as it does, things far worse than anything in the film. Then, too, there is the Mary Pickford picture, "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall," in which the Queen of Scots is shown in a favorable light, and the Spanish Armada is made to look like a pack of cowards. Yet this picture was not banned.

The great scenes of the American Revolution are [illegible] [illegible] Griffith's "Birth of a Nation." Yet the picture was not banned. Nor was the film of Kipling's "Gunga Din" banned, although it showed the British soldiers in a very unfavorable light.

The World 10/5/24

DORA DUBY

Photo by Abbe—Paris

Returns from her dancing engagement in Paris to resume screen career begun in Griffith's "America"

Moving Picture World (Ny) Oct 11 1924

College Woman Theatre Head Extols Griffith's "America"

WHEN a newspaper devotes about a full page to the personality of a theatre manager, there must be something about the manager of wide public interest. Miss Fenia Jaffe, daughter of Michael Jaffe has graduated from the University of Pennsylvania, the New York Law School and is on the point of giving her Ph. D. from Columbia University. But she has chosen to immediately enter on special duty at the New Brunswick Opera House with such success that the Sunday Times of New Brunswick, N. J. has been inspired to write her up.

It seems that Miss Jaffe's mind departed early in the training of the theatre's patrons. To this Miss Jaffe replied in the affirmative. She said that there is a certain amount of intelligence. But the average audience is composed of several professions and trades. Some are lawyers, some are doctors, some are merchants, some are bankers, some are [illegible] [illegible] United Artists

Pennsylvania Ledger

N.Y. Graphic 9/23/24 N.Y. Post 9/25/24 N.Y. World 9/28/24 Chicago (Ill) Exhibitors Herald Oct 4 1924

"America" Thrills at Capitol With Romance and War

By Regina Cannon

It may seem hypercritical to mention a production by so great an artist as D. W. Griffith in anything but unqualified superlatives. But one must wish there could have been more of the love story and less of warfare in the production of "America," this week's offering at the Capitol Theater.

The impression left on the beholder is one of endless indeterminate battles. But perhaps we need it to remind us of the storm and stress in which our country and its ideals have been forged. Whatever else may be said, we must admit that the filming of "America" is one of the most stupendous undertakings ever attempted in the history of motion pictures, and for that all true Americans must feel indebted to David Wark Griffith.

Neil Hamilton

With his usual meticulous attention to detail Mr. Griffith has filmed each scene in the exact location of its original enactment. Unquestionably the thrill par excellence is found in the midnight ride of Paul Revere, the story of which is known to every schoolboy, even if the older generation may have forgotten it.

Washington makes his entrance in the romantic atmosphere of the Montague household, where, as an officer in the British army, he is an honored guest. A fine touch in the picture is contained in the unbroken friendship of the Montagues and Washington, even though the Montagues remain Tory long after the Father of His Country has become the inspired leader of the Revolutionary Forces.

Carol Dempster is cast as the daughter of the Montagues and gives a creditable portrayal, as does also Charles Emmett Mack as her brother, who later joins Washington's army. Nathan Holden (Neil Hamilton) the farmer boy who loves Nancy Montague enlists your sympathy not only for the role itself, but also for his interpretation of it. Incidentally, Mr. Hamilton is easily one of the handsomest men on the screen.

Of course the big part is that of Captain Walter Butler. Here we have Lionel Barrymore in one of his memorable picturizations. The role calls for everything that is bad and Lionel has them all to the nth degree. "He's a villain"—women and licker being his chief diversions. The fact that he comes to a bad end is incidental. That is the fate of all bad men—in pictures. The point to be made here is that Mr. Barrymore's portrayal leaves nothing to be desired.

One marvels at the amount of research work that must have been done to produce this, said to be the greatest historical picture so far attempted. We are told that even in the numbers of killed and wounded on both sides, the reproduction has been exact.

When the signing of the Declaration of Independence is seen America is born, and it must be a cold-blooded citizen who can witness this patriotic event without feeling his heart swell and his pulses quicken.

A final bit of advice—See America First!

LIONEL BARRYMORE AND CAROL DEMPSTER

Just Back to America to See "America"

LIONEL BARRYMORE

In the Griffith Film at the Capitol Theatre

Baltimore (Md) All in the Family Sep 30 1924

N.Y. News 9/27/24

GRIFFITH GENIUS SCINTILLATES IN "AMERICA," A MASTERPIECE

By MILDRED SPAIN.

Title: "AMERICA."
Type: HISTORICAL DRAMA.
Directed by D. W. GRIFFITH.
Produced by UNITED ARTISTS.
Presented in the CAPITOL THEATRE.

To Griffith belongs the distinction of filming the two great historical pictures we have had. First, "The Birth of a Nation," and now, "America."

Both are sheer triumphs of directorial genius.

Fortunately, I didn't see "America" when it was released last spring. I say, fortunately, because perhaps I should have missed some of the thrill by repetition. But only perhaps——

There is something so splendid, so epic, about the sacrifice of the first Americans for their liberty that, seen through the eyes of the camera and not through the pages of a book, it becomes a memorable picture.

Griffith's document begins with the unrest over unjust taxation and carries the thread of a love tale and the history of the war to the election of George Washington in New York.

The audience applauded every fine picture, every battle scene. Especially it appreciated the somber, though beautiful, death scene of a young British fop who was carried away by the spirit of Washington to the side of America.

Lionel Barrymore

Because of the similarity of theme and treatment there are bound to be comparisons with "Janice Meredith."

Very well.

Paul Revere's ride seemed far more spirited in "America" than in "Janice." Then, too, the scene at Valley Forge was more realistically shown in Griffith's masterpiece.

It seemed far more plausible for the boy and girl in the Griffith picture to meet in remote places than it did in "Janice."

But—there was more humor in "Janice" and Marion Davies gave more reason to believe that she was a great belle than Carol Dempster.

As for Neil Hamilton of "America" and Harrison Ford of "Janice"—they look somewhat alike. And, what is more, they acted their roles similarly. Only one painted pictures of the Virginia belle and the other wrote her poems.

Lionel Barrymore was superb as Capt. Walter Butler, the British Ranger, who sought to smooth girls in his charms as he did men in his treacherous maneuvers.

Charles Emmett Mack made a name for himself as the British fop who fought for America, remembering the words of George Washington. Which we have such a film as "America" at hand it is up to the people to appreciate it. We won't be disappointed. No one could be.

Neil Hamilton and Carol Dempster

Toledo (O) News-Bee 9/24/24

ENGLISH CENSORS BAN GRIFFITH'S NEW PICTURE

By WILLIAM PHILIP SIMMS,
Foreign Editor, Washington Bureau.

The British movie censors have banned David Wark Griffith's latest picture, "Love and Sacrifice."

Something of a furore was created in England by the announcement because it was known that it has to do with the American Revolution. The natural assumption was that it contained matter offensive to British subjects.

Griffith, now in London, denied this. To prove it he gave a private showing in the London press. Every reputable critic who saw it has said unchecked the inoffensiveness of the picture, further than the contrary.

The story deals with the love of a girl whose father is a loyalist, for a revolutionary. Griffith drains the good and wicked characters, giving them to each side, patently trying to avoid the indicated sympathetic duality of sentiment in both the partisans of the revolution.

REASON IS MISSED

The reason did not take public form, but it is generally believed that the film is primarily a Charlie Chaplin vehicle, which explains many things.

The story of Charlie, who has hundred times as the man in the street, is sometimes a good one, and the film is a pleasing play.

THE WHY OF IT

In the film, which has been shown in Washington, Griffith, in the guise of a British officer, is shown in the British uniform. It is the British officer who is the hero of the film. The British officer is shown as a gentleman, and the British soldiers are shown as good men.

The British officer is shown as a gentleman, and the British soldiers are shown as good men.

The British officer is shown as a gentleman, and the British soldiers are shown as good men.

Seattle (Wash) Times Sep 25 1924 San Francisco (Cal) Chronicle Sep 28 1924

GRIFFITH PLAY THRILLS

Carol Dempster in "America."

D. W. Griffith's "America" continues to thrill audiences at The Metropolitan. Carol Dempster contributes some beautiful scenes in the love story part of the play.

D. W. Griffith's "America" at the Imperial

San Francisco Call Chronicle 9/27/24 Reel Life Stories (NYC) Oct 1924

'AMERICA' HAS BATTLE THRILL

Griffith Patriotic Spectacle at Imperial Stirs Spectators' Pulse

By GEORGE C. WARREN

There is much to make one proud he is a citizen of these United States in D. W. Griffith's "America," which was revealed for the first time here yesterday morning at the Imperial Theater, drawing an early crowd that filled the house and applauded madly when victory sat on American arms. The struggles of those hungry, half-naked, ill-armed men fighting for principle, for their homes and freedom, stirs the blood and makes the heart beat faster as one watches Griffith's masterly management of his great theme.

But there is more in "America" than an appeal to patriotism, which indeed is only the background for the real story of the love of Nathan Holden, Massachusetts farmer, for Nancy Montague, Virginia belle and daughter of a proud old cavalier family.

Robert W. Chambers, who wrote the story and also the subtitles, is a master in his field of romance as Griffith is in his of visualization, the combination bringing to us a picture that is a worthy companion to Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation," which also had to do with wars and dangers and romance.

The subject it seems inspired the director as nothing else has since he turned Thomas Dixon's partisan story of the South into a national epic, the result in the case of "America" being a massive and magnificent presentation of the meeting of the forces of liberty with those of oppression.

GRIFFITH MIRACLE

Griffith has performed another of his miracles in fusing a romantic tale of love with the vast theme of the American Revolution and making the amalgamation seem natural and even a part of the scheme of things.

Paul Revere's ride is one of the episodes that stand out in memory with burning clearness, a marvelous bit this, that makes the pulse throb and the breath catch, and exquisite in its pictorial values. Revere riding through wooded stretches of moonlit roadway, leaping fences and streams, dodging those sent to trap him and delivering his ringing call "To arms!" so that the spectator is ready to leap out of his seat and join the patriots in their gathering for the defense of their rights.

The battles of Concord and Lexington are vivid things, and Bunker Hill stands itself on the memory with its hillside strewn with the dead British mercenaries, and the gallant struggle by the patriots to hold their own against numerically superior forces.

TROUBLE IN BATTLES

Griffith has always been a master in maneuvering battle scenes, and he has not lost his cunning, whether the fight be a long way off or close by.

The Valley Forge scenes and those in the Mohawk valley are striking and picturesque examples of the director at his best.

A cast that is entirely adequate and sometimes brilliant carries the central story, the love tale, with Carol Dempster as a lovely, if somewhat attenuated, Nancy, playing with a maturity of purpose and positiveness of technique which are surprising when one remembers former work of the lady.

Neil Hamilton is a fiery lover, Lionel Barrymore plays the evil butler so that one hates the sight of him, Charles Emmett Mack is fine as the Tory lad turned patriot, his death scene especially fine; Riley Hatch makes the slender role of Joseph Brant stand out for its dignity and strength, and Harry O'Neill rides like a fury as Paul Revere.

Love in Revolutionary Days

Lionel Barrymore and Carol Dempster as Tories in D. W. Griffith's "America," which opened at the Imperial Theater yesterday.

Columbus (Ohio) Citizen Oct. 1. 1924

BRITISH Story of A

BY WILLIAM PHILIP SIMMS.

THE British movie censor has banned David Wark Griffith's latest picture, "Love and Sacrifice," shown in the United States under the title "America."

Something of a furore was created in England by the announcement because it was known that it had to do with the American Revolution. The natural assumption was that it contained matter offensive to British subjects.

Griffith, now in London, denied this. To prove it he gave a private showing to the London press. Every report I have read emphasizes the friendliness of the picture, rather than the contrary.

* * *

THE story deals with the love of a girl, whose father is a loyalist, for a revolutionist. Griffith divides his good and evil characters, giving some to each side, patiently trying to make his audiences sympathize with individuals on both, not forgetting, of course, the villains.

The censor did not make public his motive for refusing to permit the film, as everybody is guessing. The London Spectator suggests three possible reasons:

1. The Board of Censors may have considered that, at the moment, it is inopportune to pass films showing any cause of offence against a friendly power.

2. It might have been considered anti-American in tendency.

3. The board may have objected to the pictures showing the horrors of war.

* * *

IF the first reason be true, why was "Mademoiselle" allowed to be shown? Perhaps the Frenchman objected to the French being shown in a bad light. Perhaps it is anything but an honorable fact if the British were shown in a bad light. Perhaps the "Spectator" has been misinformed. Perhaps the board of censors has been misinformed. Perhaps the board of censors has been misinformed. Perhaps the board of censors has been misinformed.

The great charm of the American Revolution is that it was the first revolution in which the people were on the side of the government. Perhaps the British censor thought it was a good thing for us to see how our ancestors behaved when they were rebels against a king.

Perhaps it is anything but an honorable fact if the British were shown in a bad light. Perhaps the "Spectator" has been misinformed. Perhaps the board of censors has been misinformed. Perhaps the board of censors has been misinformed. Perhaps the board of censors has been misinformed.

DORA DUBY

Photo by Abbe - Paris

Returns from her dancing engagement in Paris to resume screen career begun in Griffith's "America"

San Francisco Call Roanoke (Va) Examiner 9/27/24 Times 9/28/24

NOTED GRIFFITH FILM OPENS AT IMPERIAL

IMPERIAL THEATER—"America," D. W. Griffith production from the story of Robert W. Chambers.

THE CAST:

[illegible]

D. THOMAS HUMAN.

[illegible]

"AMERICA" HERE ALL THIS WEEK

D. W. Griffith's Photo-Drama of Revolution At Academy of Music

ENDORSED BY D. A. R.'S

Teachers In Schools Invited to Attend Opening Engagement Monday Night

Enthusiastically endorsed by the public schools of Roanoke and by the several local chapters of the Daughters of the American Revolution, D. W. Griffith's "America," the photodrama of the Revolutionary War, will open a week's engagement at the Academy of Music Monday night.

To take the heroes of the American Revolution from the pages of history and place them, alive and breathing, in the hearts of Roanoke's present children, in order that they may understand the noble sacrifices their fathers for freedom and democratic self-government under which we live, Superintendent of Schools C. C. Mosgrove has given his strong approval and all the teachers in Roanoke schools have been invited to be present at the performances next week.

[illegible]

Fairmount (W Va) Times Sept 30 1924

"AMERICA" PRONOUNCED A GREAT PICTURE BY MANY ORGANIZATIONS

By ALICE A. HALL

[illegible]

Moving Picture World (NY) Oct 11 1924

College Woman Theatre Head Extols Griffith's "America"

WHEN a newspaper dozens about a full page in the personality of a theatre manager, there must be something about the manager of wide public interest. Miss Neale Tully, director of Market Film Inc. graduated from the University of Pennsylvania, the New York Law School and is in the point of giving her Ph. D. from Columbia University. But she has been in immediate charge of special film of the New Brunswick Opera House with such success that the Studio Times of New Brunswick, N. J. has been moved to write up the Miss Tully's most important work in the making of the theatre's program. To do this the Studio is to give this is a real bit of intelligence. The city [illegible] Miss Tully's most important work in the making of the theatre's program. To do this the Studio is to give this is a real bit of intelligence. The city [illegible]

[illegible] of it has all the little artistic touches which the big mind can put into an attractive make-up and contrast the [illegible] picture the show.

Miss Tully [illegible] the [illegible] of the [illegible] Miss Tully [illegible] the [illegible] of the [illegible] Miss Tully [illegible] the [illegible] of the [illegible]

United Artists

AMERICA [illegible]

D. W. GRIFFITH'S "AMERICA" WILL BE SHOWN

Players and scenes from D. W. Griffith's "America," which opens at the Tent theater tomorrow night, are pictured above. In the top row, from left to right, are Riley Hatch, in the role of Joseph Brant, chief of the Mohawks; Neil Hamilton, as Nathan Holden; Carol Dempster, the Nancy Montague of this fascinating story; and Lionel Barrymore and Miss Dempster. Barrymore has the part of Walter Butler, the Tory, who was the greatest villain of the Revolution, greater, it is said, than Benedict Arnold.

Below are shown two battle scenes typical of those in the film. At left is the battle of Bunker Hill and at right, the surrender of Cornwallis at Yorktown. "America" will be shown here for four days.

GREAT FILM BOOKED AT TENT SHOW

[illegible]

Capital City Elated Over Winning Flag

WASHINGTON, Sept. 29 — (By United Press)—Washington broke out a carload of shrieking horns and whistles when the news was flashed that the Senators had defeated Boston and won the American league pennant for the first time in history today.

Despite a pouring rain thousands of fans stood in front of the newspaper offices during every hair and drizzle. When the final out was marked down, the people in the offices throughout the city almost shook the foundations of the buildings and homes throughout the city with shouts of the fans crowded into the offices and other excitement.

Many offices of the newspapers were packed so full of fans that the newspaper offices were compelled to get policemen to keep the crowds in order.

The signal for the start of the celebration was given when a man who was in the employ of the Western Union ran down the street with a long strip of paper in his hand. Instantly everybody was on the alert and the man was surrounded by a dozen people who wanted to know what happened.

The man had received the news that the Senators had won the game by a score of 4 to 2 and had wired the news to the office.

Many business houses were closed and other offices, except the offices of the newspapers, were closed.

Many business houses and other offices were closed and the employes of the offices joined in the celebration.

The news was received that the Senators had won the game by a score of 4 to 2 in the ninth inning. The game was marked by hard hitting on both sides.

The news was received that the Senators had won the game by a score of 4 to 2 in the ninth inning. The game was marked by hard hitting on both sides.

FILM "AMERICA" INSPIRES POEM

A new song review of the national anthem "America" has been inspired by the showing of D. W. Griffith's "America" in San Francisco. Thomas Hunter, Examiner critic, has composed the words as follows:

We sensing, sir of that
D. W. Griffith, as
Has made this film
Land and our fathers here,
As it was after our
Were caught in Paul Revere's
How it could stop and

We gather sensing, then
At Washington with the
Then the seven
This country was at war,
The land of liberty with
The battle raging and
All lines are seen.

Our own pageant though,
In spite of Valley Forge
Of years and years
Gone of the Hun's rule,
But all the world, that
Of liberty in the land
The United States.

The news has spread that
The Senators and the
Of the United States
Has been a great fight
Of the United States.

Nation-Wide Hunt Instigated For Pastor And Girl

ALLIANCE, Ohio, Sept. 29 — (By United Press)—From the modest little cottage in this village of twenty old hundred souls, A. W. Fiske, an old worker, gave an order today instigating a nationwide man-hunt for the Rev. Joseph W. Yates, 27 year old pastor and four days ago eloped with Miss Florence Fiske, 14, a freshman in high school.

A nationwide known detective agency has been asked to assist the sheriff. The deserted parsonage here—called a divorce parsonage—and the girl's home, both adjoining the church, are being guarded by the sheriff's men who are keeping a close watch on the movements of the young people.

A week ago Sunday Rev. Yates left the church that day, but returned Monday night and preached his sermon. The next morning he was missing. Later it was discovered that the girl was missing also. Yesterday the sheriff's men found the girl's hat and coat in the woods near the village.

A week ago Sunday Rev. Yates left the church that day, but returned Monday night and preached his sermon. The next morning he was missing. Later it was discovered that the girl was missing also. Yesterday the sheriff's men found the girl's hat and coat in the woods near the village.

ROT COD AND DOCTOR SAME, HE DECLARES

LOS ANGELES, Sept. 29—(By United Press)—Spelling of words backward discovers their true meaning in the opinion of John Bernard Clark, the "love doctor" of the church of Cosmic truth, who thinks bogus attempts to prove his assertion. Clark has been prosecuted in Los Angeles for the practice of marriage by the simplest but the most novel method of marriage. Clark, who is a former minister, claims the practice is not illegal.

Clark, who has been in jail and active in the profession of marriage since the beginning of January, claims it is the greatest discovery of the age. He says he has married hundreds of people by the method and that they are happy. Clark, who is a former minister, claims the practice is not illegal.

Clark, who has been in jail and active in the profession of marriage since the beginning of January, claims it is the greatest discovery of the age. He says he has married hundreds of people by the method and that they are happy. Clark, who is a former minister, claims the practice is not illegal.

Color It New With "Diamond Dyes"

Beautiful home dyeing and tinting is guaranteed with Diamond Dyes. Just think, no more worry if your dress, waist, stockings, sweater, coat, drapery, curtains, hangings, or any other article of wearing apparel, home furnishing or household article, should happen to fade, spot or become out of style. Simply dye or tint it with Diamond Dyes and it will look like new. Diamond Dyes are so easy to use, so certain, so fool-proof, so economical, so fast and so many-sided in their beautifying results that they are the most wonderful dyes ever made. Diamond Dyes are sold everywhere. Ask your druggist, merchant, dry goods, notion or department store for Diamond Dyes and insist on having what you want—and not take something else that may be offered you as just as good. Diamond Dyes are sold everywhere. Ask your druggist, merchant, dry goods, notion or department store for Diamond Dyes and insist on having what you want—and not take something else that may be offered you as just as good.

Veteran Coast Guard Captain Now Is Broker

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 29—After 25 years in the United States coast guard service, and reported to have saved many score of persons from drowning, Captain Horace Helsey retired today to become a real estate broker. For the past ten years Captain Helsey has been stationed at the coast guard station in Golden Gate Park in this city, where it is said he probably has been responsible for many rescues. He served the service at Florida, and also 10 years there was transferred to Cape Elizabeth, Maine.

Captain Helsey has been present at a number of the hidden rocks during his service. Captain Thatcher Bridges, for several years in command of the station in San Diego, has been transferred to a position in the command of the station, taking the place of Captain Helsey. Captain Bridges was in charge of the station during the time of the Panama Pacific exposition in San Francisco.

PRINCE OF WALES ATTENDS MASONIC MEETING IN NORTH

CALGARY, Alberta, Sept. 29 (By United Press)—His Royal Highness, the Prince of Wales and prominent members of the Grand Lodge of High River Alberta, where he and Brigadier General Trotter spoke for an afternoon Masonic night.

The Prince being grand master of the grand lodge of England, he occupied the chair and conducted the meeting. He also addressed the meeting and spoke with the members and in short talks to the lodge members.

Brigadier General Trotter, who was a member of troops and served the Canadian and the British forces in the World war, also addressed the meeting. The Prince of Wales is a member of the Masonic lodge of the Grand Lodge of England.

Here's the Latest—Cod Liver Oil in Tasteless Tablets

Greatest Flesh Builder for Skinny, Weak, Run-Down People — Full of Vitamines

[illegible]

G. S. TARGE
Consulting Engineer
Phone 1-[illegible]

P. T. SOUDERSON
Attorney
Phone 1-[illegible]

Russ Market
[illegible]

RIGHT FOOT OF SENATOR REMOVED

[illegible]

(Wash) Oct 7 1924

...ROMANCE TOLD DELIGHTFULLY

...h's "America" Sets ... Standard for Films; ...passes Same Director's ...rth of a Nation"

By L. L. COLEMANS

...ghtest thrill which we have ...t in the cinema is the ride of ...vers to America." And the ...rience which is on ...heater is the most ...kind ever made.

...picture which will ...of achievement in ...ly as commanding ...birth of a Nation" ...virtue of this latest ...Griffith passes definitely ...those whom we think ...immortals. And Amer- ...serenely about the ...sweet art confident ...all film directors is

...been a little uncer- ...of pre-eminence in ...ing field, we know ...n merely because of ...periods of absence ...We simply had for- ...that is his. Now we ...one in the world ...inspired actors, pic- ...revealed patriotism, ...made drama, as Mr. ...n "America."

...drama of the days ...gave birth to the ...themselves from ...Griffith and Robert W. ...have succeeded in weaving a ...absorbing romance into a ...strife and sacrifice on ...Romance and spec- ...and absorbingly inter-

...lovable Nancy Mon- ...by Carol Dempster in ...performance of this young ...and Nathan Holden is ...of sturdy, heroic, ...Americanism as portrayed by

...rise to its climax, this ...made human and sane ...by an admirable display ...sub-titling on the part ...and it is given vigor ...most vitally alive con- ...which Mr. Griffith or ...has made. A method ...photography lends ...realness to the whole.

...the picture ...briefly: Justice Montague ...and his family are strong ...King George. His daugh- ...and his son, Charles ...been presented at court ...he has received honors ...the British king. At the Wil- ...state house, the daughter ...Holden, a messenger ...who has been sent to tell ...Delegates that the king ...the port of Boston for re- ...taxes and placed it under

...who has opposed the ac- ...delegates, quits the build- ...after a parting with Col. ...Washington, his old friend, he ...visit Massachusetts and ...the cause of the king. ...Capt. Butler in Boston ...family are on the way when ...Lexington on the mem- ...of the 19th of April, 1775.

...Nathan training with the ...and the love grows space. ...witness of the fight the next ...brother, throwing his lot ...Americans, fights unknown ...long. He fights again at ...Hill and is killed.

...Montagues go to northern New ...the home of Sir Ashley Mon- ...Butler, who has mobilized ...massacre the colonists, has ...quarters. Nathan is sent by ...one to combat him. There are ...wonderfully thrilling scenes of ...Indian fights and massacre ...which the final day of reckoning draws nearer.

It is at the attack on Fort Sacrifice in the Mohawk valley, that Butler is killed and Justice Montague converted to the cause of the colonies, and the last scene of all shows Holden and his bride and her father attending the inauguration of George Washington as first President of the United States.

Interest Is Sustained

While there is to be found in "America" the traditional Griffith suspense, this is so expertly disseminated over the running drama that there is at no time evidence of strained effort for sustained interest. Within the first few minutes of the film one recognizes that hovering over the outlay of human beings and clashes of feeling there is a problem which demands solution.

Subjugation and evil intent are pitted against honest effort and the desire for freedom. As if in symbolism of the point of issue, Nancy Montague, daughter of the old Virginia justice, who holds loyally to his king, is seen slowly recognizing the call of her heart to protect and encourage young Holden, who is ready and willing to die for a free nation.

"America" is not by any means intended as a mere reproduction in pictures of the Revolutionary war. It is rather a faithful reproduction in dramatic form of incidents of sacrifice which came automatically with the rising of a new national spirit.

It is futile to attempt any adequate description of the actual marching of hostile forces into action or of the misery which was left in its wake. And still it is entirely possible to observe that as it tramps firmly on its way across the screen at the Tacoma Theater it is altogether glorious. It is a roaring echo of the shot heard round the world.

EVENING SENTINEL
South Norwalk, Conn.

FOUNDED BY JAMES GOLDEN IN 1870.

Published daily except Sunday by The Sentinel Publishing Company, 27 Washington Street, So. Norwalk, Conn.

Entered as Second Class Matter. Telephone: Norwalk 92-93. Branch Office: 43 Wall St., Norwalk Telephone—Norwalk 1288.

The Associated Press is exclusively entitled to the use for publication of all news dispatches credited to it or not otherwise in this newspaper and also any local news published herein. All rights of publication of special dispatches herein are also reserved.

"America"

That patriotism is neither dead nor dying was actively demonstrated during the showing of the Griffith picture, "America," in Norwalk. It was a gratifying answer to those persons who speak as if they believe America can lay down its arms and fight no more.

Here is a picture that shows what Washington and those of his times did, what sacrifices they made to make this country free for democracy. Every scene that showed the willingness of our forefathers to lay down their lives for freedom was roundly applauded. To one who watched and was thrilled by the picture there was the added thrill of an American audience cheering the deeds of those who made this country possible.

And remember, those crowds in the theatre were not descendants of the first settlers. Not all by any means. Many were sons and daughters of foreign born parents who came here to enjoy freedom. Lord Botom, Chenewal, Pusher Hill, Valley Forge, the Indians, all flashed before their eyes. Americans fight for a country of their own. Americans conquered them. And Americans were shown that they would fight to hold America free—who care evidenced that they will and have to continue who would put us in a position where we might have to hand over the place and flagpole for a foreign flag.

Every patriot should be proud to see "America," and it is not stretching to the extreme made to say that he should be inspired, encouraged, advised, out of America. A man who will not fight to save his home and country from the grabber is not worthy of the name of patriot.

If some patriots could speak their inner feeling out of the ...

St Paul (Minn) News Oct 5 1924

18 English Censors Ban Griffith's Revolutionary War Film

By William Philip Simms,
Foreign Editor, Washington Bureau.

THE British movie censor has banned David Wark Griffith's latest picture, "Love and Sacrifice."

Something of a furore was created in England by the announcement because it was known that it had to do with the American Revolution. The natural assumption was that it contained matter offensive to British subjects.

Griffith, now in London, denied this. To prove it he gave a private showing to the London press. Every report I have read emphasizes the friendliness of the picture, rather than the contrary.

The story deals with the love of a girl, whose father is a loyalist, for a revolutionist. Griffith divides his good and wicked characters, giving some to each side, patently trying to make his audiences sympathize with individuals on both—but justifying, of course, the revolution.

The censor did not make public his motive for refusing to permit the film, so everybody is guessing. The London Spectator suggests three possible reasons:

1. The board of censors may have considered that, at the moment, it is impolitic to pass films showing any revolt of citizens against a standing army.

2. It might have been considered anti-monarchical in tendency.

3. The board may have objected to the picture's stressing the horrors of war.

If the first, critics say, then why was "Scaramouche," picturing the French revolution, allowed? If the second, why was not "Beau Brummel" banned, showing, as it does, George IV in anything but an honorable light? If the third, then the British film, "Reveille," to be shown on Armistice day next November for the first time, should be banned too. For it is said to be a far more bitter reminder of the futility of war than Griffith's "Love and Sacrifice."

Those who witnessed the private showing of the film, however, seemed inclined to seek elsewhere for the real reason. Inasmuch as a number of changes have been made in the picture, principally in the sub-titles, since the board of censors saw it, these changes might offer a clue.

The great slogan of the American Revolution, for instance, "No taxation without representation!" is said to have been deleted. Some English critics are inclined to believe this, with similar matter, was what caused the trouble.

Mason City Globe Telegraph
FRIDAY MORNING, OCTOBER 10, 1924

CRITIC PRAISES GRIFFITH PLAY

Film Is Thriller With American Revolution As Background

By FANNIE FAIRYFALL

David Wark Griffith often has been accused [illegible] his historical facts, but he takes no such chance in America, during One—The Earlier, which runs the last three days of this week at the Rialto. An advance screening was held at the Rialto Monday.

Remaining as background the Revolution of '76, the film shows the spirited battles and goes into the details of the fathers of the republic against the redcoats, settlers of the north and Indians in Western New York.

There are side excursions into the House of Burgesses, where Patrick Henry delivers famous speech, [illegible] and into the court of King George III.

The film starts in the Mohawk valley of the Western New York in the [illegible] of Colonel Butler, [illegible] Valley Forge, to the battle of Bennington, to the home of Sir Ashley Montague in Boston, to the battle of Lexington, to the home of Nancy Montague, to the battle of Bunker Hill, to the battle of Yorktown, to the home of Nathan Holden, to the home of Nancy Montague, to the home of Nathan Holden, to the home of Nancy Montague, to the home of Nathan Holden, to the home of Nancy Montague

These Men, Now Big Movie Magnates, Started on the Proverbial S

Their Success Proves That Good Beginnings May Often Be Made Without Assured Capital—Warner Brothers' Audiences Stood Up When Undertaker Needed His Chairs—Griffith Once a Book Agent—Lasky Failed as Gold Hunter.

JACK WARNER

S. L. WARNER

WARNER BROTHE

CAROL DEMPSTER
Made a Star by D. W. Griffith

WHERE D. W. GRIFFITH WAS BORN
It was at La Grange, Ky. The sketch of the house was made by Mr. Griffith.

marital trend in the boy's character, but there were no wives on hand at that time, and there was little prospect of an impending one, so he wanted to become a man of action.

As soon as he was big enough he decided to see the world firsthand, and began a personally conducted tour. In the autumn of 1906 he went to Louisville and got a job as a reporter on the Courier-Journal. He wrote theatrical notices, besides having a night police assignment. These jobs, coupled with a general search for news, directed his ambitions to dramatic writing.

He went two steps, the first in his life, and, with the thought in his mind to become a dramatist, he called on the manager of the Moffett Stock Company and unfolded his scheme of life.

Went on the Stage

The manager said Griffith no doubt could very well become a dramatist without first serving an apprenticeship as an actor, and the young reporter broke a cardinal, time-honored rule of the family by becoming an actor. Partly to save his mother and brothers and sisters from what they would consider a disgrace, Griffith changed his Christian name to Lawrence.

He got his first chance to "tread the boards" in "The Minister's School," a play being produced for a local charity. He was given the part of the dunce, and had one line.

Over and over he memorized it: "The breeze from the lake blows chilly tonight." Whatever possessed him when it came for him to say his one line, he burst out in resonant tones: "The lake from the breeze blows chilly tonight."

The activities was [illegible] and in a few weeks the aspiring actor was made a member of the stock company. The pay was so small, however, that Griffith was forced to secure work on the side. Therefore the townspeople who patronized Stewart's drygoods store regularly might have observed that the regular elevator boy did not work on Wednesday or Saturday afternoons. If they cared to investigate these semi-weekly disappearances, they might have seen a young man dash from the employees' entrance of the store to the stage door of the Masonic Temple.

After a short stay with this troupe he got a job with John Griffith, and because of having the same surname, David Wark had to change his name to Davis Brayington. He had a wide range of parts in this company, and played the clergyman in "Trilby" and Francis Lewington in "East Lynne." He wasn't 20 years old then, and got the big salary of eight dollars a week and "cakes," the cakes being the stage vernacular for meals.

Still other changes were made, and finally Griffith got a job with Nance O'Neil in Shakespeare and Ibsen.

Such jobs, however, did not pay him well enough to permit the storing away of money for the "rainy day" which always or nearly always comes in the summer for the average actor, and as David Wark Griffith was no exception to the rule in those days, he was forced out on the stormy sea of canvassing. He tried to sell the Baptist Weekly to anyone who would listen to his line of chatter, but if he fell down on the religious argument he tried to sell them a copy of the Encyclopedia Britannica, a specimen prospectus of which he always carried in his grip.

Fed His Prospective Purchaser

Griffith used to get many "leads" for his sales from friends, and one of these instances, which is told by Griffith himself, illustrates the resiliency of his mind, for he has remembered every detail of the country and every incident leading up to his close of the sale.

"My man lived in a country of pork and 'sides' diet. I had been through a hard, grinding school of ups and downs, and it had taught me to think before acting. Knowing the value put on fresh meat in that region, I expended quite a sum from my resources and bought a lot of good, juicy steaks. I could have used those steaks myself, but business is business, and strategy is strategy.

"In a buggy, with my bundle of steaks and my sample bindings and specimen pages, I started one evening for my man.

"There were no roads thereabouts, and a coming storm did not add to my comfort. Then the rain came, and in the downpour my buggy was upset, we were bogged, and my poor old horse was not extricated until more than an hour of effort had passed.

"Finally, while driving through a dense woods, a hungry panther dropped from a tree to the seat beside me, and I dropped out of that buggy as though it had been a trapdoor. The beast had sniffed the odor of the steaks.

"It was a battle royal while it lasted, but with the aid of a wet club I sent a wicked right to the jaw and the panther went down for the count.

"I drove on through the blinding storm until the farmer's house was reached. My prospect gave me shelter for the night without the least suspicion that he was housing a mighty hunter of men, and one who was armed with a most tempting and appetizing argument.

"For breakfast I offered my steaks as an accompaniment to the black coffee, corn bread and treacle.

"Before lunch I had made my sale."

His next step after selling books was to get a job in a foundry. He wanted to be a puddler in a foundry, to do the real muscle-breaking work, and to mingle with men who did such work. He went to Tonawanda and got a job shoveling ore out of a ship's hold into the crane buckets.

"Men would shovel down in that grimy, stuffy hold until they dropped where they stood from utter exhaustion," says Mr. Griffith. "Then they would be chucked into one of the steel buckets, hoisted to the deck and flung to one side, to come to, or go to, as the strength of their heart decided.

Wrote an Unsuccessful Play

"It was not long before I found myself capable of shoveling for 20 hours at a stretch."

The literary ambition was still in his heart, however, and he began writing poems. He wrote many, and sold one to Leslie's Weekly for $35.

He then wrote a play, "A Fool and a Girl," showed it to James K. Hackett, who read it and liked it. It was produced and was a failure.

The turning point in his career came in Chicago, where he went to see a moving picture show with a friend. As he says: "It was a weary, dull affair, exactly what I have forgotten. But my friend liked it greatly. I found it silly, tiresome and inexcusably tedious. It was in no way worth while, and I considered the time wasted."

He went back to New York, wrote out what he considered his idea of a moving picture, and tried to sell it. It was rejected, and he wrote another. The Biograph Company gave him $15 for it and asked him to call again.

Griffith got a job with Biograph as a director, and his pictures began making a hit. His rise to fame since that time is known to nearly everyone. He has made some of the greatest film stars of today, including Lillian and Dorothy Gish and Richard Barthelmess.

Years ago there was a little boy in Grifi

David Wark Griffith

Few people know that David Wark Griffith at one time aspired to be an expert puddler in the steel mills. He got a job as a laborer in the holds of ships carrying ore to the mills, and became so expert that he found it an easy matter to work twenty hours at a stretch. It was during the old days of the mills, when a man could work as long as he wanted, and was paid for the number of hours he worked on the job.

He declares that his close association with the type of men in the mills has helped him greatly in putting the human touch in many of his pictures, and his early films were all based more or less on his experience both in the steel mills and in the many other jobs he held before he finally sold his first scenario for $15 to the old Biograph Company. It was the turning point in his career.

D. W. Griffith Makes "America" for D.A.R.

Patriotic Societies, Historical Experts and the U. S. Army Aid In Making An Unusual Picture.

Walter Huston (Lionel Barrymore) and Nancy Montague (Carol Dempster)

Carol Dempster and Neil Hamilton In a Love Scene

The Minutemen Prepare To Protect Historic Buckman Tavern

Samuel Adams Greets a Visitor to the Hancock-Clarke House, Lexington, Mass.

Miss Irma Harrison with the Drum Actually Used at the Battle of Lexington

HEN the Daughters of the American Revolution suggested to David Wark Griffith that he make a photoplay based on the American revolution, they started something. As a result of this suggestion Griffith is not only making the dramatic film, but leading historians, patriotic societies, society women, descendants of Revolutionary heroes and the United States Army in helping him, and if everything goes according to schedule the new film has started should surpass even "Birth Of A Nation," with no other film during its preparation has so much been created such widespread interest as that upon which he is working. This is due to the patriotic nature, which caused a revival of Revolutionary times since the great war were fresh in the minds of the people, to the unusual care Griffith is making.

Some idea of the interest with which the making of "America" is being followed may be gained from the fact that historical societies and descendants of Revolutionary heroes in sections where scenes are being taken, brought forth the one from the cases and treasure chests of their ancestors, the other from family vaults, valuable relics of the Revolution, ranging from medals, spurs, and drums, to garments and coatings resembling silk and, and offered them to Griffith for use in his picture. Because of this cooperation it has been possible to use as "props" in "America" hundred relics never before photographed, instead of present day replicas.

Griffith's aim in preserving the historical accuracy has been achieved largely through the establishment of a special bureau of research. This bureau, which has proved so successful, that the Griffith people intend to set it up in a permanent building, a similar project under the direction of authorities in New York, and other cities, where the filming takes place. Being through the political parts and private collections of books, documents and others for scenes in "America."

Through it would seem that there would be no difficulty in finding a wealth of material regarding such a well known period as that of the Revolution, the difficulty of finding the right material for the film was no small one. Griffith had to make an opportunity to see a dozen cameras in action, and to learn through watching a faithful reproduction of scenes in the struggle for liberty something of the stuff of which the Minutemen were made

Newark (N.J.) Call 10/12/24

MAKING YANKEE HISTORY—A bit of action in "America," David Wark Griffith's newest picture, in its third week at the Rialto.

Newark (N.J.) Call 10/5/24

"AMERICA" AT THE RIALTO—Scene from D. W. Griffith's newest spectacle, at the Rialto.

Newark (N.J.) Call 10/12/24

THE PLAYBILL

OFFERINGS OF THE WEEK IN NEWARK THEATERS

GRIFFITH'S LATEST EFFORT—Lionel Barrymore and Carol Dempster in "America," in its second week at the Rialto.

Allen's Press Clipping Bureau
SAN FRANCISCO
LOS ANGELES
PORTLAND, ORE.
CLIPPING FROM VD

CAPITOL NEWS BUREAU
PRESS CLIPPINGS
COLUMBUS, OHIO
VD

The Screen Journal
BY FRANK H. FREYER

Film Program

AMERICAN HISTORICAL FILMS

Through pictures like "America," which was presented in Paducah the first half of this week, and "The Covered Wagon," which will play a return engagement in this city next week, the motion picture industry reaches a position of great usefulness to the country. These powerful historical dramas, filmed with the most exacting attention to every detail of costume and scenery needed to visualize the periods in American history with which they deal, are calculated to give the American people a more graphic conception of their country's early past than they could ever secure from the written page. School children who witness such films go away from the movie theater with more American history infinitely impressed on their young minds than they could get through days of class room study. As adjuncts to the American school child's study of his country's history, they could not be improved upon. Whenever a film of this kind comes to Paducah our teachers can do nothing better for their children than to insist that they go to see it. What child who witnessed the scenes at Valley Forge, which appeared in "America," who saw the living counterpart of Washington, rallying his troops in battle, could fail to become inspired with a burning interest in American history and devotion to the Nation's "Father."

A nation's devotion to its country must arise out of an intimate knowledge of its history, and certainly nothing is more calculated to inculcate that knowledge than these historical movie dramas. These pictures make service to the millions for millions of American citizens there. They change indifference to burning admiration for America. We want to congratulate the management of the local theater showing these pictures for bringing them here to Paducah. We think they will never prove to concerning of this that they will not certainly if the people will encourage such films by giving them the large patronage which the theater, at its big price, is entitled to. It is a great honor for Paducah to have "The Covered Wagon" shown here and it was here before, and "America" is the only operator of the greatest film ever made in Paducah. We think it should be shown here.

[illegible]

Cincinnati (O.)
Billboard 11/1/24

first of the year.

SCHOOL TIEUP PAID BIG

Los Angeles, Oct. 25.—His experiences in playing D. W. Griffith's America for three days in a 786-seat house, third run, is described by B. F. Robison, Seville Theater, Inglewood, Calif. The tieup that brought him the biggest results was with the five schools of his neighborhood, which is in the Los Angeles district. The children were brought in, thru announcements by the teachers, to a Saturday special matinee. More than the house seating capacity responded—800 children and 30 adults. It necessitated two spectators in many of the seats. The schools warmed up in advance of the showing on the details of the thrilling midnight ride of Paul Revere, which undoubtedly was the point of hichest spectacular appeal in the picture. The campaign included the distribution [illegible] copies [illegible] letter on [illegible]

"America" at the Sheridan.

Managing Director Edwin T. Emery has arranged to present D. W. Griffith's "America" at the Sheridan Theatre in Sunnyside Village, starting next Sunday. This presentation will be shown [illegible] days.

Telegraph 11/18/24

MOVING PICTURE WORLD (N. Y.)
OCTOBER 11, 1924

Lauds "America"

Member of New York Board of Education Extols Griffith Production

In a letter dated September 25, to United Artists Corporation, occasion is taken by Ernest L. Crandall, noted director of Lectures and Visual Instruction of the New York City Board of Education, to speak his mind about the D. W. Griffith picture "America." He wrote:

"I notice that 'America' has found its way to the Capitol Theatre. This is fine. Not that this wonderful picture needed that hallmark of excellence, but it does help to bring it more prominently before the public consciousness . . . Indeed, 'America' is more than a patriotic picture. It offers genuine stimulus to high and fine feeling in every relationship of life. 'America' is in every sense the type of picture needed by our young people particularly, in this cynical and materialistic age."

Detroit (Mich.)
Free Press 11/2/24

LUCE'S PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
NEW YORK BOSTON
CLIPPING FROM
Kansas City (Mo.)
Journal Post 10/26/24

N. Y. EXHIBITOR'S TRADE REVIEW
OCTOBER 11, 1924

[illegible] the moment, while the cross-word puzzle books are leading the best sellers.

* * *

Over in England they are rather worked up about D. W. Griffith's "America," chiefly because it follows American-made rather than the English history books, dealing with the Revolution. The difference in viewpoint will be readily appreciated by anyone who has compared the school histories dealing with the civil war, as used in the northern and southern schools. There are two sides to nearly every argument and the Britishers can not be blamed for resenting slurs that their own historical authorities say are unwarranted. Any way, they made short work of the matter by banning the film.

* * *

DAILY, NEW YORK
OCTOBER 20, 1924

Out-of-Town
"America"—United Artists
Lyric, Cincinnati

POST—* * * You recognize the indomitable will and the spirit of sacrifice that won the resolution, in the sight of those soldiers barefooted and half-starved. * * *

"AMERICA!"
That's the title of this week's movie offering at the Royal, this scene being filmdom's version of the battle of Bunker Hill.
—Press Photo.

At the left—Arthur Dewey as George Washington in D. W. Griffith's stupendous photoplay, "America," now playing in Detroit. G. E. Jones, at extreme left, as a Rube, was acknowledged one of the best character studies among the merrymakers who participated in the annual harvest party recently given by Detroit Knights of Columbus. Three thousand guests, all in costume, helped to make the affair one of the jolliest and most enjoyable ever held by the Knights.

LUCE'S PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
NEW YORK 56 WARREN STREET BOSTON 5 BOSWORTH STREET
CLIPPING FROM
Minneapolis Journal Journal 11/9/24

On Stage and Screen

These Men, Magnates, Started on the Proverbial S

THE PHILADELPHIA RECORD — October 12, 1924

Now Big Movie Mag

"AMERICA."

A D. W. Griffith photoplay from the story by Robert W. Chambers. Presented at the Olivier theater the week of Nov. 11, with the following cast of principals:

Nathan Holden.....Neil Hamilton
Justice Montague.....Erville Alderson
Miss Nancy Montague ....Carol Dempster
Charles Philip Montague.....
.....Charles Emmet Mack
Captain Walter Butler..Lionel Barrymore
George Washington.....Arthur Dewey
Captain Hare .....Louis Wolheim
Joseph Brant, Mohawk chief..Riley Hatch

BY FORBES N. JULIAN.

D. W. Griffith is a name that suggests to the mind screen achievement; there is a certain magic quality that the very mention of the man connotes to the average American at all familiar with the affairs of the photoplay world. Here is a man who produces no ordinary things; his are different; they are stupendous, epic, fascinating.

And in "America" he has added another page to the epic of American history, the forerunners of which were "The Covered Wagon," and "The Birth of a Nation." For the reason of this interest in a period of our nation's development almost any film would attract some interest, but "America" is no ordinary picture. It is big, yes, but bigness is not necessarily achievement; it is more than that, "America" supplies the visualization of the events of our early history, of the fibre and character of many of the early leaders, of the hardships which to most of us are only stories and in these days it shows that patriotism, whatever it is, is more than mere flag waving. Patriotism in the times of 1776-85 was something that modern civilization knows nothing about.

Anyone going to see "America" with the purpose of cool, calculating criticism will come away with the purpose shaken, for the appeal of the picture is too broad and elemental to leave in the average person's mind much basis for criticism. One may try to convince himself that he has been disappointed in a few details, at least, but he will be stirred in a strange way, and come away feeling that the conception of the principles which our forefathers battled for is much more vivid and more deeply set in his mind.

It is the sweep and immensity of the events that carry the picture along. The production does not purport to tell the story of the American revolution, but only a typical segment of the happenings of those years. The love story has a certain delicacy, a sweet devotion running through it that strikes right to the heart of the audience. Carol Dempster, as the sweetheart, is petite and charming, although her emotional capabilities are hardly adequate to make the most of some of the greater scenes. She seems to fit the highest type of womanhood that the southern part of the early colonies produced. She is always merely the young girl, the maid, in the midst of hardship, sorrow and heartache and that is the major requirement of the role.

Lionel Barrymore as Capt. Walter Butler, of the British army, Neil Hamilton, as Nathan Holden, the young patriot, and Charles Emmet Mack, as the young fop who loses his life, carry off the major portions of the acting honors.

The history is all of the traditional sort and its authenticity is for the old and the new schools of history to fight over. We believe that the incidents given convey the purpose for which they were intended; namely, to delineate some of the spirit and purpose, some of the courage and fortitude that animated our forefathers. This picture is one of the spirit not of flesh and blood and whether or not the traditional history is the type we should cling to is a question which does not enter into a picture as fundamental as "America."

The details are remarkably well handled and the impression of the late 18th century in our colonies seems to be most authentic.

* * *

Two [illegible] add greatly to

CLIPPING FROM Gary Ind. Tribune 11-3-24

D. W. Griffith's 'America' at Orpheum for Four Days Only

THE CAST

Nathan Holden.....Neil Hamilton
Justice Montague, Erville Anderson
Nancy Montague..Carol Dempster
Charles Montague .....
.....Charles Emmett Mack
Samuel Adams.....Lee Beggs
John Hancock.....John Dunton
King George III, Arthur Donaldson
William Pitt.....Charles Bennett
Thomas Jefferson...Frank Walsh
Patrick Henry, Frank McGlynn, Jr.
George Washington, Arthur Dewey
Captain Walter Butler.....
.....Lionel Barrymore
Sir Ashley Montague, Sidney Deane
General Gage.....W. W. Jones
Paul Revere.....Harry O'Neill
John Parker.....H. Van Bousen
Captain Hare.....Louis Wolheim
Edmund Burke.....William Rising
Chief of Senecas.....Harry Semalis
Chief of Mohawks.....Riley Hatch

BY VICTOR S. SICILIA

All hail to "America," the land of the free and the home of the brave! Gary pays tribute this week to "America," greatest of all Nations! It is indeed most appropriate that D. W. Griffith's "America" should be shown at the Orpheum this week when all the people of the nation are called upon and are privileged to have voice in the destiny of this great country. The presentation of "America" in any city is an event that should be of interest to every civic, fraternal and patriotic organization.

D. W. Griffith's "America" is greater than "The Birth of a Nation!" It is the greatest picture ever made. It is the story of the sacrifice made by our forefathers during the revolution and it is romantic, inspiring and thrilling beyond description. Through this story is woven the most beautiful romance, the greatest love story of all time.

You who have found in the land of America a better shelter than in any other land, go to the Orpheum and see how this country that has given you shelter was made! See how this nation, with its precious freedom, was gained through years of sacrifice and sorrow. Go and see "America," for you will find laughter, tremendous thrills, and you will see the great sacrifice of the first Americans, their sorrows and triumphs. You will see Valley Forge, Lexington and Bunker Hill, and how the the first Americans, arose to the tremendous heights that gave you freedom.

To every American, to the sons of the nation who went forth when America called, in the great crisis that took our boys overseas, to the mothers, fathers, wives, sweethearts, brothers and sisters who suffered anguish when they marched away—go to see "America"—for it is your picture—the same as America is your country!

You will find sympathy here, for your sacrifices, no matter how great, were not greater than those of our forefathers. You will see the beginnings and the causes that made necessary such sacrifices! You will thrill and your heart will throb in knowing that you too, have suffered as they suffered. You will see the old house of Burgesses in Virginia, where sat Washington, Patrick Henry and Jefferson, the founders of our republic. You will see the signing of "The Declaration of Independence" which made this nation free!

The ride of Paul Revere is the most thrilling and daring scenes ever filmed. You will see the battles of Lexington, where 77 Americans stood against 800 British, Concord and Bunker Hill, in which more than 10,000 actors take part. You will pray with Washington at Valley Forge. You will want to stand up in your seat and applaud and cheer when you see the surrender of Cornwallis, and when you have witnessed the inauguration of the first president of the United States, you will come away from the Orpheum a little better, a little [illegible] can than ever before. Old Glory will not be a thing of bunting then, but assembled from the shrine of stars with a beauty before unknown!

D. W. Griffith's "America" at Orpheum Tonight!

ERVILLE ALDERSON CAROL DEMPSTER & CHARLES EMMETT MACK in D. W. GRIFFITH'S "AMERICA."

D. W. Griffith's production, "America," which was presented at the 44th Street theatre in New York and at the Auditorium theatre in Chicago at $2.50 admission, is offered at the Orpheum for four days only, afternoon and evening, starting today at popular prices.

An exact replica of the 44th Street theatre, New York, presentation will be given at the Orpheum under Mr. Griffith's personal direction, with a special enlarged orchestra playing the original music score. "America" is said to be even greater than D. W. Griffith's "Birth of a Nation."

BRIDGEPORT (Conn.) TELEGRAM — OCT. 1924

"America"

Story of the Revolution At the New Lyric Theatre

BY TELEGRAM REVIEWERS.

"America" had its first showing in Bridgeport at the New Lyric theatre last night. It shows plainly the mastery of David Wark Griffith, who directed it. Through the intense scenes of the birth of America's independence one is carried as though living this picture. The outstanding characters of the production are few and are never submerged in the mass action used often in the picture.

A story of love carries through many turns and pitfalls. Neil Hamilton, in the hero role of Nathan Holden triumphing after hazards at Concord and Lexington, the winter at Valley Forge and with Morgan's riflemen at the North Border.

A thrill of patriotism with each volley of American flintlock fired at "the white of their eyes" as the scarlet coated British advance up Bunker Hill is inescapable and is heightened as the production advances.

Great care as to detail of the historic background of the Revolutionary incidents making up the picture has been taken by Griffith to produce realism in the patriotic fervor of the American colonists, which runs through "America."

The major battles of the war including a remarkable picturization of the alarm "to arms" by Paul Revere are shown, as well as the signing of the Declaration of Independence.

Lionel Barrymore, as the arch traitor of the Revolution, the Tory Captain Walter Butler, gives an amazing demonstration of villainy while Carol Dampster, as Nancy Montague, is called on for frequent emotional characterizations.

Action is crammed into the picture in a large measure.

OBITUARY

LUCE'S PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
NEW YORK — BOSTON
CLIPPING FROM Omaha Neb. News 10-19-24

"Lincoln" Gets English Praise

And "America" Does, Too, Although It's Barred.

Although the British film board headed by T. P. (Tay Pay) O'Connor has steadfastly refused to permit showing of D. W. Griffith's "America" in England, London critics acclaim "Abraham Lincoln," recently shown at the Rialto in Omaha, as the greatest historical motion picture ever made.

The same critics gave high praise to "America," but Tay Pay was firm in denying Griffith the right to give the film a public showing.

"America" was done over for English consumption, too. The English villains were made loyal citizens, and the title changed to "Love and Sacrifice." But it was a picture of the Colonies' fight with England, and the scenes were [illegible]

LUCE'S PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
NEW YORK 50 WARREN STREET — BOSTON 6 BOSWORTH STREET
CLIPPING FROM NEW YORK TIMES — OCT 26 1924

Cinema Notes.

A Pittsburgh jurist is said to have adjourned court on five consecutive days to permit applicants for final naturalization papers to visit a theatre and see a motion picture said to express the spirit of liberty. Judge Joseph Buffington, according to the United Artists Corporation, thought that it would benefit the would-be citizens to see David W. Griffith's "America" before obtaining their papers.

CLIPPING FROM Toledo, O. News Bee 10-25-24

VALENTINE

Neil Hamilton, a former Toledoan, if his long residence here can qualify him as such, has a featured role in D. W. Griffith's "America," which comes to the Valentine for the new week. Many remember Hamilton for his work here as a member of the Toledo Theater Stock Co.

Lionel Barrymore and Carol Dempster have leads in this great picture dealing of early American history when pages were "written" with violent action.

Barrymore will be seen as the famous Captain Butler, and Miss Dempster will be seen as Nancy Montague. Hamilton has the role of a young rifleman of the colonial days.

There are many stirring scenes in the production, including the ride of Paul Revere and many other incidents of Revolutionary War history. The story was written by Robert W. Chambers, who is perhaps one of the best-informed writers of early America in this country today.

He is an authority on the subject, and his material should be authentic, giving considerable educational value to the production.

CAPITOL NEWS BUREAU
PRESS CLIPPINGS
COLUMBUS, OHIO.

MIDDLETOWN, O. JOURNAL — OCT. 16, 1924

Griffith Production Gives True History Of Revolution

THE trumpet of earthwhileness sounds today to call all loyal adherents of the screen world to see "America," which is engaged at the Sorg beginning today for at least four and maybe five days. Just as the rolling drums called together young and old in '76 to go out to create a spirit of patriotism for a new nation, so today does the clarion call of the proper thing to do at 1 together people to hearken back to that day in the rich historic entertainment to be found in the photographic revival of those days.

"America" is a living film. It is not acted, not directed, not dramatized and not presented. It is unusual in a new way. It is done, one will say, that instantly there are those who feel and those people in a dark room, without sight, it is all in the dark, alone in the dark. Look and the dark [illegible]

AMERICAN HISTORICAL FILMS

Through pictures like "America," which was presented in Paducah the first half of this week, and "The Covered Wagon," which will play a return engagement in this city next week, the motion picture industry reaches a position of great usefulness to the country. These powerful historical dramas, filmed with the most exacting attention to every detail of costume and scenery needed to visualize the periods in American history with which they deal, are calculated to give the American people a more graphic conception of their country's early past than they could ever secure from the written page. School children who witness such films go away from the opera theater with more American history indelibly impressed on their young minds than they could get through days of class room study. As adjuncts to the American school child's study of his country's history, they could not be improved upon. Whenever a film of this kind comes to Paducah our teachers can do nothing better for their children than to insist that they go to see it. What child who witnessed the scenes at Valley Forge, which appeared in "America," who saw the living countenance of Washington, rallying his troops in battle, could fail to become imbued with a lasting interest in American history and heroics in [illegible]

PICTURE "AMERICA" GETS INDORSEMENT

School Film Committee to Lend Its Aid in Increasing Attendance.

[illegible]

Kansas Pictures

[illegible]

CLIPPING FROM New York Bulletin 10-20-24

SYRACUSE (N. Y.) TELEGRAM
OCTOBER 13, 1924

D. W. Griffith's "America" Is Heart Throb of a Nation; Majestic Thrill of Mighty Ocean in "The Sea Hawk"

By CHESTER B. BAHN, SR.,
Dramatic Editor of The Syracuse Telegram and The Sunday American.

TWO of the finest cinemas of the year—indeed, of any year—are presented this week on the silver sheets of Syracuse theatres. I refer, it hardly need be said, to "America," at the Robbins-Eckel, and "The Sea Hawk," at the Strand.

Both are big pictures in every sense of the word—big in story, big in cast, big in production. "America" is as vitally American as this great country of ours itself. And "The Sea Hawk" has been admirably screened by Frank Lloyd. It is not going too far, I think, to endorse it as the premier sea story of the silent drama.

In all seriousness, I want to urge you to see both "America" and "The Sea Hawk." In this year of stellar cinematic entertainment they are to be ranked among the brightest stars.

ROBBINS-ECKEL — "America," presented by D. W. Griffith. Story and titles by Robert W. Chambers. Historical arrangement by John L. E. Pell. Assistant director, Herbert Sutch. Director of construction, William J. Bantel. Photographers, Hendrick Sartov, G. W. Bitzer, Marcel Le Picard, H. S. Sintzenich. Art director, Charles M. Kirk. Artist designer, Warren A. Newcombe. Film editors, James and Rose Smith.

* * *

"AMERICA" is a cinema of tears and cheers, of gulps in the throat, of wet eyes, of rousing Yankee cheers and of a pulse quickened by patriotic fervor.

As a historical epic, it is the America of Americans.

As a story, it is the Robert W. Chambers who once penned stirring romances of colonial times.

As a photoplay, it is the D. W. Griffith who gave us "The Birth of a Nation."

That, my friends, is "America."

It is not a picture to be coldly analyzed in the usual critical fashion. One might as well attempt to dissect the impulse that sends a mother into a flaming home to save her babe as to pass dispassionately upon this newest Griffith master-picture. It simply cannot be done.

"America" is a picture to be wept over, to be cheered over. And I defy anyone to see it without doing both. I am presumably a case-hardened newspaper man. I have served my appreticeship in murders, suicides and catastrophes until I can look impersonally upon death—that greatest of all dramas—as quite an abstract thing.

* * *

I HAVE also gone to the theatre since Chester Benjamin Franklin Bahn—this is for the benefit of my Canandaigua friends—was a pup, with the result that I have counted myself (and have been counted as well by producers) a hard-shelled, hard-boiled critic.

I say these things quite frankly. And I say with equal frankness that the tears coursed down my cheeks during several of the climactic moments in "America." Yes, and that at others I discovered myself applauding.

Imagine a critic crying! Consider the public spectacle of a critic applauding! It's against the first iron-clad rule of criticizing to do either. One should stifle a yawn when tempted to sob. And one should look properly annoyed when there is applause. I know that. Yet—

I openly used my 'kerchief and clapped my hands during "America." And I'm not apologizing. I think I would do it all over again. If I didn't, I'd seriously question the depth of my Americanism.

I realize that I'm saying much about my reaction to Mr. Griffith's epic and little about the picture itself. But, as I have already said, it is not a photo-drama to be analyzed. It is a story to be felt. And when one feels, analysis is impossible.

* * *

IN his foreword Mr. Griffith explains that he has not attempted to portray the story of the Revolutionary War. Yet, whether he made the attempt or not, that is what he has done. You see the story of the war depicted from the signing of the royal decree blockading Boston port to the hoofbeat ending of the Virginia House of Burgesses, from the ride of Paul Revere to the battles at Lexington and Concord, from Bunker Hill to the signing of the Declaration of Independence, from Valley Forge to the barbaric massacres in New York State, from Princeton to Yorktown, and, finally, to the inauguration of George Washington, first President of these United States.

And the story is told humanly, nearly. It moves from historical tableau to historical tableau smoothly and sharply, if not at very highly. There is, moreover, a security of treatment that convinces that this is the story as the Revolutionary Fathers saw it.

The scene with Washington, Lafayette at Valley Forge, the tableau at Mount Vernon, the scene in the House of Burgesses, the ride of Paul Revere, does not already vary in the force of the dramas. The ride of Paul Revere, the battle of Princeton, the Valley Forge, the Washington in the saddle.

"AMERICA" can be a strong picture, and it is. Mr. Griffith has gone to the Revolutionary War for his story, and he has brought back a story that is vitally American in every sense of the word. Yes, and he has brought back a story that is vitally American in every sense of the word. Yes, and he has brought back a story that is vitally American in every sense of the word. Yes

THE PHILADELPHIA RECORD

Started on the Proverbial S

Now Big Movie Magnates,

These Men

LUCE'S PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
NEW YORK 26 WARREN STREET — BOSTON 8 BOSWORTH STREET
CLIPPING FROM NEW YORK WORLD
NOV 9 1924

MR. SIDNEY OLCOTT added something to his career as artist when he turned out Norma Talmadge's "The Only Woman." It is a passable comedy-drama, made so purely by virtue of a fine, knowing method of treatment. I don't know of any one else who could have come through with even a fair picture play, excepting, of course, Lubitsch or Griffith.

And in this connection, a letter has arrived from a very eminent authority in the picture field, complaining about the statement in my review that "there are three great directors—Griffith, Lubitsch and Olcott."

"I too," he says, "consider these three the great ones, and so you are right to that extent. Personally, I rate Olcott as second and Lubitsch as third. In many respects I think Olcott is a greater artist than Griffith. Griffith is better in the great, big broad strokes, but in the delicate shadings and refinements I think Olcott has it all over him. It seems to me also that a lot of credit given to Lubitsch—take 'The Marriage Circle,' for example—really belongs to Adolphe Menjou for his acting. I agree with you, it is a shame that Olcott occasionally must handle some pretty poor material."

Now, of course, here is a subject which possibly constitutes ground for argument. I want to come up hurriedly, however, with the explanation that I did not group Lubitsch and Olcott with respect to their respective rank. I don't know which is the better. In fact, I don't care. Nor should Lubitsch or Olcott care. They are in good company. What more could they ask?

But the charge that Griffith rides beyond his depth in approaching the finer, more delicate shadings of the picture drama is, it seems to me, uncharitable and indicative of a very definite lapse of memory. Nothing in all the history of the film play has touched me so deeply as the death scene in "America," and any one of a half dozen emotional scenes in "Broken Blossoms," and any one of a half dozen more of the intimate views in "The Birth of a Nation."

Here, in these tremendously faithful and human moments which Griffith magnifies by the expert employment of orchestration and title writing lies one of his most effective strokes. The thing which has made him great is his ability to reach the heart. The heart is merely warmed by the blare and surge of his great sweeps. It is in that sudden slackening of tempo, when the violins are muted, and the camera pokes its way behind the curtain which has hidden the soul of the girl and the boy that the heart is reached and wrenched. Oh, Griffith is, if anything, an artist with the power to paint a picture with the saintest, most elusive of hues.

LUCE'S PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
NEW YORK — BOSTON
CLIPPING FROM Dayton, Ohio Herald
12-3-24

ALONG comes L. A. T. with a list of the pictures he thinks best this year. "America" is his first choice. Here are the 10:

1. "America."
2. "The Sea Hawk."
3. "Beau Brummel."
4. "The White Sister."
5. "The Thief of Bagdad."
6. "The Ten Commandments."
7. "The Humming Bird."
8. "The Fighting Coward."
9. "Open All Night."
10. "Forbidden Paradise."

What is your choice?

THE best locations for pictures aren't found—they are usually built, according to William de Mille.

And to give weight to his statement Mr. de Mille lets it be known that he has been a producer for more than 10 years and that he is now filming his fifth picture. In all this time he says he

LUCE'S PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
NEW YORK — BOSTON
CLIPPING FROM

Theater

WATCHING 'EM STRUT

By Nelson Robins

What I can't understand is why the movie directors don't go in more enthusiastically for the historical film.

By the historical film I mean the film which depicts the epics of America. Not jazz America or the America of the historical novel, but those vast movements which showed America to Americans.

D. W. Griffith saw the possibilities in "The Birth of a Nation" and "America," and has produced two films that will live. James W. Cruze saw the possibilities in the epic of the Forty-Niners, and made "The Covered Wagon."

This week at the Century there is "North of 36," which, while it falls down in many spots, has the inevitable appeal of a story having to do with one's own people in some gigantic struggle.

* * *

So far, however, the surface of the historical film field has not been scratched.

No one, for instance, has done Jamestown, or Nathaniel Bacon, perhaps the most romantic figure in American history, nor La Salle, nor a dozen others whose lives read like fiction.

Imagine, if you please, the gorgeousness of a film showing Cortez with his 300 horse and foot, taking Mexico.

And De Soto battling his way to the Mississippi before the world knew anything about a Mississippi.

There is that about deeds of courage and strength which always appeals to the movie mind, or to any other mind for that matter, and when the deeds of courage and strength can be pinned on to a real human and lovable hero the appeal becomes strong enough to make ordinary people pay money to see it.

Some years ago there was much talk of having D. W. Griffith write the history of America on celluloid and the project of raising a vast sum to carry out his ideas in that regard was considered. I don't know what became of it. Maybe he is doing so on the side.

But certainly it should be done and done in such a manner and on such a scale that the children of 200 years hence will sit tensely in their seats at school and watch their forefathers at work and play.

Then there would be no learned and long drawn out discussions as to what was done and why and where. The children could watch it being done.

And there would be no protests from any section that it was being unfairly treated.

LUCE'S PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
NEW YORK — BOSTON
CLIPPING FROM Aempe. Gard N.Y.
12-19-24 News

PROCTOR'S OPERA HOUSE.

"America"—Last showing at the Opera House Friday night.

As the production by Frederick Landis, famous New York journalist and brother of Judge Landis.

Columbus discovered America, but David Wark Griffith made her glorious. The discovery was an accident, but the picture was not an accident. Griffith gave reports where he was going and he arrived where he was headed—with a great result.

It is an epic in production.

It is not so much the story of the picture, the motive of the author, the work of the players, the dramatic currents of tragedy and drama, the superb treatment given the special or straight work of the members of a company, but it is all put over in an epic manner.

The Fortune of Fate, the Fortune of Love, the Fortune of Hate, the Fortune of Ambition, the Fortune of Patriotism, the Fortune of Revolution, the Fortune of Liberty, the Fortune of Freedom, the Fortune of Independence, the Fortune of Washington.

It is a story of a young man who loves the daughter of Tories, the daughter of a family of aristocrats, who are driven from their home by the Revolution, and who, thereby, is more intimately bound up in the world events of our country.

LUCE'S PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
NEW YORK — BOSTON
CLIPPING FROM WASHINGTON STAR

LUCE'S PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
NEW YORK — BOSTON
CLIPPING FROM

D. W. GRIFFITH

LUCE'S PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
NEW YORK BOSTON
CLIPPING FROM
LOUISVILLE (KY.) POST
JANUARY 4, 1925

Only Praise For Griffith's "America" After Preview By Educators And Civic Heads

THE ABOVE SKETCHES WERE MADE BY JACK WILHELM, HERALD STAFF ARTIST, AFTER A PREVIEW OF GRIFFITH'S "AMERICA" AT THE MARY ANDERSON.

By JACK WILHELM.

"Griffith has again reached the plane he attained with "The Birth of a Nation."

Griffith's "America" represents by far the most thrilling and satisfying motion picture since he presented his first masterpiece—"America" is his second.

A picture with more interest, more feeling and more scenic beauty has never been placed upon the screen, and Griffith has placed before rival directors an entertainment that only another Griffith can equal.

Griffith planned his picture for months. A great author wrote the story and with the greatest care for each minute historical detail a great epic American historical romance has been transferred to the screen.

Romance and adventure are unraveled with vividness and color—yet never once does it lose its accuracy as to the historical.

You see Paul Revere's ride, over the same road which he rode in '75. You see Valley Forge, with all its suffering, heroism, and, above all, the dominating figure of Washington. You see the battles of Princeton, where Washington's bravery saved a battle; Bunker Hill, the march of the British from Boston to Lexington, the engagement at Concord Bridge and the surrender of Cornwallis—a climax of beauty and scenic photography that has been evidenced thruout the picture.

At the preview on Friday there were more than 100 city officials, churchmen, representatives of patriotic and civic organizations and educators, and there was a unanimity of opinion that the artistic beauty of this Griffith work, along with the accuracy of its presentation and its educational features, should make of it one of the big outstanding films of the decade.

LUCE'S PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
NEW YORK BOSTON
CLIPPING FROM
NO. TONAWANDA (N. Y.) NEWS
JANUARY 12, 1925

AVONDALE & STAR THEATRE SHOW D. W. GRIFFITH'S 'AMERICA'

Yorktown, historic Virginia hamlet of Revolutionary fame, nestling on the James river, is aroused. For its few hundred inhabitants, who hitherto have counted the passage of time by the two great events of it career—its place in Revolutionary history and the establishment of a submarine base nearby during the World War— what they consider the third outstanding event of history, the filming there by D. W. Griffith of scenes for "America" which comes to the Star and Avondale theatres, Mon. Tues. Wed.

And now Yorktown wants to become a second Hollywood.

Historic houses, standing since 1770 formerly pointed out to visitors as the places where Washington slept, ate or visited, are now proudly exhibited as the mansions where Griffith took such and such a scene, with various local dignitaries — Revolutionary descendants — as actors.

The quaint old church, practically unchanged since the first service was held there in the early 70's, is today locally more famous as the place where Griffith and his staff, attended a Sunday service than as the meeting house where Washington's staff once knelt in prayer.

There is no newspaper in Yorktown but the intimate details of the scenes Griffith made, of how he and every member of his large company looked acted, and what they said and ate is known to every inhabitant.

SUBSCRIBE FOR THE "NEWS"

LUCE'S PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
NEW YORK BOSTON
CLIPPING FROM
MOVING PICTURE WORLD (N. Y.)
OCTOBER 25, 1925

Colonel Roosevelt Endorses "America"

The flow of approval of D. W. Griffith's spectacular film of the American Revolution "America" includes a warm testimonial by Colonel Theodore Roosevelt, former Assistant Secretary of the Navy and now Republican nominee for Governor of New York. Of this current United Artists Corporation release, Col. Roosevelt wrote to Mr. Griffith:

"I think it would be excellent if every boy and girl in the country could see your picture 'America.' If people are to thoroughly appreciate what our country means, they should know how it was made. Tradition, if it is fine tradition, should be kept always alive in the minds of the people."

LUCE'S PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
NEW YORK BOSTON
CLIPPING FROM
EXHIBITORS HERALD, CHICAGO
OCTOBER 25, 1925

Charming Pittsburgh ladies present patrons of the State and Liberty theatres, with buttons for Coolidge, Davis or LaFollette, together with a ballot advertising the D. W. Griffith production "America" which played the Rowland & Clark [illegible]

LUCE'S PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
NEW YORK BOSTON
CLIPPING FROM
[illegible] (TEXAS) NEWS
[illegible]

anything to the public [illegible]

AN INSPIRING MOVIE.

In bringing the motion picture "America" to Chattanooga, Davis King Summers post of the American Legion has preformed a signal service for the community by offering something that stimulates sleeping patriotism and recreates a profound reverence for those brave men who brought this republic into being.

There is so much of triviality and there is so much that is not wholesome in the aggregate of movie offerings, the appearance on the screen of a picture like "America" is refreshing and most welcome. The educational opportunities of the picture screen are almost illimitable. True, this opportunity has not been entirely neglected, but much more could be done in teaching the history of the United States through the agency of the motion picture.

Purely educational pictures, naturally, will not have a wide vogue, because they do not meet a popular demand, but with such productions as "The Birth of a Nation" and "America" the spectator is absorbed and thrilled as well as instructed.

LUCE'S PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
NEW YORK BOSTON
CLIPPING FROM
EXHIBITORS HERALD, CHICAGO
OCTOBER 25, 1925

United Artists

AMERICA, a D. W. Griffith production for a second mortgage on the house and pawned my wife's rings, thereby raising enough to play this masterpiece. I visited twenty-eight town and country schools, handing out hearsay and cards that would admit any school pupil regardless of age for 15 cents (my regular adult admission being 55 cents) and in addition had all the first, second and third grade children of Baltimore, school stop "America" and pledge their allegiance to the flag on the first night. Then on the second night, I had a contest between two country schools. They adopted Belgian children from each school and sang "America," the audience rating on which school did the best singing. All this got the parents and friends of the children interested which resulted in a good crowd the first two nights and the word of mouth advertising did the business for the last night. Hired a good orchestra for all three nights and attended every single performance. I should judge it might be good enough to get my wife's rings back. My advice to all exhibitors is: Play this wonderful picture, which will bring back the patronage of your theatre to school and perhaps in the place of preaching and sermons, this range of theme and in what place in this theme was politics. I think this is the great American picture, for it has universal appeal and should be seen by all our countrymen. The big action of Paul Revere's ride, Valley Forge, the battle of the Monmouth Parkway and the battle where will bring down the house if your prices are not exorbitant at least. The opening of it opens and ends in the city of Washington, where Congress and the President are seen. Hoping that Mary Anderson, who made this and other pictures possible, will be with us for a long time.

LUCE'S PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
NEW YORK BOSTON
CLIPPING FROM
EXHIBITORS HERALD, CHICAGO
OCTOBER 25, 1925

United Artists

AMERICA, a D. W. Griffith production [illegible]

LUCE'S PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
NEW YORK BOSTON
CLIPPING FROM
[illegible] TRIBUNE
JANUARY [illegible]

LUCE'S PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
NEW YORK BOSTON
CLIPPING FROM BALTIMORE AMERICAN

HON. GEORGE WASHINGTON
[illegible]
Petersburg, Va.
[illegible]

Wins Bridgeport

Lincoln Co. Sells on Griffith's "America"

KILLED IN BRUSH FIRE

NORWICH, Conn., Oct. 13 (AP)—Brush fires which have caused extensive damage throughout eastern Connecticut for the past week, today took their first life when Patrick Brennan, a member of the Norwich fire department, was overcome while fighting a blaze and died in a hospital here.

Doctors Show Best Way to Get Rid of Threatening Colds

NURSE ENDS COLD QUICK, TEMPTING WAY

Many Here Find Quickest and Most Pleasant Way Speedily End Head Colds, Coughs and Chest Colds, in Hospital and Home Use

Stuffy head colds clear up quickly—coughing is stopped in two to three minutes—and even severe colds treated in the hospital are quickly ended by a pleasant method doctors now advise for home use. And numbers of Boston people now find it more tempting to end colds at once than to needlessly risk pneumonia by neglecting treatment in time.

The experience of Miss Alice Ryan, hospital nurse, is typical. Miss Ryan contracted a severe chest cold as a result of overwork at the children's cold clinic. Examination by the house physician showed a pulse of 86, respiration 20 and temperature 100°, with severe thoracic pains.

Within a short while after she started taking her double dose of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral she was surprised to find how quickly relief began. In a few hours her fever was lost, she was breathing easier and had no thoracic pain. That night she slept comfortably and woke up feeling greatly relieved. When she returned for medical examination the next day, her temperature, pulse and respiration were normal again. A few doses of Ayer's Pectoral, the doctor reports, had cleared up the cold completely.

Note the other cases below, reported within the last 30 days.

PLEASANT WAY TO END CHILD'S COLD USED BY DOCTOR

Mother's Worry Ended By Home Use of Hospital Treatment—Stops Threatening Cold

A safe, sure method of treating colds at home is pleasant and effective. Colds that have been treated by physicians in hospitals are now being treated in the home with the same results. Mrs. C. V. Hospital, of Lynn, Mass., reports that her little boy had a cold that was threatening to develop into croup. She was very much worried. She had read about the use of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral in the Boston Post regarding its use in preventing croup, which is dangerous. The next time he showed a cold she gave him Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. The cold was gone in a few days

"ABRAHAM LINCOLN" IS SUPERB

Griffith's Great Talking Film Opens at Majestic

BY PRUNELLA HALL

The best-loved figure of American history lives again in "Abraham Lincoln," D. W. Griffith's glorious talking film, which had its New England premiere at the Majestic Theatre yesterday afternoon before a distinguished audience which included representatives of the city, State, and the clergy.

GRIFFITH'S GREATEST WORK

A special feature of the occasion was the presence of Thomas H. Sherman of Maine, who was present in Ford's Theatre the night that the President was shot, and who knew Lincoln personally in his capacity as official telegrapher. Also present was Major Dodge who was Lincoln's personal bodyguard during his presidency.

"Abraham Lincoln" is not only D. W. Griffith's first all-talking picture but the "Great Master's" finest contribution to the screen. Griffith has recreated the full life of a great and good man—from the log cabin to the theatre of death. It is a magnificent achievement, marked with poignant beauty and drama.

Huston Unbelievably Effective

And Walter Huston's portrayal of the Great Emancipator is nothing short of inspired. As Lincoln in the early 20's, awkward and ungainly, proud of his brawn, yet tender in his love for Ann Rutledge; as Lincoln at 50, sorrowing over the woes of the nation of which he is President, a lonely, brooding figure in the dark watches of the night, Huston is unbelievably effective. It is an honest and human portrait, one of the greatest that the screen will ever know.

Stephen Vincent Benet has done a masterly piece of work in adapting the colorful career of the martyred President to the screen. In making it episodic he has touched on all the highlights of Lincoln's life. And from his obscure beginnings to the highest office in the land, it is the Lincoln we all know and love, full of humor and humanness, kindliness and tolerance. And Benet has stressed Lincoln's first romance, his real love for Ann Rutledge who died of fever just before their contemplated marriage.

Cast and Camera Work Superb

The cast of the film, however, minor the role, has been carefully chosen. Outstanding are Una Merkel, a sweet and winsome Ann Rutledge; Kay Hammond, making Mary Todd Lincoln capable and a bit shrewish; Hobart Bosworth's touching characterization of General Lee.

There are innumerable Griffith touches: The vividly etched prologue which pictures the birth of Lincoln in the tiny log cabin in the Kentucky wilderness; the effective outline of the lean Lincoln in a tall hat as he descends narrow flights of stairs; the flashes of the Confederate and Union soldiers on march; the scores of slaves singing under their heavy burdens. The camera work is superb.

Smooth and Fast Paced

The whole film is fast-paced and smoothly fashioned. From the log cabin and the tiny bundle which has just been christened Abraham Lincoln, the film covers time and space—to the little country store in Illinois where Lincoln reads law, fights the local strong man; spins his homely yarns. Then he becomes a rail-splitter and a lover. His romance with Ann Rutledge is beautifully portrayed. Then her death, and some years later his jilting of Mary Todd, and two years later his marriage to her; his famous "House Divided" debates with Stephen Douglas; his nomination and election to the Presidency; his great sorrow for the bloodshed and his great determination that the "Union shall be preserved"; his command to Grant to save the North; Sheridan's wild ride; Lee's admission of failure, and then the fatal night in Ford's Theatre when John Wilkes Booth assassinates the President.

"Abraham Lincoln" is a great [illegible]

Continuing Attractions

Copley—"Shooting Shadows."
Fenway—"The Sea Wolf."
Keith's—"Her Man."
Keith-Albee—Pictures and Vaudeville.
Lyric—Leslie's "Blackbirds."
Metropolitan — "Her Wedding Night."
Modern and Beacon—"Soup to Nuts."
Park—"Conspiracy."
Plymouth—"Death Takes a Holiday."
Scollay Square Olympia — "A Rhythm Revue."
Shubert—"The Sketch Book."
Tremont—"Hell's Angels."
Wilbur—"Uncle Vanya."

ENDS MONTHS OF "INDIGESTION" IN SURPRISING WAY

There's good news for all stomach sufferers in the sensation being created by a simple discovery, due to the quick, easy way it relieves so-called "indigestion," and its effects, such as gas, bloating, belching, headaches, nausea, heartburn, etc.

"Pape's Diapepsin," as it is called, is eaten like candy—and in just [illegible] minutes. No upsetting of [illegible] stomach. Normal digestion is restored, stops! [illegible]

Thousands are so enthusiastic over the results they are securing that they simply have to tell their experiences to help others. Here's what attractive Mrs. Grace Holt, No. 1 Dean Way, So. Boston, Mass., says:

"I suffered from nervous indigestion for many months until I couldn't sleep right and nothing agreed with me. I would have gas on my stomach, sour stomach, heartburn, and would bloat badly after every meal.

"I tried a lot of medicines but nothing helped until I heard about Pape's Diapepsin and got some. It ended my trouble in a surprising way."

At druggists all Pape's Diapepsin is only 60c. Pape's Diapepsin, Wheeling, W. Va., for a FREE sample box.

PAPE'S DIAPEPSIN
Quick Relief for Stomach Ills

ECZEMA
Itching Skin

[illegible]

New Face Powder Stays on Longer

[illegible]

Try this Quick Method For Blackheads

[illegible]

MADE FILM FOR THEIR PARENTS

Mexican President's Sons Spent Month in Hollywood

ATCHISON, Kan., Oct. 13 (UP)—Guillermo and Fernando Ortiz Rubio, sons of the President of Mexico, sat hunched over desks tonight, in the study hall of St. Benedict's College here, faced with the task of making up work lost when they spent a month's vacation in Hollywood.

MADE TWO-REEL COMEDY

Guillermo and Fernando, 18 and 19 respectively, will be assisted by special tutors, the Rev. Father Richard Burns said. The two arrived Friday and were met by the smiles of everyone except Father Burns, "dean of discipline" at the school.

"I like to study," Fernando said. "But I think we like Hollywood better. Father has promised us a new automobile if we make good grades here."

The two boys made a two-reel comedy under direction of Mack Sennett, for their parents to exhibit at Chapultepec Castle at Mexico City. The remainder of the cast was made up of five Mack Sennett bathing beauties.

"It's not much of a picture!" Guillermo and Fernando explained in their broken English. "We made it on a ship in the bay. Just played, made some funny faces and had a good time."

Guillermo has decided to be a civil engineer while Fernando declared he would study agricultural engineering, believing the knowledge could be used to aid Mexican farmers. Both boys will study English, mathematics, chemistry, and religious education this semester, Father Burns said.

Sons of 30 prominent Mexican families are enrolled in St. Benedict's.

ANN CORIO AT OLD HOWARD

Burlesque's Most Beautiful Girl; Fight Pictures

No burlesque girl ever received a greater reception than that accorded to Ann Corio yesterday at the Howard. Long hailed the most handsome in burlesque, she was greeted by hundreds of friends and she demonstrated her ability as a singer and dancing star and she had to respond to many deserved encores. She was attired in the height of style, plus and got a merry, [illegible] reception. The fight pictures of the recent Maloney-Carnera battle proved a knockout with the sporting fans who were well represented.

Arthur Petty and company offered a comedy novelet act that caught the popular fancy and the Five Hot Shots held a lively interest dancing act "Argentine" and "Montana Moon" with the usual features, rounded out a rousing bill of merriment.

ALL STAR BILL AT ORPHEUM

Franklyn Ardell Heads List in "Whoopee," Talkie

Florence Shepherd's and Dermont Dobson's "Whoopee," among vaudevillians adapted from Eddie Cantor's great stage hit, with the comedian reprising the complete for the screen version, is at Loew's Orpheum this week.

The rollicking show this week might well be termed an all-star comedy bill. Comedy there is aplenty and it ranges from Franklyn Ardell's inimitable drunk act to the playing of Jack Benny, a comedian based in the personal favorite with lovers of several years ago, who, together with Frances Arnold, comprises the Benny and Berrens team, presented last week in "Fifty Million Frenchmen." Benny is the funny man of the team and he has a comedy routine that is sure to please the most critical. Miss Arnold is the straight woman and she does her part well.

Ardell, who is a comedian of the first water, is the star of the show. He is ably supported by Miss Shepherd, who is a comedienne of no mean ability herself. Dobson is a good straight man.

Ardell's drunk act is a masterpiece of its kind. Ardell is a comedian who can do no wrong. He is funny in everything he does. He is funny when he does nothing at all. He is funny when he does something that is not funny at all. He is funny when he does something that is not funny at all and yet it is funny. He is funny when he does something that is not funny at all and yet it is funny and he does it so well that it is funny.

Ardell's drunk act is a masterpiece of its kind. Ardell is a comedian who can do no wrong. He is funny in everything he does. He is funny when he does nothing at all. He is funny when he does something that is not funny at all. He is funny when he does something that is not funny at all and yet it is funny. He is funny when he does something that is not funny at all and yet it is funny and he does it so well that it is funny.

Ardell's drunk act is a masterpiece of its kind. Ardell is a comedian who can do no wrong. He is funny in everything he does. He is funny when he does nothing at all. He is funny when he does something that is not funny at all. He is funny when he does something that is not funny at all and yet it is funny. He is funny when he does something that is not funny at all and yet it is funny and he does it so well that it is funny.

Ardell's drunk act is a masterpiece of its kind. Ardell is a comedian who can do no wrong. He is funny in everything he does. He is funny when he does nothing at all. He is funny when he does something that is not funny at all. He is funny when he does something that is not funny at all and yet it is funny. He is funny when he does something that is not funny at all and yet it is funny and he does it so well that it is funny.

Ardell's drunk act is a masterpiece of its kind. Ardell is a comedian who can do no wrong. He is funny in everything he does. He is funny when he does nothing at all. He is funny when he does something that is not funny at all. He is funny when he does something that is not funny at all and yet it is funny. He is funny when he does something that is not funny at all and yet it is funny and he does it so well that it is funny.

Ardell's drunk act is a masterpiece of its kind. Ardell is a comedian who can do no wrong. He is funny in everything he does. He is funny when he does nothing at all. He is funny when he does something that is not funny at all. He is funny when he does something that is not funny at all and yet it is funny. He is funny when he does something that is not funny at all and yet it is funny and he does it so well that it is funny.

Ardell's drunk act is a masterpiece of its kind. Ardell is a comedian who can do no wrong. He is funny in everything he does. He is funny when he does nothing at all. He is funny when he does something that is not funny at all. He is funny when he does something that is not funny at all and yet it is funny. He is funny when he does something that is not funny at all and yet it is funny and he does it so well that it is funny.

Ardell's drunk act is a masterpiece of its kind. Ardell is a comedian who can do no wrong. He is funny in everything he does. He is funny when he does nothing at all. He is funny when he does something that is not funny at all. He is funny when he does something that is not funny at all and yet it is funny. He is funny when he does something that is not funny at all and yet it is funny and he does it so well that it is funny.

Ardell's drunk act is a masterpiece of its kind. Ardell is a comedian who can do no wrong. He is funny in everything he does. He is funny when he does nothing at all. He is funny when he does something that is not funny at all. He is funny when he does something that is not funny at all and yet it is funny. He is funny when he does something that is not funny at all and yet it is funny and he does it so well that it is funny.

Ardell's drunk act is a masterpiece of its kind. Ardell is a comedian who can do no wrong. He is funny in everything he does. He is funny when he does nothing at all. He is funny when he does something that is not funny at all. He is funny when he does something that is not funny at all and yet it is funny. He is funny when he does something that is not funny at all and yet it is funny and he does it so well that it is funny.

Ardell's drunk act is a masterpiece of its kind. Ardell is a comedian who can do no wrong. He is funny in everything he does. He is funny when he does nothing at all. He is funny when he does something that is not funny at all. He is funny when he does something that is not funny at all and yet it is funny. He is funny when he does something that is not funny at all and yet it is funny and he does it so well that it is funny.

Ardell's drunk act is a masterpiece of its kind. Ardell is a comedian who can do no wrong. He is funny in everything he does. He is funny when he does nothing at all. He is funny when he does something that is not funny at all. He is funny when he does something that is not funny at all and yet it is funny. He is funny when he does something that is not funny at all and yet it is funny and he does it so well that it is funny.

SIMPLE HOME MIXTURE DARKENS GRAY HAIR

[illegible]

Indigestion All Gone

[illegible]

"STEPPERS" AT WALDRON'S

Four Vaudeville Acts and Two Pictures Besides

[illegible]

To Wake up FIT Tomorrow Take one TONIGHT

Cascarets 10c

SCREEN GOSSIP

WALTER HUSTON

HE MAKES LINCOLN LIVE

A combination of brawn and brain, comic and dramatic thespian, hero and villain—that is Walter Huston, who plays the title role in D. W. Griffith's "Abraham Lincoln," the United Artists' epic which opened yesterday at the Majestic Theatre.

Born in Canada, he just naturally gravitated to the stage, as most actors do.

Devoid of flourishes and affectations, he is just a regular heman; willing to chew nails to show how hard he is, or wear spats. Nothing matters to him.

One of his many good points is that he doesn't take serious things seriously, himself included.

Carried a spear once for Richard Mansfield so he could go down in history with the Mantels and Barrymores.

Claims to have played everything in the theatre but the cake of ice in "Uncle Tom's Cabin."

Once, to change his luck, he went into vaudeville. There he learned to be an electrician, a song and dance man, a ticket taker and finally, a leading man. It changed his luck.

The show business is the show business, he says. It rains on Sundays and shines on Tuesdays, but you take the flowers and the smacks and like them both.

His First Success

When the smacks were the heaviest, Brock Pemberton emerged from behind a cloud of gloom and gave Walter his first big Broadway chance. That was five years ago.

The play was "The Easy Mark." Since then this capable actor has starred in "Desire Under the Elms," "The Barker," "Elmer the Great" and "The Commodore Maries."

Paramount officials thought he might make a movie actor, so they gave him a start in "Gentlemen of the Press." The picture, in picture parlance, was a "wow." They tried him in another, "The Lady Lies"; it was also a sensational money success. A third attempt brought forth "The Virginian"; another bull's-eye.

Huston is either very lucky or very good—everything he touches turns to gold, as the saying goes.

D. W. Griffith thought Huston resembled Lincoln more than any other actor in the States.

The result was a contract for Huston that makes ordinary motion picture salaries fade into [illegible].

Huston knows what to do with his money. He has the nerve, he says, to go into a bank and argue for a half per cent more interest. He is equally effective against female book agents.

Other principals in the cast of "Abraham Lincoln" are Kay Hammond, as "Mary Todd"; Una Merkel, as "Ann Rutledge"; Ian Keith, as "John Wilkes Booth"; Jason Robards, as "Herndon"; Hobart Bosworth, as "Robert E. Lee"; Frank Campeau, as "Phil Sheridan," and Lucille La Verne.

* * *

THEIR PRIVATE LIVES

Have movie idols a right to a private life for themselves and their children? The question is discussed pro and con by Adela Rogers St. Johns in an article entitled "No Close-Ups for Baby," in the November issue of The New Movie Magazine.

Would a picture of Nancy Carroll with her baby—she has a beautiful 4-year-old daughter—destroy your illusions? Nancy Carroll believes it would, and she will never have a photograph taken with her baby. "We public idols not foster the illusion our public has about us," she says.

Gloria Swanson has never had a photograph taken of her 10-year-old daughter and her adopted son, but her reasons are very different from Nancy Carroll's, according to Mrs. St. Johns. "I don't want my baby to be public property," Gloria Swanson says. "I want her childhood to be simple and unspoiled. I don't want all of the hectic part of my career to touch her in any way."

Norma Shearer has decided that her baby boy is not to be part of the public life of Mrs. Irving Thalberg. Dolores Costello has taken an entirely different stand from the others. Her small daughter has already been photographed a lot some. Mrs. St. Johns says that it is an inspiringly beautiful picture. "Motherhood has added much to the slightly cold beauty of Miss Costello's face," the writer claims. "Her pride leaps through the film."

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

Charlotte—Monte Carlo [illegible] "Bulldog" is the pet [illegible] Tony, [illegible] Mary Pickford [illegible] Ruth Mack, a [illegible] Mrs. Ruth Mack, Boston.

Other Features on Pages 16 and 17

MRS. MARY E. CARAHER DIES IN 80TH YEAR

[illegible]

Hands Not to Heat Cloth, Thus Shoots Self

[illegible]

"GOOD NEWS" AT BOWDOIN SQ.

Also "Man Trouble" Night Club Story and Acts

At the popular Bowdoin Square Theatre is a most attractive talking picture and vaudeville programme that is meeting with great favor. The top feature is entitled, "Good News," a Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer super-special that is just packed with four years of college life in which the cast contains Bessie Love, Stanley Smith, Mary Lawlor, Cliff Edwards and Lola Lane. During the action of this picture is displayed several football thrills with youthful enthusiasm at its height. The offering is alive with song hits of the most entertaining nature and the dancing features win the plaudits of the entire house.

Another feature introduced the fight pictures of the recent Maloney-Carnera battle and it was enjoyed by the ladies as well as the gentlemen in the house. Another feature of merit presented, "Man Trouble," an all talking Fox movietone drama, a swift moving thriller that introduced the high spots of life of a New York night club in which the "boss" of that organization was slated for a "ride." In the cast were Dorothy Mackaill, Milton Sills, and Kenneth McKenna. Another film offered the animal comedy, "Who Killed Rover?" Four vaudeville acts pleased in good measure. They included Angus and Searls, Ingalls and Gaines, Webber and Ray, and Reynor brothers.

POWDER PUFFS AT THE GAYETY

Big Mechanical Ballet Features the Burlesque

An amazing dance number was the feature of "Powder Puff Revue," which opened yesterday at the Gayety, Boston's uptown burlesque theatre. A big mechanical ballet, people with living machinery, against which unusual background "The Dance of the Mechanical Dolls" was performed by the Boylans, late of George White's "Scandals."

As if to show the versatility of the producer, another smashing scene was "The Silver Garden," which was a scenic knockout. A number of unusual poses were in evidence in the final tableau.

But the two big scenes, although enough to carry any show, did not constitute the only feature. Frances Parks, and Elvia Herndon, the two featured players of the feminine contingent, kept the audience in rare good humor from start to finish.

The comedy, in the hands of Sammy Weston, Jewish comedian, and Lew Powers, an eccentric, was continuous and ridiculous—and the audience loved it. Those two working with George Kinnear, singing straight man, dished out laugh after laugh. They had a new line. Harry Allen and Mickey Mays, violin-playing ingenue, were where the crowd enjoyed.

Be a Magician

RHYTHM REVUE AT SCOLLAY SQ.

Helen Johns Presents Her "Glorious Girls"

This week's vaudeville bill at the Scollay Sq. Theatre is another example of what first-rate vaudeville has to offer. Helen Johns and her Glorious Girls present "A Rhythm Revue," featuring the Misses McLellan and Peterson: the act is one of the most versatile on the stage and the girls, besides looking beautiful, sing, dance and play in royal fashion. They are a tremendous hit.

The show opened with a special Columbus Day overture, played by the Scollay Sq. Orchestra with Charlie Frank conducting, with Tedasco, a marvel of the accordion, and Miss Esthel Nagel, one of the finest of sopranos, assisting.

Wally and Zella get the vaudeville show off to a fine start with a splendid display of tap dancing; then comes Demarrest and Drollet in musical moments that were both funny and clever; next appeared Miss Jean Boydell, who is billed as a "unique pepologist," and she got over in great shape. Helen Johns and her Glorious Girls next came on with special costumes, scenery and beautiful lighting effects; it is one of the finest flash acts in recent years. The big comedy honors of the show go to Seed and London, however, for they stopped the show cold with their hilarious offering. Also a big hit in the comedy line were Mardo and Janis, who "threw the bull" as only real comedians can. Munroe Brothers close the show in true big-time fashion.

Jack London's greatest story, "The Sea Wolf," with the late Milton Sills, is the picture.

LIGHT COMEDY AT THE STATE

"Those Three French Girls" Title of Film

"Those Three French Girls" is the title of the all-talkie feature at Loew's State Theatre this week, but it is the three gentlemen in the film who take the honors. Reginald Denny, tall and handsome and very English in his dialogue, is very amusing, as is Cliff Edwards his ukelele, and "monkey" business.

Fifi D'Orsay is the most important French girl and she chatters French and English at a regular "Floyd Gibbons" tempo.

It is all very light and farcical and the comedy highlight to us was when Reginald Denny drove one of those miniature autos right up the steps of his uncle's French chateau and chased the dignified butler around the great hall.

The story opens with three gentlemen and "those three French girls" in jail. They eventually escape their bars and spend the night in a barn. Reginald has fallen for Fifi, very hard, but it is only the first reel or so. Thus we have the little French girl misunderstanding the big Englishman. She thinks he is one grand flirt because his uncle says so. But it is uncle who is the Don Juan, but Fifi doesn't find out about it until she is about to become Reginald's aunt via marriage. Uncle has given her a modiste shop to play around in until their marriage and that is an excuse for a fashion show.

But just before the wedding bells ring, Reginald fixes things so that he has the happy ending instead of uncle.

EXETER STREET THEATRE

Lewis Stone in "Strictly Unconventional" and Bessie Love in "Good News" are the attractions for today and Wednesday at the Exeter Street Theatre. The last half of the week William Boyd will be seen in "The Storm." Cyril Maude in "Grumpy" also will be shown.

For all SILKS use the new CARBONA Grease Absorbent POWDER

REMOVES GREASE SPOTS WITHOUT LEAVING A "RING"!

Most silks are now "weighted" or "loaded" with foreign substances to make them appear of better quality. Liquid cleaners dissolve this "weighting" or "loading," and this causes "rings" on Silks. We have therefore created Carbona Grease Absorbent Powder for use on Silks only. This Powder will not affect "weighting" or "loading" in any way—it absorbs Grease Spots instead of dissolving them, and no "rings" can result from its use on Silks.

For all other Fabrics use Carbona Cleaning Fluid

20c size Cans at Drug Stores

Copy of an expensive custom model

Deep Luxurious Down Cushion CLUB CHAIR

SPECIAL $110

ONE of the most comfortable chairs and remarkable trades we have ever had. Back pillow and seat cushion are both separate, reversible and (would you believe it possible?) down filled.

Springs are carefully hand tied like our own shop pieces and rest on strong webbing. Filling is all hair. Outside seams welted. The arms roll gracefully and are thickly upholstered. Most surprising of all, you can have your choice of many rich fabrics, including mohairs, tapestries, frieze, damasks in a variety of colors to harmonize with any room scheme. Custom chairs like this in these fine coverings would easily sell for around $200.

PAINE FURNITURE CO.
81 Arlington Street

"ABRAHAM LINCOLN" IS SUPERB

Griffith's Great Talking Film Opens at Majestic

BY PRUNELLA HALL

The best-loved figure of American history lives again in "Abraham Lincoln," D. W. Griffith's glorious talking film, which had its New England premiere at the Majestic Theatre yesterday afternoon before a distinguished audience which included representatives of the city, State, and the clergy.

GRIFFITH'S GREATEST WORK

A special feature of the occasion was the presence of Thomas H. Sherman of Maine, who was present in Ford's Theatre the night that the President was shot, and who knew Lincoln personally in his capacity as official telegrapher. Also present was Major Dodge who was Lincoln's personal bodyguard during his presidency.

"Abraham Lincoln" is not only D. W. Griffith's first all-talking picture but the "Great Master's" finest contribution to the screen. Griffith has recreated the full life of a great and good man—from the log cabin to the theatre of death. It is a magnificent achievement, marked with poignant beauty and drama.

Huston Unbelievably Effective

And Walter Huston's portrayal of the Great Emancipator is nothing short of inspired. As Lincoln in the early 20's, awkward and ungainly, proud of his brawn, yet tender in his love for Ann Rutledge; as Lincoln at 50, sorrowing over the woes of the nation of which he is President, a lonely, brooding figure in the dark watches of the night, Huston is unbelievably effective. It is an honest and human portrait, one of the greatest that the screen will ever know.

Stephen Vincent Benet has done a masterly piece of work in adapting the colorful career of the martyred President to the screen. In making it episodic he has touched on all the highlights of Lincoln's life. And from his obscure beginnings to the highest office in the land, it is the Lincoln we all know and love, full of humor and humanness, kindliness and tolerance. And Benet has stressed Lincoln's first romance, his real love for Ann Rutledge who died of fever just before their contemplated marriage.

Cast and Camera Work Superb

The cast of the film, however, minor the role, has been carefully chosen. Outstanding are Una Merkel, a sweet and winsome Ann Rutledge; Kay Hammond, making Mary Todd Lincoln capable and a bit shrewish; Hobart Bosworth's touching characterization of General Lee.

There are innumerable Griffith touches: The vividly etched prologue which pictures the birth of Lincoln in the tiny log cabin in the Kentucky wilderness; the effective outline of the lean Lincoln in a tall hat as he descends narrow flights of stairs; the flashes of the Confederate and Union soldiers on march; the scores of slaves singing under their heavy burdens. The camera work is superb.

Smooth and Fast Paced

The whole film is fast-paced and smoothly fashioned. From the log cabin and the tiny bundle which has just been christened Abraham Lincoln, the film covers time and space—to the little country store in Illinois where Lincoln reads law, fights the local strong man; spins his homely yarns. Then he becomes a rail-splitter and a lover. His romance with Ann Rutledge is beautifully portrayed. Then her death, and some years later his jilting of Mary Todd, and two years later his marriage to her; his famous "House Divided" debates with Stephen Douglas; his nomination and election to the Presidency; his great sorrow for the bloodshed and his great determination that the "Union shall be preserved"; his command to Grant to leave the North; Sheridan's wild ride; Lee's admission of failure, and then the fatal night in Ford's Theatre when John Wilkes Booth assassinates the President.

"Abraham Lincoln" is a great screen adventure for the present generation and generations to come.

Continuing Attractions

Copley—"Shooting Shadows."
Fenway—"The Sea Wolf."
Keith's—"Her Man."
Keith-Albee—Pictures and Vaudeville.
Lyric—Leslie's "Blackbirds."
Metropolitan — "Her Wedding Night."
Modern and Beacon—"Soup to Nuts."
Park—"Conspiracy."
Plymouth—"Death Takes a Holiday."
Scollay Square Olympia — "A Rhythm Revue."
Shubert—"The Sketch Book."
Tremont—"Hell's Angels."
Wilbur—"Uncle Vanya."

ENDS MONTHS OF "INDIGESTION" IN SURPRISING WAY

There's good news for all stomach sufferers in the sensation being created by a simple discovery, due to the quick, easy way it relieves so-called "indigestion," and its effects, such as gas, bloating, belching, headaches, nausea, heartburn, etc.

"Pape's Diapepsin," as it is called, is extra like candy—and is just as harmless. It is the quickest, surest, safest thing we know of. Thousands are now regaining their normal digestion, it is claimed.

Thousands are so enthusiastic over the results they are securing that they simply have to tell their acquaintances to help others. Here's what Miss Grace Hall, No. 1 Hancock Way, So. Boston, Mass., says: "I suffered from nervous indigestion for many months until I couldn't sleep right and nothing agreed with me. I would have gas on my stomach, sour stomach, heartburn, and would bloat badly after every meal.

"I tried a lot of medicines but nothing helped until I heard about Pape's Diapepsin and got some. It ended my trouble in a surprising way."

All druggists sell Pape's Diapepsin or write Pape's Diapepsin, Wisconsin Ave., Washington, D. C., for a FREE sample box.

PAPE'S DIAPEPSIN
Quick Relief for Stomach Ills

ECZEMA
Itching Skin

If you ever suffered what you call torture, Eczema, Itching, Pimples, Rashes, Blotches, Scaly Skin, Ugly Eruptions, Blackheads, Blemishes, Dandruff, Scalp Itch, Boils, Rashes, Chafing, Sunburn, Poison Ivy, Poison Oak, Insect Bites, Stubborn Pimples

KILLED IN BRUSH FIRE

NORWICH, Conn., Oct. 13 (AP)—Brush fires which have caused extensive damage throughout eastern Connecticut for the past week, today took their first life when Patrick Brennan, a member of the Norwich fire department, was overcome while fighting a blaze and died in a hospital here.

Doctors Show Best Way to Get Rid of Threatening Colds

NURSE ENDS COLD QUICK, TEMPTING WAY

Many Here Find Quickest and Most Pleasant Way Speedily End Head Colds, Coughs and Chest Colds, in Hospital and Home Use

Stuffy head colds clear up quickly—coughing is stopped in two to three minutes—and even severe colds treated in the hospital are quickly ended by a pleasant method doctors now advise for home use. And numbers of Boston people now find it more tempting to end colds at once than to needlessly risk pneumonia by neglecting treatment in time.

PLEASANT WAY TO END CHILD'S COLD USED BY DOCTOR

Mother's Worry Ended By Home Use of Hospital Treatment—Stops Threatening Cold

The experience of Miss Alice Ryan, hospital nurse, is typical. Miss Ryan contracted a severe chest cold as a result of overwork at the children's cold clinic. Examination by the house physician showed a pulse of 86, respiration 20 and temperature 100°, with severe thoracic pains.

Within a short while after she started using her double strength doses of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral she was surprised to find how quickly relief began. In a few hours her fever was less; she was breathing easier and had no thoracic pain. That night she slept comfortably and woke up feeling greatly relieved. When she returned for medical examination the next day, her temperature, pulse and respiration were normal again. A few doses of Ayer's Pectoral, the doctor reports, had cleared up the cold completely.

END COLD CAUGHT WORKING AT NIGHT IN CHILLY OFFICE

People Have Find Hospital Method Pleasing for Home Use—Relief Soon Comes

STOPS HEAD COLD CAUGHT SHOPPING

AYER'S Cherry Pectoral

ANTARCTIC CONQUEROR ACCLAIMED

Byrd Given Ovation by 5000 at Dartmouth Stadium

HANOVER, N. H., Oct. 13—Receiving an ovation as great as any football team ever in the Dartmouth Stadium, Rear Admiral Byrd addressed a crowd of 5000 here today. The address was given as the culminating episode of northern New England's reception to the leader of the latest expedition to Antarctic.

ADMIRES OUTING CLUB

Rear Admiral Byrd was very much impressed by the Dartmouth Outing Club and said that he would call for volunteers from it on his future expeditions. He also expressed his appreciation to Senator Moses for what he has done for the navy in the following words: "Senator Moses is the best friend the navy ever had and we all love him."

The address which he gave was prepared for this occasion and has not been delivered at any other place. He compared the Arctic and the Antarctic regions, being much more favorably impressed with the South Polar spaces than those of the North Pole.

Visibility Poor Near Pole

He told about flying in these cold climates and said that there was little difference except that visibility was worse. He continued to discourse about life at the Poles, giving all the little intimate details which would interest the non-technical audience to which he was talking.

Senator George H. Moses of New Hampshire acted as master of ceremonies and introduced the various speakers. Governor Weeks represented Vermont. Dr. A. Warren Stearns extended greetings in behalf of Governor Allen of Massachusetts. Professor Ralph A. Burns spoke for Governor Gardiner of Maine. Governor Charles W. Tobey welcomed Byrd to New Hampshire, officially, and introduced him to the audience.

Reaches Hanover at Noon

With the Dartmouth and Newport, N. H., American Legion bands leading the procession, Commander Byrd was ushered into Hanover shortly after 12 o'clock. The many colored autumn leaves of the elms and maples lining Main street lent their brilliant plumage to the gayety of the occasion.

The student body of Dartmouth College was on the campus in full force to tender their welcome to the conqueror of the South Pole. Several lusty "Wah Who Wahs" rang out in what seemed mid-summer day. The Dartmouth Outing Club took charge of the guest of honor at this point and escorted him to the outing club house for the luncheon.

Play Annapolis' Tune

At 2:45 Byrd arrived at the Memorial football stadium, where he was met by the processional escort, which led him to the campus at noon, and, accompanied by the other speakers of the day, went to the platform in the center of the gridiron. During this time the Dartmouth band played "Anchors Aweigh," in honor of Annapolis, Byrd's alma mater.

Before the programme an air carnival was put on by Frank Hawks, Robert Page and "Dusty" Wilson. Hawks did his travel-air mystery plane in which he broke Lindbergh's transcontinental speed record. Page and Wilson are both well-known flyers in the East.

Teams of Eskimo Dogs

Two full teams of Eskimo dogs added zest to the occasion. Arthur P. Noble of Wrightsville, N. H., brought up one team, which comprised two of the huskies in the Byrd Polar expedition, and the others were sent in by Fred C. Kent of Meredith, N. H., who had been in service during the World War. Noble's team was formerly owned by Commander Byrd.

The ceremonies at Memorial Stadium were followed by a dinner given the guest of honor by the Dartmouth Club, after which he was taken to the Newport Inn, where he was the guest of honor at a dinner given by the Newport Chamber of Commerce.

GIRL HUSH ON REASON FOR TAKING POISON

COLDS

Grove's Laxative BROMO QUININE Tablets

Waltham Sisters Wed at Double Ceremony

DOUBLE WEDDING OF WALTHAM SISTERS

Mr. and Mrs. Elmer T. Priest, at left, and Mr. and Mrs. Harold L. Moody, after double wedding ceremony at St. Charles Church, Waltham. The brides are the former Misses Lucy and Gertrude McGrath, of Underwood Park, Waltham.

St. Charles' Church, Waltham, was the scene of a double wedding ceremony yesterday morning when the Misses Gertrude and Lucy McGrath, daughters of Mr. and Mrs. P. F. McGrath of Underwood park, Waltham, were married to Harold L. Moody of Boston and Elmer T. Priest of West Newton.

The Rev. Peter J. Walsh officiated at the ceremony and the nuptial mass at 9 o'clock. Miss Gertrude McGrath became the bride of Harold L. Moody, a Boston commercial artist, being attended by Miss Madeline LeClair of Waltham. George Hudson of Watertown was the best man.

Miss Lucy McGrath was married to Elmer T. Priest and her bridesmaid was Miss Marie Campbell of Waltham. Raymond Gibbons of West Newton was the best man for the Priest-McGrath ceremony.

After the ceremony and mass, a reception was held at the Dixie Manor, Main street, Waltham, following which the two couples left for a motor tour through the Southern States.

Gossip of the Town

The ultra-magnates in the town's higher racketeering circles are just a step beyond our social rebels, but the stoop-shouldered, smile-twisted, sallow faced, over-dressed boys the smaller whose names are more or less not to be found in the [illegible] of the underworld, [illegible] pair of shoes and a 49-cent tie, or a suit of clothes made in the town's best shop for $50 and a low bargain shirt to go with it. Dues, of course, to the stunning and extremely radical fluctuations in crook-fortunes.

A little hamburger sandwich place off Boylston street does a roaring business from this clientele too, gets the most luxurious dinners in another part of the town one day and drops here the next to fill up on the stuff that 10 cents will buy. Just a case of being broke one minute and in the dough the next. Likewise, another rich spot on Massachusetts avenue of what has come to be known as the various "white light" districts. The philosophy of this way up and way down kind of living is throughout evidenced by that song with the big money-and-no-money chorus, and right now it is a very sad by the week that goes by in which it does not sound off.

[illegible]

AVIATOR TALKS TO AIR OFFICES

First Test of Radio Telephone by Colonial Co.

Airplane passenger service between Boston and New York made another great step forward yesterday when Colonial Air Transport successfully maintained direct communication by voice between one of its passenger planes in the air and its offices in Boston and Newark.

It was the first test of the radio telephone apparatus that has been installed by the company at great expense in its hangars at the Boston and Newark airports and in the huge planes that it operates six days a week over the 200-mile route.

While Ralph S. Maughm, manager of the Colonial base at the Boston airport said that all statements must come from the main office at Newark, indications are that by next summer passengers flying between Boston and New York will be able to talk from the plane with any person they want to call by telephone. The call will go by radio from the plane to the nearer hangar, thence by way of the telephone in the usual manner. It will be a special service, plans for which the company has not yet worked out.

Elling H. Veblen flying a tri-motored Ford from Newark yesterday morning with passengers thus became the first regular passenger pilot in New England to talk by radio telephone to his own offices. He could hear perfectly well, he said. Veblen said that for the first 100 miles, or until he was near Hartford, he kept in communication with the Colonial radio operator at Newark. Then he picked up John H. Gould, Colonial radio operator at the Boston airport and talked to him while flying along a mile up in the air.

PRIESTS AT FUNERAL OF FATHER CARLIN

WORCESTER, Oct. 13 (AP)—The funeral of the Rev. James J. Carlin, S. J., superior of the Jesuit order in the Philippines, and former president of Holy Cross College was at the college today, with a low mass of requiem.

The Rev. James M. Kilroy, S. J. of Weston College, New England, provincial of the Jesuit order, was celebrant. Seated in the sanctuary were a number of distinguished members of the Jesuit order and secular priests from Boston College and various points in New England, and students of Holy Cross College. Among the mourners were members of Father Carlin's immediate family from Peabody, and relatives from other New England cities and towns.

ACTRESS ASKS $100,000

LOS ANGELES, Oct. 13 (AP)—Ann Christy, film actress, demanded $100,000 for a broken nose in a suit filed today against the Herbert M. Baruch Corporation, owners of a ditching machine which her automobile struck on a Hollywood street the night of Aug. 12.

Here's Good News

After months of planning we are conforming to the present conditions and have established

A new low price of $42.50

BECAUSE—Greater economies in our new location. The prices of these woolens have come down. Giving $50 and $55 values at $42.50 means increased volume of business. Including Suitings and Overcoatings with the same good tailoring, woolens and linings. Others up to $75.

The Boston Tailoring Co.

Est 1899

MEN'S TAILORS

333 Washington St.—Opp. Milk St.

2ND FLOOR — PROVINCE BLDG.

BUSINESS SERVICE GUIDE

Anything You Want? Find it Here!

THE ADDINGTON
124 WINTHROP RD., BROOKLINE, MASS. A quiet home for convalescents and elderly folks to rest. Spacious porches and private baths; nurse in charge. Tel. Regent 8130.

ADDRESSING MULTIGRAPHING
Typewriting—Stationery—Sue Ins. E. O. KENREY 30 Kilby Street, Hancock 0246.

ALLSTON HAND LAUNDRY
Owned and operated by women exclusively. Service and satisfaction your. Be assured—give us a trial. Work called for and delivered. Call Stadium 0454. 63 Harvard Ave., Allston.

AMERICAN GLASS COMPANY
Glass for all purposes. Auto Glass set while you wait. Mirrors resilvered. 369 Perry St., Everett. Tel. 0914.

ANGLE IRON KENNELS
Dogs Boarded. Individual stalls and runs. Terriers trimmed. Dogs at stud. Wire-haired Fox Terrier, Welsh and Cocker Spaniel Pups for sale. 148 LOWELL ST., WILMINGTON. Tel. Wilmington 392.

ANNA GARRITY SCHOOL
of Dancing, 127 Commonwealth St., Weymouth. Open day. Brains studios: 1218 Forbes Street Pa. W. Bailey; 949 Fellows Bldg., Hing. Information. Tel Weymouth 1340-1080.

ANTIQUES Rare and unusual Antiques. For sale at 10 Monument Sq. Charlestown. Also Little of Everything. Tel. Kenmore 4166.

ANTIQUE FURNITURE [illegible]

ANTIQUES—FURNITURE [illegible]

ANTS—BED BUGS [illegible]

ARBORWAY RIDING SCHOOL [illegible]

ARE YOU TOO STOUT? [illegible]

AUTOGRAPH MUSIC PRINTING CARL F. LUDWIG [illegible]

AUTOMOBILE POLISH [illegible]

ALLEY OF MUSICAL COMEDY SONGS [illegible]

ALLEN'S BEAD STORE BEADS [illegible]

BEAUTICIAN [illegible]

BLAISDELL'S [illegible]

BLUE ROSE PATTERNS [illegible]

BOWLING ALLEYS [illegible]

BRAKES [illegible]

CARDS [illegible]

CARPENTER BUILDER [illegible]

CARPENTER AND CONTRACTOR [illegible]

CHIROPODIST [illegible]

CHESTNUT HILL BEAUTY PARLOR [illegible]

CHAIR REPAIRING
Antique Rush and Cane Seats Repaired. Best workmanship and service. R. CAMPBELLNGO, 96 West Cedar St. Boston. Haymarket 3068.

CHILDREN'S CLOTHING
For sale, Riding Habits and Shoes, sizes 11 and 17. Fur coats and other articles. 51 Beaconsville Rd. Regent 1278.

CHIMNEY SERVICE
Painting and repairing. Will go anywhere; estimates given. Satisfaction Guaranteed. Reas. rates. Melrose 3814 or Chelsea 3687. Moreau Chimney Co., 486A Main St., Melrose.

Conley's Accessory & Service Shop
General auto repairing. Official Testing No. 10210. 590 Commonwealth Ave., Boston. KENMORE 3316

DANNY BURGESS and his RHYTHM ROGUES now open for engagements, weddings, banquets, club socials, etc. Will estimate. On Radio WLEX, 23 Weston St., Waltham 0229.

DRAFTING SERVICE
Experienced draftsman-designer, machinery, tools, engineering and building drafting work done. Reasonable rates. For details call Lib. 7249. F. R. SHAW, 141 Brookline St., Boston.

DRESSMAKER
Children's clothing a specialty. Dressmaking work and sewing of all kinds. Miss M. M. Wood—formerly with M. H. Stearns Co. For service call Kenmore 4166.

DRIVING LESSONS [illegible]

DRUGGISTS [illegible]

DUCO FINISH [illegible]

DUCO PAINTING [illegible]

DUCO SPECIALISTS [illegible]

EDITH M. LEAVIS, STUDIO OF Dance [illegible]

EMPLOYMENT SERVICE [illegible]

FIRESTONE ONE-STOP SERVICE STATION [illegible]

FLOORS [illegible]

FOOT TROUBLE [illegible]

FOUNTAIN PENS [illegible]

FREIGHT HANDLING [illegible]

FUR COATS [illegible]

Furniture and Piano Movers [illegible]

FURNITURE EXCHANGE [illegible]

FURNITURE REPAIRS [illegible]

FURNITURE REPAIRING [illegible]

GEORGE'S HAT SHOP [illegible]

GUARANTEED TOPCOATS [illegible]

HARDWARE [illegible]

HARRY LAPPIN [illegible]

THE HOME [illegible]

Jado Nickel-Plating Co.
Chrome, Brass, Silver, Nickel and Zerol Plating. Garishing. All Work Guaranteed. 14 E. MILLSON ST., BROCKTON 0970

RODOLPHE JANSON-LA PALME
Concert—Baritone—Opera
Teacher of Singing as a Fine Art
Wednesday 29 Steinert Hall Hancock 0058

LEA'S SHOPPE
8c yd. hemstitching, pleating, and buttons. Coats and dresses cleaned. $1.00. 400 Boylston St., Boston. Ken. 0526.

LOADS TO NEW YORK
SPECIAL low price on part load from Brooklyn. We pack your china free. Goods ins. Hauling. MARYLAND MOVING CO., 1248 Commonwealth Ave., Boston. Regent 8456.

LOOK—OPPORTUNITY
Selling household articles, linens, finest silk underwear and hosiery on easy payment plan. 98 Lee St., Cambridge. Porter 6188.

LUMBER BASELTY LUMBER COMPANY Building to Reserve! Lumber Moulding. Kiln dried fine lum. 29 Crafts St., Newtonville. Newton North 3100.

MALDEN WINDOW CLEANING CO. WINDOWS CLEANED [illegible]

MASON [illegible]

MASSAGE [illegible]

MEN'S DRESS SHIRTS [illegible]

METAL STAMPINGS
A. J. Knoff Tool & Mfg. Corp. 6 Front Street, Milford, Mass.

MINIATURE GOLF COURSES [illegible]

MODEL BOAT PARTS [illegible]

Moving Loads Wanted [illegible]

NEVER GOLD WATER FAUCETS [illegible]

NIAGARA BARBER SHOP [illegible]

OIL BURNERS [illegible]

OLD FLOORS RENEWED [illegible]

PAINTING [illegible]

PAINTER and DECORATOR [illegible]

PARADISE GOLF [illegible]

PATENTS [illegible]

PIANO TEACHER [illegible]

PIANO TUNING Voicing, Repairing, Rebuilding. 20 years at Chas. S. Norris, Inc. GEO. A. SCHWENDENMAN, 170 Hazlewood St., Waltham. Waltham 1319

PIANOS RENTED—$3 to $5 monthly. Bargains in upright and other standard makes $35 to $200. BLAKE'S 874 Washington St., Han. 0088.

PLASTERER Estimates cheerfully given. All work guaranteed. For service and satisfaction call Raphael Iarno. 65 Marcella St., Somerset 0061-W.

PLUMBING—HEATING Repairing and job work a specialty. Estimates given. For service call East Boston 1209-R. BIAGIO D. IACONELLY 69 Cottage St., East Boston

PLUMBING and HEATING Steamfitting and repairing a specialty. Work guaranteed. Est. furnished. For service call Columbia 1476. EDMUND KEDDY 114 Draper St., Dorchester

PRINTER OF ETCHINGS [illegible]

RADIO SERVICE EXPERT REPAIR Service on all makes. Battery chargers day and night service. [illegible]

RADIO SERVICE [illegible]

RADIO STATION WEEI REPAIRS AND APPLIANCE REPAIRS [illegible]

RADIOTRICIAN FRED L. HUSSEY [illegible]

REAL ESTATE INSURANCE [illegible]

REED FURNITURE [illegible]

REPAIRING AND CONTRACTING CONTRACTOR [illegible]

RUG-ING [illegible]

SAILMAKER [illegible]

SHOE REPAIRING [illegible]

SPANISH TUTOR [illegible]

STEAM AND HEATER REPAIRS [illegible]

STOVES [illegible]

SUNNYSIDE LAUNDRY WET WASH [illegible]

STUDENTS—PIANOS, RADIOS [illegible]

TOBACCOS. James P. Manning [illegible]

TRUCKS [illegible]

WASTE PAPER [illegible]

WINTER HILL AUTO SCHOOL [illegible]

If you do not find what you want listed today, we will be glad to help you.
Call Business Service Hubbard 1010

"ABRAHAM LINCOLN" IS SUPERB

Griffith's Great Talking Film Opens at Majestic

BY PRUNELLA HALL

The best-loved figure of American history lives again in "Abraham Lincoln," D. W. Griffith's glorious talking film, which had its New England premiere at the Majestic Theatre yesterday afternoon before a distinguished audience which included representatives of the city, State, and the clergy.

GRIFFITH'S GREATEST WORK

A special feature of the occasion was the presence of Thomas H. Sherman of Maine, who was present in Ford's Theatre the night that the President was shot, and who knew Lincoln personally in his capacity as official telegrapher. Also present was Major Dodge who was Lincoln's personal bodyguard during his presidency.

"Abraham Lincoln" is not only D. W. Griffith's first all-talking picture but the "Great Master's" finest contribution to the screen. Griffith has recreated the full life of a great and good man—from the log cabin to the theatre of death. It is a magnificent achievement, marked with poignant beauty and drama.

Huston Unbelievably Effective

And Walter Huston's portrayal of the Great Emancipator is nothing short of inspired. As Lincoln in the early 20's, awkward and ungainly, proud of his brawn, yet tender in his love for Ann Rutledge; as Lincoln at 50, sorrowing over the woes of the nation of which he is President, a lonely, brooding figure in the dark watches of the night, Huston is unbelievably effective. It is an honest and human portrait, one of the greatest that the screen will ever know.

Stephen Vincent Benet has done a masterly piece of work in adapting the colorful career of the martyred President to the screen. In making it episodic he has touched on all the highlights of Lincoln's life. And from his obscure beginnings to the highest office in the land, it is the Lincoln we all know and love, full of humor and humanness, kindliness and tolerance. And Benet has stressed Lincoln's first romance, his real love for Ann Rutledge who died of fever just before their contemplated marriage.

Cast and Camera Work Superb

The cast of the film, however, minor the role, has been carefully chosen. Outstanding are Una Merkel, a sweet and winsome Ann Rutledge; Kay Hammond, making Mary Todd Lincoln capable and a bit shrewish; Hobart Bosworth's touching characterization of General Lee.

There are innumerable Griffith touches: The vividly etched prologue which pictures the birth of Lincoln in the tiny log cabin in the Kentucky wilderness; the effective outline of the lean Lincoln in a tall hat as he descends narrow flights of stairs; the flashes of the Confederate and Union soldiers on march; the scores of slaves singing under their heavy burdens. The camera work is superb.

Smooth and Fast Paced

The whole film is fast-paced and smoothly fashioned. From the log cabin and the tiny bundle which has just been christened Abraham Lincoln, the film covers time and space—to the little country store in Illinois—where Lincoln reads law, fights the local strong man; spins his homely yarns. Then he becomes a rail-splitter and a lover. His romance with Ann Rutledge is beautifully portrayed. Then her death, and some years later his jilting of Mary Todd, and two years later his marriage to her; his famous "House Divided" debates with Stephen Douglas; his nomination and election to the Presidency; his great sorrow for the bloodshed and his great determination that the "Union shall be preserved"; his command to Grant to save the North; Sheridan's wild ride; Lee's admission of failure, and then the fatal night in Ford's Theatre when John Wilkes Booth assassinates the President.

"Abraham Lincoln" is a great screen adventure—for the mature audience and for connoisseurs.

Continuing Attractions

Copley—"Shooting Shadows."
Fenway—"The Sea Wolf."
Keith's—"Her Man."
Keith-Albee—Pictures and Vaudeville.
Lyric—Leslie's "Blackbirds."
Metropolitan — "Her Wedding Night."
Modern and Beacon—"Soup to Nuts."
Park—"Conspiracy."
Plymouth—"Death Takes a Holiday."
Scollay Square Olympia — "A Rhythm Revue."
Shubert—"The Sketch Book."
Tremont—"Hell's Angels."
Wilbur—"Uncle Vanya."

MADE FILM FOR THEIR PARENTS

Mexican President's Sons Spent Month in Hollywood

ATCHISON, Kan., Oct. 13 (UP)—Guillermo and Fernando Ortiz Rubio, sons of the President of Mexico, sat hunched over desks tonight, in the study hall of St. Benedict's College here, faced with the task of making up work lost when they spent a month's vacation in Hollywood.

MADE TWO-REEL COMEDY

Guillermo and Fernando, 18 and 19 respectively, will be assisted by special tutors, the Rev. Father Richard Burns said. The two arrived Friday and were met by the smiles of everyone except Father Burns, "dean of discipline" at the school.

"I like to study," Fernando said. "But I think we like Hollywood better. Father has promised us a new automobile if we make good grades here."

The two boys made a two-reel comedy under direction of Mack Sennett, for their parents to exhibit at Chapultepec Castle at Mexico City. The remainder of the cast was made up of five Mack Sennett bathing beauties.

"It's not much of a picture," Guillermo and Fernando explained in their broken English. "We made it on a ship in the bay, just played, made some funny faces and had a good time."

Guillermo has decided to be a civil engineer while Fernando declared he would study agricultural engineering, believing the knowledge could be used to aid Mexican farmers. Both boys will study English, mathematics, chemistry, and religious education this semester, Father Burns said.

Sons of 30 prominent Mexican families are enrolled in St. Benedict's.

ANN CORIO AT OLD HOWARD

Burlesque's Most Beautiful Girl; Fight Pictures

No burlesque girl ever received a greater reception than that accorded to Ann Corio yesterday at the Howard. Long hailed the most handsome in burlesque, she was greeted by hundreds of friends and she demonstrated her ability as a singer and dancing star and she had to respond to many deserved encores. She was garbed in the height of stage style and set a merry pace throughout the entertainment. "Hot Cha" was truly a typical burlesque show with a chorus selected by Miss Corio herself and they gave a wonderful exhibition of stage grace and skill along various lines. The entire organization is highly a credit to the Mutual burlesque association and the comedy [illegible] things along immensely with their wise sayings while the entire supporting cast is deserving of praise.

In addition to the burlesque the Howard management offered a vaudeville and picture bill. The fight pictures of the recent Maloney-Carnera battle proved a popular feature and the sporting fans who were not represented.

Arthur Parks and company offered a comedy aerial act that caught the popular fancy and the Five Hot Shots had a little offered dancing act. "Hollywood" and "Wanderer Minstrel" were the other features, rounding out a crowding bill of merriment.

ALL STAR BILL AT ORPHEUM

Franklyn Ardell Heads List in "Whoopee," Talkie

[illegible]

"STEPPERS" AT WALDRON'S

Four Vaudeville Acts and Two Pictures Besides

[illegible]

SCREEN GOSSIP

WALTER HUSTON

HE MAKES LINCOLN LIVE

A combination of brawn and brain, comic and dramatic thespian, hero and villain—that is Walter Huston, who plays the title role in D. W. Griffith's "Abraham Lincoln," the United Artists' epic which opened yesterday at the Majestic Theatre.

Born in Canada, he just naturally gravitated to the stage, as most actors do.

Devoid of flourishes and affectations, he is just a regular heman; willing to chew nails to show how hard he is, or wear spats. Nothing matters to him.

One of his many good points is that he doesn't take serious things seriously, himself included.

Carried a spear once for Richard Mansfield so he could go down in history with the Mantels and Barrymores.

Claims to have played everything in the theatre but the cake of ice in "Uncle Tom's Cabin."

Once, to change his luck, he went into vaudeville. There he learned to be an electrician, a song and dance man, a ticket taker and finally, a leading man. It changed his luck.

The show business is the show business, he says. It rains on Sundays and shines on Tuesdays, but you take the flowers and the smacks and like them both.

His First Success

When the smacks were the heaviest, Brock Pemberton emerged from behind a cloudy gloom and gave Walter his first big Broadway chance. That was five years ago.

The play was "The Easy Mark." Since then this capable actor has starred in "Desire Under the Elms," "The Barker," "Elmer the Great" and "The Commodore Marries."

Paramount once thought he might make a movie actor, so they gave him a star in "Gentlemen of the Press." The picture, in picture parlance, was "wow." They tried him in another, "The Lady Lies"; it was a sensational money success. A third attempt brought forth "The Virginian"; another bull's-eye.

Huston is either very lucky or very good—everything he touches turns to gold as the saying goes.

D. W. Griffith thought Huston resembled Lincoln more than any other actor in the States.

The result was a contract for Huston that makes ordinary motion picture salaries fade into ciphers.

Huston knows what to do with his money. He has the nerve, he says, to go into shops and argue for a half per cent more interest. He is equally effective against female book agents.

Other principals in the cast of "Abraham Lincoln" are Kay Hammond, as "Mary Todd"; Una Merkel, as "Ann Rutledge"; Ian Keith, as "John Wilkes Booth"; Jason Robards, as "Herndon"; Hobart Bosworth, as "Robert E. Lee"; Frank Campeau, as "Phil Sheridan," and Lincoln La Verne.

* * *

THEIR PRIVATE LIVES

Have movie folk a right to a private life for themselves and their children? The question is discussed pro and con by Adela Rogers St. Johns in an article entitled "No Close-Ups for Baby," in the November issue of The New Movie Magazine.

Would a picture of Nancy Carroll with her baby—she has a beautiful 5-year-old daughter—destroy your illusions? Nancy Carroll believes it would, and she will never have a photograph taken with her baby. "The public thinks must foster the illusion our public has about us," she says.

Gloria Swanson has never had a photograph taken of her 10-year-old daughter and her adopted son, but her reasons are very different from Nancy Carroll's, according to Mrs. St. Johns. "I don't want my baby to be public property," Gloria Swanson says. "I want her childhood to be simple and unspoiled. I don't want all of the hectic part of my career to touch her in any way."

Norma Shearer has decided that her baby boy is not to be part of the public life of Mr. Irving Thalberg. Dolores Costello has taken an entirely different stand from the others. "My small daughter has already been photographed in her arms. Mrs. St. Johns says that it is a most beautiful picture. Motherhood has lifted much of the sharp beauty of Miss Costello's face." [illegible]

* * *

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

[illegible]

Other Features on Pages 16 and 17

MRS. MARY E. CLARKSON DIES IN 10TH YEAR

[illegible]

Hands Rule to Hold Clock, Then Shows Self

[illegible]

"GOOD NEWS" AT BOWDOIN SQ.

Also "Man Trouble" Night Club Story and Acts

At the popular Bowdoin Square Theatre is a most attractive talking picture and vaudeville programme that is meeting with great favor. The top feature is entitled, "Good News," a Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer super-special that is just packed with four years of college life in which the cast contains Bessie Love, Stanley Smith, Mary Lawlor, Cliff Edwards and Lola Lane. During the action of this picture is displayed several football thrills with youthful enthusiasm at its height. The offering is alive with song hits of the most entertaining nature and the dancing features win the plaudits of the entire house.

Another feature introduced the fight pictures of the recent Maloney-Carnera battle and it was enjoyed by the ladies as well as the gentlemen in the house. Another feature of merit presented, "Man Trouble," an all talking Fox movietone drama, a swift moving thriller that introduced the high spots of life of a New York night club in which the "boss" of that organization was slated for a "ride." In the cast were Dorothy Mackaill, Milton Sills, and Kenneth McKenna. Another film offered the animal comedy, "Who Killed Rover?" Four vaudeville acts pleased in good measure. They included Angus and Searls, Ingalls and Gaines, Webber and Ray, and Reynor brothers.

POWDER PUFFS AT THE GAYETY

Big Mechanical Ballet Features the Burlesque

An amazing dance number was the feature of "Powder Puff Revue," which opened yesterday at the Gayety, Boston's uptown burlesque theatre. A big mechanical ballet, people with living machinery, against which unusual background "The Dance of the Mechanical Dolls" was performed by the Boylans, late of George White's "Scandals."

As if to show the versatility of the producer, another smashing scene was "The Silver Garden," which was a scenic knockout. A number of unusual poses were in evidence in the final tableau.

But the two big scenes, although enough to carry any show, did not constitute the only feature. Frances Parks, and Elvia Herndon, the two featured players of the feminine contingent, kept the audience in rare good humor from start to finish.

The comedy, in the hands of Sammy Weston, Jewish comedian, and Lew Powers, an eccentric, was continuous and ridiculous and the audience loved it. Those two working with George Kissaar, singing straight man, dished out laugh after laugh. They had a new line. Harry Allen and Mickey Mars, violin-playing ingenue, were others the crowd enjoyed.

Be a Magician

RHYTHM REVUE AT SCOLLAY SQ.

Helen Johns Presents Her "Glorious Girls"

This week's vaudeville bill at the Scollay Sq. Theatre is another example of what first-rate vaudeville has to offer. Helen Johns and her Glorious Girls present "A Rhythm Revue," featuring the Misses McLellan and Peterson; the act is one of the most versatile on the stage and the girls, besides looking beautiful, sing, dance and play in royal fashion. They are a tremendous hit.

The show opened with a special Columbus Day overture, played by the Scollay Sq. Orchestra with Charlie Frank conducting, with Tedesco, a marvel of the accordion, and Miss Esthel Nagel, one of the finest of sopranos, assisting.

Wally and Zalla get the vaudeville show off to a fine start with a splendid display of tap dancing; then comes Demarrest and Drollet in musical moments that were both funny and clever; next appeared Miss Jean Boydell, who is billed as a "unique pepologist," and she got over in great shape. Helen Johns and her Glorious Girls next came on with special costumes, scenery and beautiful lighting effects; it is one of the finest flash acts in recent years. The big comedy honors of the show go to Reed and London, however, for they stopped the show cold with their hilarious offering. Also a big hit in the comedy line were Mardo and Janis, who "threw the bull" as only real comedians can. Munroe Brothers close the show in true big-time fashion.

Jack London's greatest story, "The Sea Wolf," with the late Milton Sills, is the picture.

LIGHT COMEDY AT THE STATE

"Those Three French Girls" Title of Film

"Those Three French Girls" is the title of the all-talkie feature at Loew's State Theatre this week, but it is the three gentlemen in the film who take the honors. Reginald Denny, tall and handsome and very English in his dialogue, is very amusing, as is Cliff Edwards his ukelele, and "monkey" business.

Fifi D'Orsay is the most important French girl and she chatters French and English at a regular "Floyd Gibbons" tempo.

It is all very light and farcical and the comedy highlight to us was when Reginald Denny drove one of those miniature autos right up the steps of his uncle's French chateau and chased the dignified butler around the great hall.

The story opens with three gentlemen and "those three French girls" in jail. They eventually escape their bars and spend the night in a barn. Reginald has fallen for Fifi, very hard, but it is only the first reel or so. Thus we have the little French girl misunderstanding the big Englishman. She thinks he is one grand flirt because his uncle says so. But it is uncle who is the Don Juan, but Fifi doesn't find out about it until she is about to become Reginald's aunt via marriage. Uncle has given her a modiste shop to play around in until their marriage and that is an excuse for a fashion show.

But just before the wedding bells ring, Reginald fixes things so that he has the happy ending instead of uncle.

EXETER STREET THEATRE

Lewis Stone in "Strictly Unconventional" and Bessie Love in "Good News" are the attractions for today and Wednesday at the Exeter Street Theatre. The last half of the week William Boyd will be seen in "The Storm." Cyril Maude in "Grumpy" also will be shown.

ENDS MONTHS OF "INDIGESTION" IN SURPRISING WAY

There's good news for all stomach sufferers in the sensation being greeted by a simple discovery, due to the quick, easy way it relieves so-called "indigestion," and its effects, such as gas, bloating, belching, headaches, nausea, heartburn, etc.

"Pape's Diapepsin," as it is called, is extra fine candy—and is just as pleasant. No sickening or penetrating taste to it. Starting from the moment you swallow your first tablet, your troubled stomach starts to settle down and actual digestion is restored.

Thousands are so enthusiastic over the results they are securing that they simply have to tell their experiences to help others. Here's what Attorney Mrs. Grace Hall, No. 1 Dana Way, So. Boston, Mass., says:

"I suffered from severe indigestion for many months until I couldn't sleep right and nothing agreed with me. I would have gas on my stomach, poor stomach, heartburn, and would bloat badly after every meal.

"I tried a lot of medicines but nothing helped until I heard about Pape's Diapepsin and got some. It ended my trouble in a surprising way."

All druggists sell Pape's Diapepsin for only 60 cents a package. Write Dept. 9, T.D., for a FREE sample box.

PAPE'S DIAPEPSIN
Quick Relief for Stomach Ills

ECZEMA
Itching Skin

SIMPLE HOME MIXTURE DARKENS GRAY HAIR

New Face Powder Stays on Longer

Indigestion All Gone

To Wake up FIT Tomorrow Take one TONIGHT
Cascarets 10c

Copy of an expensive custom model

Deep Luxurious Down Cushion CLUB CHAIR
SPECIAL $110

One of the most comfortable chairs and remarkable trades we have ever had. Back pillow and seat cushion are both separate, reversible and (would you believe it possible?) down filled.

Springs are carefully hand tied like our own shop pieces and rest on strong webbing. Filling is all hair, durable seams welted. The arms roll gracefully and are thickly upholstered. Most surprising of all, you can have your choice of many rich fabrics, including mohairs, tapestries, frieze, damasks in a variety of colors to harmonize with any room scheme. Custom chairs like this in these fine coverings would easily sell for second $100.

PAINE FURNITURE CO.
91 Arlington Street

"ABRAHAM LINCOLN" IS SUPERB

Griffith's Great Talking Film Opens at Majestic

BY PRUNELLA HALL

The best-loved figure of American history lives again in "Abraham Lincoln," D. W. Griffith's glorious talking film, which had its New England premiere at the Majestic Theatre yesterday afternoon before a distinguished audience which included representatives of the city, State, and the clergy.

GRIFFITH'S GREATEST WORK

A special feature of the occasion was the presence of Thomas H. Sherman of Maine, who was present in Ford's Theatre the night that the President was shot, and who knew Lincoln personally in his capacity as official telegrapher. Also present was Major Dodge who was Lincoln's personal bodyguard during his presidency.

"Abraham Lincoln" is not only D. W. Griffith's first all-talking picture but the "Great Master's" finest contribution to the screen. Griffith has recreated the full life of a great and good man—from the log cabin to the theatre of death. It is a magnificent achievement, marked with poignant beauty and drama.

Huston Unbelievably Effective

And Walter Huston's portrayal of the Great Emancipator is nothing short of inspired. As Lincoln in the early 20's, awkward and ungainly, proud of his brawn, yet tender in his love for Ann Rutledge; as Lincoln at 50, sorrowing over the woes of the nation of which he is President, a lonely, brooding figure in the dark watches of the night, Huston is unbelievably effective. It is an honest and human portrait, one of the greatest that the screen will ever know.

Stephen Vincent Benet has done a masterly piece of work in adapting the colorful career of the martyred President to the screen. In making it episodic he has touched on all the highlights of Lincoln's life. And from his obscure beginnings to the highest office in the land, it is the Lincoln we all know and love, full of humor and humanness, kindliness and tolerance. And Benet has stressed Lincoln's first romance, his real love for Ann Rutledge who died of fever just before their contemplated marriage.

Cast and Camera Work Superb

The cast of the film, however, minor the role, has been carefully chosen. Outstanding are Una Merkel, a sweet and winsome Ann Rutledge; Kay Hammond, making Mary Todd Lincoln capable and a bit shrewish; Hobart Bosworth's touching characterization of General Lee.

There are innumerable Griffith touches: The vividly etched prologue which pictures the birth of Lincoln in the tiny log cabin in the Kentucky wilderness; the effective outline of the lean Lincoln in a tall hat as he descends narrow flights of stairs; the flashes of the Confederate and Union soldiers on march; the scores of slaves singing under their heavy burdens. The camera work is superb.

Smooth and Fast Paced

The whole film is fast-paced and smoothly fashioned. From the log cabin and the tiny bundle which has just been christened Abraham Lincoln, the film covers time and space—to the little country store in Illinois where Lincoln reads law, fights the local strong man; spins his homely yarns. Then he becomes a rail-splitter and a lover. His romance with Ann Rutledge is beautifully portrayed. Then her death, and some years later his jilting of Mary Todd, and two years later his marriage to her; his famous "House Divided" debates with Stephen Douglas; his nomination and election to the Presidency; his great sorrow for the bloodshed and his great determination that the "Union shall be preserved"; his command to Grant to save the North; Sheridan's wild ride; Lee's admission of failure, and then the fatal night in Ford's Theatre when John Wilkes Booth assassinates the President.

"Abraham Lincoln" is a magnificent [illegible]

Continuing Attractions

Copley—"Shooting Shadows."
Fenway—"The Sea Wolf."
Keith's—"Her Man."
Keith-Albee—Pictures and Vaudeville.
Lyric—Leslie's "Blackbirds."
Metropolitan — "Her Wedding Night."
Modern and Beacon—"Soup to Nuts."
Park—"Conspiracy."
Plymouth—"Death Takes a Holiday."
Scollay Square Olympia — "A Rhythm Revue."
Shubert—"The Sketch Book."
Tremont—"Hell's Angels."
Wilbur—"Uncle Vanya."

ENDS MONTHS OF "INDIGESTION" IN SURPRISING WAY

There's good news for all stomach sufferers in the sensation being created by a simple discovery, due to the quick, easy way it relieves so-called "indigestion," and its effects, such as gas, bloating, belching, headaches, nausea, heartburn, etc.

"Pape's Diapepsin," as it is called, is eaten like candy—and it just as quickly relieves the most miserable stomach in it. Nothing lasts—no more prolonged misery, no more suffering from pain, stops; normal digestion is restored.

Thousands are so enthusiastic over the results they are securing that they simply have to tell their experiences to help others. Here's what attractive Mrs. Grace Hall, No. 1 Dean Way, So. Boston, Mass., says:

"I suffered from nervous indigestion for many months until I couldn't sleep right and nothing agreed with me. I would have gas on my stomach, sour stomach, heartburn, and would bloat badly after every meal.

"I tried a lot of medicines but nothing helped until I heard about Pape's Diapepsin and got some. It ended my trouble in a surprising way."

At druggists all Pape's Diapepsin or write Pape's Diapepsin, Wheeling, W. Va., for a FREE sample box.

PAPE'S DIAPEPSIN
Quick Relief for Stomach Ills

ECZEMA
Itching Skin

New Face Powder Stays on Longer

Indigestion All Gone
Pepsinin Seltzer

To Wake up FIT Tomorrow Take one TONIGHT
Cascarets 10¢

MADE FILM FOR THEIR PARENTS

Mexican President's Sons Spent Month in Hollywood

ATCHISON, Kan., Oct. 13 (UP)—Guillermo and Fernando Ortiz Rubio, sons of the President of Mexico, sat hunched over desks tonight, in the study hall of St. Benedict's College here, faced with the task of making up work lost when they spent a month's vacation in Hollywood.

MADE TWO-REEL COMEDY

Guillermo and Fernando, 18 and 19 respectively, will be assisted by special tutors, the Rev. Father Richard Burns said. The two arrived Friday and were met by the smiles of everyone except Father Burns, "dean of discipline" at the school.

"I like to study," Fernando said. "But I think we like Hollywood better. Father has promised us a new automobile if we make good grades here."

The two boys made a two-reel comedy under direction of Mack Sennett, for their parents to exhibit at Chapultepec Castle at Mexico City. The remainder of the cast was made up of five Mack Sennett bathing beauties.

"It's not much of a picture," Guillermo and Fernando explained in their broken English. "We made it on a ship in the bay, just played, made some funny faces and had a good time."

Guillermo has decided to be a civil engineer while Fernando declared he would study agricultural engineering, believing the knowledge could be used to aid Mexican farmers. Both boys will study English, mathematics, chemistry, and religious education this semester, Father Burns said.

Sons of 30 prominent Mexican families are enrolled in St. Benedict's.

ANN CORIO AT OLD HOWARD

Burlesque's Most Beautiful Girl; Fight Pictures

No burlesque girl ever received a greater reception than that accorded to Ann Corio yesterday at the Howard. Long hailed the most handsome in burlesque, she was greeted by hundreds of friends and she demonstrated her ability as a clever and amusing comedienne. She had to respond to many encores. She was attired in [illegible] and [illegible] and [illegible] and

KILLED IN BRUSH FIRE

NORWICH, Conn., Oct. 13 (AP)—Brush fires which have caused extensive damage throughout eastern Connecticut for the past week, today took their first life when Patrick Brennan, a member of the Norwich fire department, was overcome while fighting a blaze and died in a hospital here.

Doctors Show Best Way to Get Rid of Threatening Colds

NURSE ENDS COLD QUICK, TEMPTING WAY

Many Here Find Quickest and Most Pleasant Way Speedily End Head Colds, Coughs and Chest Colds, in Hospital and Home Use

Stuffy head colds clear up quickly—coughing is stopped in two to three minutes—and even severe colds treated in the hospital are quickly ended by a pleasant method doctors now advise for home use. And numbers of Boston people now find it more tempting to end colds at once than to needlessly risk pneumonia by neglecting treatment in time.

The experience of Miss Alice Ryan, hospital nurse, is typical. Miss Ryan contracted a severe chest cold as a result of overwork at the children's cold clinic. Examination by the house physician showed a pulse of 86, respiration 20 and temperature 100°, with severe thoracic pains.

Within a short while after she started using Ayer's Cherry Pectoral she was surprised to find how quickly relief began. In a few hours her fever was low; she was breathing easier and had no thoracic pain. That night she slept comfortably and woke up feeling greatly refreshed. When she returned for medical examination the next day, her temperature, pulse and respiration were normal again. A few doses of Ayer's Pectoral, the doctor reports, had cleared up the cold completely.

PLEASANT WAY TO END CHILD'S COLD USED BY DOCTOR

Mother's Worry Ended By Home Use of Hospital Treatment—Stops Threatening Cold

END COLD CAUGHT WORKING AT NIGHT IN CHILLY OFFICE

Pneumonia Threat Hospital Method Proves Its Value in Home Use—Relief Soon Comes, Claim

STOPS HEAD COLD CAUGHT SHOPPING

AYER'S CHERRY Pectoral FOR COLDS AND COUGHS

ANTARCTIC CONQUEROR ACCLAIMED

Byrd Given Ovation by 5000 at Dartmouth Stadium

HANOVER, N. H., Oct. 13—Receiving an ovation as great as any football team ever in the Dartmouth Stadium, Rear Admiral Byrd addressed a crowd of 5000 here today. The address was given as the culminating episode of northern New England's reception to the leader of the latest expedition to Antarctic.

ADMIRES OUTING CLUB

Rear Admiral Byrd was very much impressed by the Dartmouth Outing Club and said that he would call for volunteers from it on his future expeditions. He also expressed his appreciation to Senator Moses for what he has done for the navy in the following words: "Senator Moses is the best friend the navy ever had and we all love him."

The address which he gave was prepared for this occasion and has not been delivered at any other place. He compared the Arctic and the Antarctic regions, being much more favorably impressed with the South Polar spaces than those of the North Pole.

Visibility Poor Near Pole

He told about flying in these cold climates and said that there was little difference except that visibility was worse. He continued to discourse about life at the Poles, giving all the little intimate details which would interest the non-technical audience to which he was talking.

Senator George H. Moses of New Hampshire acted as master of ceremonies and introduced the various speakers. Governor Weeks represented Vermont. Dr. A. Warren Stearns extended greetings in behalf of Governor Allen of Massachusetts. Professor Ralph A. Burns spoke for Governor Gardiner of Maine. Governor Charles W. Tobey welcomed Byrd to New Hampshire, officially, and introduced him to the audience.

Reaches Hanover at Noon

With the Dartmouth and Newport, N. H., American Legion bands leading the procession, Commander Byrd was ushered into Hanover shortly after 12 o'clock. The many colored autumn leaves of the elms and maples lining Main street lent their brilliant plumage to the gayety of the occasion.

The student body of Dartmouth College was on the campus in full force to tender their welcome to the conqueror of the South Pole. Several lusty "Wah Who Wahs" rang out in what seemed mid-summer day. The Dartmouth Outing Club took charge of the guest of honor at the point and escorted him to the waiting cars.

Play Annapolis' Tune

At 2:15 Byrd arrived at the Memorial Football stadium, where he was met by the processional march, which was played by the musicians of the band, led by the "drum majors" of the tar, went to the platform in the centre of the gridiron. During this time the Dartmouth band played Annapolis Anchors, in honor of Annapolis, Byrd's alma mater.

Before the programme, an air carnival was put on by Frank Hawks, Roger Q. Q. and Jimmy Wedell, famous air racers, who performed many stunts in which to honor Lindbergh's transcontinental record flight. Hawks and Wedell are both well-known men in the air.

Teams of Sixteen Dogs

[illegible]

GIRL MUM ON REASON FOR TAKING POISON

[illegible]

COLDS

Grove's Laxative BROMO QUININE Tablets

Waltham Sisters Wed at Double Ceremony

DOUBLE WEDDING OF WALTHAM SISTERS

Mr. and Mrs. Elmer T. Priest, at left, and Mr. and Mrs. Harold L. Moody, after double wedding ceremony at St. Charles Church, Waltham. The brides are the former Misses Lucy and Gertrude McGrath, of Underwood Park, Waltham.

St. Charles' Church, Waltham, was the scene of a double wedding ceremony yesterday morning when the Misses Gertrude and Lucy McGrath, daughters of Mr. and Mrs. P. F. McGrath of Underwood park, Waltham, were married to Harold L. Moody of Boston and Elmer T. Priest of West Newton.

The Rev. Peter J. Walsh officiated at the ceremony and the nuptial mass at 9 o'clock. Miss Gertrude McGrath became the bride of Harold L. Moody, a Boston commercial artist, being attended by Miss Madeline LeClair of Waltham. George Hudson of Watertown was the best man.

Miss Lucy McGrath was married to Elmer T. Priest and her bridesmaid was Miss Marie Campbell of Waltham. Raymond Gibbons of West Newton was the best man for the Priest-McGrath ceremony.

After the ceremony and mass, a reception was held at the Dixie Manor, Main street, Waltham, following which the two couples left for a motor tour through the Southern States.

Gossip of the Town

The ultra-magnates in the town's higher rackets-ering circles are just a step beyond our social reach but the stoop-shouldered, smile-twisted, sallow faced, over-dressed boys they employ whose names are many and who are not to be found in the social register of the community are [illegible]

[illegible]

AVIATOR TALKS TO AIR OFFICES

First Test of Radio Telephone by Colonial Co.

Airplane passenger service between Boston and New York made another great step forward yesterday when Colonial Air Transport successfully maintained direct communication by voice between one of its passenger planes in the air and its offices in Boston and Newark.

It was the first test of the radio telephone apparatus that has been installed by the company at great expense in its hangars at the Boston and Newark airports and in the huge planes that it operates six days a week over the 300-mile route.

While Ralph S. Maughm, manager of the Colonial base at the Boston airport said that all statements must come from the main office at Newark, indications are that by next summer passengers flying between Boston and New York will be able to talk from the plane with any person they want to call by telephone. The call will go by radio from the plane to the nearer hangar, thence by way of the telephone in the usual manner. It will be a special service, plans for which the company has not yet worked out.

Elling H. Veblen flying a tri-motored Ford from Newark yesterday morning with passengers thus became the first regular passenger pilot in New England to talk by radio telephone to his own offices. He could hear perfectly well, he said. Veblen said that for the first 100 miles, or until he was near Hartford, he kept in communication with the Colonial radio operator at Newark. Then he picked up John H. Gould, Colonial radio operator at the Boston airport and talked to him while flying along a mile up in the air.

PRIESTS AT FUNERAL OF FATHER CARLIN

WORCESTER, Oct. 13 (AP)—The funeral of the Rev. James J. Carlin, S. J., superior of the Jesuit order in the Philippines, and former president of Holy Cross College was at the college today, with a low mass of requiem.

The Rev. James M. Kilroy, S. J. of Weston College, New England provincial of the Jesuit order, was celebrant. Seated in the sanctuary were a number of distinguished members of the Jesuit order and secular priests from Boston College and various points in New England, and studen[illegible] were members of Father C[illegible] Cross College. Among the [illegible] mediate family from Peab[illegible] relatives from other New [illegible] cities and towns.

ACTRESS ASKS $100,[illegible]

LOS ANGELES, Oct. 13 (A[illegible] Christy, film actress, demand[illegible] 000 for a broken nose in a su[illegible] today against the Herbert M. [illegible] Corporation, owners of a ditchin[illegible] chine which her automobile stru[illegible] a Hollywood street the night of [illegible] 12.

Here's Good News

After months of planning we are conforming to the present conditions and have established

A new low price of $42.50

BECAUSE—Greater economies in our new location. The prices of these woolens have come down. Giving $50 and $55 values at $42.50 means increased volume of business. Including Suitings and Overcoatings with the same good tailoring, woolens and linings. Others up to $75.

The Boston Tailoring Co.

Est. 1899

MEN'S TAILORS

333 Washington St.—Opp. Milk St.

2ND FLOOR — PROVINCE BLDG.

BUSINESS SERVICE GUIDE

Anything You Want? Find it Here!

THE ADDINGTON
124 WINTHROP RD., BROOKLINE, MASS. A home for convalescents and elderly folks to rest. Spacious porches and private bathed nurse in charge. Tel. Regent 8130.

ADDRESSING MULTIGRAPHING
Typewriting—Delivery—Sup'lies. 20 Kilby [illegible] Beacon 0246. E. G. KENNEY.

ALLSTON HAND LAUNDRY
Hand [illegible] by women exclusively. Service and satisfaction [illegible]. Be assured—give us a trial. Work called for and delivered. Call Stadium 0484. 63 Harvard Ave., Allston.

AMERICAN GLASS COMPANY
Glass for all purposes. Auto Glass set while you wait. Mirrors resilvered. 589 Ferry St., Revere. Tel. 0011.

ARLE IRON KENNELS
[illegible] individual stalls and runs. Terriers [illegible] Dogs at stud. Wire-haired Fox Terrier [illegible] Spaniel Pups for sale. 1246 LOWELL ST., Wilmington 392.

ANN GARRITY SCHOOL
147 Commonwealth St., Newton. Dancing classes. 1414 Forest Hills Pk. Tel. Forest Hills 0394.

ANTIQUE FURNITURE
[illegible]

ANTIQUES—FURNITURE
[illegible]

ANTS—BED BUGS
[illegible]

ARMSWAY RIDING SCHOOL
[illegible]

ARE YOU TOO STOUT?
[illegible]

AUTOMOBILE POLISH
[illegible]

BLACKWELL'S
[illegible]

BRAKES
[illegible]

CHAIR REPAIRING
Antique Rush and Cane Seats Repaired. Best workmanship and service. R. CAMERLENGO, 96 West Cedar St. Boston. Haymarket 3906.

CHILDREN'S CLOTHING
For sale. Richer Habits and Shoes, sizes 11 and 17. Fur coats and other articles. 51 Beaconsville Rd. Regent 1278.

CHIMNEY SERVICE
Painting and repairing. Will go anywhere; estimates given. Satisfaction guaranteed. Reas. rates. Melrose 3814 or Chelsea 3607. Moreau Chimney Co., 496A Main St., Melrose.

Conley's Accessory & Service Shop
General auto repairing. Official Testing No. 16110. 599 Commonwealth Ave., Boston. KENMORE 1516

DANNY BURGESS and his RHYTHM ROGUES now open for engagements, weddings, banquets, club socials, etc. Will broadcast. On Radio WLEX, 23 Weston St., Waltham 0229.

DRAFTING SERVICE
Experienced draftsman-designer, machinery, tools, engineering and building drafting and [illegible]. Low rates. For service call L. R. 7249. F. E. SHAW, 161 Greenough St., Boston.

DRESSMAKER
Children's clothes a specialty. Dressy work and sewing of all kinds. Miss M. F. Wood—formerly with R. H. Stearns Co. For service call Ken. 1506.

DRIVING LESSONS
[illegible]

DRUGGISTS
[illegible]

DUCO FINISH
[illegible]

DUCO PAINTING
[illegible]

DUCO SPECIALISTS
[illegible]

EDITH M. LEAVIS, STUDIO OF Dance
[illegible]

EMPLOYMENT SERVICE
[illegible]

FIRESTONE ONE-STOP SERVICE STATION
[illegible]

FLOORS
[illegible]

FOOT TROUBLE
[illegible]

FOUNTAIN PENS
[illegible]

FREIGHT HANDLING
[illegible]

V FUR COATS
Repairing and Plane Moves
[illegible]

FURNITURE EXCHANGE
[illegible]

FURNITURE REPAIRING
[illegible]

GERRY'S HAT SHOP
[illegible]

HARDWARE
[illegible]

HEAVY LIFTING
[illegible]

Jado Nickel-Plating Co.
Chrome, Brass, Silver, Nickel and Zarvel Plating. Gunsmiths. All Work Guaranteed. 14 E. MILLSON ST., BROCKTON 0970

RODOLPHE JANSON-LA PALME
Concert—Baritone—Opera
Teacher of Singing as a Fine Art
Wednesday 720 Steinert Hall Kenmore 9056

LEA'S SHOPPE
5c yd. hemstitching, pleating, and buttons. Coats and dresses cleaned. $1.00. 400 Boylston St., Boston. Ken. 0528.

LOADS TO NEW YORK
SPECIAL low price on part load from Brooklyn. We pack your china from Goods Inc. Hastings. NORTHLAND MOVING CO. 1149 Commonwealth Ave., Boston. Regent 8456.

LOOK—OPPORTUNITY
Selling household articles, linens, flavor silk underwear, and hosiery on easy payment plan. 98 Lee St., Cambridge. Porter 0183.

LUMBER BASELEY LUMBER COMPANY Building to Boston! Lumber Moulding, Kiln dried flooring. 29 Crafts St., Newtonville. Bigelow South 1500.

MALDEN WINDOW CLEANING CO.
WINDOWS CLEANED
In stores, offices and private dwellings. Brass rings polished, gilded, enameled and lacquered and clock. 56 Pleasant St. Tel. [illegible]

MASON
Brick, cement work, stucco, plastering, etc. ESTIMATES GIVEN. 18 Glenwood Place Dorchester. [illegible]

MASSAGE
[illegible]

MEN'S DRESS SHIRTS
[illegible]

METAL STAMPINGS
[illegible]
A. J. Knott Tool & Mfg. Corp.
6 Frost Street, Holyoke, Mass.

MINIATURE GOLF COURSES
[illegible]

MODEL BOAT PARTS
[illegible]

Moving Loads Wanted
[illegible]

NEVER DRIP KEYSTONE FAUCETS
[illegible]

NIAGARA BARBER SHOP
[illegible]

OIL BURNERS
[illegible]

OLD FLOORS RENEWED
[illegible]

OPTICIANS
[illegible]

PAINTING
[illegible]

PIANO TEACHER
[illegible]

PIANO TUNING Voicing, Repairing. Head tuner 26 years of Chas. S. Norris, Inc. GEO. A. SCHWERMAN, 170 Maplewood St., Waltertown. Middlesex 1319

PIANOS RENTED—$3 to $5 monthly, and other standard makes $35 to $200. BLAKE'S 874 Washington St., Han. 0088.

PLASTERER Estimates cheerfully given. All work guaranteed. For service and satisfaction call Raphael Barron. 63 Murdock St., Somerset 0501-W.

PLUMBING—HEATING
Repairing and job work a specialty. Estimates given. For service call East Boston 1509-R.
BIAGIO D. IACONELLY
69 Cottage St., East Boston

PLUMBING and HEATING Steam fitting and repairing a specialty. Work guaranteed. Hot Springbank. For service call Columbia 1478.
EDMUND REDDY
114 Draper St., Dorchester

PRINTER OF ETCHINGS
Photomicrograms, Photostats and Bookplates. HENRY L. HAMLEN, 23 Church St., Camb. Tel. 1343

RADIO SERVICE EXPERT REPAIR
Service on all makes. Battery charging day and night service. 24 hr. service. Free demonstration. Cambridge. Tel. Uni. 0111.

RADIO SERVICE Genuine, [illegible] Repairs on Sheets, Tubes, Speakers, Batteries, Chargers. Free Pick Up and Delivery. 10 Park St., Malden. Tel. Ma. 0100.

RADIO STATION WHAG
RADIO AND APPLIANCE REPAIRS
[illegible] E. TRACY

RADIOTRICIAN FRED L. HUGGEY
Expert Radio Service done by a man of experience. Reasonable. 46 N. 11th St., Kenmore St. Malden 0410.

REAL ESTATE INSURANCE
[illegible]

REED FURNITURE
[illegible]

REPAIRING AND CONSTRUCTING CONTRACTOR
[illegible]

ROOFING
[illegible]

SAILMAKER
[illegible]

SHOE REPAIRING
[illegible]

SPANISH TUTOR
[illegible]

STAKE AND HEATER REPAIRS
[illegible]

STOVES
[illegible]

SUMMERTIME LAUNDRY WET WASH
STUDENTS, PIANOS, PARCELS
[illegible]

TORRESSEN, James S. Roofing
[illegible]

WASTE PAPER
[illegible]

If you do not find what you want listed today, we will be glad to help you.
Call Business Service—Hubbard 1010

KILLED IN BRUSH FIRE

NORWICH, Conn., Oct. 13 (AP)—Brush fires which have caused extensive damage throughout eastern Connecticut for the past week, today took their first life when Patrick Brennan, a member of the Norwich fire department, was overcome while fighting a blaze and died in a hospital here.

Doctors Show Best Way to Get Rid of Threatening Colds

NURSE ENDS COLD QUICK, TEMPTING WAY

Many Here Find Quickest and Most Pleasant Way Speedily End Head Colds, Coughs and Chest Colds, in Hospital and Home Use

Stuffy head colds clear up quickly—coughing is stopped in two to three minutes—and even severe colds treated in the hospital are quickly ended by a pleasant method doctors now advise for home use. And numbers of Boston people now find it more tempting to end colds at once than to needlessly risk pneumonia by neglecting treatment in time.

PLEASANT WAY TO END CHILD'S COLD USED BY DOCTOR

Mother's Worry Ended By Home Use of Hospital Treatment—Stops Threatening Cold

The experience of Miss Alice Ryan, hospital nurse, is typical. Miss Ryan contracted a severe chest cold as a result of overwork at the children's cold clinic. Examination by the house physician showed a pulse of 86, respiration 20 and temperature 100°, with severe thoracic pains.

Within a short while after the doctor gave her double strength doses of Anacin Tablets she was surprised to find some relief began. In a few hours her fever was less; she was breathing easier and had no thoracic pain. That night she slept comfortably and woke no feeling greatly relieved. When she returned for medical examination the next day, her temperature, pulse and respiration were normal again. A few doses of Anacin Tablets, the doctor reports, had cleared up the cold completely.

END COLD CAUGHT WORKING AT NIGHT IN CHILLY OFFICE

People Now Find Hospital Method Pleasant for Home Use. Relief Comes Quick

STOPS HEAD COLD CAUGHT SHOPPING

AYER'S Cherry Pectoral

ANTARCTIC CONQUEROR ACCLAIMED

Byrd Given Ovation by 5000 at Dartmouth Stadium

HANOVER, N. H., Oct. 13—Receiving an ovation as great as any football team ever in the Dartmouth Stadium, Rear Admiral Byrd addressed a crowd of 5000 here today. The address was given as the culminating episode of northern New England's reception to the leader of the latest expedition to Antarctic.

ADMIRES OUTING CLUB

Rear Admiral Byrd was very much impressed by the Dartmouth Outing Club and said that he would call for volunteers from it on his future expeditions. He also expressed his appreciation to Senator Moses for what he has done for the navy in the following words: "Senatpr Moses is the best friend the navy ever had and we all love him."

The address which he gave was prepared for this occasion and has not been delivered at any other place. He compared the Arctic and the Antarctic regions, being much more favorably impressed with the South Polar spaces than those of the North Pole.

Visibility Poor Near Pole

He told about flying in these cold climates and said that there was little difference except that visibility was worse. He continued to discourse about life at the Poles, giving all the little intimate details which would interest the non-technical audience to which he was talking.

Senator George H. Moses of New Hampshire acted as master of ceremonies and introduced the various speakers. Governor Weeks represented Vermont. Dr. A. Warren Stearns extended greetings in behalf of Governor Allen of Massachusetts. Professor Ralph A. Burns spoke for Governor Gardiner of Maine. Governor Charles W. Tobey welcomed Byrd to New Hampshire, officially, and introduced him to the audience.

Reaches Hanover at Noon

With the Dartmouth and Newport, N. H., American Legion bands leading the procession, Commander Byrd was ushered into Hanover shortly after 12 o'clock. The many colored autumn leaves of the elms and maples lining Main street lent their brilliant plumage to the gayety of the occasion.

The student body of Dartmouth College was on the campus in full force to tender their welcome to the conqueror of the South Pole. Several lusty "Wah Who Wahs" rang out in what seemed mid-summer day. The Dartmouth Outing Club took charge of the guest of honor at this point and escorted him to the outing club house for the luncheon.

Play Annapolis' Tune

At 1:30 Byrd turned at the Dartmouth football stadium, where he was met by the professional escort, which led him to the campus at noon, and accompanied by the other speakers of the day, went to the platform in the center of the gridiron. During this time the Dartmouth band played "Anchors Aweigh," in honor of Annapolis, Byrd's alma mater.

Before the programme on six rostrums was put on by Frank Hawkes, Robert Ford and Boris Wilson. Hawkes did his stunt-flying during which he broke his propeller blade. Ford and Wilson are both well-known fliers in the East.

Teams of Sabine Dogs

[illegible]

GIRL RUN ON REASON FOR TAKING POISON

[illegible]

COLDS
Look out for them in bad weather
Grove's Laxative BROMO QUININE Tablets

Waltham Sisters Wed at Double Ceremony

DOUBLE WEDDING OF WALTHAM SISTERS

Mr. and Mrs. Elmer T. Priest, at left, and Mr. and Mrs. Harold L. Moody, after double wedding ceremony at St. Charles Church, Waltham. The brides are the former Misses Lucy and Gertrude McGrath, of Underwood Park, Waltham.

St. Charles' Church, Waltham, was the scene of a double wedding ceremony yesterday morning when the Misses Gertrude and Lucy McGrath, daughters of Mr. and Mrs. P. F. McGrath of Underwood park, Waltham, were married to Harold L. Moody of Boston and Elmer T. Priest of West Newton.

The Rev. Peter J. Walsh officiated at the ceremony and the nuptial mass at 9 o'clock. Miss Gertrude McGrath became the bride of Harold L. Moody, a Boston commercial artist, being attended by Miss Madeline LeClair of Waltham. George Hudson of Watertown was the best man.

Miss Lucy McGrath was married to Elmer T. Priest and her bridesmaid was Miss Marie Campbell of Waltham. Raymond Gibbons of West Newton was the best man for the Priest-McGrath ceremony.

After the ceremony and mass, a reception was held at the Dixie Manor, Main street, Waltham, following which the two couples left for a motor tour through the Southern States.

Gossip of the Town

The ultra-magnates in the town's higher racketeering circles are just a step beyond our social reach but the stoop-shouldered, smile-twisted, sallow-faced, over-dressed boys they employ, whose names are many and whose faces are not to be found in the social registers of the underworld, furnish us with the commonest of street-corner gossip. This is set in motion by the boys themselves, who are not any too bright, and who have been shop-talking for days and a week ago, when they decided to put on a show, they chose the stunning and extremely rare diversion in cross-fortunes.

Little hamburger sandwich shops of Boston cook does a nothing business from this quarter that sets the most nefarious dickers in another part of the town one day and another boys come to fill up on the most that the seats will buy. Just a week of being broke one minute and in the dough the next. Likewise, another sixth cousin of Massachusetts caused in what has come to be known as the opposite white lady dance. The photographs of this event are now being used in training in elocutional contests in the strong with the showing one day and the operation being the next, comes the 50 bakers, meat pies and soft drinks, one day, and high dollar a week, the week that gives it to them.

[illegible]

AVIATOR TALKS TO AIR OFFICES

First Test of Radio Telephone by Colonial Co.

Airplane passenger service between Boston and New York made another great step forward yesterday when Colonial Air Transport successfully maintained direct communication by voice between one of its passenger planes in the air and its offices in Boston and Newark.

It was the first test of the radio telephone apparatus that has been installed by the company at great expense in its hangars at the Boston and Newark airports and in the huge planes that it operates six days a week over the 200-mile route.

While Ralph S. Maughm, manager of the Colonial base at the Boston airport said that all statements must come from the main office at Newark, indications are that by next summer passengers flying between Boston and New York will be able to talk from the plane with any person they want to call by telephone. The call will go by radio from the plane to the nearer hangar, thence by way of the telephone in the usual manner. It will be a special service, plans for which the company has not yet worked out.

Elling H. Veblen flying a tri-motored Ford from Newark yesterday morning with passengers thus became the first regular passenger pilot in New England to talk by radio telephone to his own offices. He could hear perfectly well, he said. Veblen said that for the first 100 miles, or until he was near Hartford, he kept in communication with the Colonial radio operator at Newark. Then he picked up John H. Gould, Colonial radio operator at the Boston airport and talked to him while flying along a mile up in the air.

PRIESTS AT FUNERAL OF FATHER CARLIN

WORCESTER, Oct. 13 (AP)—The funeral of the Rev. James J. Carlin, S. J., superior of the Jesuit order in the Philippines, and former president of Holy Cross College was at the college today, with a low mass of requiem.

The Rev. James M. Kilroy, S. J. of Weston College, New England provincial of the Jesuit order, was celebrant. Seated in the sanctuary were a number of distinguished members of the Jesuit order and secular priests from Boston College and various points in New England, and students of Holy Cross College. Among the mourners were members of Father Carlin's immediate family from Peabody, and relatives from other New England cities and towns.

ACTRESS ASKS $100,000

LOS ANGELES, Oct. 13 (AP)—Ann Christy, film actress, demanded $100,000 for a broken nose in a suit filed today against the Herbert M. Baruch Corporation, owners of a ditching machine which her automobile struck on a Hollywood street the night of Aug. 12.

Here's Good News

After months of planning we are conforming to the present conditions and have established

A new low price of $42.50

BECAUSE—Greater economies in our new location. The prices of these woolens have come down. Giving $50 and $55 values at $42.50 means increased volume of business. Including Suitings and Overcoatings with the same good tailoring, woolens and linings. Others up to $75.

The Boston Tailoring Co.
Est 1899
MEN'S TAILORS
333 Washington St.—Opp. Milk St.
2ND FLOOR — PROVINCE BLDG.

BUSINESS SERVICE GUIDE

Anything You Want? Find it Here!

THE ADDINGTON
WINTHROP RD., BROOKLINE, MASS. Quiet home for convalescents and elderly people to rest. Spacious porches and private rooms; nurse in charge. Tel. Regent 8130.

ADDRESSING MULTIGRAPHING
Mailing—Stationery—Supplies. L. S. KENNEY, 1 Bay Street, Hancock 0246.

ALLSTON HAND LAUNDRY
Now and operated by women exclusively. Service satisfaction guaranteed. Be assured—give us a trial. Called for and delivered. Call Stadium 0484. 1 Harvard Ave., Allston.

AMERICAN GLASS COMPANY
Glass for all purposes. Auto Glass set while you wait. Mirrors resilvered. 309 Ferry St., Everett. Tel. 0014.

ANGLE IRON KENNELS
Boarded. Individual stalls and runs. Terriers a specialty. Dogs at stud. Wire-haired Fox Terrier, Red and Centre Beagle Pups for sale. 158 LOWELL ST., WILMINGTON. Tel. Wilmington 392.

ANNA GARRITY SCHOOL
Dancing. 127 Commercial St., Weymouth. Open Monday evening. 1318 Furnace Brook Pk., W. Roxbury. Tel. Parkway 0168. Fallons Bldg., Hing. Information. Tel. Quincy 1540-1044.

ANTIQUES Rare and unusual Antiques. For sale at 10 Monument Sq., Charlestown. Tel. Little of Everything.

ANTIQUE FURNITURE
Lamps and Fixtures, Lamps and Shades, Glass and Chinaware. Lamp Repairing. Tel. Hancock 0246.

ANTIQUES—FURNITURE
[illegible]

ANTS—BED BUGS
[illegible]

ARBORWAY RIDING SCHOOL
Horses for all purposes. Boarding. Lessons. Hackney Ponies. Tel. Hancock 0246.

ARE YOU TOO STOUT?
Reducing—Massage—Steam Bath. Mrs. Hoffman, 1 Brookline St., Cambridge. Tel. Kenmore 1811.

AUTOGRAPH MUSIC PRINTING
[illegible] CARL F. LUDWIG

AUTOMOBILE POLISH
[illegible]

BALCH'S BEAD STORE
[illegible]

BLAISDELL'S
[illegible]

BLUE BOOK PATTERNS
[illegible]

BOWLING ALLEYS
[illegible]

BOATS
[illegible]

CANVAS
[illegible]

CHAIR REPAIRING
Antique Rush and Cane Seats Repaired. Best workmanship and service. R. CAMERLENGO, 96 West Cedar St., Boston. Haymarket 2806.

CHILDREN'S CLOTHING
For sale, Riding Habits and Shoes, sizes 11 and 17. Fur coats and other articles. 31 Beaconsville Rd. Regent 1278.

CHIMNEY SERVICE
Painting and repairing. Will go anywhere; estimates given. Satisfaction guaranteed. Reas. rates. Melrose 5814 or Chelsea 3687. Moreau Chimney Co., 486A Main St., Melrose.

Conley's Accessory & Service Shop
General auto repairing. Official Testing No. 16216. 599 Commonwealth Ave., Boston. KENMORE 8310

DANNY BURGESS and his RHYTHM ROGUES now open for engagements, weddings, banquets, club socials, etc. Will rehearsal. 68 Radio WLEX. 23 Weston St., Waltham 0229.

DRAFTING SERVICE
Experienced draftsman-designer, machinery, tools, engineering and building drafting work done. Reasonable rates. For service call L. L. 1249. F. E. SHAW, 141 Brookline St., Boston.

DRESSMAKER
Children's clothing a specialty. Dressmaking and sewing of all kinds. Miss M. M. Wood—formerly with K. Stearns Co. For service call Regent 4103.

DRIVING LESSONS
[illegible]

DRUGGISTS
[illegible]

DUCO FINISH
[illegible]

DUCO PAINTING
[illegible]

DUCO SPECIALISTS
[illegible]

EDITH M. LEAVIS, STUDIO OF Dance
[illegible]

EMPLOYMENT SERVICE
[illegible]

FIRESTONE ONE-STOP SERVICE STATION
[illegible]

FLOORS
[illegible]

FOOT TROUBLE
[illegible]

FOUNTAIN PENS
[illegible]

FREIGHT HANDLING
[illegible]

FUR COATS
Furniture and Piano Movers
[illegible]

FURNITURE EXCHANGE
[illegible]

FURNITURE REVIVE
[illegible]

FURNITURE REPAIRING
[illegible]

FUR TRIMMING
[illegible]

GEORGE LAKE SHOE CO.
[illegible]

GUARANTEED FURNITURE
[illegible]

HARDWARE
[illegible]

HARRY LORDING
[illegible]

Jado Nickel-Plating Co.
Chrome, Brass, Silver, Nickel and Zarrel Plating. Gunsmithing. All Work Guaranteed. 74 E. NILLSON ST., BROCKTON 0270

RODOLPHE JANSON-LA PALME
Concert—Baritone—Opera
Teacher of Singing as a Fine Art
Wednesday 29 Steinert Hall Hancock 8058

LEA'S SHOPPE
Sic yd. hemstitching, pleating, and buttons. Coats and dresses cleaned, $1.00. 400 Boylston St., Boston. Ken. 0526.

LOADS TO NEW YORK
SPECIAL low price on part load from Brooklyn. We pack your china, linen, goods inc. Hauling. MacFARLAND MOVING CO., 1748 Commonwealth Ave., Boston. Regent 8486.

LOOK—OPPORTUNITY
Selling household articles, linens. Great silk underwear and hosiery on easy payment plan. 56 Lee St., Cambridge. Porter 0183.

LUMBER BASELEY LUMBER COMPANY
Building to Roofing. Lumber Moulding. Kiln dried flooring. 29 Crafts St., Newtonville. Newton North 1100.

MALDEN WINDOW CLEANING CO. WINDOWS CLEANED
In stores, offices and private dwellings. Brass signs polished, floors washed and floors scrubbed and oiled. 36 Pleasant St. Tel. 3971.

MASON
[illegible]

MASSAGE
[illegible]

MEN'S DRESS SHIRTS
[illegible]

METAL STAMPINGS
[illegible] A. J. Knoff Tool & Mfg. Corp. 6 Front Street, Milford, Mass.

MINIATURE GOLF COURSES
[illegible]

MODEL BOAT PARTS
[illegible]

Moving Loads Wanted
[illegible]

NEEDLE DRIP WATER FAUCETS
[illegible]

NIAGARA BARBER SHOP
[illegible]

OIL BURNERS
[illegible]

OLD FLOORS RENEWED
[illegible]

PAINTING
PAINTER and DECORATOR
[illegible]

PARADISE GOLF
[illegible]

PIANO TEACHER
[illegible]

PIANO TUNING Voicing, Repairing, Reed Tuner 30 years at Chas. S. Norris, Inc. GEO. A. SCHWENDEMAN, 170 Maplewood St., Watertown. Middlesex 1310

PIANOS RENTED—$3 to $5 monthly. Bargains in uprights and other standard makes $35 to $200. BLAKE'S 874 Washington St., Han. 0008.

PLASTERER Estimates cheerfully given. All work guaranteed. For service and satisfaction call Kapkoot Darno. 65 Murdock St., Somerset 0561-W.

PLUMBING—HEATING
Repairing and job work a specialty. Estimates gladly. For service call Dorchester 1009-M. BIASIO D. IACONELLY, 69 College St., East Boston

PLUMBING and HEATING Steamfitting and repairing a specialty. Work guaranteed. Kel. Turnbull. For Service call Columbia 1478. EDMUND REDDY, 114 Draper St., Dorchester

PRINTER OF ETCHINGS
Photoengravers, Engravings and Bookbinding. HENRY L. JENKINS, 25 Church St., Camb. Tel. 3520

RADIO SERVICE EXPERT REPAIR
Service on all makes. Batteries charged day and night service. Tel. in 1918. Jim Lomatto Jr., 56 Upland Rd., Cambridge. Tel. Uni. 4111.

RADIO SERVICE Receivers, Speakers, Batteries, Repairing, Rewiring, Tubes, Parts. Tel. Uni. 4111.

RADIO AND APPLIANCE REPAIRS
[illegible]

RADIOTRICIAN FRED L. HUSSEY
Expert Radio Service done by a man of 12 years experience. Tel. Uni. 1113. 11 E. Brookline St., Boston.

REAL ESTATE INSURANCE
[illegible]

REED FURNITURE
[illegible]

REPAIRING AND CONSTRUCTION CONTRACTOR
[illegible]

RIDING
[illegible]

SAILMAKER
[illegible]

SHOE REPAIRING
[illegible]

SPANISH TUTOR
[illegible]

STOVE AND HEATER REPAIRS
[illegible]

STOVES
[illegible]

SUNNYSIDE LAUNDRY WET WASH
STUDENTS, PIANOS, RADIOS
[illegible]

TOBACCOS, Joseph F. Manning
[illegible]

WASTE PAPER
[illegible]

If you do not find what you want listed today, we will be glad to help you.
Call Business Service Hubbard 1919

Advice to Seven Year

No Leopard Old-Fashion Stuff in This Out on Yo "Heavy

By Janet

SALUTE Arthur Lake—the old male Beatrice Fairfax—who has decided to break down and confess all about young love. He's not much more than seventeen himself. It's still a pretty serious business to him. He is at the age where he resents the supercilious attitude grown-ups take toward the situation.

Arthur has been around a bit. He has dated most of the young unattached women of the colony. And he knows a thing or two or three about it.

So take a look at young Mr. Lake with his little bow and arrow handy, all ready to tell you, who are still at the embarrassed, gangling age, how to go about this love business. And if you're one of those who stroke a long, white beard and declare, "Well, things weren't like that when I was a girl (boy)," and believe that all the youth in the world has gone hey-hey and sophisticated you should see Arthur. He's as young as peace of mind and as bashful as a bride of the mauve decade. If that boy is sophisticated I don't know my Lilyan Tashmans and Constance Bennetts.

Arthur blushed when I asked him to tell me all about seventeen-year-old love. If there had been any loose sand around and Arthur had been barefooted I'm sure he would have dug his toe into the sand. But, because he was wearing most immaculate white sports shoes and we were lunching at a country club he did the next best thing and started to fumble with the silverware.

"LET'S see," he began, "let's know. How do I go about dating a girl? Well, suppose I meet a swell girl at a party or something. Suppose I like her. The first thing I do is to find out about her from her friends. I always ask right away if there's a heavy man because I don't want to do any cheating—no sir.

"Well, then, I ask her, at the party, if I can call her up some time. And a couple days later I call her and ask her if she'd like to go dancing. But, believe me, I always take another couple along in case she turns out to be a wash-out and even if she doesn't I want somebody else there to amuse her the first time.

"Well, then I have her. I don't talk about another date I go home—even if I've had her a lot and would like to ask her for another date—and sort of think about it. You can't be too careful, you see. You don't want to rush into anything until you're pretty sure and anyhow it's better to be out of luck to get with the girls. Then like you better the 2.

"But after I've decided that I like the girl and want to go for a lot more, then I find out what she likes to do and I try to do those things with her.

Oct. 4, 1930

Liberty

A Weekly for Everybody

Vol. 7 No. 40

Editorial, Executive, and Advertising Offices:
220 East 42nd Street, New York, N. Y. Telephone: Vanderbilt 6900.

Branch Offices—Chicago: Tribune Tower. Boston: Rice Building. Detroit: General Motors Building. San Francisco: Kohl Building.

Entered as second class matter June 16, 1927, at the Post Office at New York, N. Y., under the act of March 3, 1879. Copyright, 1930, by Liberty Weekly, Incorporated, in the United States and Great Britain. All rights reserved. No manuscript received unless typewritten and prepaid, nor returned unless postage is inclosed. All manuscripts sent at owner's risk. Published weekly by Liberty Weekly, Incorporated, 220 East 42nd Street, New York, N. Y.; J. M. Patterson, President; R. R. McCormick, First Vice President and Treasurer; Max Annenberg, General Manager; James O'Shaughnessy, Business Manager; S. W. Stubbings, Secretary; Sheppard Butler, Executive Editor.

Five cents a copy. By mail, $2.50 a year in the United States, Canada, and Mexico. No subscriptions less than one year. Allow four weeks for change of address.

☞ Address all communications to 220 East 42nd Street, New York, N. Y.

"Our Country! In her intercourse with foreign nations may she always be in the right; but our country, right or wrong." —Stephen Decatur.

OLD ABE

David Wark Griffith's picture, "Abraham Lincoln," seems to us something more than just a new talkie. It seems to us something more than just a very good talkie.

It is not only fine entertainment; it is an important and valuable indication of how we can, if we like, be better educated.

Here is one kind of thing that certainly the movies can do—they can give to the masses, and particularly to children, a knowledge and understanding of history that cannot possibly be conveyed through books or in the schoolroom.

There are a number of reasons for this. In the first place, of course, the masses generally aren't much interested in books that tell them about history, nor do most schoolchildren lap up very eagerly the information given them in the classroom. But Americans both old and young are interested in the movies. They go with enthusiasm, and they remember what they see.

So, to start with, you have zest instead of reluctance to reckon on. And that makes a lot of difference, as any school teacher will tell you.

Then, too, the movies reveal what to most of us, as children, is an astonishing and unsuspected thing—that it can be fun to learn about history. Here we discover that an episode out of the past was something that involved real people in interesting adventures, not merely pages 74 to 78 of a textbook, with three dates to be learned by heart. In other words, learning becomes a matter of entertainment.

And finally, with this new magic of the talkies, we actually experience, in effect, what Mark Twain imagined in "A Connecticut Yankee at King Arthur's Court." With hardly any effort of the imagination, we are taken back to a former time and can see and hear—and we almost said touch—the people who lived then.

The speaking stage of course has done this in some degree, but there is a wealth of illusion in the talkies that the speaking stage could never attempt—great outdoor vistas, elaborate reproductions of historic scenes, battlefields visible for miles, and all the endless shifting at will from one place to another.

And in the matter of audience there is no comparison. The stage reaches thousands, but the talkies reach millions.

This picture of Mr. Griffith's, in a swift series of fleeting episodes, tells the story of Lincoln more vividly than any book could tell it.

Here are the hopeless horror of a slave ship and the hopeful peace of young Lincoln's days with his beloved Ann Rutledge—far-separated episodes that weave themselves together when Lincoln, saddened by Ann's death, bows under the greater burden of a war to abolish slavery. Here are testy cabinet members fidgeting under Old Abe's gentle humor and insistence on telling stories. Here is Grant, of whom folks didn't approve, and the fanatic John Wilkes Booth. . . .

Here a man comes alive and stands and talks before you as a human being rather than a figure out of history, so persuasively is he portrayed in the fine acting of the player named Walter Huston.

Mr. Griffith says the greatest pictures are those that combine dramatic tension with a theme such as there was in "The Birth of a Nation," "The Covered Wagon," "The Big Parade," and, to some extent, "The Cockeyed World," which did go pretty deeply into the character of the professional soldier. In this sense perhaps "Abraham Lincoln" is another of the greatest pictures.

We have been flooded with theme songs in the movies. Why not more theme plays? If it doesn't seem always best to make leading figures of the great historical characters like Lincoln, Jefferson, Napoleon, or Benedict Arnold, they could be introduced as part of the background against which lesser people have their story. We have news-reels for the present, but the great artists of the theater can give us also, so to speak, news-reels of the past.

As for Mr. Griffith's "Lincoln," we believe it ought to be seen by every child who goes to school and is within reach of a movie theater, because it gives a vivid impression of what Lincoln looked like and how he talked, and of the atmosphere in which the Civil War was fought. In addition, it is "good theater."

DE TO MOTION PICTURES

The Shadow Stage

A Review of the New Pictures

☆ ABRAHAM LINCOLN—United Artists

FOR the past few years smart young men have been putting David Wark Griffith among Filmgoda's has beens. Now, with one tremendous haymaker, he has knocked the stuffing out of their pretties. In "Abraham Lincoln," Griffith has made his masterpiece, and one of the most thrilling talking pictures in the brief history of the new art.

Forgetting his unhappy penchant for too much spectacle, Griffith has painted the great humanity of a great man with a master touch. Aided by a magnificent script by the poet, Stephen Vincent Benet, and a truly majestic performance by Walter Huston, that great actor, Griffith has produced a dignity, grandeur and the most delicate shades, matched in digital greatness and the most delicate shades, matched in digital greatness and the most delicate shades, Griffith, in this picture, makes more screen history.

It is Lincoln's humanity that is stressed throughout. It is Lincoln's humanity that is revealed in his love affair with Ann Rutledge—excellently played by Hope Emerson and Una Merkel—through the presentation at Ford's Theatre, the picture moves dramatically, magnificently and with maximum interest. This is, above all, a MOVING picture of the dramatic life and death of a great man.

GRIFFITH, with his love for emphasis, gives Abraham's life at his one Civil War reference, and it is a thrilling one. Moreover, his use of music for historical mood and tempo, shows he has mastered the phonofilm. There is a great performance by Kay Hammond as Mary Todd Lincoln. Griffith comes back with a picture worthy of him.

LES PARFUMS

The loveliest odours in all the history of perfume—precious, lasting, subtly expressing each temperament—are created not only in the de luxe crystal flacons, but also in these most

Advertiser Feb. 16

SEEING BOSTON AGAIN

DOROTHY GISH, whose latest photograph graces the theatre page today, came back to Boston with her sister Lillian to attend the 100th showing here of "Orphans of the Storm." The famous sisters have been on tour for two months with the new Griffith production.

Advertiser Feb. 12

GISH SISTERS — TREMONT
"ORPHANS OF THE STORM"

Traveler Feb. 16

Right off the Reel

By JEANNE RAY

Lillian and Dorothy Gish, who attended in person the 100th performance of "The Two Orphans" at the Tremont Theatre yesterday.

Post Feb. 13

GISH SISTERS WILL APPEAR IN PERSON

Lillian and Dorothy Gish, "Orphans of the Storm," will appear in person on the stage of the Tremont Theatre on Wednesday as part of the ceremony attendant upon the 100th exhibition in Boston of David Wark Griffith's excellent photoplay, "Orphans of the Storm."

Word to this effect was received by the management of the Tremont Theatre last night. So, Lillian and Dorothy will grace the boards in front of the silver screen at both afternoon and evening performances. And more than that, they will each "speak a piece" and maybe sing a song or two. "Orphans of the Storm" has but two weeks more to run at the Tremont Theatre, and the presence of the Gish sisters on the stage in person, Wednesday, is a mark of appreciation for the liberal patronage which Boston theatregoers [illegible] ended to Griffith's latest masterpiece.

Herald Feb. 13

GISH SISTERS TO BE AT TREMONT FEB. 15

Word has just been received from the D. W. Griffith studio at Mamaroneck, N. Y., to the effect that Lillian and Dorothy Gish will apear in person at the 100th performance of "Orphans of the Storm" at the Tremont Theatre on Wednesday night.

Globe Feb. 14

Gish Sisters Here Tomorrow

"Orphans of the Storm" is now in its final fortnight at the Tremont Theatre. Tomorrow is celebrated the 100th performance in Boston and to fittingly observe the occasion Mr Griffith has arranged for the personal presence of Lillian and Dorothy Gish, who are the two sisters in this elaborated pictured story of "The Two Orphans." They will appear on the stage both afternoon and evening.

Telegram Feb. 14

GISH GIRLS AT TREMONT

D. W. Griffith's latest and greatest photoplay, "Orphans of the Storm," is now in its final fortnight at the Tremont Theatre. Tomorrow is celebrated the one hundredth performance in Boston and to fittingly observe the occasion Mr. Griffith in his esteem for local theatregoers who have responded so cordially to this production, has arranged for the personal presence of Lillian and Dorothy Gish, who enact the two sisters of this elaborated pictured story of "The Two Orphans." They will appear on the stage at both the afternoon and evening performances tomorrow.

American Feb. 14

Gish Sisters Return

Lillian and Dorothy Gish will return to Boston and appear at the performance of "Orphans of the Storm" at the Tremont Theatre on Wednesday.

Advertiser Feb. 14

PICTURES CONTINUING

D. W. Griffith's "Orphans of the Storm," with Lillian and Dorothy Gish in the title roles, is nearing the end of its extended engagement at the Tremont Theatre.

Post Feb. 16

DOROTHY ALSO TO BE SPEAKER

"Speechless" Gish Sister Learning Oratory

Dorothy Gish may not be very much longer the "speechless sister" of the famous film pair. She's taking speechifying lessons, so she said yesterday at the Tremont Theatre, here Dorothy and Lillian both appeared for the last time during the run of D. W. Griffith's film, "Orphans of the Storm."

Yesterday Lillian made the speech for both of them, as is the custom. And it was a very pretty little speech, too. Dorothy thinks she does it very well, and has no intention of turning it into a dialogue. But the secret leaked out that every day in New York she goes to an instructor who tells people just how to speak before the public.

After the speech, and the reception of dozens of admirers who found their way past the stage doorkeeper of the Tremont, the two sisters went with their chaperone, Mrs. Cratch, to a boot store next door. There Lillian was fitted out with an honest-to-goodness pair of Boston goloshes, just like folks wear in this climate.

American Feb. 16

A SUGGESTION TO D. W. GRIFFITH

J. C. writes in her views from Everett and comes forward with some very clearly defined suggestions for Mr. Griffith, prompted, it seems, by having seen the way that director handled the French Revolution in "Orphans of the Storm."

"My dear Miss Davis," she writes, "I wish to offer my opinions regarding motion pictures. I go to the movies at least five times a month and find that most of the pictures offered us are satisfactory to me. I shall illustrate. Those such as 'Orphans of the Storm,' 'War Down East,' 'The End Road,' and, for a month, 'The Kid,' have, I think, the touch.

"If you will allow me a little more time to analyze, I shall take 'Orphans of the Storm.' All through the first half everybody, at least in my vicinity, was rooting on their others instead of rooting down. During the show there was an interruption. Mr. Griffith spoke. The second after the curtain was rammed then were all up once again. At the end instead of responding for the curtain, they did not budge at the theatre. That's what I am holding on down.

[illegible]

Advertiser Feb. 13

LILLIAN GISH - TREMONT

Front Page Story Telegram Feb. 16

Gish Girls Say They're Through With Hollywood

LILLIAN GISH

Film Favorite Has Had Enough of Hollywood's Environment

Hollywood and its angles hold little interest for the famous sisters, Lillian and Dorothy, who are here to celebrate the 100th performance of "Orphans of the Storm."

In fact they are "through" with the stage. They hold no regret on the probable stage of William Taylor night by.

Hollywood has not been their favorite place, for they are likewise the property of the same law in the hands of the police and much [illegible]

[illegible]

Advertiser Feb. 12

Gish Sisters Pay Penalties of Popularity

POPULARITY has its drawbacks. In the case of D. W. Griffith, the master director whose "Orphans of the Storm" is showing at the Tremont, there is the importunity of self-seekers. They waylay him everywhere. Griffith, being a human sort of a person, hasn't the heart to refuse to listen to anyone, and it is not an easy matter for him to say "no." That makes it hard for him, but he has an easier time than his player at that.

For insance, take the case of Lillian and Dorothy Gish. At the opening of "Orphans of the Storm" in New York the Misses Gish were surrounded by admirers. There were all sorts of questions and then the bolder of the feminine onlookers began "pawing" the actresses. Finally it was necessary for a stalwart man to intervene to prevent damage to the young players' clothing. Later, in Cleveland, the two girls were hemmed in and almost suffocated. When a policeman had rescued the girls Lillian found that her sleeves had been nearly ripped off and that her arms were bleeding. Each girl had to be given a physician's attention.

American Feb. 21

ON "THE ORPHANS" and "MY BOY"

EDITH ROSLAN GUNN writes from the Institute of Fine Arts of Griffith, and little Gunnan. "After witnessing a performance of 'Orphans of the Storm,' she says, 'and listening to the remarks of those near me, I came away with the impression that D. W. Griffith would see his wonderful imaginations and most ambitious endeavors [illegible] toward producing something artistic, beautiful and uplifting instead of things gruesome, repulsive and degrading. It would be much more entertaining and pleasing to the general public and would have an influence for good in the world that could not be [illegible]. Let the book part they [illegible] good [illegible]

[illegible]

Norfolk County Leader Feb. 18

GRIFFITH'S NEW [illegible]

At the Tremont theatre in Boston is being shown D. W. Griffith's latest picture, entitled "Orphans of the Storm." This is the picture which Griffith worked on for a year during the time he was [illegible] "Orphans of the Storm" is the most pretentious [illegible] Griffith has ever made. The picture is the most [illegible] of all [illegible] and probably will [illegible] for a long time. [illegible] Griffith has [illegible] "The Two Orphans" [illegible] Mme. Dubarry, Danton, Robespierre, Marat, Marie Antoinette, Louis XVI, Louis XVIII, Charles X, Louis Philippe, Napoleon, Marie Louise, Josephine, Talleyrand, Fouche, Barras

Post Feb. 18

AUSTRIAN ACTOR PRAISES 'THE KID'

Joseph Schildkraut Hopes to Institute Repertory Company With Theatres in New York City

The greatest motion picture is Charlie Chaplin's "The Kid" and the greatest artist on the screen is Lillian Gish. So believes Joseph Schildkraut, the young Austrian actor, who has made a deep impression in America since his arrival 14 months ago. He is appearing in Boston at present in two theatres—personally as Liliom in the play of that name at the Wilbur; and on the screen as Chevalier De-Vaudrey in "Orphans of the Storm," at the Tremont.

JOSEPH SCHILDKRAUT,
Young Austrian actor who is making a big impression in America.

A VIVID PAST

Schildkraut has had a vivid past. He was a pupil of Max Reinhart in Vienna; he played Arthur Schnitzler's "Anatol" under Schnitzler's personal direction; he was the original Liliom when Franz Molnar's play was first produced in the Austrian capital. He comes directly from that strange colony of great artists, almost starving and penniless, which make Vienna today one of the richest artistically if one of the poorest physically of the great cities of the world.

When the young star started for America, he did so with a very definite idea. He had been studying the English language a long time in preparation for it—his command of it is perfect now—and he hoped in America to establish the resident repertory idea as it exists in Vienna and to a certain extent in other European cities. He would have one large repertory company in New York city, controlling one, maybe two or three theatres, and playing a repertory of seven or eight pieces a week: a performance of Shakspere, of Schnitzler, of Hauptmann, of O'Neill, of Shaw, and so on. And curiously enough the biggest obstacles to his plans are seemingly trivial. One is the habit in which the American public has fallen of expecting to find a certain play at a certain place any time they want to look for it; and the other is a fire law which prevents the storage of scenery for more than one production in a theatre.

May Return Home Soon

If his plans do not come to pass, Schildkraut expects to return to Vienna in a year or so, to begin a deferred six-year contract with the Hofkapelhaus.

His impressions of America are graphic and outspoken. Theatrically he believes the country is in its infancy, striving very hard under the direction of such men as Arthur Hopkins and such organizations as the Theatre Guild to reach a definite expression of national character. The American people enjoy good things when they see them, he finds, but are given few opportunities by commercial managers who "never read Shakespeare in their lives and who have no knowledge of the theatre."

The play in which he is now appearing—"Liliom"—has been his favorite piece for seven years, he told the Post. "It is one of the greatest plays written of recent years," he declared, "because it gets away from the conventional three and four-act drama, and it doesn't have a message, thank God. It seems that everybody in America tries to find a message in every play they see. Conclusions have been written trying to explain what Molnar had in mind. As a matter of fact, he had no message in mind at all. He just wrote a fantastic play of life, and that is all there is to it."

The difference of life in the dramatic and literary world in Vienna are such that of the most important things that could be said about conditions there was his reference to Schnitzler's "Reigen." This play, produced in this city, has been called the greatest play in Europe. It is in fact a play which has little to do with the conventions of the theatre, the public, or life in general. Schnitzler, the playwright, has been called the Boccaccio of Vienna. Schnitzler's "Reigen" is a series of ten dialogues between ten people, each dialogue being between one man and one woman, and each one being a complete story of life, and that is all there is to it.

This Week in Boston Feb. 5 her art. She should be seen in a different role than that of a little-girl heroine.

"At times one can see the things of which she is really capable. Do you remember "Broken Blossoms?" There were one or two scenes in that film which made me weep. And I never weep in the theatre; I am not a woman."

Advertiser Feb. 19

GRIFFITH PICKS HIS TYPES WELL

The character of the Marquis DePresle in "Orphans of the Storm," as played by Morgan Wallace, is seemingly typical of the age, for with monocle, muff and rouge stick he is ready at any time of day to admire the fair ones or be fascinated by a new type of beauty.

The Marquis is a striking figure in this new Griffith production at the Tremont Theatre. It is hard to conceive that a modern American could put on the mask and cloak of conceit and effrontery so completely as to give playgoers the impression that they are viewing the 16th century nobleman. One marvels at the skill of Mr. Griffith, for he it is that picks these masters of characterization. They say he rarely makes mistakes in his estimation of character.

Advertiser Feb. 19

LILLIAN GISH

The "Sarah Bernhardt of the screen" in "Orphans of the Storm" at the Tremont, gives the crowning portrayal of her career. Her amazing emotional genius holds capacity audiences spellbound.

Traveler Feb. 25

CREIGHTON HALE IN ORPHANS OF THE STORM TREMONT

Telegram Feb. 18

Lillian Gish & Joseph Schildkraut "ORPHANS of the STORM" Tremont

Advertiser Feb. 27

DOROTHY GISH TOMORROW

Traveler Feb. 25

Proved Worth in Robespierre Role

One of the remarkable character portrayals projected on the screen is the Robespierre of Sidney Herbert in D. W. Griffith's "Orphans of the Storm," now playing at the Tremont Theatre. This is not surprising, for this famous old actor is one of the greatest on the American stage. From the time when he was a prominent member of the late Augustin Daly's great company of players to his recent work in "The Wandering Jew" his acting has always attracted praise. In the person of Robespierre he found a character worthy of his best efforts. It will be remembered that Sir Henry Irving appeared in this country in a play of that name by Sardou.

Advertiser Feb. 29

Herald Feb. 26

SHELDON LEWIS AN EXPERIENCED ACTOR

Began Stage Career When 3 Years Old; Now in "Orphans of the Storm"

Sheldon Lewis, who plays the role of Jacques Frochard in "Orphans of the Storm" at the Tremont Theatre for a few days longer only, has had a varied experience on the stage. He started his career in Philadelphia, where he was born, with a small company and later secured engagements with E. M. Holland. Afterwards he joined the famous Augustin Daly company where, in three years, under the tutelage of that master of the drama, he acquired the foundation on which he has built a big reputation. He then became associated with the Henry Dunnelly Stock Company in New York with which he remained for 10 weeks. While there he attracted the attention of Harrison Gray Fiske, who secured him for the support of Mrs. Fiske. He remained with this distinguished artist for two years and then joined the famous New Theatre in Chicago, where he created a number of original roles and won a big reputation. He has played over 100 different character roles on the speaking stage ranging from farce to tragedy. His most notable achievements before the camera were in "The School for Scandal" and "Trilby and Mr. Hyde."

Mr. Lewis was last seen in "Satan in Society" of Virginia Pearl in "The Girl in the Web."

Advertiser Feb. 27

OLD FRENCH FASHIONS

They bobbed their hair in French Revolution days, too, as you can see in "Orphans of the Storm," the Griffith screen drama now closing its engagement at the Tremont. A note runs: "The bobbed hair in vogue with women today was first worn as a protest of mourning by those who lost members of the families by the guillotine." The fashion was never so popular as it is today. But the mustache sported by Mme. Frochard, the character played by Lucille La Verne, is not a Parisian fashion but an ancient excrescence dating back to cave days. The Frochards were gypsies from the south of France. Dr. Guillotine's famous invention is still in use in Paris. Note Bluebeard's fate Saturday.

Advertiser Feb. 26

GRIFFITH HELPS ORCHESTRA OUT

Orchestra players like to see the show, too—sometimes. The best proof of this is an incident that happened during the rehearsals conducted by D. W. Griffith for the premiere of "Orphans of the Storm" in New York.

[illegible] on all day session on the [illegible] the rehearsal had finished, Mr. Griffith was [illegible] worried for fear the members of the orchestra would be so [illegible] many strenuous hours [illegible] and this worry led him [illegible] when he saw that the musicians had surrounded their director [illegible] he [illegible] the Griffith [illegible] the orchestra [illegible] the pictures. The [illegible] the stage of the theatre [illegible] they are [illegible] the stage [illegible] the [illegible] the [illegible] the

Traveler Feb. 9

Right off the Reel

By JEANNE RAY

Joseph Schildkraut as "Liliom" and as the "Chevalier."

JOSEPH SCHILDKRAUT

"True ease in writing comes from art, not chance.
"As those move easiest who have learn'd to dance."

So Pope aptly puts it in his "Essay on Criticism," but when writing is interviewing for one's column one might say:

"Ease in writing comes from one's subject, all a chance,
"Since those prove easiest who have learn'd to talk."

My subject yesterday was Joseph Schildkraut, now playing at the Wilbur Theatre as "Liliom," and in the film, "Orphans of the Storm," at the Tremont. Here he appears as the silken hosed and much furbelowed "Chevalier."

We talked of "mice and men" and many another thing, but most all the two roles in which he appears in town just now. What greater contrast is there than one may find in the two portrayals! What greater tribute to an actor's versatility than that he has played both well without a trace or flavor of one in the other!

"In all honesty I wish to tell you that I do not like to act for the screen," he said. "Mr. Griffith saw 'Liliom' three times and then asked me to play in his picture. I refused at first, for I had never acted for the screen. As long as I live I shall never become a screen actor. However, I desire to give two stories to the public in screen form at some time or another in my career. One is Oscar Wilde's 'Dorian Grey.'

"It is difficult to express one's self on the screen. The voice to me is the necessary and best means to give forth one's emotions and ideas. Without it the joy of playing disappears.

"Mr. Griffith is one of the few directors who is an artist. When one plays for him, one must do as he says and all will be well. Personal ideas are not always to order, since he is always master of the situation when film making is in progress."

Continuing he said that same thing which you have often read in this little column, and which grows in emphasis each time it is retold: Mr. Griffith's patience is extreme. You remember the love scene where the Chevalier brings Henriette the flowers? We did that over 15 different times until one morning, all unconsciously, we discovered the right mood and satisfied Mr. Griffith. We had done it as comedy, tragedy and in every other way, but he kept trying until he had attained his desire."

I asked him about putting "Liliom" on the screen. He had been discussing the part as it is on the stage. It is a role of which one could talk endlessly, due to its vibrant "humanness." As played by Mr. Schildkraut it is one of the refreshing roles in the theatre of the day.

"Charles Chaplin wanted me to do 'Liliom' for the films. There is an artist. I can never shriek with laughter at Mr. Chaplin's portrayals. My father and I wept when we saw 'The Kid' on the screen. To me he is an expression of touching loneliness and pathos.

"A form of 'Liliom' was given the public in 'A Trip to Paradise.' But 'Liliom' was not a Coney Island type. Nowhere in the world will one find such a side show barker but in Budapest. His dress is that which I wear on the stage—short-sleeved, striped reefer, oddly cut trousers and little tickler in his hand. This outfit is as much his insignia of office as a policeman's uniform a sign of duty. It is a mistake to make a portrayal of 'Liliom' as anything but the type he really is. I was brought up right where such characters lived and, though you search the world around, you'll never find the same swagger, the same odd pride nor the same conceit."

In conclusion he said that if ever he gives his "Liliom" (and after all Joseph Schildkraut is "Liliom" as no other can ever be) to the screen, it will be under the directorship and counsel of Mr. Chaplin.

As George Arliss has given "Disraeli" to posterity in screen form, no better desire for film future could be than that Mr. Schildkraut will give this character in all its "humanness" to the world for future generations.

Traveler Feb. 11

What the Films Have to Offer

"ORPHANS OF THE STORM"

D. W. Griffith's motion picture, "Orphans of the Storm," combining incidents of the famous old play, "The Two Orphans," with the French revolution, enters upon its eighth week at the Tremont Theatre tomorrow.

American Jan. 10

TREMONT THEATRE — D. W. Griffith's masterful motion picture spectacle, "Orphans of the Storm," is smashing all box office records at the Tremont Theatre, where it is being shown twice daily. In the matter of concepts it is far ahead of any other Griffith offering done in a comparative time.

Telegram Feb. 9

Chicago Music Hall will be the post to war. Monte has done some wonderful work in "Orphans of the Storm" and in "Peacock Alley." Hung a man has been elected for [illegible]

Chelsea Gazette Feb. 11

Griffith's New Masterpiece

At the Tremont Theatre in Boston is being shown D. W. Griffith's latest motion picture spectacle, "Orphans of the Storm." This is the picture Mr. Griffith worked a year on after finishing "Way Down East." It is by far the most notable screen effort he has yet made. The picture is the work mainly of all famous actresses and will probably take rank as such for many years to come.

As a basis for his story Mr. Griffith took the famous old play "The Two Orphans." He has remodeled it, retaining all of the beauty and intense human interest and added the famous stage dancers episode. But besides with the story of adapting it back to the old play, Mr. Griffith has added scenes of the great French Revolution to a new [illegible]

Christian Science Monitor Feb. 11

Globe Feb. 11

Globe Feb. 12

Post Feb. 11

NATIONAL MAGAZINE

Edited by JOE MITCHELL CHAPPLE

Mostly About People

THE PERSONAL ANGLE OF THE PACIFIC PACT

Uncle Sam's Big Law Office at Work

Thrilling Story of the Mormon Trek

The New Bohemia—Land of the Czech

The Miracle Man of the Movies

The Re-Birth of the World By Shaw Desmond

"ar" 1922 Twenty Cents

Christian Science Monitor February 9

"Orphans of the Storm"

Globe Feb. 12

JOSEPH SCHILDKRAUT IN "ORPHANS OF THE STORM"

Post Feb. 11

TREMONT THEATRE

Globe Feb. 14

TREMONT THEATRE—"Orphans of the Storm," Griffith's screen version of "The Two Orphans," absorbingly interesting and artistic beyond compare. This events week.

Globe Feb. 11

Globe Feb. 11

Herald Feb. 11

What the Movie Fan Wants to Know

Many of our readers have wondered why more comment on such a stupendous picture of "Orphans of the Storm" have not been forthcoming. Most of us probably felt that there was nothing to be said about a production in such superb style by a man who is admittedly a master in motion picture making.

J. L. W., Arlington, however, has written what seems to us a splendid criticism of the picture. We print it without comment.

His appreciation of Douglas Fairbanks in "The Three Musketeers" will be printed later.

The letter reads:

In Place of Censorship

"The public owes you a vote of thanks for the valuable information and discussions about photoplays published in your columns. It is not censorship which motion pictures need, but a free expression of opinion by those interested in screen drama.

"Mr. Griffith's stupendous production, 'Orphans of the Storm,' is a most gripping and terrific spectacle. I have never witnessed anything on stage or screen where the sustained tension was as great and the action as absorbing.

"The staging and costumes are superbly done. It is a magnificent and tremendous, rather than a delightful photoplay. All suggestion of pre-revolutionary abuses by the clergy is strictly eliminated, but excesses of the nobility and the mob are shown to the limit.

"The captions explaining the substitutions of tyranny of the mob in place of tyranny of the ancient regime are inserted with good care and in that respect are commendable.

"But it is unfortunate, from both artistic and historical standpoints, that the play leaves spectators with the impression of a bloodthirsty, savage and unreasonable France. (There is a leader, at the end, indicating vaguely the coming of a saner condition of French affairs, but it is quite inadequate to change the prevailing impression of enduring ferocity). Unfortunately because untrue.

Not All True

Paris orgying in frightful massacre—true, but not the whole truth. A true picture of France in revolution would show the attack by the allied monarchial powers of Europe, to reimpose monarchy upon France.

"A true picture would show the French patriots rushing to the frontiers and throwing back the invaders. Even when beset by civil war and terror, France rallied nobly and routed autocracy.

"A true picture would indicate, at least, the ultimate 'establishment of civil and religious liberty and the equality of all citizens before the law.' (Montgomery's History.)

"The excesses of brief reign of terror were only a phase. It is an excellent idea to show the two kinds of tyranny, in turn, but why stop there? A true and artistic picture would give some conclusive evidence of the final triumph of liberty, equality, fraternity.

Their Real Part

"Lafayette and Napoleon are introduced as mere puppets; as space is given to showing them at all, why not show their real part in the revolution—for instance, a brief glimpse of Lafayette in the assembly, 1789, moving the adoption of a declaration of the rights of man.

"Though a noble, Marquis de Lafayette proved an ardent champion of freedom and moderation. Why not reserve the entrance of Napoleon for the moment when the then obscure officer routed the attack on the convention, thus saving liberty and France? Although later a dictator, Napoleon prevented the revolution from falling through in 1795.

"Or he could be shown leading victorious Frenchmen against the invaders from without.

"It might be answered that extension of the play beyond the reign of terror would require too much film. But there seems unlimited film for depicting all sorts of brutalities and for showing Henriette an almost absurd length of time on the guillotine.

"The play ends too abruptly. To anyone who knows the French—so gentle, so gallant, so clear-headed—this depiction of enthusiasm and excesses on their part is incongruous and disappointing.

"The French revolution was too great and glorious an advance toward liberty for the play to end about with the release of the characters from the guillotine.

"The acting itself is of remarkably high quality and probably as true to French characteristics as an American production could be. The fine music accompanying the play is a great asset, and the thunderous, foreboding undertone of prophecy is used to powerfully effect dramatic effect.

Probably most of what we did after seeing the picture. We did not put it in such emphatic words as does our friend J. L. W., but we felt thoroughly in sympathy with the spirit of the letter. Perhaps we were too critical of the play, but we felt that the theme was fitted for a better [illegible]

Telegram Feb. 9

Our Movie Fans

Globe Feb. 15

Don't think that it is so very easy to become a motion picture actress, little high school junior with the blue eyes and yellow hair. Have you nerve? Have you courage? Have you skill? Otherwise you might just as well give up your plans to star in films.

Lillian Gish made a wonderful heroine in "Way Down East," and you girls who plan to emulate her career all wept copiously during the film. Would you have the courage to hang suspended on the edge of falls 12 feet high until the hero actually crossed the ice to rescue you? A miscalculation, and Lillian would have been in eternity.

Betty Blythe had to actually drive in a chariot race and it was no easy matter for her to handle the fiery horses. In "Foolish Wives" Miss Dupont jumped 75 feet into a fire net and thought it part of the day's work.

"Put not your trust in directors," said Miss Dupont.

"Mr von Stroheim intimated that I should have to jump only a few feet, so I didn't worry. And when the time came I had to climb over that railing and jump into that net or be burned up. He went first, so there was no one to argue with.

"But it wasn't so bad as being in the boat, for I can't swim and the water came in and covered my face, and when Mr von Stroheim lifted me he stepped in a hole and we both went down 14 feet to the bottom."

American Feb. 13

SEEING "THE ORPHANS" WITH LA FROCHARD.

IT IS not often that one can go to the movies and sit beside someone who is appearing before you on the screen. It was a strange sensation to chat with Lucille La Verne during the matinee at the Tremont Theatre and then turn my eyes and watch her, grotesquely enlarged, being the chief thorn in the side of the blind sister, Louise. Miss La Verne is the Mother Frochard of "Orphans of the Storm." She is, at the same time, the genial, colored Lottie of "Back Pay" at the Selwyn Theatre.

DAVID WARK GRIFFITH

Throughout the showing of the picture she told tales of the filming of the studio at Mamaroneck and gave side lights on the character of those who had a part in the making of the picture. David Wark Griffith is, according to Miss La Verne, "the Shakespeare of the screen." Aside from being the remarkable director he is, the great artist, and a tireless worker, he is intensely human. He feels for everyone on the lot and through his own great sensitiveness is able to make his players act as they have never acted before. He seems, his players say, superhuman.

WAS A COLD NIGHT.

When we saw the orphans scene in the inn courtyard in Paris, Miss La Verne sat up straight and shivered.

"My, it was cold that night," she exclaimed.

"Cold!" I was surprised, for the two orphans were clad in light gowns. "And was that really taken at night?"

"Oh, yes. All the night scenes were really taken at night, and we had to rehearse until early morning sometimes and go over the scenes again and again for the camera. The rest of us might be done up next morning, but Mr Griffith was hard at work after a few hours' rest and enough to make us be'd just come back from a vacation.

"He is the kindest man, too. So understands people so well. There is a certain actress who has a small part in the film. As a matter of fact, she appears in only one scene. She had been very nervous. And on the day of the scene the sound was shifting and this actress was going from one set to another and the director was at the opposite end of the studio.

[illegible]

Globe Feb. 19

GISH SISTERS DISCUSS THE ART OF SPENDING MONEY

"These salaries that you read about that are paid to motion picture actresses are only press agents' tales."

No less an authority that the Misses Lillian and Dorothy Gish are responsible for this statement. The two girls were in Boston last week in connection with the 100th showing of "The Orphans of the Storm," at the Tremont Theatre.

"It's surprising how many persons think that we do nothing but spend money," said Dorothy. "That is why we can't give our home addresses to the public. When we lived at the Hotel Savoy some question and answer man told a motion picture fan where we lived. Mother's life was made a constant misery. The telephone rang morning, noon and night. Would we buy some pearls? Did we care for a French bulldog? Would we like to purchase a fur coat at a considerable discount? A poor man was dying and would we please forward a check for $100 to 'bearer' at such and such a number, Brooklyn. If so we would have the prayers of the poor man's entire family.

"Can you imagine it? It was terrible. That is one reason why we had to move elsewhere.

"We actresses don't get enormous salaries at all. Of course Mary Pickford and Norma Talmadge have their own companies and their earnings are based on the box office receipts of their pictures, but Lillian and I draw salaries just like any other working woman. We don't want to spend it all on clothes or other foolishness. We want to save some of it and not have to work all our lives."

Dorothy and Lillian think of their work just the way any other person thinks of their work. They are not the kind of girls who would spend their spare time at drug parties or dance orgies, even if they lived in Hollywood. Probably if they ever want to run a party they would be as shocked that they would never get over it. That is why the group of girls who watched Lillian and Dorothy go into a shoe store last Wednesday afternoon on Tremont St to buy Miss Lillian some footwear that she needed was made through the drive back to her hotel, unnoticed somewhere. Aren't they sweet? Aren't they the darling girls? Aren't they the perfect ladies? Aren't they just the girls you would like your sister to be, your mama permit you to associate with, your father to pick out for you? Well, they are. Mary Pickford is the only other actress about whom all people think the same thing. Mary Pickford is the girl you would like your sister to be. Mary Pickford is the girl your mama would permit you to associate with. Mary Pickford is the girl your father would pick out for you. Well, they are. Mary Pickford is the only other one. Mary Pickford is the only other one. Mary Pickford is the only other one

"All the world's a stage"

The Miracle Man of the Movies

Little known personally, yet known by name to millions of lovers of the silent drama as the producer of mammoth and inspiring productions on the screen

THE Birth of a Nation!"

Who has seen this tremendous spectacle and not said unto himself, "This is the birth of a new art!" Who has seen it, with its announcement in huge electric lights, a midnight sky throwing its sign-board into bold relief, and not experienced a thrill because of what it imparted to its audience inside the theatre? Who that has seen it will ever forget it? Few indeed!

Back of those flaming headlines, back of the eager-eyed, jostling throng that pours through the open doorway to pack the auditorium to the very last seat; back of the smashing spectacle that unrolls with all the heart-gripping, pulse-quickening similitude of life and light and action on the silver screen, bringing tears or laughter or tense breath—holding suspense to the beholders; back of all this dreams and works a slight, quiet marvel of human efficiency and divination—David Wark Griffith.

Of none and about none have so many pages of description been written, and about none there remains so much unsaid, for who with mere words can paint the picture of a human soul? As well attempt a description of the iridescent sheen on a pheasant's neck, or the song of the lark at sunrise!

When I think of David Wark Griffith as an artisan, I find myself thinking of William of Avon's "Singing masons . . . building castles of gold with roofs of gold and floors of gold," so minutely and patiently attentive is he to each ultimate detail of production. If "genius is a capacity for taking pains," then truly is Griffith a genius incarnate.

When I think of him as an artist, I can compare him only with Leonardi Di Vinci, so faithfully does he reproduce each last fold and button in the costumes of his historic characters—and yet how tremendous is the canvas upon which he limns the creations of his brain!

When I think of him as a poet, I think of the songs of David, for only a man with the soul of an epic poet could encompass such perfect rhythm of arrangement, such symmetry of movement as he attains in the vast spectacles that flow as smoothly as measured verse over the surface of the screen. And what spectacles he has produced!

"The Birth of a Nation," "Intolerance," "Hearts of the World," "Broken Blossoms," "Way Down East," "Dream Street," and now the latest creation of his genius, "The Orphans of the Storm." Do they not speak for themselves?

* * *

I was fortunate in having secured a little of this wizard's time one morning at three o'clock, when he was taking his soup at the hotel—after a day's work extending from 9 a. m. The hour was unusual. Usually he lunched at four. This morning, however, he had finished sooner than expected, and he confessed himself feeling philosophical.

He said he wondered what he would do if he were restricted to union hours, then grudgingly and unwittingly told me a little of his private life.

"My father was known as 'Thunder Jake,' a General in the Confederate Army. He was with General Forrest, and later on the staff of General Robert E. Lee. After the war he traveled westward, was in charge of one hundred and twenty-five wagon-trains bound over the plains of the West for golden California—the longest wagon train that ever crossed the continent. He did big things!"

"His father's son was, then, a chip of the old block," I remarked. "He thunders with his great ideas and dreams. His father's voice was heard for a mile and, though wounded, led a cavalry charge in a horse and buggy."

He laughed off this declaration disparagingly and quickly changed the subject.

"These observations from life I attempt to depict on the screen are but a result of impressions gained when, as a newspaper reporter in Louisville I was assigned to the slums and mansions of the city," he said. "That experience as a cub was invaluable to me!"

To the public, Griffith is an "impersonal." If you saw him on the street, you would see a man whose velour hat and yellow overcoat fitted him just as well as other people's hats fit other people. You would see an overcoat collar pulled up one side just as rakishly as that of yours. You would be forced to make only a hit-or-miss opinion as to his features . . . they would tell you little, even after a third scanning.

If you were privileged to hear him talk you would hear a manner of speech at times very much like that of a Shakespearean tragedian. To me he guaranteed his American birth, however, for his "damn" when "damn" had to be said, lacked none of its native enthusiasm. I was convinced he was one of our American brothers. He speaks either very soft or very loud. Totally absent from any suggestion of self-consciousness, his mien, nevertheless, bespeaks that consciousness of possessing power that is never an affectation in such a man. In his tone is a quality of humility rarely heard, for only much coercion will persuade him to talk of his work.

There is nothing in his philosophy, as much as was revealed to me, to indicate anything startling.

"Man's life," he says, "is long-lived or ephemeral according to his capacity for recognizing true spiritual beauty. Too many men today are indexed by their conversation, by their clubs, their clothes, and their make of car. If their slate is clean at Dunn and Bradstreet's, they are accepted into the circle of friendship. . . . It is a pity."

DAVID WARK GRIFFITH

One of the world's foremost directors and producers of motion pictures, whose stupendous filmed spectacles move vast audiences to awe and wonder

Asked what difference he creates in disassociating life from melodrama, Griffith said:

"There is that which is sincerely human and that which is falsely so; a great deal of life is melodrama, but much less melodrama goes to make up life. In visualizing my picture, its effect upon the people, I try and put it through a sort of third degree. I ask myself, 'Will it appeal to all of the five senses?' 'Will it make them feel as though they were partners to my contributions instead of just witnesses?'"

Very unwilling to assume any credit for having "trained" those motion-picture stars who are now resting on their own laurels, Griffith insisted that "their success lay in their own hands." I doubt not, however, but that such as Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, Charlie Chaplin, the Talmadges, Wallace Reid, Richard Barthelmess, the Gish sisters—all owe him the greater part of their present fame.

Not many have been privileged to see this "Belasco of the Photoplay" at work in his studio, when the artist in the man asserts itself so that trust. He ceased now making the shorter lengths of films. Instead, he set to work on the task of surpassing stage productions by making great epical and historical films.

Continued from page 422

"A genius because of his capacity for work and for taking pains.

"Griffith worked ten months on his last picture. He missed not a day of personal direction. Whether the scene happened to be a splendid French Revolution climax or just a paltry close-up of a minor actor, no matter, he was never far away.

"The preparation for a Griffith picture entails enormous research work. Not only does the chief employ workers to delve into the arts, architecture, furniture, properties, costumes, etc., but he obtains a staff of readers to assist him in laying his foundation. These students record their assimilated ideas to use them as a check against those of their chief. Griffith is himself an omnivorous reader. In this way results obtained are synopsized or tabulated, and the guide serves as the historical frame work for the picture."

Mr Griffith considers editing his scenarios as much drudgery as does the newspaper or magazine editor. For all of that, however, he never shirks it. He is constantly revising, cutting and rearranging films, not only in the cutting-room, but en tour as well. Thus he pursued this last picture of his from his studio to Norwalk, to Bridgeport, to Hartford, to the Boston world premiere, back to New York again, and thence to Chicago. In each place he studied audience-reactions, attuning his work to the pulse of the people. It is this method of elimination by trial that reduces the picture, "Orphans of the Storm," from an unwieldy length to an all-absorbing, two-hour-and-a-half entertainment qualified to hold the two-dollar public.

More perhaps than any other director has David Wark Griffith striven to lift the motion picture out of the murk and mire that obscured its early beginnings, and to make of it what it is capable of becoming under the direction of such far-seeing men as himself—the greatest vehicle for education and enlightenment that the world has known. The motion picture speaks a universal language. It has likewise the unrivalled prestige of a universal appeal to every class, to every age, and to both sexes. No other medium for the dissemination of the lessons that History and Nature, the two great teachers of humankind, strive to teach, can ever hope to rival it. All the instructors of all the academies of all the nations on God's footstool can by their combined efforts scratch only the surface of the shell of ignorance that encrusts the world, but the motion-picture can convey to the most elemental intelligence the fundamentals of education upon which are builded all of the laws and all of the gospels.

A great responsibility, in consequence, rests upon the shoulders of a director of such mammoth productions as David Wark Griffith conceives. A great opportunity is likewise his. That he has always been conscious of his responsibility and appreciative of his opportunity has been clearly evident in his entire career. He has striven always toward the realization of a high idealism in his art. His the hand that has held aloft the torch that has lighted the way of moving picture development out of the morass of sensualism and sensationalism into which it once seemed fated to flounder. No man can point at a reel produced by David Wark Griffith and fail to see the glow of his genius supreme.

Uncle Sam's Law Office

Continued from page 419

Colonel Guy D. Goff, assistant to the Attorney General, might be called the "general manager" of the department. He is in close touch with the various stages of the general work, and knows the qualifications of the men in the department and in the field. He keeps busy, putting in long hours in checking up the avalanches of cases as they pour in upon the department, and going out in the field to try important cases, as the occasion may require. The experiences of Colonel Goff as Judge Advocate overseas, as United States District Attorney for Wisconsin for many years, and as general counsel for and member of the United States Shipping Board, has given him an intimate knowledge of the limitations, as well as the requirements, of the Department of Justice.

The Attorney General has organized his department to give service, first of all, and he has insisted that the first thing to do is to know your fellowmen, ever looking for the better qualities in humankind to encourage and respect obedience to law and maintain an ever-abiding faith in the justice of the judgments of fellowman.

It was proper that Warren G. Harding should have selected his closest personal and political friend and adviser to act as Attorney General, for the one great passion of Warren G. Harding is "justice." Harry Daugherty had been tried and tested in the heat and fire of many a hard-fought political campaign. The President firmly believed in him, as Daugherty believed in the President. The policy of the President to gather around him the strongest and best men possible for an efficient administration is revealed in the Department of Justice. The administration will inspire the confidence of the people of this country and all lands where the sun of justice may shine to make brighter the dark places of earth.

Works of the Western Electric Company; the manufacturing department of the Bell System

Economical Equipment

Forty years ago the management of the Bell Telephone System organized for a supply of the apparatus which it foresaw would be required in the development of its new industry—telephone service.

The telephone in some countries is the luxury of the rich, but in America it is used by practically all the people. This universal service is due in large measure to foresight in engineering and manufacture.

Switchboards with millions of parts, other apparatus of highest efficiency, and all necessarily of complex and intricate design, cables and wires and a multitude of technical devices enable our country to lead the world in telephone service.

All this telephone equipment is made in a factory which is recognized throughout the world as having the largest production and the highest standards of workmanship and efficiency.

This factory, controlled through stock ownership by the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, has been for forty years the manufacturing department of the Bell System; with the result that the associated companies secure equipment of the highest development, made of the best materials, produced in accordance with the requirements of the public, and with the certainty of moderate costs.

Economy in the Bell System begins with the manufacture of equipment.

"BELL SYSTEM"

AMERICAN TELEPHONE AND TELEGRAPH COMPANY

AND ASSOCIATED COMPANIES

One Policy, One System, Universal Service, and all directed toward Better Service

he is no longer merely "a man in a hurry, with his overcoat pulled up to his ears."

In his studio he digs into histories and sciences and written works on art effects . . . he toils. He is probably not as neat as you and I see him, but his tall frame, his expressive blue eyes, his high and well-shaped forehead and his long, tapering, sensitive fingers, all proclaim him the genius he is. Here he is at his best. A dreamer, a practicalist, a cynic, a worker and a philosopher, the philologist would find in him a rare specimen.

* * *

He dreams big things, and when he is thoroughly satisfied with an idea he nurses it with care, dispersing all froth, and laboring with all his heart and soul on those essential things that are so lifelike when they creep out at you in the picture. He uses his cynicism as an armor when he deals with those people who have nothing more to offer him professionally than disillusion. Yes, he has his quiet little laugh at the world now and then.

Characteristic of this trait was his retort to a fellow picturemen who rebuked him at one time for going into such huge expense in providing a thousand people with costumes for the setting of a three-second scene.

"What's the good of so many people? Give the audience a picture of a horse eating hay—it will interest them just as much."

"I am playing to people, not horses!" he flashed back.

What criticism has come to Griffith's ears has been utilized to good advantage. With all the courage of his convictions, he is always receptive of mind. He has improved on the most radical criticisms and reviews, at the same time remaining sane enough to know that to gain the universal approval of the people is the work of only gods. Mere man can do no more than find a common level with the greater percentage of them. And surely he has done this.

Contained in these many pages of description about the work of the man was rarely anything said about the way he did it. David Wark Griffith the Man has been overlooked because his pictures contained such volumes of absorbing interest and such editorial photoplay mechanism. The people were swept off their feet as it were, and found themselves unable to talk of aught else.

* * *

There are those of his staff, however, who have been allowed to catch intimate glimpses of their chief at work, and one of these relates this fresh viewpoint.

So many fables are told of the great, that it is often difficult to separate real from fictitious personality. Particularly is this true of David Wark Griffith. We who work with him know him as a human being endowed with almost supernatural powers. Imagination, craftsmanship, and work are the x, y and z of the Griffith equation. His imagination first found itself in the old Biograph studio in downtown New York a decade and a half ago. Its master had earned his bread as salesman, reporter, book agent, actor, story scribbler and quasi dramatist. He was an ore shoveler on the lakes docks at Tonawanda. He has worked with and understands the man in overalls as well as the dress suit model.

Not, however, until the opportunity came to envision and recreate stories as pictures did our chief's special gift reveal itself. His ingenuity of resource corresponded only to that of an inventor. Experience under which can be outlined triple discouragements to every single encouragement quickly builded craft into craftmanship. The indefatigable labors of the daring pioneer achieved the rest.

Griffith mastered the arts of photoplay in the five years' apprenticeship served at the Biograph. Then he stepped into a directorship in chief at the Mutual, that large and new combine that helped to sound the knell of departing days for the old picture. Entrusted to top-

National Magazine

LILLIAN AND DOROTHY GISH

*Starring in D. W. Griffith's latest film production, "Orphans of the Storm," a melodrama from adaptation of "The Two Orphans," a melodrama associated with Joseph Jefferson in the stage productions from coast to coast. Charles Washburn, in the cast of the screenplay, is Alexander Dumas, the elder, in the role of the Chevalier de Vaudrey, the lover who is the mainspring of the story. Lucy Cousins, who is the young girl who is the heroine of the Louis Napoleon drama, and Frank Puglia, who is the villain, have played a total variety of characters in the screen version of the classic drama. Joseph Schildkraut, who is the villain, and Leslie Stowe, who is the Chevalier de Vaudrey, are well known to the public for their work in the screen version of the classic drama, "Peg o' My Heart," and Leslie Stowe is the author of

Globe Feb. 15

Don't think that it is so very easy to become a motion picture actress, little high school junior with the blue eyes and yellow hair. Have you nerve? Have you courage? Have you skill? Otherwise you might just as well give up your plans to star in films.

Lillian Gish made a wonderful heroine in "Way Down East," and you girls who plan to emulate her career all wept copiously during the film. Would you have the courage to hang suspended on the edge of falls 15 feet high until the hero actually crossed the ice to rescue you? A miscalculation, and Lillian would have been in eternity.

Betty Blythe had to actually drive in a chariot race and it was no easy matter for her to handle the fiery horses. In "Foolish Wives" Miss Dupont jumped 75 feet into a fire net and thought it part of the day's work.

"Put not your trust in directors," said Miss Dupont.

"Mr von Stroheim intimated that I should have to jump only a few feet, so I didn't worry. And when the time came I had to climb over that railing and jump into that net or be burned up. He went first, so there was no one to argue with.

"But it wasn't so bad as being in the boat, for I can't swim and the water came in and covered my face, and when Mr von Stroheim [illegible] he stepped in a hole and we both went down 14 feet to the bottom."

American Feb. 13

SEEING "THE ORPHANS" WITH LA FROCHARD.

IT IS not often that one can go to the movies and sit beside someone who is appearing before you on the screen. It was a strange sensation to chat with Lucille La Verne during the matinee at the Tremont Theatre and then turn my eyes and watch her, grotesquely enlarged, being the chief thorn in the side of the blind sister, Louise. Miss La Verne is the Mother Frochard of "Orphans of the Storm." She is, at the same time, the genial, colored Lottie of "Back Pay" at the Selwyn Theatre.

DAVID WARK GRIFFITH

Throughout the showing of the picture she told tales of the filming of the studio at Mamaroneck and gave side lights on the character of those who had a part in the making of the picture. David Wark Griffith is, according to Miss La Verne, "the Shakespeare of the screen." Aside from being the remarkable director he is, the great artist, and a tireless worker, he is intensely human. He feels for everyone on the film and through his own great sensitiveness is able to make his players act as they have never acted before. He seems, his players say, superhuman.

WAS A COLD NIGHT.

When we saw the orphans scene in the inn courtyard in Paris, Miss La Verne sat up straight and shivered.

"My, it was cold that night," she exclaimed.

"Cold?" I was surprised, for the two orphans were clad in light gowns. "And was that really taken at night?"

"Oh, yes. All the night scenes were really taken at night, and we had to rehearse until early morning sometimes and go over the scenes again and again for the camera man. The rest of us might be done up next morning, but Mr. Griffith was hard at work after a few hours' rest and seemed as fresh as if he'd just come back from a vacation.

"He is the kindest man, too. He understands people so well. There is a young girl who has a [illegible] part in the film. As a matter of fact, she appears in two shots. She had been very disappointed and nervous at first. The moment was chilling and that money was going fast. But one of Mr. Griffith's [illegible] the principal scene.

GOOD LIE OF UNCOOTIES

[illegible]

Globe Feb. 19

GISH SISTERS DISCUSS THE ART OF SPENDING MONEY

"These salaries that you read about that are paid to motion picture actresses are only press agents' tales."

No less an authority that the Misses Lillian and Dorothy Gish are responsible for this statement. The two girls were in Boston last week in connection with the 100th showing of "The Orphans of the Storm," at the Tremont Theatre.

"It's surprising how many persons think that we do nothing but spend money," said Dorothy. "That is why we can't give our home addresses to the public. When we lived at the Hotel Savoy some question and answer man told a motion picture fan where we lived. Mother's life was made a constant misery. The telephone rang morning, noon and night. Would we buy some pearls? Did we care for a French bulldog? Would we like to purchase a fur coat at a considerable discount? A poor man was dying and would we please forward a check for $100 to 'bearer' at such and such a number, Brooklyn. If so we would have the prayers of the poor man's entire family.

"Can you imagine it? It was terrible. That is one reason why we had to move elsewhere.

"We actresses don't get enormous salaries at all. Of course Mary Pickford and Norma Talmadge have their own companies and their earnings are based on the box office receipts of their pictures, but Lillian and I draw salaries just like any other working woman. We don't want to spend it all on clothes or other foolishness. We want to save some of it and not have to work all our lives."

Dorothy and Lillian think of their work just the way any other person thinks of their work. They are not the kind of girls who would spend their spare time at drug parties or Bohemian orgies, even if they lived in Hollywood. Probably if they ever went to such a party they would be so shocked that they would never get over it. That is why the group of girls who watched Lillian and Dorothy go into a shoe store last Wednesday afternoon on Tremont st to buy Miss Lillian some footwear that she needed to wade through the dirty back to her hotel [illegible] Aren't they sweet? Haven't they the proper views? [illegible] were too busy for any interviews [illegible] Dorothy [illegible] and Lillian. Mary Pickford is just [illegible] as the sisters seem that she does [illegible] for everything [illegible] Los Angeles and that [illegible] [illegible] Mary [illegible] Mary [illegible] the character [illegible]

Telegram Feb. 18

Telegrams

[illegible]

Globe Feb. 12

LILLIAN GISH AT SUNDAY SCHOOL

Above—When Lillian Gish Attended Sunday School

See if you can find Lillian, and if you can't she is in the exact middle of the group standing. This photo was taken about 1910, when the "Princess Gown" held its sway and modesty did not demand the covering of ears. Lillian has been a movie star now for about eight years.

Courtesy of "Orphans of the Storm," now playing in Boston, with Lillian and Dorothy Gish.

Editorial in Christian Science Monitor Feb. 14

The Mission of the "Movies"

"IT IS a vain thing to deplore the cinemas; they have come to stay, and in thousands of instances are the only recreation in otherwise dull lives. Given proper conditions, the future of the cinema should bring it to the forefront of the great arts of life." With characteristic precision, Lady Astor thus accounts for the rapid artistic and industrial expansion of this newest force in the theater, a development which has brought overt consternation to many persons, and pleasure, it is easily to be conceived, to a multitude. From 1921 onward, that vaunted phrase, "American art," as applied to the photoplay as a whole, may no longer be said to exist; for in each nation boasting a trace of individualism, the respective traditions of the theater have become ingrained into the best productions of the screen. But in thus hailing the advent of new artistic possibilities, one cannot fail to discern the imprint of western enterprise and technique upon film plays generally, an impression which is likely to remain in some degree long after the motion picture has been reduced into inevitable "schools."

At times in the course of its crowded existence, the photoplay has indeed conscientiously striven to hold "the mirror up to nature," a task for which it seems to be peculiarly well fitted. When nature is reflected in a mood "superlatively exquisite and poignantly enchanting," to quote the ecstatic phrase by which Mr. John Barrymore described the screen acting of Miss Lillian Gish, it is decidedly to the credit of the photoplay. In the opinion of this authority, who, with his brother, Lionel Barrymore, bridges most strikingly the cleft between stage and screen, the films have at last made it possible, in point of "sheer technical brilliancy and great emotional projection," accomplished "with an almost uncanny sincerity of method, to see an American artist equal, if not surpass, the finest traditions of the theater."

But whereas, a few years ago, the Duses and the Bernhardts played to single audiences and so inspired thousands, today the Gishes, the Negris, and the Pickfords, aided to this end by modern devices, project their art for the entertainment of millions. On the stage of the United States, again, Joseph Jefferson played in the title role of "Rip van Winkle" for a period extending over twenty years, and his son, Thomas Jefferson, is to be seen in many theaters simultaneously in a pictured version of the same story. Obviously, much prominence attaches to the work of those who direct the company of the photoplay; in fact, such names as David W. Griffith, Maurice Tourneur, and Robert Leonard are known everywhere wherever motion pictures are exhibited.

[illegible]

Telegram Feb. 18

American Feb. 20

Lillian Gish Hasn't Met "Wild Men" of the Movies

New York, Feb. 20.—"Although I have heard of bad people in the movies, I have never met any of them," Lillian Gish said in an address from the pulpit of the Chelsea Methodist Episcopal Church. The congregation packed every pew and crowded the aisles.

"Actresses are no different from other people," said Miss Gish, as the crowd applauded.

The Rev. C. F. Beisner, pastor of the church, said he had no sympathy with people who threw stones at the stage. He declared he was proud of his friends in the theatrical profession.

Telegram Feb. 18

FILM COSTUMES HAVE INFLUENCE

The Griffith epic of the Bourbon regime and the French revolutionary era, "Orphans of the Storm," has presented itself to fashion experts as a mine of ideas. Besides the entertainment being who are after the thrills and the fun, the Tremont theatre is the mecca for authentic designers and of students of decorative art. The production is made that many of the gowns and hoodes shown in the period of the picture will eventually be introduced in Paris [illegible]

[illegible]

Italian News Feb. 13

TREMONT THEATRE

D. W. Griffith's remarkable motion picture, "Orphans of the Storm," combining incidents of the famous old play, "The Two Orphans, with authentic details of the French Revolution, added in all their enormity, enters upon its eighth week at the Tremont Theatre Sunday. There are but a few more weeks in which to see this striking photo-dramatic masterpiece as Mr. Griffith's tenancy of the Tremont Theatre is limited, and cannot be renewed, owing to previous booking contracts. "Orphans of the Storm" has already played to upwards of 90,000 people in its short stay in Boston, and bids fair to break all records in the history of theatricals of the city in the matter of attendance figures in a given space of time, being far ahead of the comparative figures of "Way Down East," which heretofore has held the record. This photoplay is being shown twice daily, matinee and night, including Sunday.

Globe Feb. 12

"Faust" is to become a motion picture, and it won't be a Griffith film, either. At one time Mr Griffith was planning to put this great German story into picture form but he decided against the project because of the attitude of the censors. Now Ferdinand Pinney Earle will give the world his own idea of "Faust." Earle plans to make his Faust a real man and not a myth. Mr Earle's last film was a screen edition of "The Rubaiyat," that required 18 months' research and six months' production.

Transcript Feb. 14

CURRENT PHOTO-PLAYS

Tremont—Orphans of the Storm

FILM of the French Revolution, devised and accomplished with David Griffith's pictorial imagination and skill playing on rich pitch, over fruitful field, with abundant resources. From the old melodrama "The Two Orphans," he first takes narrative and personages, leading both into the French Revolution. There he adds characters in and out of history, invents episodes, reconstructs and pictures the Paris of those days according to his own vision and purpose. The outcome is a photo-spectacle in which scenes at the guillotine, in the revolutionary tribunal, up and down a turbulent and blood-ridden Paris excel all the rest. A picture that vivifies personages, players, period. Seldom has Mr. Griffith worked to better sustained or more engrossing outcome. The eighth week, with two showings on Sunday.

Traveler Feb. 18

ORPHANS OF THE STORM

David W. Griffith's "Orphans of the Storm" is approaching the end of its run at the Tremont Theatre, where tomorrow it enters upon its final fortnight. As an achievement this production far exceeds anything this picture producer has given.

Globe Feb. 18

STATE OF KENT[illegible] TO HONOR DAVID W. GRIFFITH

[illegible]

Post Feb. 18

Home State to Honor David W. Griffith

[illegible]

Traveler Feb. 23

[illegible]

Post Feb. 23

[illegible]

Post Feb. 19

TREMONT THEATRE

[illegible]

"All the world's a stage"

The Miracle Man of the Movies

Little known personally, yet known by name to millions of lovers of the silent drama as the producer of mammoth and inspiring productions on the screen

THE Birth of a Nation!"

Who has seen this tremendous spectacle and not said unto himself, "This is the birth of a new art!" Who has seen it, with its announcement in huge electric lights, a midnight sky throwing its sign-board into bold relief, and not experienced a thrill because of what it imparted to its audience inside the theatre? Who that has seen it will ever forget it? Few indeed!

Back of those flaming headlines, back of the eager-eyed, jostling throng that pours through the open doorway to pack the auditorium to the very last seat; back of the smashing spectacle that unrolls with all the heart-gripping, pulse-quickening similitude of life and light and action on the silver screen, bringing tears or laughter or tense breath—holding suspense to the beholders; back of all this dreams and works a slight, quiet marvel of human efficiency and divination—David Wark Griffith.

Of none and about none have so many pages of description been written, and about none there remains so much unsaid, for who with mere words can paint the picture of a human soul? As well attempt a description of the iridescent sheen on a pheasant's neck, or the song of the lark at sunrise!

When I think of David Wark Griffith as an artisan, I find myself thinking of William of Avon's "Singing masons . . . building castles of gold with roofs of gold and floors of gold," so minutely and patiently attentive is he to each ultimate detail of production. If "genius is a capacity for taking pains," then truly is Griffith a genius incarnate.

When I think of him as an artist, I can compare him only with Leonardi Di Vinci, so faithfully does he reproduce each last fold and button in the costumes of his historic characters—and yet how tremendous is the canvas upon which he limns the creations of his brain!

When I think of him as a poet, I think of the songs of David, for only a man with the soul of an epic poet could encompass such perfect rhythm of arrangement, such symmetry of movement as he attains in the vast spectacles that flow as smoothly as measured verse over the surface of the screen. And what spectacles he has produced!

"The Birth of a Nation," "Intolerance," "Hearts of the World," "Broken Blossoms," "Way Down East," "Dream Street," and now the latest creation of his genius, "The Orphans of the Storm." Do they not speak for themselves?

* * *

I was fortunate in having secured a little of this wizard's time one morning at three o'clock, when he was taking his soup at the hotel—after a day's work extending from 9 a. m. The hour was unusual. Usually he lunched at four. This morning, however, he had finished sooner than expected, and he confessed himself feeling philosophical.

He said he wondered what he would do if he were restricted to union hours, then grudgingly and unwittingly told me a little of his private life.

"My father was known as 'Thunder Jake,' a General in the Confederate Army. He was with General Forrest, and later on the staff of General Robert E. Lee. After the war he traveled westward, was in charge of one hundred and twenty-five wagon-trains bound over the plains of the West for golden California—the longest wagon train that ever crossed the continent. He did big things!"

"His father's son was, then, a chip of the old block," I remarked. "He thunders with his great ideas and dreams. His father's voice was heard for a mile and, though wounded, led a cavalry charge in a horse and buggy."

He laughed off this declaration disparagingly and quickly changed the subject.

"These observations from life I attempt to depict on the screen are but a result of impressions gained when, as a newspaper reporter in Louisville I was assigned to the slums and mansions of the city," he said. "That experience as a cub was invaluable to me!"

To the public, Griffith is an "impersonal." If you saw him on the street, you would see a man whose velour hat and yellow overcoat fitted him just as well as other people's hats fit other people. You would see an overcoat collar pulled up one side just as rakishly as that of yours. You would be forced to make only a hit-or-miss opinion as to his features . . . they would tell you little, even after a third scanning.

If you were privileged to hear him talk you would hear a manner of speech at times very much like that of a Shakespearean tragedian. To me he guaranteed his American birth, however, for his "damn" when "damn" had to be said, lacked none of its native enthusiasm. I was convinced he was one of our American brothers. He speaks either very soft or very loud. Totally absent from any suggestion of self-consciousness, his mien, nevertheless, bespeaks that consciousness of possessing power that is never an affectation in such a man. In his tone is a quality of humility rarely heard, for only much coercion will persuade him to talk of his work.

There is nothing in his philosophy, as much as was revealed to me, to indicate anything startling.

"Man's life," he says, "is long-lived or ephemeral according to his capacity for recognizing true spiritual beauty. Too many men today are indexed by their conversation, by their clubs, their clothes, and their make of car. If their slate is clean at Dunn and Bradstreet's, they are accepted into the circle of friendship. . . . It is a pity."

DAVID WARK GRIFFITH

One of the world's foremost directors and producers of motion pictures, whose stupendous filmed spectacles move vast audiences to awe and wonder

* * *

Asked what difference he creates in disassociating life from melodrama, Griffith said:

"There is that which is sincerely human and that which is falsely so; a great deal of life is melodrama, but much less melodrama goes to make up life. In visualizing my picture, its effect upon the people, I try and put it through a sort of third degree. I ask myself, 'Will it appeal to all of the five senses?' 'Will it make them feel as though they were partners to my contributions instead of just witnesses?'"

Very unwilling to assume any credit for having "trained" those motion-picture stars who are now resting on their own laurels, Griffith insisted that "their success lay in their own hands." I doubt not, however, but that such as Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, Charlie Chaplin, the Talmadges, Wallace Reid, Richard Barthelmess, the Gish sisters—all owe him the greater part of their present fame.

Not many have been privileged to see this "Belasco of the Photoplay" at work in his studio, when the artist in the man asserts itself so that he is no longer merely "a man in a hurry, with his overcoat pulled up to his ears."

In his studio he digs into histories and sciences and written works on art effects . . . he toils. He is probably not as neat as you and I see him, but his tall frame, his expressive blue eyes, his high and well shaped forehead and his long, tapering, sensitive fingers, all proclaim him the genius he is. Here he is at his best. A dreamer, a practicalist, a cynic, a worker and a philosopher, the philologist would find in him a rare specimen.

* * *

He dreams big things and when he is thoroughly satisfied with an idea he nurses it with care, dispersing all froth, and labouring with all his heart and soul on those essential things that are so lifelike when they creep out at you in the picture. He uses his cynicism as an armor when he deals with those people who have nothing more to offer him professionally than disillusion. Yes, he has his quiet little laugh at the world now and then.

Characteristic of this trait was his retort to a fellow businessman who rebuked him at one time for going into such huge expense in providing a thousand people with costumes for the setting of a thirty-second scene.

"What's the good of so many people? Give the audience a picture of a horse eating hay—it will interest them just as much."

"I am playing to people, not horses!" he flashed back.

What criticism has come to Griffith's ears has been utilized to good advantage. With all the courage of his convictions, he is always receptive of mind. He has improved on the most radical criticisms and reviews, at the same time remaining sane enough to know that to gain the universal approval of the people is the work of only gods. Mere man can do no more than find a common level with the greater percentage of them. And surely he has done this.

Contained in these many pages of description about the work of the man was rarely anything said about the way he did it. David Wark Griffith the Man has been overlooked because his pictures contained such volume of absorbing interest and such colossal photoplay mechanism. The people were swept off their feet as it were and found themselves unable to talk of—right then—the technique.

* * *

There are those of his staff, however, who have been allowed to catch intimate glimpses of their chief at work, and one of these relates this fresh viewpoint:

"So many fellows are told of the great, that it is often difficult to separate real from fictitious personality. Particularly is this true of David Wark Griffith. We who work with him know him as a human being endowed with almost supernatural powers. Imagination, craftsmanship, and work are the x, y and z of the Griffith equation. His imagination first found itself in the old Biograph studio in downtown New York a decade and a half ago. Its master had earned his bread as salesman, reporter, book agent, actor, story scribbler and quasi-dramatist. He was an ore shoveler on the lakes docks at Conneaut. He has worked with and understands the man in overalls as well as the dress suit model.

"Not, however, until the opportunity came to envision and recreate stories as pictures did our chief's special gift reveal itself. His ingenuity of resources corresponded only to that of an inventor. Experience under which can be outlined triple discouragements to every single encouragement quickly fashioned craft into craftmanship. The indefatigable labors of the daring pioneer achieved the end.

"Griffith mastered the 'arts' of photoplay in the five years' apprenticeship served at the Biograph. Then he stepped into a directorship in chief at the Mutual, that large and new concern that helped to round the knoll of departing days for the old picture. Continual is our personality. Particularly is this true of David Wark Griffith. We who work with him know him as a human being endowed with almost supernatural powers. Imagination, craftsmanship, and work are the x, y and z of the Griffith equation. His imagination first found itself in the old Biograph studio in downtown New York a decade and a half ago. Its master had earned his bread as salesman, reporter, book agent, actor, story scribbler and quasi-dramatist. He was an ore shoveler on the lakes docks at Conneaut. He has worked with and understands the man in overalls as well as the dress suit model.

"Not, however, until the opportunity came to envision and recreate stories as pictures did our chief's special gift reveal itself. His ingenuity of resources corresponded only to that of an inventor. Experience under which can be outlined triple discouragements to every single encouragement quickly fashioned craft into craftmanship. The indefatigable labors of the daring pioneer achieved the end.

"Griffith mastered the 'arts' of photoplay in the five years' apprenticeship served at the Biograph. Then he stepped into a directorship in chief at the Mutual, that large and new concern that helped to round the knoll of departing days for the old picture. Continual is our pe-

The Fall of Babylon, one of the stupendous scenes from D. W. Griffith's monumental and memorable production, "Intolerance." The Babylon set covered the amphitheater scene of the Church Institutional and the Temple of Christ was constructed with intervening office rooms between the entrance of Christ and those of Babylon.

Uncle Sam's Law Office

Continued from page 419

Colonel Guy D. Goff, assistant to the Attorney General, might be called the "general manager" of the department. He is in close touch with the various stages of the general work, and knows the qualifications of the men in the department and in the field. He keeps busy, putting in long hours in checking up the avalanches of cases as they pour in upon the department, and going out in the field to try important cases, as the occasion may require. The experiences of Colonel Goff as Judge Advocate overseas, as United States District Attorney for Wisconsin for many years, and as general counsel for and member of the United States Shipping Board, has given him an intimate knowledge of the limitations, as well as the requirements, of the Department of Justice.

The Attorney General has organized his department to give service, first of all, and he has insisted that the first thing to do is to know your fellowmen, ever looking for the better qualities in humankind to encourage and respect obedience to law and maintain an ever-abiding faith in the justice of the judgments of fellowman.

It was proper that Warren G. Harding should have selected his closest personal and political friend and adviser to act as Attorney General, for the one great passion of Warren G. Harding is "justice." Harry Daugherty had been tried and tested in the heat and fire of many a hard-fought political campaign. The President firmly believed in him, as Daugherty believed in the President. The policy of the President to gather around him the strongest and best men possible for an efficient administration is revealed in the Department of Justice. The administration will inspire the confidence of the people of this country and all lands where the sun of justice may shine to make brighter the dark places of earth.

The Miracle Man of the Movies

Continued from page 422

trust. He ceased now making the shorter lengths of films. Instead, he set to work on the task of surpassing stage productions by making great epical and historical films.

"A genius because of his capacity for work and for taking pains.

"Griffith worked ten months on his last picture. He missed not a day of personal direction. Whether the scene happened to be a splendid French Revolution climax or just a paltry close-up of a minor actor, no matter, he was never far away.

"The preparation for a Griffith picture entails enormous research work. Not only does the chief employ workers to delve into the arts, architecture, furniture, properties, costumes, etc., but he obtains a staff of readers to assist him in laying his foundation. These students record their assimilated ideas to use them as a check against those of their chief. Griffith is himself an omnivorous reader. In this way results obtained are synopsized or tabulated, and the guide serves as the historical frame work for the picture."

Mr Griffith considers editing his scenarios as much drudgery as does the newspaper or magazine editor. For all of that, however, he never shirks it. He is constantly revising, cutting and rearranging films, not only in the cutting-room, but en tour as well. Thus he pursued this last picture of his from his studio to Norwalk, to Bridgeport, to Hartford, to the Boston world premiere, back to New York again, and thence to Chicago. In each place he studied audience reactions, attuning his work to the pulse of the people. It is this method of elimination by trial that reduces the picture, "Orphans of the Storm," from an unwieldy length to an all-absorbing, two-hour-and-a-half entertainment qualified to hold the two-dollar public.

More perhaps than any other director has David Wark Griffith striven to lift the motion picture out of the murk and mire that obscured its early beginnings, and to make of it what it is capable of becoming under the direction of such far-seeing men as himself—the greatest vehicle for education and enlightenment that the world has known. The motion picture speaks a universal language. It has likewise the unrivalled prestige of a universal appeal to every class, to every age, and to both sexes. No other medium for the dissemination of the lessons that History and Nature, the two great teachers of humankind, strive to teach, can ever hope to rival it. All the instructors of all the academies of all the nations on God's footstool can by their combined efforts scratch only the surface of the shell of ignorance that encrusts the world, but the motion-picture can convey to the most elemental intelligence the fundamentals of education upon which are builded all of the laws and all of the gospels.

A great responsibility, in consequence, rests upon the shoulders of a director of such mammoth productions as David Wark Griffith conceives. A great opportunity is likewise his. That he has always been conscious of his responsibility and appreciative of his opportunity has been clearly evident in his entire career. He has striven always toward the realization of a high idealism in his art. His the hand that has held aloft the torch that has lighted the way of moving picture development out of the morass of sensualism and sensationalism into which it once seemed fated to flounder. No man can point at a reel produced by David Wark Griffith and fail to see the glow of his genius supreme.

Works of the Western Electric Company; the manufacturing department of the Bell System

Economical Equipment

Forty years ago the management of the Bell Telephone System organized for a supply of the apparatus which it foresaw would be required in the development of its new industry—telephone service.

The telephone in some countries is the luxury of the rich, but in America it is used by practically all the people. This universal service is due in large measure to foresight in engineering and manufacture.

Switchboards with millions of parts, other apparatus of highest efficiency, and all necessarily of complex and intricate design, cables and wires and a multitude of technical devices enable our country to lead the world in telephone service.

All this telephone equipment is made in a factory which is recognized throughout the world as having the largest production and the highest standards of workmanship and efficiency.

This factory, controlled through stock ownership by the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, has been for forty years the manufacturing department of the Bell System; with the result that the associated companies secure equipment of the highest development, made of the best materials, produced in accordance with the requirements of the public, and with the certainty of moderate costs.

Economy in the Bell System begins with the manufacture of equipment.

"BELL SYSTEM"

AMERICAN TELEPHONE AND TELEGRAPH COMPANY

AND ASSOCIATED COMPANIES

One Policy, One System, Universal Service, and all directed toward Better Service

Don't fail to mention NATIONAL MAGAZINE when writing to advertisers.

National Magazine

LILLIAN AND DOROTHY GISH

*Appearing in D. W. Griffith's latest film production, "Orphans of the Storm," a memorable screen adaptation of "The Two of the Bastile," a memorable stage adaptation of "The Two Orphans." A film memorably associated with people famous throughout the world for its unusual production being created at Griffith Studios, Mamaroneck, Long Island, under the supervision of Mr. Griffith himself, on the opening of the accomodation of Mr. Griffith's new studio, the most complete and modern in the world. Mr. Griffith's latest effort in the motion production of the Gish Sisters, Dorothy and Lillian, who are the leading people of the film, has proven a most popular and successful production. Representations of the celebrated photoplay, from the stirring production now at Chicago's Auditorium, from the stirring production now at Chicago's Auditorium, have been received by thousands who visited Grand Central Palace, Chicago, where attendance upon the Fifth of Liberty Bond Drive, thousands were attracted upon the Fifth of Liberty Bond Drive, thousands were attracted upon the Fifth of Liberty Bond Drive, thousands were attracted

Globe Feb. 5

PRAISE FOR "ORPHANS OF THE STORM"

Kate Claxton, Who Made "Two Orphans" Famous, Pays Tribute to Art of Film Play

Kate Claxton, who made "The Two Orphans" famous as a stage play, thinks that Lillian and Dorothy Gish are perfect as Henriette and Louise in David W. Griffith's film version of her play, "The Orphans of the Storm," which is being shown at the Tremont Theatre.

Miss Claxton said concerning her admiration for the two actresses, as well as for the rest of the cast:

"After having been identified with Louise in 'The Two Orphans' for nearly half a century, you may well think that I am somewhat exacting concerning the qualities and requirements for interpreting these parts to the newer generation.

"Mr Griffith has shown a skill in selection that, like his directorial skill, is almost uncanny. Particularly so in selecting a comedienne like Dorothy Gish for the sad part of Louise. Haven't you noticed that first-rate comedians have plenty of pathos? The player that can make you laugh without a loss of your self-respect can generally make you weep. I remember Stuart Robson, who played Picard in the original 'Two Orphans,' had the power.

"Joseph Schildkraut is an ideal lover, and when I say this I am mindful of the distinguished Charles R. Thorne, who was the leading romantic figure of the New York stage in the '70s and played the role originally. Joseph Schildkraut brings to Chevalier de Vaudrey the experience of a lifetime and the teachings of his father, Rudolf Schildkraut.

"While a young man, he is an old actor. His knowledge of the sword and his acting in the absolute manner of his garments, so to speak, stamp him as an aristocrat of the period of 1789. Another very, very good impersonation is that of Miss Lucille La Verne as La Frochard, the part that was played in our Union Square Company by Marie Wilkins, out character woman. Of the new characters Monte Blue's Danton and Sydney Herbert's Robespierre strike me as supremely good. In a word, the entire cast is excellent, the backgrounds suggest old Paris, and the accessories are most perfect and faithful to detail, reminding me of the archaeological research that "Ned" Sothern devotes to the Sothern and Marlowe stage productions.

"In looking at the 'Orphans of the Storm' I feel somewhat like a mother who had been separated from her little daughter when the latter was about 15 and didn't see her again until the child had become a matured beauty of simply overpowering attractions.

"Our little stage play of 'The Two Orphans' is so changed that sometimes as I sit in front of 'Orphans of the Storm' I rub my eyes in wonder or barely recognize it. Most of my stage vehicle is there before me, of course, but as the germ of a simply tremendously enlarged scheme of production, in which great historical events and personages figure. My Louise and my Henriette (you must remember I owned the play, and all the characters are mine) have become so wonderful that it is hard to identify them with the 'little folks' of 45 years ago."

Advertiser Feb. 5

Picture Players Healthy: Ask Griffith

[illegible] a movie player and live long and happily.

Motion picture players are the healthiest of all workers, according to a recent report of the vital statistics bureau of the Associated Insurance Committee.

The majority of persons engaged in picture making are young, and work in the open air much of the time. Much physical exercise is involved in the work. But the mental health of the workers is still more marked.

[illegible]

Transcript Feb. 7

CURRENT PHOTO-PLAYS

[illegible]

Post Feb. 8

"THE MASTER PRODUCER PROVES TO THE WORLD THAT HE IS A CREATIVE GENIUS"

When Mr. D. W. Griffith sent his research staff to France to gather historic lore for his production of "Orphans of the Storm," which was developed from Dennery's famous old play, "The Two Orphans," they discovered a number of things not appearing in the play but at the same time of great interest to those who follow history.

Girls who now bob their hair may be interested to know how the practice began. During the great French Revolution this became a custom among young women as a protest of mourning by them for members of their family who had been made victims of the guillotine.

George Jacques Danton, the fiery leader of the common people during the Revolution, and which character is made a very forceful part of Mr. Griffith's production, was the man who established the dread tribunal and Committee of Public Safety, which Robespierre used to further his own tyrannical ideas. It was Danton who first suggested the guillotine. However, this popular idol of the French mob was the first to realize the terrible abuses and villainy of Robespierre and in time Danton came to be the one man in France who favored abolishing the guillotine and at the same time curbing the power of the dread Public Committee. Both he and Robespierre eventually fell victims to the very horrible blade they established.

According to French historians, Danton was probably one of the greatest natural orators of all times. It is said he could sway a mob of thousands with a brief speech. That he was a great organizer is evidenced from the fact that he converted the wild French mobs into an army that beat back from the borders of France the warriors of allied Europe trying to restore the monarchy. Returning to Paris from one of these successful expeditions and finding chaos existing, with Robespierre beheading innocent people in great groups, Denton made a famous address to the public and at this time uttered his famous remark: "Peace, oh, Peace with one another! Are we not alone against the world, a little band of brothers?"

Again, he dashed up the stairs of the guillotine on one occasion and called a stop to the series of executions and turning to the hordes of thousands gathered about, shouted: "I am weary of blood—I would rather be guillotined than be a feeder of the guillotine!"

DAVID WARK GRIFFITH
Producer of "Orphans of the Storm"

In Mr. Griffith's picture he shows in the first part the utter disregard for life and welfare of the common people by the aristocracy. French authentic history tells of an incident when King Louis XVI found it necessary to chide two of his noblemen for casually using two workmen on the roof for target practice. One of the workmen was killed and the other was seriously wounded. Although owning practically all of the land, the nobleman was not asked to pay taxes at this time. The commoner paid the expenses of the most extravagant government the world has ever known.

Another historical incident recorded of the day tells of one nobleman's tenants on his estate, after a long weary day of work in the fields, being forced to stay up all night beating the waters of a pond so the croaking of the frogs would not disturb the slumber of himself and his family.

Miss Lucille La Verne who will be seen as Mother Frochard in Mr. Griffith's picture, makes up with quite a pronounced mustache. This may seem strange, but Madame Frochard was of a class in Paris at the time in which mustaches were quite common among women. The Frochards were really gypsies who came from the southwest of France. Paris was the home of many of these groups of gypsies at that time and they made their abode in cellars as a rule. In the Griffith production when Madame Frochard's two sons, Pierre, the cripple, and Jacques, fight a bloody duel with knives, Pierre calls out to his adversary, "Remember, Jacques, we come of a race that kills!"

The weird, fantastic costumes worn by the Paris mobs as shown in the Griffith picture may occasion considerable discussion. However, the authentic plays and records of the period show that for some unknown reason the people chose to garb themselves with the gaudiest of raiment, the men's coats and pantaloons being of large stripes and in the gayest colors.

A CLEVER BIT OF DOUBLE EXPOSURE

In the picture being distributed by Singer Pictures of 729 Seventh Ave., New York, starring Mollie King in "Her Majesty," the double exposure of Miss King, who portrays the part of her twin sister is so realistic that the spectator is often at a loss to really believe that there are not two people doing that many of its most successful features are to be edited down to three reels and re-issued.

It was in response to the insistent demand of exhibitors for pictures that will enable them to get a quicker turnover of audiences without sacrificing feature quality that led Pathe to consider the re-editing and shortening of its many great features, the company states.

"BEING FEATURED"

Frank Kingsley, who has the role of Dempsey Chubb in Hunt Stromberg's production "Eden and Return," starring Doris May, is a native of Brooklyn. He had a good voice when he was a youngster, and for a lark one night sang in a cabaret. A musical comedy manager heard him and gave him a chance to go on the stage. Later he was in musical stock, with Louis Morton in Newark, N. J., and when he called on a friend at a studio he was offered a job. He took it. He was educated in the Brooklyn public schools.

QUALITY COUNTS—That's why so many New England Exhibitors are booking and playing Pictures from Independent Films, Inc., Boston, Mass.; New Haven, Conn.

Post Feb. 9

GIRLS TRAVELLING

[illegible] personal appearance after the Gish sisters these and Dorothy have been openings of the D. W. piece, "Orphans of the principal cities. They Chicago, Philadelphia, [illegible]nnati and are now in

Traveler Feb. 8

OFF AGAIN

Lillian and Dorothy Gish have gone to New Orleans to be present at the opening of "Orphans of the Storm." Their presence in Chicago the opening night of the Griffith picture was such a success that they were invited to go South for another personal appearance. The Chicago critics were enthusiastic over Mr. Griffith's picture. Chicago seems to have taken "Orphans of the Storm" to its heart, and returns from the box office indicate more than that—it is doing a big business out there.

Traveler Feb. 11

DOROTHY GISH IN "ORPHANS OF THE STORM" TREMONT

Advertiser Feb. 6.

FRANK LOSEE "ORPHANS OF THE STORM" TREMONT

Traveler Feb. 4

American Feb. 4

Herald Feb. 5

FRANK PUBLIC IN "ORPHANS OF THE STORM" TREMONT

American Feb. 3

'ORPHANS' MADE OVER TO SUIT MRS. HARDING

Griffith Saves Pierre in Revised Film Because She Was Sorry to See Him Die

By FRED J. McISAAC,
Dramatic Editor.

When Mrs. Warren G. Harding saw "Orphans of the Storm" a few weeks ago she remarked that she was sorry that Pierre, the chivalrous little cripple, had to die in the final scenes of the Griffith picture because he had been one of her childhood heroes. But she supposed that nothing could be done about it.

Griffith, however, heard the remark, and he did not agree that nothing could be done. So he saved Pierre.

Yesterday a revised version of "Orphans of the Storm" was shown at the Tremont Theatre, for the first time in the history of the picture business a photoplay which was a hit and running before the public has been made over.

1,200 FEET OF NEW FILM.

New scenes to the amount of 1,200 feet of film went in and nearly that amount of interior scenes went out. The cost of making the revisions is said to have amounted to nearly $100,000.

As a result Mr. Griffith has heightened the love interest very much without weakening the historic side of the picture.

In order to do these things he had to summon the actors, who supposed the picture was all over, back to his studio outside New York and build scene after scene.

The part of Joseph Schildkraut has been very much strengthened, making him much more of a hero.

Fay Moore one of the stars of the Ziegfeld Roof, was introduced in a new scene which is known as the Feast of Reason and which takes place during the Carmignole episodes.

HALE ADDS HUMOR.

Creighton Hale, the funny man of "Way Down East," is introduced into the picture in a number of scenes and produces some very hearty laughter. Porter Strong, another well-known actor, comes into the picture in an important part.

Griffith has toned down some of the more terrible scenes in deference to public taste, but the most striking change is the saving of Pierre by the arrival of Danton a few seconds sooner in his wild ride to the guillotine.

In "The Two Orphans" Pierre did not die. In "Orphans of the Storm" Griffith had him attack the executioners at the guillotine and by his fight delay the execution of the heroine until the rescuers could arrive. For his heroism he was brutally murdered. As this episode was not strictly historical, and as Mr. Griffith recognized that Mrs. Harding spoke for nearly all women in his audiences who had sympathized with the crippled boy, he has remade those scenes and saved the youth.

In doing so he has accomplished something entirely new in motion pictures, set a new record. In the future motion pictures will be improved as they go along just as a play is continually improved by the authors after it has been before the public.

Plays Role of Pierre in "Orphans of the Storm"

FRANK PUGLIA.

Globe Jan. 22

Fifth Week of "Orphans of the Storm" at the Tremont

This is the fifth week of D. W. Griffith's latest and greatest motion picture effort, "Orphans of the Storm," at the Tremont Theatre. Mr Griffith has stated that he will present this work only as a first-class theatre offering.

The necessary musical, color and elemental effect embellishment is such that "Orphans of the Storm" could not be shown under less expensive arrangement without marked loss of artistic effect.

Globe Jan. 31

"Orphans of the Storm"

TREMONT THEATRE—Griffith's splendidly artistic photoplay, "Orphans of the Storm," continues in undiminished popularity.

The story has been elaborated from that of "The Two Orphans" and the scene has been laid during the stirring time of the French Revolution.

Globe Jan. 28

David W. Griffith said, at a recent talk before the Art Directors' Club, "The three most beautiful faces I have ever seen are the faces of mature women. One is Alexandra, the Dowager Queen of England; the second is a scrub-woman in a Pittsburg theatre, and the third is Mrs. Warren G. Harding. If I could show these three faces on the screen as they actually are then the public would declare motion pictures an art."

Traveler Feb. 3

E. R. T., Mattapan—Please tell me the correct pronunciation of these two names which appeared in "Orphans of the Storm," Chevalier de Vaudrey and de Sinieres.

Any French dictionary would have helped you out. "She (short e) -val (as in value) i (ee) -er (ay). Vaudrey is as it looks with the au like long o. The other is Sin-ee-err.

Herald Jan. 29

SCENE FROM "ORPHANS OF THE STORM" - TREMONT.

Traveler Feb. 1

GRIFFITH IN CHICAGO

The opening of "Orphans of the Storm" in Chicago is to have all the glory of a New York opening, Mr. Griffith has taken his entire company West for this auspicious occasion, the trip having been made in a private car. Lillian Gish, Dorothy Gish, Albert Grey and D. W. Griffith were in the party. They will be entertained by the Chicago Press Club at a dinner in Chicago, that famous "loop hound," Lou Houseman, having made arrangements for it.

Transcript Feb. 1

The promising words, "Last Weeks," now appear in the advertisements of Mr. Griffith's picture, "Orphans of the Storm," on view at the Tremont. No doubt it has vast merits for a vast public, but a movie is a movie, even when it is called a photo-spectacle, and thereby is mute; whereas the Tremont has been, is, and deserves to be a theatre of the spoken word, where living, and not screened, human beings hold the stage. There are foolish folk who believe that a play of almost no merit at all is more to be desired in a theatre than the best of films.

Post Jan. 29

TREMONT THEATRE

The romance, pathos and excitement embodied in the Griffith picture, "Orphans of the Storm," current at the Tremont Theatre, has caused that house to be filled thus far at every presentation. It is both an instructive and interesting film.

Herald Feb. 3

WHAT THE MOVIE FAN WANTS TO KNOW

For many years, in the innocence of our youth, we accepted what theatrical and motion picture producers told us and believed their words.

Now we have come to think that they know no more about what the dear public wants than the dear public itself, and have been talking about the matter to cover up their ignorance.

For instance, every one who follows the theatre knows that one of the axioms of producers is that there is a popular prejudice against what they are pleased to call "costume plays," meaning plays in which the action calls for costumes that go as far back in the dim and misty past as 10 years or more.

When George Arliss appeared in "Disraeli" there were many gloomy prognosticators who said that a "costume play" was never a popular success. When "Disraeli" proved just that they shook their heads more gloomily and said that Arliss himself had made the play, in spite of, rather than because of, the "costumes."

Presumably the public could not bear to be reminded of those terrible days when bustles and hoop skirts and pompadours for women, and ruffles and velvet and knee breeches and wigs were worn by men.

The Contradiction

But every once in a while a play, or, more latterly, a movie, came along that proved the producers wrong. The public did not shiver with horror at the old-fashioned "costumes," but, on the contrary, were interested and pleased.

There were still producers, however, who insisted that no costume play or movie could ever succeed, and who kept on insisting, even in the face of figures proving that such plays did succeed and were still succeeding.

Recently there was an amusing compromise attempted by one producer, who had the vibration that he wanted to give "East Lynne" to the public in motion picture form.

He recalled the great success of this story both as a book and a play, and although the picture would undoubtedly call for the hated "costumes," he couldn't quite pass up the chance to show the death bed of "Little Willie," and the lady at the piano playing "Then You'll Remember Me."

A Hybrid Production

Then he had a wonderful idea. He would produce the play, but he would make it a thing of no definite time or place. It was, he concluded, something that might happen anywhere, at any time, so he lightly sketched over the locale, and dressed his people in modern clothes. These, presumably, were on hand in the studio dressing rooms, and saved him considerable research work and expense which clothing his people in the costumes of England at the time the story was written would have demanded.

The picture, strangely enough, was mildly successful, in spite of many absurdities.

But recently so many plays which five years or so ago would have frightened producers almost to death have been successful, set in their proper time and place, costumes and all, that never again will we believe the public will refuse to attend "costume plays."

Take, for example, the most talked-of one of all, "Orphans of the Storm." Then "The Three Musketeers" and "Beside the Bonnie Brier Bush."

Then "Jane Eyre"

There were hardly any vacant seats, we noticed, at any one of these plays during their runs. And now Hugo Ballin has done "Jane Eyre" so charmingly we felt after seeing it that nothing could have been more fascinating than the way Jane and Rochester dressed, and we dreamed dreams of wearing a bonnet like Jane's, with strings tied under the chin and black lace falling demurely down over the eyes.

After seeing the play a second time, however, we realized that the charm of it lay in many other more significant things than the mere fact that the costumes and locations were faithfully reproduced before the cameras.

The photography, we discovered, was so beautiful as to be startling in some of the scenes, and the fine restraint shown by Mr. Ballin in handling some of the more dramatic parts of the story, showed the value of under-emphasis rather than over-emphasis.

As for "Orphans of the Storm" one can say only that it was excellent, and that we knew all along it would be. There is never any element of surprise in what Mr. Griffith does, unless it is the surprise that comes when we realize that our anticipations were feeble things, and that the reality was much better than our dreams.

Improving the Picture

And speaking of "Orphans of the Storm," Mr. Griffith was by no means satisfied with it when it was shown in this city. He studied the reactions of the audiences to the film, and then, when it was taken to New York, made certain changes, which, he contends, have greatly improved the picture as a whole.

He has not only deleted certain scenes, but he has made others at his studio at Mamaroneck, N. Y., and interjected them into the photoplay.

Frank Puglia, as Pierre, for instance, has been brought to life and kept alive for the happy ending.

The amusing Picard, played by Creighton Hale, has been given additional space; the Carmagnole dancers have been given more to do and the scene at the guillotine has been tempered for those who do not like to roll around in horror.

Traveler Feb. 6

GRIFFITH'S NEW DRAMA

Fay Marbe, the musical comedy star, has been chosen by D. W. Griffith to beat express the mad dance of the Garmagnole, in the new scenes taken for "Orphans of Storm." While making the original scenes, Griffith reports he was unable to find a dancer who could express the nervous, sensuous abandon necessary to express the mad excitement of that period and the new scenes have been added to the film at the Tremont Theatre.

Traveler Jan. 28

It took Lucille La Verne, the character actress who is playing in two shows at the same time now ("Back Pay" and the film "Orphans of the Storm"), to put one over on Boston the other day. Having a rush order on hand for a package to be sent off, Miss La Verne dashed from the theatre without removing her make-up, said make-up being of the black variety which she plays the role of Lillian's hard maid.

On arriving at her hotel she asked the clerk for the key to her room. He refused. After some argument Miss La Verne finally convinced him that she was "her maid" and then rode in state to her room in the elevator.

Traveler Jan. 28

What the Films Have to Offer

ORPHANS OF THE STORM

D. W. Griffith's film tale of the French revolution, "Orphans of the Storm," enters upon the sixth week of its run at the Tremont Theatre tomorrow. This accomplished, Mr. Griffith will take a short vacation and immediately begin preliminary work on his next offering.

Advertiser Jan. 23

SCENE FROM "ORPHANS OF THE STORM" -TREMONT

Post Jan. 24

TREMONT THEATRE

D. W. Griffith's "Orphans of the Storm" is in its fifth week at the Tremont Theatre. It will be shown twice daily, including Sunday, during the remainder of the Tremont Theatre engagement.

Advertiser Feb. 4

Lillian Gish wears old clothes to knock the H. C. L. It's a good press-agent stunt, too.

Telegram Jan. 31

"Orphans of the Storm"

TREMONT THEATRE—Griffith's splendidly artistic photoplay, "Orphans of the Storm," continues in undiminished popularity.

The story has been elaborated from that of "The Two Orphans" and the scene has been laid during the stirring time of the French Revolution.

Telegram Jan. 31

TREMONT—"Orphans of the Storm" (film), D. W. Griffith's latest and universally acknowledged best photoplay production. Founded upon "The Two Orphans."

Advertiser Jan. 31

PICTURES REMAINING

Griffith's latest master-work, "Orphans of the Storm," is crowding the Tremont Theatre, daily and Sunday.

Transcript Feb. 4

PHOTO-PLAYS NEXT WEEK

Tremont—Orphans of the Storm

FILM of the French Revolution, devised and accomplished with David Griffith's pictorial imagination and skill playing at high pitch, over fruitful field, with abundant resource. From the old melodrama, "The Two Orphans," he first takes narrative and personages, leading both into the French Revolution. There he adds characters to and out of history, invents episodes, reconstructs and pictures the Paris of those days according to his own vision and purpose. The outcome is a photo-spectacle in which scenes at the guillotine, in the revolutionary tribunal, up and down a turbulent and blood-ridden Paris count all the cost. A picture that virtue possesses, players, period. Seldom has Mr. Griffith evoked in better consistent or more impressive outcome. The screen does, with two showings on Sunday.

Telegram Feb. 4

JAELDON LEWIS "ORPHANS OF THE STORM" TREMONT THEATRE

Italian News Feb. 4

TREMONT THEATRE.

The end of the engagement of D. W. Griffith's wonder motion picture "Orphans of the Storm," at the Tremont theatre is fast nearing. Mr. Griffith leased the Tremont theatre entirely for the showing of his latest work, and has sought diligently to renew his option on the theatre so as to continue the great photo-spectacle indefinitely. This he has been unable to do. Only a short time now remains for the people of Boston to see Mr. Griffith's greatest effort. "Orphans of the Storm" will be withdrawn after the present engagement and not be shown here until next Fall. Mr. Griffith does not desire at present to attempt to produce this work without the aid of a large symphony orchestra and full crew of his own stage experts. To do this properly, a first-class theatre is necessary. "Orphans of the Storm" begins its seventh week today.

Post Feb. 7

TREMONT THEATRE

D. W. Griffith's motion picture triumph, "Orphans of the Storm," is now in its seventh week at the Tremont Theatre and attracting the most remarkable audiences ever known in the history of motion pictures in this city. Never has a photoplay presentation been patronized by groups as has this new work of the master motion picture director.

Traveler Feb. 4

What the Films Have to Offer

"ORPHANS OF THE STORM"

The end of the engagement of D. W. Griffith's wonder motion picture, "Orphans of the Storm," at the Tremont Theatre, is fast nearing. Only a short time now remains for the people of Boston to see Mr. Griffith's greatest effort, "Orphans of the Storm," which will be withdrawn after the present engagement and not be shown here until next Fall. "Orphans of the Storm" begins its seventh week on Monday but this engagement must be necessarily shortened on account of other bookings at this theatre.

Post Feb. 5

TREMONT THEATRE

"Orphans of the Storm" is still the attraction at the Tremont Theatre and seems likely to remain there for an indefinite period. The attendance has been large from the first and continues unabated.

Advertiser Feb. 6

Advertiser Feb. 6

REVIVING "THE ORPHANS"

D. W. Griffith has saved little Pierre, the plucky cripple in "Orphans of the Storm," partly because President Harding's wife was overheard saying that she was sorry to see Pierre die after his defiance of the bloodthirsty men around the guillotine. Moreover, he has brightened the comedy element in his new picture, giving more play to the comic talent of Creighton Hale; and also made the role played by Joseph Schildkraut more heroic. Whole new sequences have been introduced to emphasize both comedy and romance. It is worth while going to the Tremont again to see these welcome revisions, those new touches which without doubt will add much to the popularity of the production. Such improvements are often in the early days of a stage production, but on the screen they are innovation, thanks either to accuracy or publicity.

Advertiser Feb. 5

TREMONT THEATRE

The run of the engagement of D. W. Griffith's production of "Orphans of the Storm" at the Tremont Theatre is fast nearing its end. Only a few more days remain in which the people of Boston can see this great photo-spectacle. Mr. Griffith leased the Tremont theatre entirely for the showing of his latest work, and has sought diligently to renew his option on the theatre so as to continue the great photo-spectacle indefinitely. This he has been unable to do. Only a short time now remains for the people of Boston to see Mr. Griffith's greatest effort. "Orphans of the Storm" will be withdrawn after the present engagement and not be shown here until next Fall. Mr. Griffith does not desire at present to attempt to produce this work without the aid of a large symphony orchestra and full crew of his own stage experts. To do this properly, a first-class theatre is necessary. "Orphans of the Storm" begins its seventh week today.

Advertiser Feb. 5

Last Weeks of "Orphans of the Storm" at the Tremont

Advertiser Feb. 4

From Griffith's Fashion Show

This had been going in Paris back in the days when Marie Antoinette patronized dressing round with the gown and the profusion of "Orphans of the Storm" which is one of the current attractions in the amusing picture of French history on screen just before the Revolution broke loose.

Newspaper Feb. 4

STAGE COACH IN "ORPHANS" CURIOUS

Exact Duplicate of Ancient Vehicle Used Between Normandy and Paris

One of the most interesting of the cars in the show, an antique, yet modern, stage coach, is the property of Mr. Griffith. It is a duplicate of the coach used between Normandy and Paris in the days before the Revolution. It is a very heavy affair, with a great deal of room for passengers and baggage. The coach is drawn by six horses, and it requires a good deal of skill to drive it. The driver is a man who has been with the show since it left Paris, and he is very proud of his job. The coach is painted in the colors of the Griffith company, and it is a very attractive vehicle. It is used in the scenes where the characters are going from Paris to the country, and it is a very important part of the show.

"Our Movie Fans"
By SYLVIA CONNOR

Sylvia Fairbanks

VOL. II, NO. 13 — A Monthly Magazine — PRICE 15 CENTS

The STAGE

Photoplay News

(Registered)

JANUARY, 1922

VAUDEVILLE — CABARET — MOTION PICTURE — DRAMA — CONCERTS — BURLESQUE

LILLIAN AND DOROTHY GISH
in "Orphans of the Storm"

The Stage

MR. GRIFFITH HAS DRIVEN HOME A LESSON AND A MESSAGE IN "ORPHANS OF THE STORM"

If you can find one of those dissatisfied souls who are saying that "moving pictures have seen their day," or one of the unenlightened who find pleasure in remarking that the moving picture is but a makeshift imitation which has tried to crowd the art and power of the spoken drama from its pinnacle, take that person to see Griffith's "Orphans of the Storm" and enjoy the pleasure of witnessing a complete transformation of opinion.

Any healthy human who can sit through this photoplay masterpiece without experiencing practically every wholesome thrill in the gamut of emotions is like a tarnished mirror, incapable of reflection.

From Prologue to the flashing caption of "The End," the story is a tense, gripping portrayal of the types, faces, characters and emotions which have endured down through civilization's progress. Love, hatred, revenge, greed, jealousy, indifference, despair, exaltation of power, abject sorrow, madness, sacrifice and joy, all are depicted in a racing and thrilling heart interest story.

Taking as a base the story of "The Two Orphans," Mr. Griffith has woven into its very fabric a startlingly graphic insight into the French Revolution which is worthy of a place in the records of world's history, so cleverly are the motives disclosed, so faithfully are the characters drawn and so vividly are the scenes reproduced.

We know the power in the original story of the "Orphans." We have all reacted to the pitiful plight of the lost blind girl in the clutches of that driving hag Mother Frochard. We have shared the exaltation in the love of the faithful sister, shared her torture, soul-searing worry and agony of despair while searching for her helpless foundling-sister. We have inwardly cheered the crippled Pierre who befriended the blind girl; admired de Vaudrey in his love and sacrifice; gritted our teeth at the cold-hearted Count.

Now comes Mr. Griffith and enhances these powers an hundred fold; takes the story out of its former limited sphere and replaces imagination with actual scenes that are really awe-inspiring. Every detail is handled with a thoroughness which is too liable to go unnoticed by the everyday observer. The lumbering coaches, the sedan chairs, the carts, the coaching retinues of the aristocracy, the palace gardens, court settings and festival trappings—all are pictured with an accuracy which is amazing.

If poverty is suggested, poverty is present. The scene of the hungry rabble gazing in mute despair and imaginative longing upon the bread window of the baker is a stirring picture which is imprinted on my memory for days, yes, years to come. Likewise is displayed the wanton extravagance in the feasting of the aristocrats.

The terrible sight of the guillotine with its brutish attendants,—and yet the master hand of the producer is so clever of manipulation that I found myself watching the scene without hysterics, but with a hatred and revolt against any circumstances which could allow such a terrifying abortion of supposed justice to exist in the name of Democracy. And there is the real secret of the tremendous power of the pictures; its direction!

In presenting the characters of Robespierre, Danton, Louis XVI and the minor characters of both Aristocracy and Revolutionists, Mr. Griffith has brought out the human traits which cold printed words never could bring so forcefully into view. At the same time he has exercised his grasp of showmanship by inserting a tremendously stirring episode for a punch in the mad race of Danton and his horsemen in their thundering rush and nerve racking drive to reach the guillotine in time to forestall the execution of Henriette and her lover.

Without preaching and without the taint of propaganda, Mr. Griffith has driven home a lesson and a message. Go, find it yourself! It is worth a thousand sermons. At the conclusion you will depart with the exalted spiritual and physical exhilaration which follows the tightening and relaxation of what the novelist calls "heartstrings."

The moving picture industry owes Mr. Griffith immeasurable thanks for his accomplishment. It will do more to strengthen the power of the Moving Picture than any other argument yet advanced to boost its power and popularity.

My opening paragraph was suggested by actual fact. My husband never has cared for pictures. He now inquires where there are more treats like this one. The unfortunate part is my failure to point to another in its class.

GOLDIE PEMBERTON.

At Last Griffith has made one Better than the "Birth of a Nation"

EVERY MOTION PICTURE PAPER IN ECSTACY OVER D. W. GRIFFITH'S MASTERFUL, LAND-MARK-MAKING, NEW CREATION

"ORPHANS OF THE STORM"

WITH

LILLIAN GISH and DOROTHY GISH

TEN THOUSAND OTHERS

SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA OF FORTY

TREMONT THEATRE THIS WEEK NOW

Matinee 2 P. M. Prompt Evenings 8 P. M.

American Jan. 28

DOROTHY GISH IN "ORPHANS OF THE STORM" TREMONT.

Post Jan. 28

STRIKING, TO SAY THE LEAST

Lillian Gish, petite movie star, who recently found a warm spot in the heart of Dame Boston, is particularly striking in this gay head dress which she wears while playing the part of Henriette at the court of Paris in her latest movie production.

THE "HANDSOMEST MAN IN THE WORLD"

This title was bestowed upon Joseph Shildkraus by no less an authority than Max Rhinehart, prominent Continental movie producer. Shildkraus is a movie actor and is now appearing on Broadway.

Telegram Jan. 28

JOSEPH SCHILDKRAUT
ORPHANS of the STORM
— TREMONT THEATRE —

American Jan. 28

"ORPHANS OF THE STORM," the powerful heart and historic drama which D. W. Griffith manufactured from "Two Orphans" and the French Revolution begins the sixth week at the Tremont.

Advertiser Jan. 30

Is She the Greatest Beauty?

CLARYS COOPER

WHEN THE WORLD IS THAT THE EYES OF THE FOREMOST, DARKEST YOUNG DRAMATIST OF FRANCE, AND A FOREMOST CINEMATOGRAPHER WERE SENT TO A [illegible] TO SEEK THE MOST BEAUTIFUL GIRLS IN THE WORLD, THEY SELECTED THE GIRL WHOSE PICTURE IS SHOWN ABOVE.

THE DRAMATIST WAS THE FAMOUS MAURICE MAETERLINCK, AND THE CINEMATOGRAPHER WAS JAMES BRAMPTON, AN ENGLISHMAN.

THE DRAMATIST WANTED TO FIND A GIRL WHO COULD PLAY THE PART OF THE PRINCESS MALINE IN HIS PLAY, "THE BLUE BIRD," AND THE CINEMATOGRAPHER WANTED TO FIND THE GIRL WHO COULD PLAY THE PART OF THE MOTHER IN THE MOVIE VERSION OF THE SAME PLAY.

THE DRAMATIST AND THE CINEMATOGRAPHER WERE ALSO SEEKING FOR A GIRL WHO COULD PLAY THE PART OF THE MOTHER IN THE MOVIE VERSION OF THE SAME PLAY.

THE DRAMATIST AND THE CINEMATOGRAPHER WERE ALSO SEEKING FOR A GIRL WHO COULD PLAY THE PART OF THE MOTHER IN THE MOVIE VERSION OF THE SAME PLAY.

THE DRAMATIST AND THE CINEMATOGRAPHER WERE ALSO SEEKING FOR A GIRL WHO COULD PLAY THE PART OF THE MOTHER IN THE MOVIE VERSION OF THE SAME PLAY.

THE DRAMATIST AND THE CINEMATOGRAPHER WERE ALSO SEEKING FOR A GIRL WHO COULD PLAY THE PART OF THE MOTHER IN THE MOVIE VERSION OF THE SAME PLAY.

Traveler Jan 28

SCENE FROM "ORPHANS OF THE STORM" ~ TREMONT

American Jan. 27

HOW ABOUT IT, GIRLS? This young man has been called the handsomest in the world. His name is Joseph Schildkraut. His acting is causing wide comment. Shown here as the "Orphans of the Storm" here.

Advertiser Jan. 30

DOROTHY GISH IN "ORPHANS OF THE STORM" - TREMONT

American Jan. 29

BEAUTY AND TALENT

Combining [illegible] beauty, Dorothy Gish has risen to the heights of fandom [illegible] "Orphans of the Storm," now playing [illegible] Tremont Theatre.

Globe Jan. 29

Griffith's "Orphans of the Storm" at the Tremont

[illegible]

Globe Jan. 29

"Orphans of the Storm"

TREMONT THEATRE—"Orphans of the Storm," Griffith's [illegible] drama of the French Revolution, [illegible] for the seventh week [illegible] performances in the [illegible] auditorium. This is its fifth week.

[illegible]

Herald Jan. 28

[illegible]

Advertiser Jan. 30

Burnt Cork In Same Disguise

[illegible]

Advertiser Jan. 30

Schildkraut In Winning Honors

[illegible]

Advertiser Jan. 30

[illegible]

Advertiser Jan. 30

[illegible]

Evening Post Jan. 29

CURRENT PHOTO-PLAYS

[illegible]

American Jan. 25

DOROTHY GISH ARDENT SHAW ENTHUSIAST

Ambition of Movie Actress is to Play Flower Girl in "Pygmalion"

By FRIEDA DAVIS.

The real Dorothy Gish is not the Louise of "Orphans of the Storm." She is rather the Dorothy Gish who starred as a comedienne in a group of Paramount productions. She is vivacious, keen, and extremely enthusiastic. There are no half-way measures about her. If she likes a thing, it's "marvelous," or "wonderful." If she doesn't like it, it's "awful" or "simply terrible."

First of all, her hair is not dark and bobbed, as so many Gish fans insist. The delusion is due to a favorite wig she has used in quantities of films. She is nearly as blonde as her elder sister, Lillian, and her hair is long—in back. She explains this with a giggle and frown.

DECIDED TO BOB HAIR.

"I decided one rainy afternoon that I'd bob my hair. My husband advised me not to, but I insisted. So he said to go ahead. I cut off first one side and wasn't sure whether I liked it or not. Then I cut off the other side to make sure. I knew then I didn't like it! And so I left it long in back. Jim was to blame, of course. He should have been more firm!" The giggle was for the experiment and the frown for the weakness of her husband.

Miss Gish's chief topic of conversation, or rather, one of them—she seems to have an inexhaustible fund of topics—is her husband, James Rennie. Mr. Rennie is out on the West coast at present playing the leading role in a Goldwyn production. This separation seems a big thing in the life of the Rennies.

COSTLY PHONE CALLS.

Every day they call each other up. Lillian Gish told tales of her sister's telephone conversations while we sat about their room at the Touraine last week.

"They make better connections at night and put through calls after midnight—"

"Costs less, too!" Dorothy broke in. "Financial tip," she announced with a giggle. "Telephone stock will go up if Jim doesn't come home soon."

"Hush!" Lillian exclaimed. "The call is put through at midnight and at 1 o'clock the connection has been made. They are allowed three minutes to talk and here's what they say:

"'Hello!' Dorothy shrieks. 'Can you hear me?' Apparently Jim says he can and she replies: 'Isn't it marvelous!' He says 'yes,' I suppose and she goes on—every night, mind you—'Just think, Jim, there's Kansas between us and the Rocky Mountains and Illinois and all the rest and we can talk!'

ASKS ABOUT WEATHER.

"Somebody warns her that there's not much time left and what do you suppose she asks Jim? 'How is the weather in Hollywood?' The three minutes are up and they've spent it that way."

And that's Dorothy Gish.

Most comedienne, it seems, are ambitious to play Juliet at some time in their careers. Not so Miss Gish. Her ambition at present is to be seen as the flower-girl in "Pygmalion", George Bernard Shaw's play.

"It sounds hopeless, all right!" she exclaimed. "Because I want to go up and not such an actress as Mrs. Patrick Campbell. But I really mean it. I'm studying voice training and I intend to play behind the footlights some time. You know, I played the leading part of 'Peg Leg,' the play Jim was appearing in on Broadway this fall. I was so nervous I could hardly walk on the stage. Still it gave me a decided taste for the work."

SHAW ENTHUSIAST.

Miss Gish is an ardent Shaw enthusiast. She confesses an envious admiration for anyone who is interested in that writer's work and has followed his works for many long years. Another hobby is Joseph Hergesheimer. She has all his stories stored in her mind and wants to see them on the screen. Unfortunately, none of Hergesheimer's work is in the contracts in Hollywood. Perhaps Miss Gish, of course, has special influence and can get that book of which she speaks so highly. Who knows? Perhaps she could even persuade Mr. Hergesheimer himself to write a screen story for her.

Miss Gish is a very intelligent girl, with a keen appreciation of her profession. She is a student of her art and a student of life. She is a student of her own mind and wants to see more on the screen. Unfortunately, none of Hergesheimer's work is in the contracts in Hollywood. Perhaps Miss Gish, of course, has special influence and can get that book of which she speaks so highly. Who knows? Perhaps she could even persuade Mr. Hergesheimer himself to write a screen story for her.

Wins New Fame for Work in "Orphans of the Storm"

DOROTHY GISH

Advertiser Jan. 27

Who Are The World's Two Greatest Beauties?

D. W. GRIFFITH, the motion picture genius, startled the country the other day by naming Mrs. Harding, the Queen Dowager Alexandra of England, and a Pittsburgh scrub-woman as the most beautiful women.

Albert Sterner, the well-known portrait painter, differs from Mr. Griffith.

"Beauty," said Mr. Sterner, "must not be confounded with moral character, achievement or status in life.

"Beauty is a matter of plastic form, vitalized and made attractive by human expression.

"Plastic beauty of the human face depends on co-ordinate harmony of the features—the shapes in their inter-relation; therefore various types can be beautiful.

"A certain inscrutability of expression, especially in the female, has been for all time a lure and mark of beauty.

"That is why I admire Leonardo da Vinci's 'Mona Lisa.'

"Lina Cavalieri has a beautiful face. Years ago I was exhibiting in Paris when I caught sight of her. I followed her all round the salon just to look at her.

"I once saw a Russian cloakmaker, a sweatshop worker, in a Fourteenth st. movie theatre. She was of the Jewish type, with broad brow, black eyes and hair and finely-cut features; she was extraordinarily beautiful. She sat for me. I drew her, but have forgotten her name.

"A beautiful face is never obvious; it must excite interest and invites study.

"You cannot make it part of your consciousness at a glance."

The Advertiser has procured by courtesy a series of eminent English portraits of some most beautiful women. They will be printed from day to day.

American Feb. 2

Film Actress Uses Her Brains to Advantage in Movieland

LILLIAN GISH.
Appearing in "Orphans of the Storm" at the Tremont Theatre.

FOREIGN FILMS ARE WORRYING MISS GISH

Movie Star Afraid British Producers Will Soon Be Big Competitors Here

By FRIEDA DAVIS.

It is a popular fallacy that a motion picture star is all beauty, and little or no brains. Regardless of how often writers who know many of these stars show that more than a few of them are not only stars, but their own business managers to boot, the fans go on believing that, because they have curls and good looking eyes it is impossible for them to think clearly.

Mary Pickford is, as those who have had business or social relations with her know, one of the finest business women in existence. The film producers and directors have said over and over that there are few who are as well fitted to carry on the entire production of films as Miss Pickford, for she understands every phase of the work from the "props" department up.

GIVES POINTERS.

Lillian Gish is another who doesn't let her work as a star interfere with her interest in any other branch of this eighth art. She is watching the trend of pictures closely and getting splendidly clear-cut ideas of the work from every point of view. During the casting of "The Orphans of the Storm" at Griffith's Mamaroneck studio, she and her sister were on hand all the time, alert watching the tryouts and in more than one case giving worthwhile pointers.

Just at present Miss Gish is troubled by the importation of foreign pictures. When they were first brought into this country many of the producers groew somewhat panicky. After that some declared that it was but a false alarm, and the rest, sheeplike, calmed down so that today they dismiss the thought with a flick of their large cigars.

Miss Gish, however, feels that the situation of these continental and British films is something for American producers to think about.

U. S. MUST DO ITS BEST.

"'Passion,' for example," she exclaimed, when I talked with her the other day. "Why, that was one of the most wonderful pictures I've seen. It was stupendous. And when you stop to think that those were made while they were still recovering from the ravages of war. It makes me solemn to think of what they will accomplish when they once settle down to producing and get into their stride.

"It's true, I suppose, what so many people say, that the films they send us are the pick of the lot. If we sent but a comparatively few overseas, of course, we'd chose our best. But the fact remains that they made them, and shows that they have the talent and intellects to do it. I think, personally, that they will be our big competitors. All we can do is to pick up and do our very best—but we must do that!"

Here it may be added by the writer that the most successful parts of "Passion" were the mob scenes and the settings. In Griffith's "Orphans of the Storm" the mob scenes far outdo the best efforts of Ernst Lubitsch, the director of the first-named picture, in this line. By the same token, the settings in the "Orphans," on which Griffith lavished untold sums of money, have more color, more individuality than "Passion's."

Telegram Feb. 2

Our Movie Fans

By SYLVIA CUSHMAN

Sylvia Cushman

Lillian Gish has done more to further the art of the screen than any person engaged in that form of acting. She has made the camera keep pace with her development. In "Orphans of the Storm" she gives the greatest example yet of how thought can be registered in photograph. A simple close-up shows her merely thinking. Yet she does so in a manner whereby the audience easily follows her thoughts.

In the great climax of this masterful motion picture she has succeeded in rising to artistic heights never before attempted and which a few years ago no one would have dared to even predict or hope for. As the hapless orphan dragged to the guillotine in the mad swirl of Paris amid throes of unreasoning revolt, Lillian Gish has stepped far ahead of her profession. She manages by almost uncanny methods to register a soul above the sordid worldly things. By sheer brilliant acting she causes her audience to lose all visualization of the grim spectacle of the guillotine and the blood-thirsty crowds. Instead she places the spiritual Gish above the material. Around [illegible] on all sides is cruelty, tyranny, [illegible] oppression. Death [illegible] on all sides, yet the soul of Lillian Gish ascends above all this and [illegible] the message inspiringly [illegible]. In less capable hands [illegible] might be grueso[illegible] as the center of [illegible] it is different.

Advertiser Jan. 29

LILLIAN GISH AND MONTE BLUE IN "ORPHANS OF THE STORM," AT THE TREMONT.

Herald Jan. 22

FROM DOCTOR TO ACTRESS

Catherine Emmett, Screen Actress Changed from One Career to Other

The country lost a female physician and the stage gained an actress and the motion picture a new aspirant in Catherine Emmett, who is seen as the Countess de Linieres in D. W. Griffith's impressive spectacle, "Orphans of the Storm," now current at the Tremont Theatre.

Miss Emmett's (that is only a stage name) mother was Harriet Hooton, San Francisco's first woman doctor. It was her plan to have her daughter follow in a like career. Catherine was first educated at San Jose normal school and then finished at Leland Stanford University. When it came time to enter a medical college, she balked. Greatly to the dismay of her mother, she fled to Paris and other continental cities and remained some years studying music and art.

Returning to this country she joined Ruth Chatterton in "Moonlight and Honeycrucks." Then she was selected as lead with Leo Dichmchetein in the "Marquis de Priola." Later she was seen in Booth Tarkington's "Penrod," and in Arthur Hopkins's production of "The Dolly House." Following this she was seen in "The Green Goddess," "The Dark Angel," "Wanted—with H. B. Warner," "The Ghost Breaker" and in Barrie's presentation of "Dear Brutus." [illegible] Griffith's first attempt at motion [illegible] work was in Mr. Griffith's "Orphans of the Storm."

American Jan. 24

Artists' Model Has Role in "Orphans of the Storm"

Jewish Advocate Jan. 26

Griffith and Italian Color

D. W. Griffith is a great believer in the Italian school of color, acting and music. This fact is strongly emphasized in his most recent work, "Orphans of the Storm," now current at the Tremont Theatre. The shadings of amber, heliotrope and blue in connection with titles together with the soft pinks and golden hues of actual scenes are the result of study following the Italian. Much of the fantastic music utilized in the Griffith arrangement is connection with the presentation is of Italian origin. Mr. Griffith has always advocated the Italian school in music and several months ago engaged Signor Albert Pecoy of the Royal Opera at Bologna and also a graduate of La Scala in Milan, to supervise all music in his production music. Signor Pecoy has used the old Italian song in his arrangement in the score for "Orphans of the Storm."

Globe Jan. 22

ACCURACY OF SCENES IN "ORPHANS OF THE STORM"

Herald and Daily Press Jan. 28

AT THE THEATRES

TREMONT THEATRE

Globe Jan. 22

Herald and Boston Post

Tremont Theatre

American Jan. 23

GRIFFITH SHOWS FIDELITY TO DETAILS

Wanted Face of an Old French Aristocrat; Hired Star From Spoken Stage

By FRED J. McISAAC,
Dramatic Editor.

The extraordinary lengths to which D. W. Griffith will go for an effect or a characterization is shown in the presence of Joseph Schildkraut in the cast of "Orphans of the Storm."

Griffith wanted a certain kind of face. He wanted the face of the old French aristocrat for the lover of one of the two orphans. That is the hardest face in the world to find because the old French aristocrat is nearly as extinct as the dodo.

If you will study the faces of the men and women on the old French engravings and the portraits of great masters you will find that they represent a type almost unknown in the world today. You will not find women who look like Mme. DuBary, or men who look like Louis XIV. among the French people of today.

ARISTOCRACY WIPED OUT.

The reason is that practically the entire aristocracy of France was wiped out by the Revolution. Those who did not meet death by the guillotine or by lawless mobs, fled to Germany or England, where they inter-married with the inhabitants and lost heir individuality.

The faces of those who rule France today and those who are prominent socially are not different from those who run the little shops and work in the fields. France is a nation without an aristocracy, save a few weak descendants of the nobility created by Napoleon to take the place of those killed in the Revolution, a nobility composed of butchers, laundresses and shopkeepers like the rest of the revolutionists.

In Joseph Shildkraut, Griffith found the face of one of the old aristocracy. It satisfied him in every particular. But Schildkraut was a star in the spoken drama. He had been presented in Boston last year in "Pagans" and was the leading feature of "Lilliom," one of the big New York hits of this season. Schildkraut would not play a secondary role to anybody, even to Lillian and Dorothy Gish.

CAREFUL IN DETAILS.

There were many conferences before Griffith attained his end. He wanted Schildkraut to contrast him with the Danton of Monte Blue, the man of the people. He wanted him to ride him in the death cart on the way to the guillotine, because he knew that the cameo like features of the young actor would add the perfection of reality to his art. And he got him. Nobody knows what he had to pay for him.

It is because of such carefulness in the slightest details that Griffith has turned out such a masterpiece as "Orphans of the Storm" and preceded it by "Way Down East," "Hearts of the World" and "Birth of a Nation."

This Week in Boston Jan. 15-21

American Jan. 23

MOTION PICTURE NEWS AND GOSSIP

Griffith Tells Art Directors His Idea of Three Most Beautiful Faces

By FRIEDA DAVIS.

SPEAKING of "Orphans of the Storm"—and many are at present—its producer and guiding spirit, David Wark Griffith caused somewhat of a disturbance among the would-be motion picture beauties the other day when he told of his ideas of real beauty before the members of the Art Directors' Club in New York.

"The three most beautiful faces I have ever seen," he announced, "are the faces of mature women.

"One is Alexandra, the Dowager Queen of England. She has the serene dignity and gracious sympathy and kindliness that comes from generations of aristocrats.

"The second is a scrub woman in a theatre in Pittsburgh, a rounded, lovely face, kindly and shrewd, optimistic and strong.

"The third is a blending of these two, Mrs. Warren G. Harding, first lady of the land, an Ohio woman. She has the nobility of Queen Alexandra and the sturdiness of the scrub woman. If these three faces could be put on the screen, then motion picture work would indeed be art."

All of which might serve to dampen the ardor of the flappers who hope to win fame and fortune by their pretty faces and bobbed heads!

Adds Reality Touch to Big Scene in "Orphans" Film

JOSEPH SCHILDKRAUT.

American Jan. 21

"ORPHANS OF THE STORM." D. W. Griffith's new creation at the Tremont, combines all the beauty of the costume play with the red-blooded action so essential to a worth-while moving picture. Here is Rose Smith and Frances Kelly in a scene from the picture.

This Week in Boston Jan. 22

A BIG DAY WITH GRIFFITH

Busy and Exciting Times When He Starts To "Shoot" a Big Scene

Few people who sit comfortably in a theatre and observe scene after scene of D. W. Griffith's latest photo-dramatic spectacle, "Orphans" of the Storm," pass by terrific things with little thought of the vast detail and work which attended the taking of those events. One of Griffith's assistants thus tells of a day when the master motion picture director worked with a force of over ten thousand people:

"Early in the morning trains especially arranged for, began rolling into Mamaroneck from the Grand Central Depot. A force of fifty engaging experts had been at work assembling this army of men and women to act in the scene. The Griffith studio is some twenty miles east of New York and the problem of getting this army of actors on the Griffith studio property was no simple task. The most a train can bring is less than four hundred. This meant many trains. Fortunately there were three lines to resort to the railroad, a traction line and the trolleys that make Mamaroneck through various directions.

"Griffith is doing the great scenes at the guillotine and the thrilling rescue wherein Monte Blue as "Danton" dashes up with six hundred horsemen. It took two trains of horse cars to bring these animals from New York. They were tried veterans and naturally frightened by gunfire and other exciting noises.

"A tedious and exhausting day it was: Griffith stands on a big central platform. On either side are cameramen. Sartov the chief is here, there, everywhere, for he must make quick shifts for "close-ups." Allen is in charge of the "long shots." With Griffith is Professor Allaire, of Harvard, to see that all must be historically exact; the Marquis de Polignac, from Paris, is gesticulating, wildly in explaining the authority for scenes of the period. Decker is among the masses to see that all costumes are properly adjusted and action is in complement to the scene. Wortman is on another platform shouting orders for the general ensemble and Sutch is in among the ten thousand as stage manager direct. Strong, Mack Campbell, King, Costs, Leonard and many other chiefs are at their stations. These are names never heard outside the Griffith "lot," save in official circles. An army of carpenters watch their sets that there be no mishap; property masters are here, there and everywhere in order that all that mass may be properly equipped.

"With the sun at the proper angle, work starts. But this is not to be in the picture; it is purely preliminary. On they go and back they come. This didn't go right; that was not registered correctly. It all seems confusion. Above all the tumult is heard a voice that is even and clear. It is that of Griffith giving his orders through a megaphone, distinct and without agitation. He is the calm, cool person of all that host. For Griffith has visualized and thought out just what he wants. He knows it and he proposes to get what he wants.

"Charge upon charge men, women, and children driven back and taught how to be when the horses charge through to avoid accident. Blank cartridges are issued and re-issued, broken pikes and spears are replaced time and again. The mob has surged too heavily against the front of a Parisian landmark, but a hundred carpenters have quickly rebuilt it as fifty painters fly their brushes to obliterate the damage.

"The entire morning has been wasted and no progress it would seem. All of the film has been ordered "blanked," but Griffith is achieving the desired result. A halt is called for lunch. The huge commissary hall could not accommodate a small part; tables have been rigged up under trees and waiters fly to and fro with food. Most of it is raised right upon the great Griffith estate and is good and fresh.

"A few more 'false starts' and the afternoon progresses. The sun has struck just the right slant. Everybody is nervous and all seeming unstrung. Ha! the desired situation; things are ideal! Everyone now knows what is expected, casualties are discounted and Griffith begins calling his orders with that well-modulated but powerfully carrying voice.

"His lieutenants now know their cues and things run smooth. The mass moves and billows and all have caught the spirit. The stage is so with carpenters, cameras are clicking right and left. The mass (the big film) has been by all this is had serious accidents, all have done much work. By Page (which the mass is now photographed Monte Blue and his trained cowboys brought from Western Texas and Oklahoma have made this great role without a slip. Thus have seemingly changed through hours of frantic bedlam without harm to any.

"Griffith has made the mass and for a moment the most impressive effects produced. At least 'dead' and 'dying' lay in the mass.

"Night has come and the mass is dismissed for a holiday. Its work is done. Its part in the great film is ended. Its work has been done in three months instead of six."

Telegram Jan. 21

DOROTHY GISH
in "ORPHANS of the STORM"
— TREMONT THEATRE —

Globe Jan. 21

Movie Facts And Fancies

Traveler Jan. 23

BEAUTY SKIN-DEEP? NO!

Any one who has an idea of entering motion pictures "on her face" had better read what D. W. Griffith has to say on feminine beauty. It may contain a surprise for some of you little aspiring Mary Pickfords who believe all that is necessary is to give Mr. Griffith a chance to see curls and dimples. At a talk made to the Art Directors' Club at Browne's Chop House in New York Friday on the subject of "Beauty," Mr. Griffith said:

"The three most beautiful faces I have ever seen are the faces of mature women.

"One is Alexandra, Dowager Queen of England, with the serene dignity and gracious sympathy and kindliness that come from generations of aristocratic environment.

"The second is a scrub woman in a Pittsburgh theatre—a round, beautiful face, kindly and shrewd and understanding and optimistic and strong with the splendid dignity of labor.

"The third is a blending of these two. It is Mrs. Harding, a plain Ohio woman, now the first lady of the land. She has the nobility of the Queen, whom she resembles, and she has that sturdy humanity of the charwoman—a union I think could exist only in America.

"If I could show these three faces on the screen as they actually are then the public would well declare motion pictures an art."

Q. A. FACT

Seven hundred and nine scenarios have been received at the Tremont Theatre in Boston and at the Apollo Theatre in New York, addressed to D. W. Griffith, since "Orphans of the Storm" has been showing.

Twenty-six of the authors did not claim their stories would be signed then "Orphans of the Storm" or "Way Down East."

Italian News Jan. 21

"ORPHANS OF THE STORM"

D. W. Griffith's most pretentious and successful motion picture production, "Orphans of the Storm," entered upon its sixth week at the Tremont Theatre. This really lavish and excellent cinema masterpiece is being presented in an unusual manner at the Tremont, and those who wish to see it will do well to attend during the engagement at this theatre. Mr. Griffith has stated publicly that he will likely never show it other than in first class theatres, because there is so much significance in the music, color and other embellishment that he has his great work would suffer in its hands of presenting it elsewhere other than in one theatre in the city capable of a proper presentation of such a masterpiece, and impressive beautiful work as is "Orphans of the Storm" is, or just from the fact that the present showing at the Tremont Theatre is the only city presentation, and it is such that he has not yet been ready to make production in other cities.

Traveler Jan. 21

SCENE FROM "ORPHANS OF THE STORM"—TREMONT

American Jan. 23

SPEAKING of "Orphans of the Storm"—and many are at present—its producer and guiding spirit, David Wark Griffith caused somewhat of a disturbance among the would-be motion picture beauties the other day when he told of his ideas of real beauty before the members of the Art Directors' Club in New York.

"The three most beautiful faces I have ever seen," he announced, "are the faces of mature women.

"One is Alexandra, the Dowager Queen of England. She has the serene dignity and gracious sympathy and kindliness that comes from generations of aristocrats.

"The second is a scrub woman in a theatre in Pittsburgh, a rounded, lovely face, kindly and shrewd, optimistic and strong.

"The third is a blending of these two, Mrs. Warren G. Harding, first lady of the land, an Ohio woman. She has the nobility of the Queen, whom she resembles, and she has that sturdy humanity of the charwoman—a union I think could exist only in America.

"If I could show these three faces on the screen as they actually are then the public would well declare motion pictures an art."

Advertiser Jan. 21

KENTUCKY FOG FADES FOR D. W. GRIFFITH

Transcript Jan. 20

LUBITSCH AND HIS WAYS

A TALK WITH THE NOTED MAKER OF PICTURES

American Films in His Eyes—His Own Methods in Berlin—From Revolutions to the Orient—Balance, Illusion, Vitality

AMERICANS, above all others, attain technical perfection on the screen in the opinion of Ernst Lubitsch, master craftsman of European directors, producer of "Passion," "Deception" and "One Arabian Night," actor of ability and close student of the ways in the theatre of Max Reinhardt. English films, Mr. Lubitsch has seen not at all, and save for the excellences of the German shadow-stage, he considers Swedish reels the most interesting of all European pictures. France falls far behind; in his mind the well remembered "Three Musketeers," joint product of Messrs. Fairbanks, Knoblock and Niblo, rises far above its French counterpart, as yet unseen hereabouts.

It is in historical films that Mr. Lubitsch has especial interest. Mr. Griffith's "Orphans of the Storm," Mr. Fairbanks's "Musketeers" have gained his favor among all latter-day films of America. Italian photo-plays in one or more instances, says he, have been drawn from paintings; the director finding re-dier inspiration in line or color than in life-less print. Yet Mosetti, Latin dramatist of the "modern" school became director of motion pictures shortly before he died and many another Italian writer of so far the theatre dabbles in the cinematic art.

Traveler Jan. 23

Gish Team Work Is Remarkable

Transcript Jan. 21

"Orphans of the Storm"

Transcript Jan. 21

CURRENT PHOTO-PLAYS

Tribune Jan. 21

PHOTO-PLAYS NEXT WEEK

Post Jan. 21

What the Films Have to Offer

Post Jan. 21

TREMONT THEATRE

Post Jan. 21

TREMONT THEATRE

"ORPHANS OF THE STORM"

American Jan. 21

THEATRE BUSINESS HAS EXPERIENCED BAD SEASON

This is the worst dramatic season which the theatre has known for many years. Hundreds of productions have failed. Most of those which are out are losing money and several big producing firms are on the verge of collapse.

Like most other American business enterprises the theatres are the victims of their own extravagance and cupidity. During the war costs mounted, but they didn't mount so high as box office prices. While artisans who had never before knew what it was to have a dollar after paying the weekly living expenses were flashing unaccustomed rolls of money and attending the theatre three and four times a week, the managers never missed the real theatre going public which was gradually being forced to economize until it stopped going to the theatre altogether.

The new audiences were easily pleased and indifferent to what it cost to see a play. Not only did the producers of expensive musical comedies like the Follies raise prices from $3.00 to $3.50 and then to $3.00 and even to $3.50 and $4.00, but the owners of little parlor comedies with six people in the cast and one setting followed suit and had the impudence to ask prices as high as the big musical comedies.

Almost anything which was put on the stage was sure to draw good business. Productions were made so fast that the competition for actors enabled those folk to get prices for their services they never dreamed of in their palmiest days. Actors who had considered themselves well paid at $300 per week held out for $1,500 per week and frequently got it.

In Boston, a typical American city, two or three second-class theatres were secured by the big managers to house first-class attractions because there were so many more productions than there were theatres in which to house them.

Salesmanship Almost Unknown Art in Theatres

The art of salesmanship as regards theatrical entertainments almost ceased to be. Many producers didn't even consider it necessary to send a publicity man with their shows figuring that the company manager, during the brief intervals when he wasn't counting the receipts or arguing with the actors could easily attend to such an unimportant matter. Why try to sell an article when the demand for it was greater than the supply.

And then the great kerspinsh! The dare-devil plumber and sporting carpenter found their incomes so reduced that they stopped buying theatre tickets. The old-fashioned theatre-going public had lost the habit and was spending the evening at home with a good book. Something had to come along to drag that element out.

Plays began to fail. The bad plays failed first, of course, but a lot of good plays went with them. The public began to sharpshoot, as the saying is. Certain unusual attractions found business as usual, but most of the ordinary run of entertainments drew not at all.

A few producers with courage, confidence in their product and possessing good salesmen, went out and sold their product, dragging the stay-at-homes out of the suburbs, but most of the offerings which have come to Boston this year have been licked before they started.

Speaking as one who has stood on the sidelines and watched the "game" and the "bust" one of the most prominent reasons for the collapse of many plays is the lack of confidence of the producers in what they have to sell.

The people are that the public must and will have something, and the lure of a really good play is as great as ever. The salesmen can sell good plays but they have to work harder to sell them.

Griffith Knew How to Put Over a Success

The most remarkable example of good salesmanship which has taken place in the theatre was that of David Griffith's "Orphans of the Storm."

Many theatregoers are based on the "Orphans of the Storm" with Mr. Griffith's production of the famous play.

acting of these remarkable sisters.

But when all is said and done, what boots it who has the credit, for where has there ever been displayed on the screen such truly inspired and remarkable acting as these two daughters of the silent art demonstrate as the two girls of the picture Griffith has made from "The Two Orphans"? Granted that Griffith is the master teacher, there was more than a malleable material in the two Gish sisters. To the analyst it cannot be possible that any teacher could so direct every minute action such as these subjects display in their miming for the screen. For there is the soul of acting constantly present with them, little touches that are the fruition, consciously or unconsciously, of genius inspiration.

Transcript Jan. 28

PHOTO-PLAYS NEXT WEEK

Tremont—Orphans of the Storm

FILM of the French Revolution, devised and accomplished with David Griffith's pictorial imagination and skill playing at high pitch, over fruitful field, with abundant resource. From the old melodrama, "The Two Orphans," he first takes narrative and personages, leading both into the French Revolution. There he adds characters in and out of history, invents episodes, reconstructs and pictures the Paris of those days according to his own vision and purpose. The outcome is a photo-spectacle in which scenes at the guillotine, in the revolutionary tribunal, up and down a turbulent and blood-ridden Paris excel all the rest. A picture that vivifies personages, players, period. Seldom has Mr. Griffith worked to better sustained or more engrossing outcome. The sixth week, with two showings on Sunday.

Telegram Jan. 28

GRIFFITH LIKES ITALIAN ART

D. W. Griffith is a great believer in the Italian school of color, acting and music. This fact is strongly emphasized in his most recent work, "Orphans of the Storm," now current at the Tremont theatre. The shadings of amber, heliotrope and blue in connection with titles, together with the soft pinks and golden hues of actual scenes are the result of ideas following the Italian. Much of the delightful music utilized in the thematic arrangement in connection with the presentation is of Italian origin.

Mr. Griffith has always admired the Italian school in music and several seasons ago engaged Signor Albert Fano of the Royal Opera at Bologna and also a graduate of La Scala at Milan, to supervise all Griffith productions. Signor Fano has used the old Italian masters with profiting in the score for "Orphans of the Storm."

One of the pictures of the season, one and a note that calls for greatest acting is intended to an Italian actor who has been in this country for a brief season. He is Frank Puglia, who also has appeared with Miss Talmadge. He plays Pierre, the crippled boy.

Herald Jan. 29

WHAT WILL BE GRIFFITH'S NEXT?

Query Which Is Interesting Movie Fans; Director May Do an 'Abraham Lincoln'

Herald Jan. 29

Lessons of Tears in The Two Orphans of the Storm

Post Jan. 29

TREMONT THEATRE

Post Jan. 29

TREMONT THEATRE

Traveler Jan. 26

Right off the Reel

By JEANNE RAY

Lucille La Verne as herself and in the make-up of "La Frochard."

LUCILLE LA VERNE

When you saw La Frochard in "Orphans of the Storm" at the Tremont, did you think she'd make a good negro "mammy" sort of a maid? I'll bet you didn't, because no two persons could be more unlike than the old hag of a villainess in the film and the other type person. Yet, La Frochard and Lottie, the colored maid in "Back Pay," which opened Monday at the Selwyn, are one and the same. Lucille La Verne played them both, and thereby hangs a tale.

The tale is a colorful one. It has to do with make-up. I'll let Miss La Verne tell it, for she knows all the details, since it is her own story.

"Way back before your day, dearie, I had been doing character parts just as now. William Gillette's play, 'Clarice,' was all ready for a cast and rehearsal when Mr. Gillette discovered that he had no one to play the part of a negress about a century old. He had tried out every colored actress he could find and none of them was satisfactory, and he had searched in vain among character actresses. He had finally decided to shelve the play rather than have one part miscast.

"A friend of mine (the same one who sent me to D. W. Griffith) sent me to Mr. Gillette. I was much younger then and dolled all up in all my best ribbons and laces. He looked at me just once and said he was sorry, but was sure I would not do.

"'But, Mr. Gillette,' I cried, 'please realize that you are looking at an unpainted canvas. Just let me make up in my conception of the part.'

"'Make-up on a young face will never be what I want; you cannot take youth from the eyes, and artificial lines will spoil the part,' he said.

"After much pleading he gave me a chance and I worked and worked for nights, using as a model an old colored lady whom I had found. The days crept by until the night before my promised tryout. I knew I had not succeeded and went to bed at 4 o'clock in the morning, discouraged. As I lay there crying my eyes out a combination of black colorings came to me which might do the deed. It was an inspiration and I tried it. It worked and the next day the part was mine. It is the same mixture which I am using now for the part of Lottie.

"I have told you this, since the same sort of an experience landed me my chance in 'Orphans of the Storm.' I had been on the road with William Hodge and, as Mr. Griffith could not get me when he wanted, the chance slipped by. At last the show I was with closed. I received a long-distance call, which brought me to New York from the West at 3 one morning, and at 9 I was on my way to Mr. Griffith's to show him that since I had played La Frochard on the stage many times I was the one to play it in his film.

I was all dressed up, as on the other occasion, and told the friend that Griffith must not see me any way except with the make-up on. I was told that there was no chance for this, and as my trunks had not arrived I could do nothing but agree. I must take a chance as I was.

Mr. Griffith was very nice, but said that he already had someone for the part. Just as on that other day I said: "Give me a chance." He said: "All right; go over there and act a certain scene" (which he named). It was with Pierre. I I started in, and before they knew it I had Pierre by the scruff of the neck and had thrown him into the corner. Whereat they laughed and the part was mine.

"The make-up that I had talked so much about in my stage experiences was less than nothing for the studio. It just melted away under those awful lights and the extreme heat from them, so I began devising ways and means to keep the mustache, moles and nose on my face.

"I used a solution of gum, over which I put some stuff called diaculum."

"How do you spell that?" I interrupted.

"Don't ask me to spell; I could always pronounce, but I never could spell. Write it as it sounds."

(N. B.—I have done so. "Diaculum.")

"Then to shape the nose I tried the usual putty, but it just ran away with the heat. I tried clay and everything else, but none of them worked, until I finally got modeline to act as I desired.

"That mustache drove me wild, for when I'd come into the studio Mr. Griffith would say, looking at it as though through a microscope: "That moth spot on the left side is a bit bigger than it was yesterday." or: "You have nine hairs on the right where you should have only eight." I lost several pounds worrying about the fool thing.

"But, then," she said, happily, "it is all over now, and I am glad that I was the one who played the part. How I can ever work in a picture under another director is more than I know, for, never in all my life, have I experienced the consideration which is at the Griffith studio. The Gish girls are a delight to work with, and as for the great director himself, there isn't a thing I wouldn't do for him."

Advertiser Jan. 29

Cherokee Indian in Griffith's Picture

Advertiser Jan. 26

HISTORIC CUT-UPS. The festivities characteristic of the upper classes just before the French revolution are shown more colorfully in Griffith's "Orphans of the Storm" than ever before, say critics. The ignobility of the nobility, and their revels, made Paris green with envy. The noble cut-ups were finally outdone and undone by history's greatest cut-up of all—Madame Guillotine.

Globe Jan. 22

Losee Is Highest Paid Movie Villain

MOST people who adopt a stage career are supposed to disappoint their parents by not following in a prescribed vocation. Frank Losee, one of the foremost actors on the American stage and now the most highly paid and sought after "heavy" in motion pictures, not only dashed his fond father's hopes once but twice.

Losee does not come from a family of actors. His father and his grandfather owned and operated a famous hotel and roadhouse just south of old Brooklyn and on the road to Sheepshead Bay. Frank attended the Brooklyn High School, and it was his father's hope that he would become a lawyer. This was the first hope dashed. The elder then decided it would be a good plan to have Frank take over active management of the roadhouse, but after a year of this Frank gave up.

Losee's fame on the professional stage was first established when he appeared in David Belasco's production of "The Rose of the Rancho." Next he made a big hit with Faversham in "The Hawk," and followed this with a wonderful success in "The House Next Door." Before long Hugh Ford interested him in motion pictures. Losee's popularity on the screen was immediate. He is the highest salaried "heavy" or villain in the game and has supported all the big stars.

Losee has entered into an arrangement whereby no matter what contracts others may hold upon him he will be in a position in the future to relinquish any other work at all times in order that D. W. Griffith for whom he played the striking characterization of the Count de Linderes in "Orphans of the Storm," may use him.

Quincy Evening Telegram Jan. 28

Tremont Theatre

At the Tremont Theatre in Boston is being shown D. W. Griffiths latest motion picture spectacle, "Orphans of the Storm". This is the picture which Mr Griffith worked a year on after finishing "Way Down East" It is by far the most notable effort he has yet made. The picture is the most costly of all screen entertainers and will probably take rank as such for many, many years to come. As a basis for his story Mr. Griffith took the famous old play, "The Two Orphans" He has succeeded in maintaining all of the beauty and intense heart interest with which th famous stage classic abounds. Not satisfied with the wealth of material at hand in the old play, Mr. Griffith has added scenes of the great French Revolution in a manner which only a man of his genius could ever attempt. As a result he has given to the world a motion picture masterpiece which will stand, no doubt for years to come as a mark for others to follow. In it appear as the two orphans, Miss Lillian Gish and Miss Dorothy Gish. A most capable array of other screen stars are seen in the picture, among them Monte Blue, Sydney Ainsworth, Frank Puglia, Leslie LaVorre Creighton Hale, Mae Marsh, Catherine Emmett, Sheldon Lewis, Joseph Swickard and many others, all of the principal over seven players appearing in this great screen work.

The picture is being presented at the Tremont theatre in a most unique manner. A full symphony orchestra of thirty pieces accompanies the screen and it does that in such a way that it seems thoroughly the part and enhanced thus to play the picture. Thus the orchestra and the picture are the principal features of the Tremont theatre.

The picture is being presented at the Tremont theatre in a most unique manner. A full symphony orchestra of thirty pieces accompanies the screen and it does that in such a way that it seems thoroughly the part and enhanced thus to play the picture. Thus the orchestra and the picture are the principal features of the Tremont theatre.

Traveler Jan. 28

Women's Power Shown in Film

Globe Jan. 22

Globe Jan. 22

Telegram Jan. 28

Telegram Jan. 14

MISS LILLIAN GISH in "ORPHANS of the STORM" — TREMONT TEMPLE —

The Tech Dec. 30

GRIFFITH AND GISH SISTERS PRESENT AT OPENING PERFORMANCE

David W. Griffith, the producer of many notable screen dramas, eclipsed all his former performances in his latest picture, "The Orphans of the Storm," which opened at the Tremont last Wednesday. Griffith himself and the Gish sisters, twin heroines of the play, were there to respond to the audience at the end of the performance.

In his curtain speech Griffith spoke of the colossal efforts expended in filming the picture, and of his appreciation of its cordial reception by the Boston public. Boston, he said, meant more to him than any other city except his home and he had placed great hopes on pleasing its people. Dorothy and Lillian Gish then were introduced and the latter responded to the applause in a short speech of appreciation.

The production is indeed one worthy of the enthusiastic crowd that filled every seat and all the standing room of the Tremont theatre. As a spectacle alone the film is well worth seeing but the acting and the story itself are on a level with the background. A story of the stormy days of the French revolution, with all the thrills of such tales, there is plenty of opportunity to bring out the abilities which the cast have proved they possess. Monte Blue as Danton, Lucille LaVerne as Madame Frochard, and Lillian Gish as Henriette are especially good, though all ably portray the roles they are in. The film is in every respect a notable step in the development of the motion picture.

Post Jan. 15

To be selected to carry and carry alone the entire burden of comedy is an unusual honor. This distinction fell to Creighton Hale, when D. W. Griffith chose him for the role of "Picard," in his latest work, "Orphans of the Storm," now at the Tremont Theatre. It is comedy of a rare sort for the screen, for never once is it of the low type. There is no farce, but straight comedy, long considered the most difficult of all histrionic duties.

Creighton Hale comes of a distinguished acting family. He earned his first plaudits with Charles Frohman and with Henry Miller. When he first took up screen acting some empty-headed director first worked out for him broad farce of the slapstick variety; then another conceived the idea of putting him in thriller serials. His chance came when D. W. Griffith entrusted him with the role of Professor Sterling in "Way Down East." His amusing awkwardness in the dance scenes of that piece will long be remembered.

Advertiser Jan. 16

Herald Jan. 16

CHAPLIN AND HIS GROOM

[illegible]

Advertiser Jan. 16

LOVE FOR OUR GIRLS

[illegible]

Telegram Jan. 14

SUNDAY VIEWINGS OF "THE ORPHANS"

[illegible]

Herald Jan. 16

[illegible]

Jewish Advocate January 12.

Eminent Jewish Actor Featured

JOSEPH SCHILDKRAUT

The presentation for an unlimited period of D. W. Griffiths super picture, "Orphans of the Storm," at the Tremont Theatre, has brought forth praise from Jew and Gentile alike. Rabbi Harry Levi in a letter to Mr. David Griffith says: "I have been deeply interested in all of Mr. Griffith's large productions, but of all of them, "The Orphans of the Storm," to my mind, reaches the highest level. And the acting of the Gish sisters and Mr. Schildkraut is superb."

Abraham Alpert, in his expression of admiration of the production states: "It brings home to the people a timely lesson which is of invaluable importance. The picture is one of the very best ever produced and you may justly feel proud of it."

Joseph Schildkraut, who takes the part of the Chevalier, is an eminent Jewish actor.

Advertiser Jan. 18

SOMETHING NEW. Griffith's entire office staff were assigned parts in "Orphans of the Storm." This is Mrs. James Ewing Smith, his film editor.

This Week in Boston

D. W. GRIFFITH

[illegible]

Telegram Jan. 14

Herald January 18

WHAT THE MOVIE FAN WANTS TO KNOW

Now that Mr. Griffith is assured of the success of his newest photoplay, "Orphans of the Storm," he has given us who enjoyed it some interesting facts about how it was made.

To begin with, he held at first what he calls a "tournament of acting" and out of the 300 actors and actresses who tried for a place in the picture, those who now appear in the film are those who qualified in the battle for the survival of the fittest.

Each actor or actress was measured against the other aspirants. This applied even to the Gish sisters, and it was not until after the trial that Lillian was chosen for the part of Henriette and Dorothy for Louise, the blind girl.

In the list of those who tried for places are the names of many famous actors and actresses.

As it is, "Orphans of the Storm" is one of the most pretentious pictures ever made by an American. For one set Mr. Griffith constructed a reproduction of Paris 150 years ago; he built a city with 12 streets and several blocks of buildings.

In plain figures, it took 7000 tons of paving blocks to prepare the streets, and 18,000 panes of glass for the windows of the buildings. A carload of paint was used for the tinting.

A Cider Fountain

The fountain in the Bel Air scene was of pure marble and the bowl of the fountain was filled with cider, because water would not protograph with the sparkle that was needed to represent wine. The picture has more [illegible] than any Mr. Griffith has filmed, and are even more gorgeous than "Intolerance."

Mr. Griffith had a staff at research work abroad for months before he selected even one hat for a costume, and the costumes are as gorgeous as the sets.

For all this elaborate detail, however, the story itself has not been neglected, and we think there is no one who can approach Mr. Griffith when it comes to dressing up simplified melodramd for present-day consumption.

It is expected that "Orphans of the Storm" will make screen history, just as the old Kate Claxton play from which it was taken has lived for nearly a century.

A critic of the motion pictures who evidently knows what he is talking about has advanced the revolutionary idea that men are more popular than women on the screen.

Of course the obvious answer to this is that motion picture audiences are made up of a larger percentage of women than of men.

But on second thoughts, there seems to be more to it.

It may be that men are appearing in more sincere stories, more consistent plots than are the women. Or it may be that their acting is more efficient than that of women, who, we must confess, oftentimes think a pretty face, and the ability to wear clothes will supply the need of acting.

To take just one case. Mary Pickford in "Little Lord Fauntleroy" failed to hold the public as did her husband, Douglas Fairbanks, with his "The Three Musketeers."

For every one person who is talking about the former play, there are 10 who are praising the latter. And we are told by those who should know that neither Betty Compson nor Gloria Swanson is as popular with the fans as Wallace Reir, for instance.

If there is a reason for this which eludes us, we would be glad to find it.

Post Jan. 15

TREMONT THEATRE

The Tremont Theatre is filled twice daily with pleased patrons who find adequate return for their money in viewing the Griffith picture, "Orphans of the Storm," which is the current attraction. There is so much material in the photoplay that a second and even a third visit is requisite to thoroughly appreciate the whole.

Herald Jan. 15

Advertiser Jan. 15

Noted "Extras" in Griffith Picture

[illegible]

This Week in Boston Jan. 8

"ORPHANS OF THE STORM"

D. W. Griffith's newest and unquestionably greatest work "Orphans of the Storm," enters upon the third week of its enormously successful engagement in this city at the Tremont Theatre. Ever since it was first shown to the world here in Boston this vivid, heart interest story, embodying the salient features of the great French Revolution, has attracted to the Tremont Theatre capacity throngs twice each day. The success of this piece makes it quite evident that Griffith is and will remain for some time the master of motion picture production. He sets a terrific pace for others to follow. In each new Griffith offering the new and unexpected is looked for; he brings forth new ideas to make pictures more beautiful and artistic. He has not disappointed in "Orphans of the Storm." The symphonic color scheme he has employed together with a musical score of almost opera intensiveness makes this new and huge spectacle one that will stand as a mark for others to shoot at for some time to come—possibly until Griffith himself essays to unreel another great one. The miracle man of the motion picture has caused a lot of people to get down their Carlyle and other historical works in order that they may brush up on the authentic record of the most dynamically dramatic period in the history of civilization in order that they might appreciate the beauties of this work all the more. "Orphans of the Storm" is shown twice each day, matinees and evenings.

This Week in Boston Jan. 15

D. W. GRIFFITH

One of the most interesting of details in David W. Griffith's new photoplay, "Orphans of the Storm," which is being shown at the Tremont Theatre, is that of the traveling post coach in which Henriette and Louise, the two orphans, journey from their country home in Normandy to Paris. Details are what contribute to Griffith thoroughness. There is no minor item too small for him to throw the strong light of research upon it, whether it be historical study or a curating of rules of manners.

Thus when he sets to picture the role of the two sisters he must have a coach perfectly in keeping with the fashion of the period. Of course there were fashions in coaches as well as in wearing apparel. And France coaches in particular were [illegible] have set a fashion for continental Europe. To face the makers of automobile bodies of this day have sought to have of the ingenuity practiced by coach makers of olden days. One of the cities of France is said to have had a coach blind with steel [illegible] for travelling, but [illegible] the [illegible] [illegible] and [illegible] a coach which [illegible] the coach blind during a journey.

[illegible]

Herald Jan. 16

The Symphony

[illegible]

Telegram Jan. 17

Big Day With D. W. Griffith When Shooting Great Scene

THE RESCUE AT THE GUILLOTINE IN "ORPHANS OF THE STORM"

Few people who sit comfortably in a theatre and observe scene after scene of D. W. Griffith's latest photo-dramatic spectacle "Orphans of the Storm," pass by terrific things with little thought of the vast detail and work which attended the taking of those events. One of Griffith's assistants thus tells of a day when the master motion picture director worked with a force of over 10,000 people.

Early in the morning trains especially arranged for began rolling into Mamaroneck from the Grand Central depot. A force of 50 engaging experts had been a week assembling this army of men and women to act in the scenes. The Griffith studio is some 20 miles east of New York and the problem of getting this army of actors on the Griffith studio property was no simple task. The most a train can bring is less than 400.

Griffith is doing the great scenes at the guillotine and the thrilling rescue wherein Monte Blue as "Danton" dashes up with 600 horsemen. It took two trains of horse cars to bring these animals from New York. They were tried veterans and not easily frightened by gunfire and other exciting noises.

A tedious and nerve-trying day it was; Griffith stands on a high-erected platform. On either side are camera men. With Griffith is Prof. Allard of Harvard, intent that all must be historically exact; the Marquis de Polignac, from Paris, is gesticulating wildly in explaining the authority for action of the period.

With the sun at the proper angle, work starts. But this is not to be in the picture; it is purely preliminary. On they go and back they come. This didn't go right; that was not registered correctly. It all seems confusion. Above all the tumult is heard a voice that is even and clear. It is that of Griffith giving his orders through a megaphone, distinct and without agitation. He is the calm, cool person of all that [illegible] Griffith has visualized and knows just what he wants. He knows it, and he proposes to get what he wants.

[illegible] men, women and children forced back and taught how to be when the horses charge through to avoid accident. Blank cartridges are tested and re-tested, broken piles and scenes are repeated time and again. The mob has surged [illegible] against the front of a [illegible] landmark, but the operators have quickly rebuilt it so as to practically by their brushes to obliterate the damage.

The entire morning has been passed and no progress is worth [illegible]. All of the film has been [illegible] "blanks" but [illegible] the [illegible] scene. A hair is caught [illegible] the lens [illegible] camera man [illegible] takes hold, [illegible] upon the [illegible] and [illegible] with [illegible]. [illegible] of [illegible] upon the [illegible] the [illegible] and [illegible].

A few days [illegible] and the afternoon progresses. The sun has passed [illegible] the [illegible] plane. [illegible] to [illegible] and [illegible] of [illegible] [illegible] the [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

Globe
Jan. 5

Viewing Mr D. W. Griffith's "Orphans of the Storm" at the Apollo Theatre, our attention, at movies always errant, wandered to the story of "The Two Orphans." We never saw the play, but at our first variety show at the Olympic Theatre, Chicago, we saw the Russell Brothers in a rough burlesque of it called "The Two Off-uns." And not long after that we heard a Brother team sing a song about the Brooklyn Theatre fire. We realize now that the team must have been pulling old stuff, for the fire occurred in 1876 during a performance by Kate Claxton in "The Two Orphans," and this team was singing the song in 1895. As we recall it, it had about 50 stanzas—we thought the team never would finish—but all that stick are these:

The evening's bright stars they were shining,
The moonbeams shone clear on our land;
Our city was in peace and quietness,
The hour of midnight near at hand.
But hark! do you hear that cry, fire?
How dismal the bells they do sound—
Our Brooklyn Theatre is burning!
Alas! burning fast to the ground.

CHORUS

We ne'er will forget "The Two Orphans,"
Bad luck seems to be in its wake.
It seems it were brought to our city,
The lives of our dear friends to take.

The doors they were open at 7,
The curtain was rolled up at 8
Them that had got seats, they were happy;
Outside they were mad that were late.
The play, it went on very smoothly
Till sparks from the scene they did fly;
It's then, that men, women and children,
"O, God save our lives" they did cry.

Nor shall we ever forget how that team sang the penultimate line of the finest stanza, "Our Brookalyn theayter is boineen."

THE DIARY OF OUR OWN SAMUEL PEPYS

January 2—Lay long, dreading to rise to close the window, what with the great cold, but up finally and to the office, and all day at my stint, until 8 o'clock and so to an inn and had dinner alone, of some curried veal and a minced pye, and so to the playhouse and saw R. Warwick and Alice Brady in a play called "Drifting," not credible, but well enough acted. So meeting my wife, and home with her by omnibuss.

3—Less cold this day, for which I thank Heaven. To my office, but the painters and joiners making such a to-do I to J. Seaton's room and did my stint there, to my great content. This day I did on my red and green tie, to the joyous approval of all. To Mistress Hilda's with my wife to dinner, and so to see the cinema play "Orphans of the Storm," and liked the picturing greatly but could not fix my mind on the story. The first time ever I saw the Gish sisters and found them excellent actresses. So home by Broadway car, very slowly, and read K. MacGowan's "The Theater of Tomorrow," a good book, and so to bed.

4—Early up, and to the office, and there all the day at this and that. All the printing men helpful and kind to me, which lightneth my task. So home to dinner, and J. Farrar there and we talked of poetry and such matters.

Transcript January 5

Mr. Griffith Presents "Mme. Guillotine"

A Celebrated Instrument of Fate

As the French Revolution—in "Orphans of the Storm"—Knew It

Herald
Jan. 8

FILM TITLES SHOW IMPROVEMENT

"Orphans of the Storm" Titles Required Much Study

Not the least interesting of the many odd and unusual features of D. W. Griffith's latest photoplay, "Orphans of the Storm," now in its third week at the Tremont Theatre in this city, is the manner in which Griffith and his aides have improved upon the titling of the picture. That great study and care has been exercised in this direction is apparent and it is encouraging to those who have the future welfare of pictures at heart that this important part of the production and has not been overlooked.

The titles for "Orphans of the Storm," have in the first place all been subjected to a process of development whereby there is no sharp or penetrating light effect to dazzle and shock the eye. Before each was accepted for insertion as an informative interlude they were turned over to experts in photography in order that they might be softened. Dull amber and even heliotrope are used in order that these may be clear but at the same time not sufficiently brilliant to affect the optic nerves. Too often titles are put forth in sharp clear white color so that breaking through the sombre black of the screen they almost burn into the eye of the auditor. Griffith has by great care and expense overcome this objectionable feature.

Also, he has modified the monotony of the title formation. In the main his titles for "Orphans of the Storm" are in elite Cheltenham, the neatest typing possible to secure. Not content with this, he varies with elongated primer and shifts to italic relief for both contrast and emphasis. In all 16 different forms of type are used in the new Griffith picture, a record new in the history of motion pictures.

Herald Jan. 10

TREMONT THEATRE

D. W. Griffith's masterful motion picture spectacle, "Orphans of the Storm," is smashing all box office records at the Tremont Theatre, where it is being shown twice daily. Although "Way Down East" holds the long distance record for consecutive performances in Boston, "Orphans of the Storm" at the present time is more than 25 per cent. ahead of it in gross receipts in the same period since opening. After the very first performance on Wednesday night, Dec. 28, "Orphans of the Storm" has been shown to crowded houses at almost all performances. It was presented for the first time in New York last Monday and immediately began to draw "turn-away" houses. It was opened in Cleveland last night; will be shown in Philadelphia tomorrow and Pittsburgh next Monday. On Jan. 29 it will be launched in Chicago and a week later in San Francisco, with Los Angeles to follow in another week. By March 1 it will have been launched in London, Paris and Brussels.

Boston Jewish American Jan. 14

יתומים פון שטורם

Advertiser Jan. 6

REBELLION IN FULL SWING. Here begins the end of the Bastilles in the great Griffith photo-drama, "Orphans of the Storm." Danton (Monte Blue) is now leading the fanatic sans-culottes against the troops of Louis XVI.

Post Jan. 11

MR. GRIFFITH'S PLANS

Now that "Orphans of the Storm" are nicely settled in their theatrical homes in Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Cleveland and Chicago, Mr. D. W. Griffith plans to take a rest. He is undecided where he will go, whether on a cruise to Central America or the West Indies, or he may accept Winchell Smith's invitation to join his houseboat party on the Nile River. However, Mr. Griffith has taped studio space at Jacksonville and Miami, Florida, and plans to do a special feature there some time during the winter. In connection with this new production, he will sail next May and return to the United States and to the United

Telegram Jan. 8

Our Movie Fans

By SYLVIA CHAPMAN

It's a funny thing. You start out to "interview" D. W. Griffith with your head throbbing memory and when you get to talking to him you forget all about the question you were going to ask and just listen to the director, for Griffith is one of the few motion picture people who can talk for publication without the interviewer being in the condition of the poor poet.

It was of films that they talked, and the work is not, for Griffith has the work in mind, for he studies far too far ahead to do the work. The contagion is catching, and when the director talks, what he says is interesting.

[illegible]

Advertiser Jan. 8

ORPHANS OF THE STORM

Post Jan. 8

[illegible]

Advertiser Jan. 12

Lillian Gish Is Eager for Work

Transcript Jan.

CURRENT PHOTO-PLAYS

Orphans of the Storm

[illegible]

The Tech Jan. 9

[illegible]

Post Jan. 9

[illegible]

Post Jan. 9

TREMONT THEATRE

[illegible]

Post Jan. 9

TREMONT THEATRE

[illegible]

Telegram Jan. 17

Big Day With D. W. Griffith When Shooting Great Scene

THE RESCUE AT THE GUILLOTIN E IN "ORPHANS OF THE STORM"

Few people who sit comfortably in a theatre and observe scene after scene of D. W. Griffith's latest photo-dramatic spectacle "Orphans of the Storm," pass by terrific things with little thought of the vast detail and work which attended the taking of those events. One of Griffith's assistants thus tells of a day when the master motion picture director worked with a force of over 10,000 people.

Early in the morning trains especially arranged for began rolling into Mamaroneck from the Grand Central depot. A force of 50 engaging experts had been a week assembling this army of men and women to act in the scenes. The Griffith studio is some 20 miles east of New York and the problem of getting this army of actors on the Griffith studio property was no simple task. The most a train can bring is less than 400.

Griffith is doing the great scenes at the guillotine and the thrilling rescue wherein Monte Blue as "Danton" dashes up with 600 horsemen. It took two trains of horse cars to bring these animals from New York. They were tried veterans and not easily frightened by gunfire and other exciting noises.

A tedious and nerve-trying day it was; Griffith stands on a high-erected platform. On either side are camera men. With Griffith is Prof. Allard of Harvard, intent that all must be historically exact; the Marquis de Polignac, from Paris, is gesticulating wildly in explaining the authority for action of the period.

With the sun at the proper angle, work starts. But this is not to be in the picture; it is purely preliminary. On they go and back they come. This didn't go right; that was not registered correctly. It all seems confusion. Above all the tumult is heard a voice that is even and clear. It is that of Griffith giving his orders through a megaphone, distinct and without agitation. He is the calm, cool person of all that [illegible] Felix Griffith has visualized and thought out just what he wants. He knows it, and he proposed to get what he wants.

[illegible] charge, men, women and children fleeing back and taught how to act when the horses charge through to Great accident. Blank cartridges are tested and re-tested, broken glass and scenes are rehearsed time and again. The mob has turned the bastile against the front of a German landmark, but the magicians have quickly rebuilt it as it passes by their brushes to obliterate the damage.

The calm morning has been perfect and an ideal one it would seem. All of the film has been [illegible] "blanks" has [illegible] in achieving the desired result. A hail is called for lunch. The tent [illegible] with [illegible] and [illegible] [illegible] and [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

Globe
Jan. 5

Viewing Mr D. W. Griffith's "Orphans of the Storm" at the Apollo Theatre, our attention, at movies always errant, wandered to the story of "The Two Orphans." We never saw the play, but at our first variety show at the Olympic Theatre, Chicago, we saw the Russell Brothers in a rough burlesque of it called "The Two Off-uns." And not long after that we heard a Brother team sing a song about the Brooklyn Theatre fire. We realize now that the team must have been pulling old stuff, for the fire occurred in 1876 during a performance by Kate Claxton in "The Two Orphans," and this team was singing the song in 1895. As we recall it, it had about 50 stanzas—we thought the team never would finish—but all that stick are these:

The evening's bright stars they were shining,
The moonbeams shone clear on our land;
Our city was in peace and quietness,
The hour of midnight near at hand.
But hark! do you hear that cry, fire?
How dismal the bells they do sound—
Our Brooklyn Theatre is burning!
Alas! burning fast to the ground.

CHORUS

We ne'er will forget "The Two Orphans,"
Bad luck seems to be in its wake.
It seems it were brought to our city,
The lives of our dear friends to take.

The doors they were open at 7,
The curtain was rolled up at 8
Them that had got seats, they were happy;
Outside they were mad that were late.
The play, it went on very smoothly
Till sparks from the scene they did fly;
It's then, that men, women and children,
"O, God save our lives" they did cry.

Nor shall we ever forget how that team sang the penultimate line of the finest stanza, "Our Brookalyn theayter is boinean."

THE DIARY OF OUR OWN SAMUEL PEPYS

January 2—Lay long, dreading to rise to close the window, what with the great cold, but up finally and to the office, and all day at my stint, until 8 o'clock and so to an inn and had dinner alone, of some curried veal and a minced pye, and so to the playhouse and saw R. Warwick and Alice Brady in a play called "Drifting," not credible, but well enough acted. So meeting my wife, and home with her by omnibuss.

3—Less cold this day, for which I thank Heaven. To my office, but the painters and joiners making such a to-do I to J. Seaton's room and did my stint there, to my great content. This day I did on my red and green tie, to the joyous approval of all. To Mistress Hilda's with my wife to dinner, and so to see the cinema play "Orphans of the Storm," and liked the picturing greatly but could not fix my mind on the story. The first time ever I saw the Gish sisters and found them excellent actresses. So home by Broadway car, very slowly, and read K. MacGowan's "The Theater of Tomorrow," a good book, and so to bed.

4—Early up, and to the office, and there all the day at this and that. All the printing men helpful and kind to me, which lightneth my task. So home to dinner, and J. Farrar there and we talked of poetry and such matters.

Transcript January 5

Mr. Griffith Presents "Mme. Guillotine"

A Celebrated Instrument of Fate

As the French Revolution—in "Orphans of the Storm"—Knew It

Herald
Jan. 8

FILM TITLES SHOW IMPROVEMENT

"Orphans of the Storm" Titles Required Much Study

Not the least interesting of the many odd and unusual features of D. W. Griffith's latest photoplay, "Orphans of the Storm," now in its third week at the Tremont Theatre in this city, is the manner in which Griffith and his aides have improved upon the titling of the picture. That great study and care has been exercised in this direction is apparent and it is encouraging to those who have the future welfare of pictures at heart that this important part of the production and has not been overlooked.

The titles for "Orphans of the Storm," have in the first place all been subjected to a process of development whereby there is no sharp or penetrating light effect to dazzle and shock the eye. Before each was accepted for insertion as an informative interlude they were turned over to experts in photography in order that they might be softened. Dull amber and even heliotrope are used in order that these may be clear but at the same time not sufficiently brilliant to affect the optic nerves. Too often titles are put forth in sharp clear white color so that breaking through the sombre black of the screen they almost burn into the eye of the auditor. Griffith has by great care and expense overcome this objectionable feature.

Also, he has modified the monotony of the title formation. In the main his titles for "Orphans of the Storm" are in elite Cheltenham, the neatest typing possible to secure. Not content with this, he varies with elongated primer and shifts to italic relief for both contrast and emphasis. In all 16 different forms of type are used in the new Griffith picture, a record new in the history of motion pictures.

Herald Jan. 10

TREMONT THEATRE

D. W. Griffith's masterful motion picture spectacle, "Orphans of the Storm," is smashing all box office records at the Tremont Theatre, where it is being shown twice daily. Although "Way Down East" holds the long distance record for consecutive performances in Boston, "Orphans of the Storm" at the present time is more than 25 per cent. ahead of it in gross receipts in the same period since opening. After the very first performance on Wednesday night, Dec. 28, "Orphans of the Storm" has been shown to crowded houses at almost all performances. It was presented for the first time in New York last Monday and immediately began to draw "turnaway" houses. It was opened in Cleveland last night; will be shown in Philadelphia tomorrow and Pittsburgh next Monday. On Jan. 29 it will be launched in Chicago and a week later in San Francisco, with Los Angeles to follow in another week. By March 1 it will have been launched in London, Paris and Brussels.

Boston Jewish American Jan. 11

יתומים פון שטורם

Advertiser Jan. 6

REBELLION IN FULL SWING. Here begins the end of the Bastille in the great Griffith photo-drama, "Orphans of the Storm." Danton (Monte Blue) is seen leading the fanatic mob which overthrew the power of Louis XVI.

Post Jan. 11

MR. GRIFFITH'S PLANS

Now that "Orphans of the Storm" are nicely settled in their theatrical homes in Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Cleveland and Chicago, Mr. D. W. Griffith plans to take a look. He is undecided where he will go, whether on a cruise to Central America by the West Indies, or he may accept Winchell Smith's invitation to join his houseboat party on the Nile. However, Mr. Griffith has leased studio space at Jacksonville and Miami, Florida, and plans to do a special feature there some time during the winter. In connection with this trip, it is quite possible that this March will travel to the Orient and to the Nile.

Telegram Jan. 8

Our Movie Fans

By SYLVIA CHENEVAL

Advertiser Jan. 8

ORPHANS OF THE STORM

Post Jan. 8

Advertiser Jan. 12

Lillian Gish Is Eager for Work

Transcript Jan.

CURRENT PHOTO-PLAYS

Tremont—Orphans of the Storm

The Tech Jan. 9

Post Jan. 8

TREMONT THEATRE

Post Jan. 8

TREMONT THEATRE

American Jan. 14

Monte Blue, Indian Actor, Plays Danton

A motion picture actor who has struggled hard and patiently to achieve success is Monte Blue, seen in the compelling role of "Danton" in D. W. Griffith's latest and greatest work, "Orphans of the Storm," now at the Tremont Theatre. Blue is different from most screen actors, in that he is independently wealthy and does not need to labor for money.

He is a Cherokee Indian and his people have grown enormously wealthy through oil land leases in Oklahoma. Blue has with good judgment bided his time, leased his lands at fancy figures and counts his bank accounts in large figures. His home is at Okmulgee, Okla., where stands in the centre of a thriving town the old council house of his tribe. Blue comes from a strain of chiefs.

Monte Blue first began picture work as cowboy with Mr. Griffith and then was selected as one of the leading riders in the Ku Klux Klan scenes of "The Birth of a Nation." He has earnestly begged of Griffith a part ever since. His chance came when the producer set about with his work of bringing forth "Orphans of the Storm." He needed a stalwart figure for Danton and a man who could ride. Blue filled these requirements. What is more, he delved into history and absorbed all the authentic works concerning the great popular leader of the French Revolution.

Those who see that mad ride of rescuing horsemen at the climax of the great Griffith work, the dash through the gates, the tall figure of Danton leaning half out of the saddle with reprieve in hand, and the wonderful reining up of his steed at the foot of the gallows, where he brings his horse from a wild gallop to such a stop that the animal rears back on both hind legs, may well know that such riding was only learned on the open range of America.

Advertiser Jan. 13

OLD GEORGE W. COSTUME-PLAY has knocked the wisdom-specialists for a tour. They said his day was o'er. They put a lily in his hand—and he sat up and gave them the sarcastic snicker. First "Passion" and "Deception" swept moviedom like Jupiter with a broom. Now 'Orphans of the Storm," in a scene from which Lillian Gish is here seen, is splintering attendance records.

Traveler Jan. 14

Louis XVI. Scene Cost $50,000

A striking example of what motion pictures cost to produce is to be had from a single scene in D. W. Griffith's latest work, "Orphans of the Storm," now current at the Tremont Theatre. One scene in this huge picture and one which, while flashed four quick times, in all consuming less than one minute, required an outlay of more than $50,000. This is the scene showing the throne room of Louis XVI, King of France, during the most extravagant period in history.

It seemed quite necessary for Mr. Griffith to show the court of Louis; it also was absolutely necessary to show it in all its regal splendor. One artist was sent hurriedly to Paris to sketch and note all the fine points of famous paintings known to have adorned the walls of that famous throne room. He returned and was immediately assisted by three other artists in executing the set. Mr. Griffith gives but a momentary flash of this room, and "cuts back" showing the elaborate wall frieze. The bill for painting and building this set alone was $38,000. With the furnishing to be added and the brilliant costumes required for the throng of bewigged and bejeweled courtesans, the cost ran beyond $50,000. This does not take into account the wages of those taking part, as they were among the colossal whole of the Griffith pay roll for the entire work.

Artists will observe that the paintings shown on the walls of that scene are actual reproductions of famous works, either from those in the Louvre and other galleries, or where no longer extant, from authentic book plates preserved of the same.

Variety Jan. 13

BUSINESS IN BOSTON STILL HOLDING UP

Managers See Clear Road Ahead Till Lent

Boston, Jan. 11.

Business at all the legitimate houses in town held up last week. Box office receipts were close to, and, in some cases, on a par with, those of the previous week. This condition, though very satisfactory to those interested in legitimate theatricals around here, was not unexpected, as practically the same patronage that made the business good the previous week, those home for the holidays from the schools and colleges around here, were still in town.

This week the story is expected to be a bit different, and, as was indicated at the vaudeville houses downtown Monday afternoon, light business at the first of the week with a stronger play at the finish will probably be the story. This is the way things have been running so far this season, until the advent of the holiday season, and nothing has occurred that would indicate a change. From now until Lent a good break, when everything is considered, is expected, but some of the managers can't carry their optimistic spirit far enough to believe that the Lenten season won't give them a worse crack than has been the case for the past three or four seasons.

There were two new openings in town Monday, and both got a good start, but from widely different causes. At the Shubert, McIntyre and Heath opened with their new show, "Red Pepper," at the Wilbur. When the curtain went up the house was jammed, every box being filled and a full house at standees. The show was not on a two-for-one basis, it is understood, for the opening. It is understood the local critics, and there were quite a number, unanimously with the exception of one, gave it a good write-up. It is to be hoped for a run to extra good business in the walking sense, and there, the other two weeks out of the Boston, where the show is playing, seem to be a good bet. It is a show that should do well in Boston, this being its last week in town. The show, as it stands, is a big one.

It brings back one of the shows of the days of the Shubert, Lyceum, Bijou, Bowdoin Square, Tremont Theatre, Boston Opera House, Colonial, Majestic, Plymouth, Wilbur, Copley, Fenway, Park, Boston Music Hall

Variety Jan 6

"ORPHANS OF THE STORM"

Henriette Girard	Lillian Gish
Louise	Dorothy Gish
Chevalier de Vaudrey	Joseph Schildkraut
Count de Linieres	Frank Losee
Countess de Linieres	Catherine Emmett
Marquis de Presle	Morgan Wallace
Mother Frochard	Lucille la Verne
Jacques Frochard	Sheldon Lewis
Pierre Frochard	Frank Puglia
Picard	Creighton Hale
Jacques-Forget-Moi	Leslie King
Danton	Monte Blue
Robespierre	Sidney Herbert
King Louis XVI	Leo Kolmert
The Doctor	Adolphe Lestina
Sister Genevieve	Kate Bruce

Griffith "showed it" Jan. 3 at the Apollo, on 42d street, at $2 top. It's "The Two Orphans" canned in the Griffith way, which means everything there could be in that story the Master Genii brought out. Some call Griffith the Master Genius of pictures, but as he is the only one among them all, let the Genii ride whether it's right or wrong.

The "Orphans of the Storm" is set in the days of France's Reign of Terror. There are the mob scenes of the Revolution, the French characters as mentioned on the program, the two little girls in the persons of the Gish sisters amidst all the pillage and plunder, and the picture has all the angles, all the detail and all the scenes that any one human could bring out.

What a break those two orphans got! About half-way through the film it looked as though their streak would be a tougher one than Nellie Revell has had. They were the so-near-and-yet-so-far-apart twins. Sobby? Wow! The guy that gets the handkerchief privilege in the lobby will win a fortune.

And yet between and among all the sentiment [and it's a super-sentimental picture that the women must adore], all of the fights (including a sword duel and knife battle), all of the galloping horses, all of the handsome scenes and equally beautiful photography, Griffith brought out a great thought that was not in the picture—it was in a caption. It opened the second part and said in effect that America might profit by the experience of France in not permitting fanatics to become leaders. That's pretty timely just now. And another brilliant thought was the momentary introduction of Capt. Napoleon.

Had Griffith lived in the darkened ages he would have been called a philosopher, as all of those days with advanced thought were called long after they were dead. For D. W. Griffith is the advanced thought of pictures—always has been. Griffith has never made his best picture. It's questionable if the public will ever permit him to. They know him too well; they expand everything he announces; they almost anticipate everything he does. And "Orphans of the Storm" is not Griffith's best to date, but it's among his best, and still leaves "The Birth of the Nation" in front.

But "Orphans" has a stronger human nature appealing force in the troubles and terrors of those two little girls that the Gish sisters play so perfectly than anything in a similar vein this picture creator ever before has done. That makes it its box-office attraction, if the rats in the cellar and the guillotine scene that is so suspensively prolonged do not interfere.

In film making and picture taking, over and above or below anything for or against, "The Orphans" is as fine an example of the picture art as may be seen, and after seeing it, if those stewed students of the drama again say there is no art in picturedom they must be off their nut. Sime.

Boston, Jan. 4.

It probably cost Griffith in excess of $10,000 to make his eleventh-hour title shift from "The Two Orphans" to its present pirate-proof title of "Orphans of the Storm," the chief loss being in paper prepared by the ton for a national release. The night that he gave the film its metropolitan premiere at the Tremont theatre, a German "Two Orphans" was being shown in Lynn at a four-bit top as compared with Griffith's $2 top to a genuine turn-away.

That Griffith has a bigger money-maker than "The Birth of a Nation" seems to be a certainty. He has turned the two orphans into the tempestuous era of the French Revolution and in using the title to the reason for a Gothic with an orphan under the guillotine and phantom fire mine away. The scene is drawn out agonizingly but does not let down in the end. The cavalry ride through the town, the storming of the feared guillotine scene, the last minute reprieve and the thumping reason wrapped on the Bastille are pretty well handled. Entirely apart from a Gothic story that can compensate them, the are not due to the authenticity and beauty of the sets and backgrounds.

Lillian Gish and Dorothy Gish are pretty well cast as the two girls, Lillian Gish of the Gish sisters of the Gish family of the Gish Gishers, Gishes by the Gish Gish Gish

Christian Science Monitor Dec. 28

THEATERS

Joseph Schildkraut Interviewed

Special to The Christian Science Monitor From its Eastern News Office

NEW YORK, New York.— Almost every prominent actor who has come from the stage to the motion picture is first surprised at its limitations and then interested in its possibilities. The case of Joseph Schildkraut, the noted European actor who has been appearing with success with the Theater Guild the past season, is a particularly interesting one. During the making of some scenes of "Orphans of the Storm" under the direction of D. W. Grimth, in which Mr. Schildkraut plays Chevalier, he chatted about his experiences.

"I had appeared in pictures abroad," he said, "but that was quite different from the work here. I consider the American pictures superior. In Europe I thought of motion-picture acting as pantomime; I believed that it was merely acting minus the voice. Here I have found that it is a more subtle art, and has little or nothing to do with pantomime."

That is the popular misconception of motion-picture acting—that it consists of pantomime. But when it is taken into consideration that pantomime is an art which was developed to carry a message across the gap between actor and audience—a graphic presentation of feeling in gesture, exaggerated so as to be effective at a distance—and that motion-picture acting is subjected to the searching and microscopic eye of the camera, it is readily seen that whatever motion-picture acting is, it is not pantomime. The more successful screen actors agree that the eyes are the chief mediums of expression, and that such expression is the result of concentrated thought.

"Screen acting is the more difficult," Mr. Schildkraut told his associates on another occasion. "All the familiar tools of the actor are taken from him. He must work almost entirely with his eyes, for facial expressions which seem natural and effective on the stage seem distorted on the screen."

Mr. Schildkraut does not talk voluubly of his work. His views must be gained in occasional chats between scenes, for he does not like being interviewed. He does not understand the keen interest people take in the ideas of the actors. "He should be known only through his work," Mr. Schildkraut insists.

Joseph Schildkraut was born in Budapest, Rumania, and made his first appearance on the stage in support of his father in Buenos Aires. Since then he has played a wide range of rôles in the principal theaters of Europe. He is a type which seems ideally suited to the screen. It is his intensity and depth of feeling which count in his favor in the films. His supple physique, his expressive mouth and nostrils are the qualifications that single him out as an actor particularly suited to motion pictures.

"I am so interested in pictures," he remarked after he had been working under Mr. Griffith's direction for a few weeks, "that I should like to devote all my time to them. Perhaps I will for a year or so. I should like that. It is too wearing to do both screen and stage work, as I am doing now, and I am so carried away by the possibilities of motion-picture acting that I want to devote my entire attention to them for a while. I could not leave the stage for pictures permanently—but there is much to be learned from them."

American Jan. 2

MOTION PICTURE NEWS

By FRIEDA DAVIS

"THE Orphans of the Storm," now playing at the Tremont Theatre, shows clearly that David Wark Griffith is still ahead of the crowd, but it shows, too, that he is not as far ahead of them as he was a few seasons ago. There is much to recommend the film and to recommend it highly, but there is little that can not be overtaken by some others—say Rex Ingram, for instance—before long.

One thing that stands out preeminent in a Griffith picture is the delicacy with which it is handled from start to finish. The most gruesome and grim scenes have a lightness in handling that saves them from the crudeness many achieve on the screen. Then, too, the highlights of his picture, the scenes of a few seconds that are little short of flashes of genius, are all there in this, his newest production.

In this connection I can cite the appearance of young Napoleon Bonaparte as he watches the trial scene. It flashes across the screen for but a few moments, but it leaves a lasting impression.

SHOWS HIS TALENT.

This is where Griffith shows his talent. Another thing that deserves mention is the idea of showing the pounding hoofs of the galloping horses as Danton and his followers race to save Henrietta from the guillotine.

Mr. Griffith told me the morning following the opening of the picture last week that it took him an entire day to make these short scenes, that he had often wanted to try it, that once before his attempt had been a dismal failure, but that this time, at last, he had succeeded. This too, lasts but two or three seconds.

As for the "Orphans of the Storm" itself. It is a splendid picture, though in no way phenomenal. The first scenes drag rather lamentably. I admit that much of it was exposition that had to take place in the light of later events, but nevertheless they could have been, it would seem, "snapped up" a bit. The opening subtitles, too, seemed obscure as a sendoff for a motion picture. I admire, on the other hand, the reticence of Mr. Griffith in his later titles. They were cut to the bone, and contained nothing that did not pertain to the direct action.

Of the players, Monte Blue stands out as giving quite the best performance in the film, although due mention should be made in this connection of the work of the Misses Gish. The playing of Lillian Gish in the scene in which she thought she heard the voice of Louise singing outside was little short of masterly. Too, her expression when she leaned over the balcony and shrieked "Louise! Louise!" was capital.

PLAYS WITH SIMPLICITY.

Blue plays with a homelikness and simplicity that fill his characterizations with the deepest feeling. It has been said of him that he is a "type actor." He would seem to be, one must agree, but I have seen him play various types, and in each case he has scored. As Danton he again shows his power and talent.

Joseph Shildkraut, long heralded as something extraordinary, I must admit, was a great disappointment. All one can say for him is that he doesn't overplay. On the contrary, he so effaces himself that he makes his character almost a negligible one. A good criticism of his playing—I do not use the word criticism in a derogatory sense—would be, he did well in a small part.

And now we come to the author of the picture. Frankly, it seemed to me before I saw it that Miss Dorothy Gish was entitled to the role of the blind Louise. A comparison in every scene of the work I could almost see her between the part. In short she has given an amazingly good performance. But the author has the character and is understanding that was amazing. To the practicing critic it is said that she has her work. The opening after the opening the last of the, if I could only have had two years of experience. If an opportunity arises I will be happy to see Miss Gish in the role.

Post. Jan. 2

TEACHING AMERICANS HISTORY IN FILM

FAMOUS PRODUCER AND TRIO OF STARS

Lillian and Dorothy Gish, appearing in "Orphans of the Storm" at the Tremont Theatre, and in inserts (at left) Monte Blue, who portrays the creator of the French Revolution and (at right) David Wark Griffith whose genius made the great film possible.

NEW GRIFFITH FILM DRAWING BIG CROWDS

Movie Producer Wore Out His Aids in Getting "Orphans of the Storm" Ready

By FRED J. McISAAC
Dramatic Editor

When David W. Griffith left Boston Friday night, it was after a week without sleep or food, save cat-naps and snatches of nourishment, usually in the form of an ice cream or a cup of coffee.

He was the sole survivor of half a dozen assistants who tried to keep up with him in the work of preparing "Orphans of the Storm." One of them, the musical director, lasted through the opening and took to his bed, sick. But Griffith is accustomed to wearing out his lieutenants, and he had a second musical director on hand to step into the breach.

"They say I am extravagant in carrying so many people," declared the master mind of filmdom. "Where would I be, now, if I hadn't had two musical directors?"

SCORES BIG SUCCESS.

Griffith left "Orphans of the Storm" in perfect shape and scoring the most colossal success since "The Birth of a Nation." All the sophisticated showmen who discouraged this particular production are amazed at the manner in which the public has stormed the box office in the worst theatrical season ever known.

In "Orphans of the Storm," Griffith braved the tradition that you can't interest Americans in costume plays, and you can't teach them history and make them like it.

The Gish sisters are so sweet and human and lovable in their eighteenth century costumes that audiences take them to their hearts at once and there is so much that is exciting and thrilling happening all the time that the public gobbles the historic episodes of the French Revolution as we boys used to gobble the contents of the latest dime novel.

LACKS GRUESOMENESS.

When I first heard that Griffith was filming the French Revolution as a background for the "Two Orphans" I was afraid that he would fill it full of gore. I didn't want to see bleeding heads and beautiful girls cut to pieces by the ferocious mobs of Paris. Griffith used to go in for realism. In "The Birth of a Nation" there was too much blood, and in "Hearts of the World" too many nice people get stuck full of bayonets in full view of the audience.

But in "Orphans of the Storm" these gruesome bits of truth are not in evidence.

"I admit I had a lot of such scenes," said Griffith, "but I cut them out. People do not want to be forced to look at awful sights, and I am not going to make them do so any more." As a result "Orphans of the Storm" takes one through a story which is really the most enthralling and dramatic in all modern history, and carries with it the human interest gained by the "Two Orphans" in the persons of Lillian and Dorothy Gish. What you think that the "Two Orphans" alone was sufficient to attract two generations of theatre goers to see it happened how strong that it is in the acting Griffith has made.

A GRIFFITH MIRACLE.

Aside from the Gish girls, the most remarkable thing in the picture is the work of Monte Blue. This man is a character actor. He is made to play the great and terrible Danton, the leader of the Revolution, the great orator and leader of the mob.

And Monte Blue, who looks like a cross between a prize fighter and a Roman emperor, who has the strength, power and majesty, who dominates the supposed lives of the Revolutionists, who is a great orator, who is a great leader of men, who is a great lover, who is a great fighter, who is a great man

Jan. 7, 1922

EDITORIAL PAGE OF THE Boston American

If You Met This Thing—

What Would You Think of It?

Copyright, 1922, Star Company

DON'T JUDGE BY APPEARANCES

Artists have drawn imaginary men from Mars and made them no uglier than this. You have seen perched on their roosts the huge buzzards and vultures in the zoo, and they were no uglier about the head than this creature which, by the way, is a friend of theirs from the region of the air.

If you had seen this picture ten years ago you would have said, "It is a monster from a strange world, some fearful creature bent on slaughter, some abnormal birth of the imagination."

But you are not surprised now when told that this is the handsome young Lieutenant J. A. MacCready, who holds the world's record for flying high in the air.

Fliers of all the world drove and made their records. And then this young American, whom you see in the costume worn many miles above the earth, beat all the other records by thousands of feet.

This costume keeps out the intense cold. We live here close to the earth as in a hothouse. When you go up a few miles, as high as this man went, you enter a region of extreme cold, in which you would soon die in ordinary clothing, and a region in which the air is so thin that you cannot breathe it and live.

These clothes keep out the cold, the mask on the face enables the flier to regular and create his own atmosphere from oxygen tanks and other scientific arrangements.

Looking at this picture helps you to understand what often seems puzzling, the curious form that nature gives to her creatures. Many times you have been puzzled by the hideous face of the great ape, the strange heads and bodies of fishes, the tapir, a cross between a pig and elephant; the ant-eater, the kangaroo.

Nature has adapted all of these creatures, from the eagle soaring out of sight to the mole burrowing in the ground, and each fits the place in which it has been put.

So man when he becomes a machine bird and flies to great heights changes himself to an appearance hard to recognize.

Nobody knows what we shall be or what we shall look like when we finish evolution, when each flies on his own account as easily as the individual bird, when our projecting fog and big feet and perhaps our hair shall have disappeared. There are many surprises waiting for us; this picture indicates it.

Revolutions Bring Good

The French Revolution, declared John Stuart Mills, England's great political economist, brought more good to the human race than any other single event in history. The French Revolution has been repeated in the Russian Revolution. The Russian Revolution is not more radical than the French Revolution considering the difference in the political, social and economic conditions of the two periods.

Three-quarters of the land now owned by the people of France was confiscated by the Revolutionary Assembly from the old nobility and in the Russian present has confiscated the land of their nobility, who like the French nobility, used it to exploit and oppress the peasants. The French Revolution was even more drastic. Everyone knows that the Russian Revolution has been but the exact force justified the French Revolution, and the phrase which precedes it truly and accurately ties the "Orphans of the Storm" is of the greatest educational value.

We hope that more pictures like this will be presented to the public. The educational value of "Orphans of the Storm" and "Hearts of Humanity" present representation of great historical events is inestimable.

Generosity Is Admirable

Justice Alfred E. V. P.

Mr. Justice Clark of the United States Supreme Court has [illegible]

Justice Clark and other justices that [illegible]

Advertiser Jan. 8

LILLIAN GISH AND MONTE BLUE IN "ORPHANS OF THE STORM"-TREMONT-

Advertiser Jan. 8

QUESTIONS FOR MOVIE FANS

In magazines and newspapers everywhere there are departments monickered "Answers to Movie Fans." But where are the departments equally important, which instead of knowing it all about the films will admit they don't know anything? This lack is about to be remedied. Students of the flickering photographs, attention! The class in fillum problems is in session, and we have some stickers. If you can answer them, you're a better man than the movie editor.

Problem 1. Why did the audience at the showing of "Orphans of the Storm" remain silent when Benjamin Franklin and Thomas Jefferson were portrayed, and applaud at a representation of blood-stained Napoleon, the Corsican orge?

Problem 2. Why do movie producers advertise a forthcoming picture throughout the nation under one title, and at the last moment adopt a new title, to the confusion, rage and despair of all mankind?

Problem 3. Why did an audience applaud with patient relief when the noble hero appeared in the nick of time in "Rip Van Winkle," a fairy tale supposed to be merely a fancy and to have no relation to real life?

When you have solved these problems you consider make yourself advanced to the rank of Wise Man, Class "A." If you can't solve them, well, you're no worse off than we are.

Herald - Jan. 8

Advertiser Jan. 9

Pfaus Arch-Rebel In Griffith's New Film

Herald Jan. 8

FILM TITLES SHOW IMPROVEMENT

"Orphans of the Storm" Titles Required Much Study

Not the least interesting of the many odd and unusual features of D. W. Griffith's latest photoplay, "Orphans of the Storm," now in its third week at the Tremont Theatre in this city, is the manner in which Griffith and his aides have improved upon the titling of the picture. That great study and care has been exercised in this direction is apparent and it is encouraging to those who have the future welfare of pictures at heart that this important part of the production and has not been overlooked.

The titles for "Orphans of the Storm," have in the first place all been subjected to a process of development whereby there is no sharp or penetrating light effect to dazzle and shock the eye. Before each was accepted for insertion as an informative interlude they were turned over to experts in photography in order that they might be softened. Dull amber and even heliotrope are used in order that these may be clear but at the same time not sufficiently brilliant to affect the optic nerves. Too often titles are put forth in sharp clear white color so that breaking through the sombre black of the screen they almost burn into the eye of the auditor. Griffith has by great care and expense overcome this objectionable feature.

Also, he has modified the monotony of the title formation. In the main his titles for "Orphans of the Storm" are in elite Cheltenham, the neatest typing possible to secure. Not content with this, he varies with elongated primer and shifts to italic relief for both contrast and emphasis. In all 16 different forms of type are used in the new Griffith picture, a record new in the history of motion pictures.

Advertiser Jan. 9

GISH SISTERS IN "ORPHANS OF THE STORM"-TREMONT-

Globe Jan. 8

SIDNEY HERBERT'S CAREER ON STAGE AND SCREEN

Twelve and a half years a leading character player with the late Augustin Daly, was the record of Sidney Herbert, whom D. W. Griffith selected for his Robespierre in "Orphans of the Storm."

Sidney Kenneth Hegbert was born in London. His father was cashier in Coutt's Bank, where most of the London managers and leading actors kept their accounts. Thus the youth, who began as a clerk under his father, met many of these. He had received his education at Christ's Hospital School, London.

His first part on the stage was in Arthur Wing Pinero's first play, "The Money Spenders." He then joined Lilly Langtry and with her came to America, appearing for three years in "The Lady of Lyons," "The Wife's Peril," and in "Clancarty." When Mrs Langtry returned to England in 1891, Herbert remained and joined Augustin Daly's famous organization. He remained with Daly until the latter's death, and during that time played a sufficient number of parts to dazzle the ordinary actor.

He was Tom in "The Great Unknown," then Hortensio in "The Taming of the Shrew," Sir Benjamin Backbite in "School for Scandal," Sir Darcy in "The Prodigal Son," and then in "The Heart of the Ruby" he was the Yamarto to Ada Rehan's lead. He next appeared as Sir Thurio in "Two Gentlemen of Verona," and thereon in "Our Manoeuvring," following with a delightful portrayal of Touchstone in "As You Like It." His next part was that of Don Armado in "Love's Labor Lost," next Joe Lebanon in "The Cabinet Minister," Capt Vane in "The Magistrate," and Amazed Photo in Daly's then magnificent production of "Midsummer Night's Dream."

In the theatre world was born when Daly announced his first presentation of Shakspere's "The Tempest." Herbert was chosen for Alonso and registered a hit. He next played the lead in "Countess Gukl," Boris in "The Last Word," Don John in "Much Ado About Nothing," and then came his great outstanding hit.

Daly produced a melodram that ran for a year and was a sensation, "The Great Ruby." Ada Rehan essayed the foremost role and Herbert played Inspector Brett. It was in this piece and playing scenes against Herbert that Blanche Bates, unknown heretofore, became famous. Following the long run of this play, Herbert next appeared as the Comte de Guiche in Rostand's "Cyrano de Bergerac," Shylock in Daly's musical and colorful production of "The Merchant of Venice." His next role was that of Fouche in "Madam Sans Gene."

Subsequently he appeared in Daly's productions of "Love in Harness," "Love in Tandem," "The Orient Express," "The Foresters, "The Golden Widow," "The Two Escutcheons," "Nancy & Co," "Belle Strategem," "The Country Girl" and then when Daly died he later joined Jacob Litt to create the role of Schael in "The Ghetto."

Then he went with Charles Frohman, being seen as the Cardinal in "My Lady's Lord," as Lord Carnot in "To Have and to Hold," Michael Wain in "Hearts Are Trumps," and then created Forman to Gillette's "Sherlock Holmes." He remained with Frohman, appearing in "Resurrection" and "A Fool and His Money." Leaving Frohman he first went with Wagenhals & Kemper and then with George Arondhurst. Next we find him as the fanatic monk in Shaw & Erlanger's production of Gen Lew Wallace's "The Prince of India."

He returned to the Frohman fold to create the male lead in "Letty" and remained under the C. F. banner for a number of years, being seen in prominent parts in "Mary's Son," "The Thief," "Arsene Lupin," "The Attack" and in "Captain Hippo." Next he appeared in a special production of "Much Ado About Nothing," to follow with his one and only Malvolio in "Twelfth Night," production of "Twelfth Night." He joined Mrs Fiske as her leading man for a season in "Lady Betty." A member later of the huge company which presented "The Wanderer," he next joined Henry Miller in the production of "Matters."

Following this Mr Herbert took his first fling in pictures, but returned to the stage at the request of Arthur Hopkins to appear with Lionel Barrymore in "Macbeth." Mr Herbert is at present playing with Tyrone Power and others in "The Wandering Jew."

This sterling actor has played in Paris at the Vaudeville Theatre and between seasons has been a teacher at the American Academy of Dramatic Arts. He has produced and staged plays for Viola Allen and managed and directed a series of open-air performances of the classics of Washington.

Advertiser Jan. 9

GREGORY'S PLAYBOY

When D. W. Griffith asking an [illegible]

Telegram Jan. 9

Globe Jan. 9

Jewish Advocate

THE STAGE

EMINENT JEWISH ACTOR FEATURED IN "ORPHANS OF THE STORM"

Herald Dec 25

The film version of "The Two Orphans" brings up a host of memories. We saw the melodrama in 1876, and remember the hero bawling: "Me sword's me king's; me life's e-me king's; but me affections are me own." We remember Kate Claxton and Kitty Blanchard; Stuart Robson as Picard; Marie Wilkins as the dreadful Frochard woman; the male Frochard that came "from a family that kill." Glorious old days!

An entertaining little book could be written about this melodrama by d'Ennery and Cormon, produced at the Porte-St. Martin, Paris, on Jan. 23, 1874. The box office receipts were f.736,731 up to Oct. 1 of that year. Taillade was the Pierre. It was said of him, that not having known a father save one that adopted him, he imitated no one; he was the son of his impersonations. He was one of the last champions of the sort of melodrama that made the Porte-St. Martin famous. In 1902, when he was 74 years old, managers were slow to engage him. He wondered why. In 1896, d'Ennery, through his wife, wrote to a manager that he knew an excellent dentist, naming him, who had told him that he could restore Taillade's means of diction, and would do it without pay. D'Ennery asked Lemonnier to forward this letter to Taillade, who refused the dentist's aid. In January, 1899, Taillade, poor, and miserable, went to Brussels for an engagement. Going from the theatre of the Alhambra after a rehearsal, he fell dead in the street, and his body was taken to the morgue; but his old manager, Lemonnier, saw to it that the burial was in Paris.

The original Henriette was Dica Petit, described by the elder Dumas, in 1868, as more poetic than passionate, but in time her diction was warmer, her acting more fervent. She, too, had a sad ending. Playing at Petrograd, she went back to Paris to be treated for a grave malady by a physician. Returning in 1885, she died in the train before it arrived at Compiegne. An extremely charitable woman, during her absence from Paris, she turned her house into a "sheltering arms" for unfortunate women. Her memory was extraordinary. Going to Brussels without knowing one word of "L'Aventuriere," she learned her part on the way, rehearsed on her arrival, and played the next day. She was only 44 when she died.

Angele Moreau was the first to play Louise. She never had a teacher, but, a poor girl, rapped at the Theatre Montmartin one day in 1869. She was given the part of Rose de Mai in "Les Mohicans." The Vaudeville offered her an engagement, but the cost of the necessary costumes frightened her, and she refused. As Louise she charmed all by her blue eyes, regular features, slight figure and melancholy air. She died in 1897.

The original Mother Frochard was Sophie Hamet (1817-1874). As a girl of 7 she began her stage life as a dancer at the Opera. As she secretly danced at the Ambigu contrary to the rules, she lost her place. When she was 18 she played in comedy at the Ambigu. She took old women's parts when she was still young. Her crowning triumph was as La Frochard.

The admirable Mme. Doche, the first Camille (1852), was the first Countess in "The Two Orphans." Still playing in 1877—she was born in 1824—fulfilling an engagement in London—she was afraid of her memory, although she always carried a fetish, a crayon portrait of Rachel at the age of 17 by Edwin Smith, dated 1841 and bearing this inscription: "Rachel to Doche." The great tragedian had given it to Marie Doche the morning after the production of "Camille."

Etienne Leray (1830-1890) was the Jacques. "In turn, a traitor in melodrama, hero in military plays, young leading man in intimate drama, jeerer in satirical comedy, historical character in romantic drama, Leray was all this at once, superior in passionate outburst and in actions of sombre force." Brave off the stage, he saved several lives at the risk of his own, once subduing a madman, grappling with him on a high roof.

Many pages could be written about "The Two Orphans" in the United States, a play that on account of the Brooklyn Fire had for a time as dull a name as Offenbach's "Tales of Hoffmann" had in Vienna and other theatres of Austria and Germany.

When "The Two Orphans" was produced at the Boston Theatre Dec. 13, 1875, the chief characters were Kate Claxton, Kitty Harry, Marie Wilkins, Stuart Robson, Allen, Stewart, H. Lavigne, Bouchelle. Was the performance at the Grand Opera House on Dec. 25, 27th, the last?

Herald Dec 25

Tremont

At the Tremont Theatre tomorrow evening D. W. Griffith's latest work, "Orphans of the Storm," an expansion of Dennery's famous old stage classic, "The Two Orphans," will have its first showing here. Mr. Griffith announces he has taken Kate Claxton's oft-used version and added to it characters and scenes of the French revolution on a gigantic scale.

Mr. Griffith has been more than a year in completing this work. He has called to his aid the leading authorities of the world and sent his architects, artists, research experts and others to all parts of Europe in search of correct data and authentic information. In order to picturize old Paris of more than a century gone by he has secured prints and maps wherever available and in some instances where rare plates might not be had outside museums and libraries, having secured permission to do so, sent his representatives to sketch, or copy, line for line. As a result he has rebuilt that city, in a sense, stone upon stone.

Ten thousand actors were used in the making of this picture. The title roles are played by Lillian Gish and Dorothy Gish. Other principals are Joseph Schildkraut, Frank Losee, Catherine Emmett, Morgan Wallace, Lucille La Verne, Monte Blue, Sidney Herbert, Sheldon Lewis, Frank Puglia, Creighton Hale, Leslie King, Kate Bruce, Leo Kolmer and Adolphe Lestina.

Variety Jan. 6

HOLIDAY FOR BOSTON, BIG THEATRE WEEK

All Legit Shows Hit for High Spots—"Happy-Go-Lucky" and "Irene" Among Leaders

Boston, Jan. 4.

The last week of 1921 will be remembered with joy by those vitally interested in the financial side of theatricals as far as the legitimate theatres in this city are concerned. It was a week when the gross figures of every attraction in town hit the high spots.

While the increase in business was most noticeable at the houses playing legitimate attractions last week the reflection of the pickup was observed in all other branches of the business.

This week started off real strong, with all the theatres getting an extra matinee Monday, (New Year's), and doing a whale of a business at both the matinee and the evening performances. It was claimed the better business was good for this month at least, and that if the right sort of attractions are trotted in and the booking period is not stretched out too long, that for the balance of the winter months the result will be satisfactory.

No changes in attraction at any of the local legitimate houses Monday night, although a couple are scheduled for the coming week. On that day "The Wandering Jew" will come into the Hollis for a stay of three weeks, and McIntyre and Heath will come into the Wilbur.

The Boston opera house is dark at the present time, and there is nothing scheduled to come in there now. The flivver of the Shuberts "winter circus" was another failure to be checked up against this house, and there is no doubt now that an extraordinary strong attraction is necessary to put it over, when not playing opera.

For the time being the Tremont is out of the list of houses playing legitimate, taken over by Griffith for the showing of his film, "Orphans of the Storm."

Estimates for last week:

"Tip-Top" (Colonial, 8th week).—Playing to capacity at practically every performance, $3 top; big cleanup of city. Going strong this week and looks good for at least three weeks more, with possibility of going further.

"Mr. Pim Passes By" (Hollis, 5th week).—While departure scheduled for this week, attraction has not been disappointment, reverse is fact. Opened fairly strong for dramatic and plugged along well until Christmas week, when suffering with others. Came back last week and should close with fair takings.

"Orphans of the Storm" (Tremont, 4d week).—Stunts based by Griffith for the run of his big film with capacity continues prevailing.

"Dog Love" (Plymouth, 2d week).—Hodges local following has not deserted him, shown by success in first week here. Grossed about $14,100 for opening week, very strong figure for dramatic. Started off this week with two big houses for Monday and fair afternoon gate.

"Afgar" (Wilbur, first week).—Grossed about $12,000 for last week; as good as these behind attraction expected.

"Irene" (Shubert, 2d week).—Has been doing well, shown by figures last week, $17,000. During last year this was second attraction. Top-priced at this time at $2 which seems much, but just what people want from here but seems doing business enough to keep this show going. Already secured week of the month, making it a record run of the month, as it is the second attraction to do so, with the Shubert people who have been in Boston for the past month with "Good Morning Judge" and "Sleeping Partners" in the Shubert, with "Good Morning Dearie" in the Majestic.

Jewish Morning Journal Jan. 1

כאסטאן, מאסס.

"יתומים פון שטורעם" אין טרימאנט טהעאטער

אין טרימאנט טהעאטער ווערט יעצט פארנעשטעלט א פאטא־פלעי אונטער'ן נאמען "יתומים פון'ם שטורעם", און עס איז ווערטה צו ציהען די אויפמערקזאמקייט פון אונזערע לעזער צו דיזער מערקווירדיגער פארשטעלונג: עס ווערט פארנעשטעלט די פראנצויזישע רעוואלוציאן מיט אלע איהרע היסטאָרישע וויכטיגע פאסירונגען און שרעקליכע מעשים, די דיקטאטארס, מאב נעריכטען, די גילאטינע און די טויזענדע קעפ וואס זיינען אונטער איהר געפאלען, די בילדער פון די הויפט פיגורען אין יענער צייט, דאנטאן, ראבעספיער, קעניג לואיס דער 16טער און אנדערע. נאנץ ווענינ כמעט קיינע נעשפרעכען ווערען געצייגט אויפ'ן קוירטען, בלויז טהאטען, נעשעהענישען און סצענען פיעלע פון וועלכע פערקיהלען די בלוט פון די צושויער. ניט אכטענדיג אויף די גוואלדיגע סענסיישאנס איז אלעס שטרענג היסטאָריש ביז צו די קלענסטע קליינינקייטען, און ווער עס האט אמאל מעהר אדער ווענינער געלעזען אדער נעהערט פון די פראנצויזישע רעוואלוציאן נאכדעם ווי ער וועט איין מאל ביייוואהנען דיזעזע פארשטעלונג וועט פערשטעהן ריכטיג וואס ער האט געלעזען אדער געהערט.

אין מיטען פון דעם שרעקליכען שטורעם שיינען ארויס 2 שוועסטער יתומים, איינע פון וועלכע איז בלינד געווארען, ליליען גיש אין דראאמאטישן גיש, און די סצענעס צווישען די 2 שוועסטער איז אזוי ריהרענד דאס עס רופט ארויס טרענען פון נאנצען עולם.

מר. גריפיט, דער וואס פרעזענטירט די יתומים פון'ם שטורעם, איז איינער פון די גרעסטע אונטערנעהמער אין טעאטער וועלט און עס האט איהם געקאסט נאהענט צו א מיליאן דאלאר אויפצושטעלען דיזעזע היסטאָרישע און שרעקליך וואונדערבארע פארשטעלונג. די 40 מר זיקאנטען פון סימפאני ארקעסטרא. וואס בעגלייטען און בעלייכטען די סצענען, גיבען נאך צו מעהר לעבען און שטימונג צו אלעס וואס מען זעהט.

Jewish Daily News Jan. 6

"יתומים פון שטורעם" אין טרימאנט טהעאטער

אין טרימאנט טהעאטער ווערט יעצט פארנעשטעלט א פאטא־פלעי אונטער'ן נאמען "יתומים פון'ם שטורעם", און עס איז ווערטה צו ציהען די אויפמערקזאמקייט פון אונזערע לעזער צו דיזער מערקווירדיגער פארשטעלונג: עס ווערט פארנעשטעלט די פראנצויזישע רעוואלוציאן מיט אלע איהרע היסטאָרישע וויכטיגע פאסירונגען און שרעקליכע מעשים, די דיקטאטארס, מאב נעריכטען, די גילאטינע און די טויזענדע קעפ וואס זיינען אונטער איהר געפאלען, די בילדער פון די הויפט פיגורען אין יענער צייט, דאנטאן, ראבעספיער, קעניג לואיס דער 16טער און אנדערע. נאנץ ווענינ כמעט קיינע נעשפרעכען ווערען געצייגט אויפ'ן קוירטען, בלויז טהאטען, נעשעהענישען און סצענען פיעלע פון וועלכע פערקיהלען די בלוט פון די צושויער. ניט אכטענדיג אויף די גוואלדיגע סענסיישאנס איז אלעס שטרענג היסטאָריש ביז צו די

[illegible]

Boston Jewish American Jan. 6

"יתומים פון שטורעם" אין טרימאנט טהעאטער

אין טרימאנט טהעאטער ווערט יעצט פארנעשטעלט א פאטא־פלעי אונטער'ן נאמען "יתומים פון'ם שטורעם", און עס איז ווערטה צו ציהען די אויפמערקזאמקייט פון אונזערע לעזער צו דיזער מערקווירדיגער פארשטעלונג: עס ווערט פארנעשטעלט די פראנצויזישע רעוואלוציאן מיט אלע איהרע היסטאָרישע וויכטיגע פאסירונגען און שרעקליכע מעשים, די דיקטאטארס, מאב נעריכטען, די גילאטינע און די טויזענדע קעפ וואס זיינען אונטער איהר געפאלען, די בילדער פון די הויפט פיגורען אין יענער צייט, דאנטאן, ראבעספיער, קעניג לואיס דער 16טער און אנדערע. נאנץ ווענינ כמעט קיינע נעשפרעכען ווערען געצייגט אויפ'ן קוירטען, בלויז טהאטען, נעשעהענישען און סצענען פיעלע פון וועלכע פערקיהלען די בלוט פון די צושויער. ניט אכטענדיג אויף די גוואלדיגע סענסיישאנס איז אלעס שטרענג היסטאָריש ביז צו די

[illegible]

Advertiser Dec. 27

GISH GIRLS ARRIVE IN HUB. After a "merriest merry Christmas," passed with their "darling mother" in New York, Dorothy (left) and Lillian Gish arrived here yesterday with David W. Griffith, to appear personally at the premiere of their latest picture, "Orphans of the Storm."

Transcript Dec. 29

The Trappings of Romance

Joseph Schildkraut

Pictured as The Chevalier in Mr. Griffith's New Film of the French Revolution, "Orphans of the Storm"

American Jan 2

"ORPHANS OF THE STORM," Tremont Theatre — Griffith's greatest effort. Marvelous photoplay, superb cast, concentrated spectacular effects.

Liffian Gish Not Fatiguing Her Public

Herald Jan. 1

TREMONT—"Orphans of the Storm," D. W. Griffith's masterpiece of the film drama, a stirring production with Lillian and Dorothy Gish in the principal roles.

Globe Jan. 1

"Orphans of the Storm" Proves Triumph at the Tremont

Globe Jan. 1

"Orphans of the Storm" Proves Triumph at the Tremont

Globe Jan. 1

Globe Jan. 1

Advertiser Jan. 1

NEW GRIFFITH FILM

Post Jan. 1

TREMONT THEATRE

American Jan. 3

Movie Star Appalled by Opening of New Picture

LILLIAN GISH.

LILLIAN GISH LIKES ROLE IN 'ORPHANS'

By FRIEDA DAVIS.

A theatre out of "office hours" is a strange place. The Tremont Theatre was scarcely recognizable the other morning when Lillian Gish and I stumbled into the semi-darkness for a talk. Mr. Griffith was in the auditorium rehearsing the orchestra and lights for the showing of "The Orphans of the Storm"—it was the morning of the opening—while Miss Gish had been looking at the finished picture.

The only lights were those each member of the orchestra had over his music-stand and the reflection of the picture on the screen. Somewhere in the shadowy background Mr. Griffith was sitting, issuing orders to the electricians, the musicians, and the men in the projection room. All the work of producing is by no means finished when the actual filming and editing are done. Particularly is this true when a producer insists on the same mastery in the presentation of a picture as in the making itself—as Mr. Griffith does.

ACTRESS APPALLED.

Miss Gish sighed when we went outside where we could talk.

"There's little that appeals me as much as the opening of a picture I've made," she explained. "On the opening night I'm always sure that I've made a thing. It's not so bad because you are right in at the next performance. But on the screen when it's done, it's done, and there's that! The worst of it is that not until you see the same audiences flocking to see it do you realize how poor much had gone into what you're nothing in parts concerning on the particular scene in question.

"My part is in no way as important as you may of seen in 'Way Down East' but I was in Boston during the time of the opening of that picture and I felt so sure that I had made a good job of it. I felt so sure that I had made a good job of it. I felt so sure that I had made a good job of it.

Harvard Crimson Jan. 5

THE CRIMSON PLAYGOER

FRENCH REVOLUTION AT THE TREMONT THEATRE

"Orphans of the Storm" Is Exceptionally Perfect Picture—Gish Sisters and Schildkraut in Leading Roles

D. W. Griffith has many photoplay masterpieces to his record, and many stars from which to choose his casts; yet it is doubtful if he will ever be able to produce a more complete, satisfactory or better acted picture than his "Orphans of the Storm", which is showing this week at the Tremont Theatre. Three full hours it takes to present it, yet not once during that time were we able, from our more or less sketchy knowledge of the French Revolution, its manners and customs, to detect the least flaw in detail or setting. From candlesticks to guillotines everything was as it should be; even the fencing was, in our humble opinion, better than the brand of sword-play furnished in "The Three Musketeers".

Nor is it all merely a cold cataloguing of historical data. Intense in excitement, rapid in movement, it carries the spectator along with it with a fervid energy truly Gallic. Combining the appeal of the love of two helpless sisters with the force of a whole people's madness, it plays in its scope upon every chord of human feeling. The horror of vermin-infested hovels, the brutality of the guillotine, the cold hatred of political intrigue, the intoxication of midnight revels, the pity of affliction, the tenderness of love—it runs the whole gamut with more than impressive reality. The presence of the Gish sisters and of Joseph Schildkraut, of "Liliom" fame, insures the perfection of the acting—with a bit more in addition.

There is something else, besides. Not satisfied with presenting so finished a story to his public, Griffith has subtly infused a moral of undeniable meaning —yet so subtly that even those who dislike sugared pills in any form cannot cavil at it. Only once does he mention Bolshevism, anarchy, yet through all the mob scenes of the Reign of Terror, with Danton pleading for humanity and mercy, and Robespierre rivering France "with innocent blood", the point is most clearly brought out that tyranny of the people is every bit as terrible as the tyranny of aristocrats, where hatred and personal vengeance are given sway. Griffith is to be complimented upon the way in which he has handled this phase of his picture—a phase which is especially to be desired at the present time.

There is only one disappointment: the ending is almost too sudden, with too much of a transition from the foot of the scaffold to a quiet, flowered garden. Of course, any play which deals with history might be continued ad infinitum, and all plays must end sometime. Yet the jump was almost too great to bridge. One would like to hear, at least through a caption, what happened to Danton, how Robespierre fell, in what way the Marquis and the two sisters passed the walls of Paris. Nor do we see the necessity of coloring, though ever so slightly, the last scenes with a general pink tint.

But, all in all, "Orphans of the Storm" is more than enough to tickle the most jaded palate. It is undoubtedly the best picture since the "Four Horsemen"; and should play to crowded houses so long as the celluloid of its film remains intact.

H. H.

American Jan. 7

LILLIAN GISH in D.W. GRIFFITH'S "ORPHANS OF THE STORM" TREMONT

Traveler Jan. 7

What the Films Have to Offer

"Orphans of the Storm"

"Orphans of the Storm" is now being shown twice each day at the Tremont Theatre and entering upon the third week of its engagement in this city. In this film Griffith has welded scenes of the French revolution into a story of human appeal.

Advertiser Jan. 7

POOR LI'L DOROTHY GISH. If abuse was age, she'd outlive Methusaleh in her latest appearance as the blind orphan in "Orphans of the Storm." Here we see her in rags—and they're not glad rags, either.

Traveler Jan. 7

SHELDON LEWIS IN "ORPHANS OF THE STORM" TREMONT

Traveler Jan. 7

Griffith's Film Depicts History

Many to whom details of history are vague may see in the new Griffith photoplay at the Tremont Theatre, "Orphans of the Storm," certain scenes picturing events of the French revolution. During that period happened the incidents of the original play upon which the picture was founded, "The Two Orphans." The scenes referred to are of so wild and frenzied a nature that the thought will project itself that exaggeration was exercised to the extreme as the dramatist's license.

The scenes are concerned with perhaps the strangest feature of the great revolution, the dance of the Carmagnole. Griffith pictures the mob in the heights of hysterical carousal, dancing through the streets in files of men and women caverting like savages in the extreme of barbaric dance frenzy, swooping through the streets without direction or apparent intent save to find space to direct their steps.

Old and young caper in frenetic abandon, and their flapping clothes flaying the wind add impression of the lunacy of their actions. Surely, reason the staid and thoughtfully rigorous of mind, there could never have been a whole people so touched with extreme dementia. But, if one reads Carlyle, that sage whose history of the French revolution is in esteem the most authoritative, Griffith has been extremely temperate in his direction of the Carmagnole dance as pictured. It was a revel such as only demon spirits could inspire. The French people in their national lunacy touched the nadir of baseness, and descended to the lowest rung of the ladder of civilization.

With an honor and artistry which is the most lustrous petal in his laurel crown, Griffith in his picture impresses on the spectator that demoniacal frenzy without leaving suggesting the base, immoral pollution. He shows them a people gone mad, and he utilizes the madness to infuse into his photoplay the necessary condiments of interesting action that intrigues the viewer with pure street.

Transcript Jan. 7

PHOTO-PLAYS NEXT WEEK

Tremont—Orphans of the Storm

FILM of the French Revolution, dev'ed and accomplished with David Griffith's pictorial imagination and skill playing at high pitch, over fruitful field with abundant resource. From the old melodrama, "The Two Orphans," he first takes narrative and personage, leading both into the French Revolution. There he adds characters in and out of history, invents episodes, reconstructs and pictures the Paris of those days according to his own vision and purpose. The outcome is a photo-spectacle in which scenes at the guillotine, in the revolutionary tribunal, up and down a turbulent and blood-ridden Paris count all the cost. A picture that evokes pressing, piercing, period. Seldom has Mr. Griffith worked in better sustained or more engrossing outcome. The third week.

Italian News Jan. 7

TREMONT THEATRE

"ORPHANS OF THE STORM"

The success of David W. Griffith in his choice of fitting players for the roles in his pictured dramas is an angle of his genius which may be rated as one of the most important of his qualifications. In his latest production, "Orphans of the Storm," which is proving the greatest of successes at the Tremont Theatre, this truth is borne out with most telling effect. The character referred to is that of Robespierre.

Of course, Robespierre has been one of the most spectacular figures of the French Revolution, and in the story of "The Two Orphans," upon which play Mr. Griffith founded his drama, this character would have been expected to figure. In selecting Sidney Herbert for the role of the great statesman, Robespierre, he chose such an able actor, one who is able to so subtly project his acting personality on the screen, that his command of every scene in which he figures is an example of acting art at once vigorous in powerful artistry. He thus makes of the part one of the outstanding figures of the long Griffith cast, one that lingers indelibly in memory.

It is doubtful if any of the foremost actors now on the stage can boast of being associated with a greater number of illustrious productions than can Mr. Herbert. He comes to this city tomorrow, appearing in the production of "The Wandering Jew."

Advertiser Dec 25

PAST LIVES IN GRIFFITH FILM

As Griffith always drives home some moral thought in his work, many are already asking what he finds in "Orphans of the Storm." He has taken Dennery's old play and retained the love tale and trials and tribulations of the French waifs, played by Lillian and Dorothy Gish, only to inject the thrills and interest of the French Revolution.

In the original play this phase of history was only referred to in dialogue. Griffith goes right into it with all his might. He brings forth the tyrant Robespierre, and that pitiful historic character, George Jacques Danton, idol of the French populace of his day, considered by many historians the greatest of natural orators.

This man who schemed the dread tribunal and the terrifying guillotine, only to fall a victim of both himself, is shown by Griffith in a manner that will more than likely provoke much discussion in the months to come. He allows for Danton's weakness for women and the pleasures of life, but withal allows his portrayal as that of a man of seriousness and kindliness. Robespierre is shown as the polite and possibly effeminate fanatic that he was, according to the most careful historians.

These two characterizations are put forward by two very capable actors, the one a part-blooded Cherokee Indian who has made a name for himself in the films, Mr. Monte Blue. The studious delineation of Robespierre is left to an actor well known to American theatregoers and who for twelve years was sufficiently capable to remain a member of the late Augustin Daly's company, Mr. Sidney Herbert.

Dennery's moral is one of treachery. He shows that human progress only comes through evolution and not revolution. He attacks in his humanitarian manner all self-styled small minded, the who would thrust their power and will upon the majority. Realizing that the majority of small but aggressive minded people has created hatred in this land and also threatens danger in this the hour of peril, he hopes of there being organized some good through this production.

"Orphans of the Storm" has its world premiere tomorrow night at the Tremont Theatre.

Traveler Jan. 7

OLD BLACK JOE IS FRENCH

Griffith Discovers Famous Song Tune Was Popular at Court of Louis XIV.

[illegible]

Globe Jan. 7

MOVIE FACTS AND FANCIES

[illegible]

Traveler Jan. 7

[illegible]

Advertiser Jan. 6

ORPHANS OF THE STORM

[illegible]

Traveler Jan. 7

[illegible]

Telegram Jan. 7

[illegible]

Telegram Jan. 7

[illegible]

Herald Jan. 7

[illegible]

Transcript - Dec. 30

NEW MARK AND HIGH MARK

MR. GRIFFITH FILMS THE FRENCH REVOLUTION

A Seething and Multifold Paris Set Upon Melodramatic Framework from "The Two Orphans"—Figures of History as Figures of the Screen—Pictorial Imagination Summons Place, Time, Event—The Players Variously

UPON a single paragraph from Carlyle, Dickens turned an entire novel; upon well-remembered bits from the historian, from Taine, and from "A Tale of Two Cities" itself, David Wark Griffith has built stirring narrative about an ancient melodrama, "The Two Orphans," for various reasons retitled "Orphans of the Storm," and on view for the first time on any screen at the Tremont Theatre last evening. Year in, year out, Mr. Griffith, still the master of all Americans, turns from sentiment to melodrama; last spring it was "Wistful Windows" and "Dream Street," last night it was the "Ca Ira" and Madame Guillotine. Time and again, he rises to great heights in the purely pictorial, time and again he sets upon the screen the rising of all Paris, drunk with sudden power, the mad measures of the Carmagnole, the diabolical comedy of the "people's justice," the knitting women at the execution block. Madame Defarge might well be hidden in his crowds, Danton, Robespierre, are his pawns. A Griffith at his best here, skilful in his avoidance of earlier crudities, master of his masses, turning his audience this way and that with that trick of fierce partisanship that is Griffith the world over. Now and again, his sets seem flimsy, more often they are unusually good. The serried skyline of Paris against lowering skies with a ruddy flare in the foreground, a battle won and lost as seen through a window, the red riot of revolution rouse him like a trumpet call.

A Paris of a feasting few and starving multitudes this, of a sullen undercurrent that will one day burst forth in the thunders of cannonade, a city of aristocrats and beggars. This, one would say, is magic, Griffith magic, that sees a Paris not as the gay city of splendid adventure that lured d'Artagnan from far Gascony, but a cauldron seething with revolt, a sombre setting for dire events. Louis and his court, well done as they are, yet may not match the excellence of Mr. Lubitsch's well-remembered "Passion," but they are the merest incidents of Mr. Griffith's filming. The foibles and fripperies of a French court appeal to him but little; if he show a fete it is one where swift color comes and goes, fireworks blaze against the quiet skies, fountains run wine, and the whole degenerates into a mere debauch. Mr. Lubitsch looks upon French aristocracy with kindly eyes, Mr. Griffith would damn it utterly. Danton is his man, to Danton all else must bow down. So much for France and the Revolution, and less for the original "Two Orphans."

Yet they are capably done, well done. Certainly no one could wish for a more charming Henriette than Miss Lillian Gish, a more appealing Louise than Miss Dorothy Gish. As to which is the better, no man can tell; on the one hand Miss Lillian may lend much polish and finesse to her part, on the other Miss Dorothy may emerge from a long list of comedy characterizations from the far-off days of "Old Heidelberg," to make her little blind girl the saddest screen figure of many a day. Comedy and heydenish comedy to boot spanned her capabilities, droned the wiseacres, yet from the first moment of her blindness to the very last flicker of film, she is as one would have her, never a mawkishly disagreeable figure akin to "Little Nell," never a sticky relation of "Pollyanna" and her brethern, but a blind girl, alone and adrift in Paris. Small wonder that breaths catch and throats choke in the audience as she steps towards the Seine, small wonder that her near-meeting with her sister carries a thrill akin to the best moments of "Way Down East." And so, excellent Miss Dorothy, excellent Miss Lillian.

Upon Miss Lilian must fall the burden of strenuous mining, she it is who must run and be wooed, search Paris for her sister, and at last fall beneath the shadow of Madame Guillotine. In the place of tears gone by she has had many a fine moment, yet never a better one than that in which she implores the leering satyr of a judge to lower his tone so that her sister may not hear the sentence of death. Again and again, she rises to emotional heights, her excellences are many, her faults none. Brave the Mimes (ish, and also brave Mr. Schildkraut.

Melodramatic or no, he essays about the character as Vautrey, magic assurance of reality, his smallest scenes are well done and shaded, he makes much of opportunity that many a lesser star might neglect, portraying dramatically, he is a figure, humanized part of the picture. And as it is with him, so is it with the almost footless Schildkraut, a Danton, powerful, resolute, and even grand with, and yet not, the grim force that perhaps Danton was, or more a Danton than Danton, yet a Danton, yes and so. The Mimes (ish, Frederick Harvey, of more a Danton, to fade and though Mr. Wilkes and he and yet so almost alone and apart, of many and quite equal love disparities, Mr. Wilkes is Danton, Mr. Harvey Danton's patriot, speaks a Danton's good deal, of the more subtle and the impressive, a Danton's Danton, Danton's Danton, Danton's Danton,

SCENES FROM D. W. GRIFFITH'S "THE TWO ORPHANS" WHICH OPENS TOMORROW NIGHT IN THE TREMONT THEATRE.

Henrietta About to Suffer Death at the Guillotine Having Been Condemned by the Revolutionary Tribunal.

Battle Scene Between the Loyalists and the Revolutionists, in Which the Loyalists Win as the Rabble Overpowers the King's Guard.

The Stage Coach That Brings the Two Orphans to Paris from Their Home.

Dorothy Gish as Louise, the Blind Singer, in a Corner Old Paris Street. In the Background Stands Lucille LaverneIn as Frochard, the Hag Who Has Abducted Louise and Forced Her to Beg Lillian and Dorothy Gish in a Trucking Scene in Which Lillian as Henriette, Promises to Take Louise, Who Is Blindness, Disguised as Dorothy, to Paris in the Hope of Having Her Sight Restored.

Joseph Schildkraut as the Chevalier De Vaudrey.

Herald Dec 25

Lillian Gish and Dad

Pictorial Review Jan 7

OLD STAGE COACH REPRODUCED FOR GRIFFITH FILM

Advertiser Jan 7

Griffith Invited For a Nile Trip

Post Jan 8

Post Jan 8

TREMONT THEATRE

Globe Jan 8

Transcript Dec. 27

CURRENT PHOTO-PLAYS

To make better the music with the picture, the first showing of David Griffith's new film, "Orphans of the Storm"—the French Revolution hung upon the old melodrama, "The Two Orphans"—has been deferred at the Tremont until Wednesday evening. Therefore the photo-spectacle will be on view daily at 2 and 8 P. M.

Globe Dec. 27

"ORPHANS OF THE STORM"

So that the color effects and musical accompaniments for D. W. Griffith's new photoplay may be perfectly arranged, the opening exhibition of "Orphans of the Storm" at the Tremont Theatre, has been postponed until tomorrow evening at 8 o'clock. Tickets purchased will be exchanged for Wednesday evening or money will be refunded at the box office of the theatre.

Globe Dec. 28

"Orphans of the Storm"

So that the color effects and musical accompaniments for D. W. Griffith's new photoplay may be perfectly arranged, the opening exhibition of "Orphans of the Storm" at the Tremont Theatre, has been postponed until tomorrow evening at 8 o'clock. Tickets purchased will be exchanged for Wednesday evening or money will be refunded at the box office of the theatre.

Advertiser Dec. 28

GRIFFITH POSTPONES NEW FILM OPENING

In order to perfect orchestral effects, D. W. Griffith has postponed the opening of his new photoplay, "Orphans of the Storm," at the Tremont Theatre, to Wednesday night.

American Dec. 28

"ORPHANS OF THE STORM" TO OPEN WEDNESDAY

There was no performance of "Orphans of the Storm" at the Tremont Theatre last night. Instead, D. W. Griffith worked all day and nearly all night synchronizing his musical score with the action of the film. The opening of the new picture has been postponed until Wednesday night, despite the fact that the house was all sold out for last night and tonight.

Transcript Dec. 31

PHOTO-PLAYS NEXT WEEK

Tremont—Orphans of the Storm

FILM of the French Revolution, devised and accomplished with David Griffith's pictorial imagination and skill playing at high pitch over fruitful field and with abundant resource. From the old melodrama, "The Two Orphans," he has taken dramatic narrative and screened personages, leading both into the French Revolution. There he has added characters in and out of history, invented episodes, reconstructed and pictured the Paris of those days according to his own will and purpose. The outcome is a photo-spectacle in which scenes at the guillotine, in the revolutionary tribunal, in and down a turbulent and blood-ridden Paris stand all the test. A picture that startles passengers, engrossed, period, fiction has Mr. Griffith worked to employ or more strongly outcome. The sound work.

Traveler Dec. 31

Boston's Great Speech

David W. Griffith's picture "Orphans of the Storm" brings to its two passengers prominent in the period of the French revolution. There are the [illegible]

Herald Dec. 31

GRIFFITH'S BEST SCREEN DRAMA AT THE TREMONT

Traveler Dec. 28

Right off the Reel

By JEANNE RAY

Lillian Gish

DOROTHY AND LILLIAN GISH

At a luncheon yesterday noon at the Women's City Club Lillian and Dorothy Gish were the guests of honor. Miss Elizabeth Joyce, one of Boston's successful business women, was the hostess and many professional women of the city were her guests.

Have you ever attended a professional luncheon? If so you know that terrible moment after you all are seated when no one has a ghost of an idea what to say to help make the party a success. There we sat and nothing to say when some one told Dorothy that I answered movie questions.

"Will you tell me what folks ask about us?" she said. "Surely not our dark pasts."

"Goodness no," said I, "just the color of your hair and eyes, whether you are married or no, your age and so forth."

"That is interesting for, as you see, Lillian and I are the same complexion and many, many folks think that I am darker than she. That comes from having worn wigs as much as I have. You remember the black bobbed one? Then there was the one which I wore in "Hearts of the World." That saw hard usage for no less than three years."

At this point Lillian catching the words "Hearts of the World" leaned forward and told some of the experiences which they went through during the making of that film.

"Mother is still suffering from the effects of the film. In fact the doctors say that her present invalid condition is due to that time. You see there were no less than four air raids around the hotel where we were stopping and the concussion was frightful. Mother is not strong anyway nor as young as we, so she has never really recovered."

"Yes," interrupted Dorothy, "that was not the half of it either. When we went about the hall to go across the orders were that no one man, woman or child was to leave a match after dark. One night a fire descended on us and the fire bells started. 'Where-where?' all night long it murmured and in the dim the light of a fog horn saying 'Where-where' here to the [illegible] and get us [illegible] home and get us."

"Things and nearly anything were going the rounds in back engagements and one of the most important [illegible] was [illegible] about the [illegible] which [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

Post Dec. 2

"REIGN OF TERROR" SCENES TO BE SHOWN IN BOSTON

These thrilling and exclusively Sunday Post photos—from Griffith's latest film, "The Two Orphans"—show with remarkable pictorial accuracy just what took place during the terrible French revolution.

Down With Tyranny!

Danton, the "firebrand of victory" and "poor people's friend" in the French revolution, as portrayed by Monte Blue in "The Two Orphans" stirring the populace of Paris to rebel.

Frenzied Women

Never in all history have human passions been aroused as they were during the terrible days of the "reign of terror" in Paris, and the uprising brought even the womenfolk out to join in the march of "death or victory," as shown by this vivid scene.

"The Two Orphans" Themselves

Lillian and Dorothy Gish, "the most popular sisters of the screen," who play the title roles of Henriette and Louise in Griffith's latest film triumph.

When Blood Flowed in Paris

Terrible battles, hand-to-hand struggles between the common people and the soldiers of the crown, raged in barricaded streets during the French revolution, and here is one of them vividly reproduced.

Boston will witness the world's premiere opening of D. W. Griffith's latest masterpiece of film production, "The Two Orphans," on Christmas night. These wonderful pictures, the first glimpses of the spectacular scenes of the play, were secured exclusively for Sunday Post readers.

How These Photos Were Made

Turn back the clock a hundred years.

Take the wings of the lightning and speed over to France and you would behold—

Just exactly what you now see on this page.

Here is a set of remarkable photos reconstructing, as far as it is humanly possible, the stirring episodes of the tragic French revolution, when the guillotine took its bloody toll of thousands of lives.

That the settings, costumes and characters might be absolutely correct historically, the producers consulted M. Louis Allard, professor of French at Harvard University; the Marquis de Polignac of Paris and the authoritative works of Taine, Guizot, Abbott and, in particular, Thomas Carlyle's history of the French revolution.

But Griffith did not stop there. He had architects go to France, study at close range the streets in Paris, which were the battlegrounds of the "reign of terror," and then reproduce them, stone for stone.

Herald - Dec. 18

GRIFFITH'S NEWEST SCREEN PRODUCTION

"The Two Orphans," an Eaboration of Famous Old Stage Play

LILLIAN AND DOROTHY GISH AS THE SISTERS IN "THE TWO ORPHANS"

David Wark Griffith has chosen Boston for the premiere of his latest work, a screen development of Dennery's famous old stage play, "The Two Orphans." It will be shown here for the first time anywhere at the Tremont Theatre on Monday evening, Dec. 26. Mr. Griffith will be here himself in charge of all the details and will be accompanied by a number of his leading players, including the Misses Lillian and Dorothy Gish, who essay the title roles.

In this old play the stirring events of the great French revolution are but referred to in dialogue. Here was Griffith's opportunity. He has seized upon this and injects these historic scenes with the famous characters of that period. Robespierre, the tyrant, is brought into the action, as is that pitiful leader of the Paris mobs, George Jacques Danton. Others, including the King, Louis XVI, are made a part of the story. Even Napoleon is briefly shown as a youthful artillery officer viewing the scenes of chaos.

Among the players to be seen in the principal roles and in addition to the famous Gish sisters are Monte Blue, Sidney Herbert, Catherine Emmett, Frank Losee, Morgan Wallace, Lucille La Verne, Sheldon Lewis, Frank Puglia, Creighton Hale, Leslie King, Kate Bruce, Leo Kolmer and Adolphe Lestina.

Post - Dec. 18

Some plays become classics, not by reason of any peculiar merit, but from the fact that they happen to catch the popular fancy and run on from year to year until they are firmly established. I do not quite recall how many decades ago "The Two Orphans" was first given in this country but it was quite a few. It was played to enormous business in Paris and London and then it was brought to New York, where it was given by the famous Union Square stock company. If I am not mistaken, all the principals in the original American production are now dead. When "The Two Orphans" came to Boston it was given by the stock company at the Boston Theatre and in this case also, I think all the leading participants have passed on. It is a great many years since the old play has been presented here in speaking form and on the screen it will come like a voice from the past of those who personally recall it.

I understand that Lillian Gish and her sister Dorothy will enact the two sisters and not only that, but on the opening night at the Tremont they will be present in person and make an address to the audience, on what subject I am not quite sure, but I have an idea it is on censorship and what it should and should not be. In view of recent occurrences, this should prove to be fully as interesting as the picture itself. D. W. Griffith will also be in evidence and will make a few pertinent remarks. It promises to be a big night at the Tremont.

Advertiser Dec. 18

Boston First to See Griffith's New Film

[illegible]

Globe Dec. 18

"The Two Orphans"

[illegible]

Advertiser Dec. 18

FRAGILE FLOWER OF MOVIELAND

Wistful, etherially lovely, Lillian Gish sheds her blossomy beauty upon the scenes of "The Two Orphans," Griffith's latest picture. The film is described as an astounding visualization of the French Revolution and the events leading up to it. Not only does Lillian Gish appear as one of the pathetic orphans, but her sister Dorothy portrays the other.

As an additional dramatic coup, Griffith engaged Joseph Schildkraut for a prominent part in the production. Schildkraut is one of the season's sensations of Broadway, being starred in "Liliom," the great stage success.

The cinema wizard is said to have outdone himself in the scenic phase of the picture. Paris, as it was in the bloody days of 1789, is magically recalled into existence. The illusion of the world's most romantic city is complete, say those who visited the "sets."

One sees Salpetriere, the Bastille, quaint, overhanging buildings, narrow passages, the thieves' quarter, the sinister scaffold with its gleaming guillotine, cobblestoned pavements, carts, markets, Jacobins, Girondins, a skyline of towers and pinnacles. One rubs one's eyes, at this incredible revivification of the revolutionary era.

An eye-witness describes as follows some of the "camera work": "The 'People' are rehearsing for hours, and so are the 'Loyalists.' There is little confusion, no unnecessary noise. Of fourteen hundred people in a great fighting scene, each one knows his unit part, and the positions to be occupied. Sub-directors are working among the groups. The make-up men are effecting last-minute changes in looks and attire. On a high pedestal stands Griffith, giving his soft-voiced instructions to the associate directors, or megaphoning himself, if the emergency demands."

Herald - Dec. 18

At the Playhouses

Owing to the traditional "bad" week before Christmas, when the theatre expects a "cold shoulder" from a shopping-mad world, there will be no first nights at the down-town theatres. The Arlington, Copley and St. James will have a change of bill, the announcements of which will be found below.

The day after Christmas, however, six new attractions will burst upon the city. "Happy Go Lucky," a play by Ian Hay (Maj. Beith), who wrote "The First Hundred Thousand," will come to the Selwyn. It is a dramatization of one of his most popular books. O. P. Heggie heads the company. William Hodge comes to the Plymouth Theatre in a new play, "Beware of Dogs." The much-heralded Delysia will come to the Wilbur in the spectacle, "Afgar." The Shubert's indoor circus opens at the Boston Opera House, with the Hannaford family, including "Pudlar" Hannaford, as the big attraction. "Trans" will begin a return engagement at the Shubert. D. W. Griffith's newest film drama, "The Two Orphans," an elaboration of the old stage play, with the two Gish sisters in the title roles, will begin an engagement at the Tremont Theatre.

Advertiser Dec. 18

Globe Dec. 18

"The Two Orphans"

[illegible]

Post Dec. 18

GRIFFITH CHANGES LATEST FILM TITLE

[illegible]

Globe Dec. 18

MAKING A FILM OF "THE TWO ORPHANS"

Griffith Has Laid the Scenes in Paris at the Time of the French Revolution

Construction of David Wark Griffith's new motion picture, "The Two Orphans," has occupied a year in preparation, filming and finishing. Mr Griffith's great studio estate at Mamaroneck, N Y, was the scene of the operations.

Old Paris, Bel Air, revolutionary tribunal, and Versailles salon—they are all there. They illustrate the ancient regime and French Revolutionary events with which Griffith has developed and enlarged the well-known stage story of "The Two Orphans." For the rule of Bourbons, it was necessary to show the court and nobility, and for the cataclysm itself, one of the public places where the struggles were fought and where the guillotine performed its work.

"Old Paris" Reproduced

These could not be advantageously done in France, because the architecture has changed and the old look of things has vanished. The Griffith staff, therefore, designed directly from old prints and engravings, and was assisted throughout by scholars like Prof Allard of Harvard, who are thoroughly familiar with the historical aspects. Then William Workman, Mr Griffith's construction chief, built a real wonder in "Old Paris."

The main part of this is a full-size reproduction of the ancient Place de Greve. Bigger than anything hitherto done in the East, it is comparable only to the Los Angeles movie Babylon that was built for Griffith's "Intolerance." For there are literally hundreds of buildings, showing not only the square, but the streets leading out of it; cement and mortar cunningly supplementing lath and canvas; "practical" houses in the quaint overhanging pre-Revolutionary mode by the score; the frowning prison of Salpetriere; the great fountain in the center; the terrible scaffold at the far end, and (looking the other way) the grand perspective of the towers and pinnacles of Paris. 'Twas a triumph not only to the camera eye, but to the wider range of human optics. Could one have been set down in the center of it last August, he would have found it solid as a rock, without flaw or gap, a marvelously perfect illusion of revolutionary Paris!

Into this scene were introduced the bustle and action of a main city artery in those times. This was succeeded by the life-and-death struggle twixt Royalists and people, in which thousands of players took part. Cannon, horses, pikemen, murder-crazed revolutionary women; King's guards with muskets; barricades and sorties, added to the verisimilitude.

From a high elevation Griffith (instead of Danton) directed. He had his lieutenants in each of the sections, and each unit of the thousands of persons was coached in his or her exact role. After the costumes, makeups and positions were perfected, the director and his men imbued the crowds with the spirit of the scene. Most of the fighters were Latins from the French and Italian metropolitan colonies, natural actors filled with ardor, passion and exuberance—qualities that the street scenes called into full play.

Luxury of Louis XVI

The extraordinary care and attention to settings, and the equality extraordinary rehearsals (often for several days) of great masses of people, are what give lifelikeness to the Griffith ensembles. Qualities of delicacy, grace and beauty mark the Bel-Air fete and the Salon de la Paix, Versailles. The artistry of the Louis Seize age is not the easiest thing to reproduce. Luxury has never devoted itself so wholly to the worship of beauty either before or since. Life itself became a vast ceremony about elegant trifles. Most producers would have merely suggested the o'er-ornately Ancient Regime episodes.

Not so Griffith. He had Bel-Air built as an outdoor series of sunken gardens, and the Versailles salon reproduced to the minutest detail. The millions of livres spent in decorating the Salon de la Paix during the Regency helped bankrupt the French court and indirectly brought on the Revolution. Mr Griffith performed the same job last November, and his name is still good on a check. But it cost him very heavily.

The salon is all the full size and height of the original hall, with all the accessories, mouldings, frescoing and decoration, even to the same paintings of Charles Le Brun in a vast oval, and painting above the royal throne. When Louis XVI sat in it, surrounded by his court, great crowds of waiting lords and carrying noble, the scene of splendor is of a colorful beauty that no language could ever adequately describe. It is impossible to overemphasize artistic value of this film play a century of [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

Advertiser - Dec. 22

WHEN PARISIANS "SAW RED"

This is one of the scenes from D. W. Griffith's new picture, "Orphans of the Storm," showing the days when Paris was in the throes of the great revolution. Lillian Gish appears as Henriette, one of the two sisters who figured in "The Two Orphans," the play on which the picture is based. Monte Blue (center) is cast as Danton the fire-eater, and Sidney Herbert as the redoubtable Robespierre.

American - Dec. 24

SCENE FROM D.W. GRIFFITH'S - "ORPHANS OF THE STORM" TREMONT.

Telegram Dec. 24

LILLIAN and DOROTHY GISH in the "ORPHANS OF THE STORM" - TREMONT THEATRE -

American Dec. 22

IT HASN'T been my custom to speak of coming attractions, but there is something of interest regarding several films to be seen here next week. Of course, little new can be said of the Griffith production scheduled for the Tremont Theatre on Monday. It is a Griffith picture. Let that suffice. Moreover, the cast includes such players as the Gishes, Joseph Schildkraut, Monte Blue, Sheldon Lewis and so on through the constellations.

A particular note of interest in this film, however, has been hinted at. We have been told to watch out for Betty Jewell, a little brunette who has but a small "bit," but who gives an account of herself. Miss Jewell is not known to movie fans, for the very good reason that this is her first appearance under the Klieg lights.

She decided a short time ago that she would become a movie player. She hied herself out to Mamaroneck, where the casting director was on the point of telling her that there was positively no chance for a job. Griffith happened to spy her, called out "Hey, wait!" and gave her a part in his "Orphans of the Storm." All we can do is to pass on the warning, "watch for her."

American - Dec. 24

Christmas Week Brings Feast of Attractions

Theatres Take on Five New Shows and Indoor Circus for Holiday Season

By KATHARINE LYONS

After the lull comes the storm. After the peace and quiet in the theatres the past week comes the Christmas feast of new shows. Next Monday evening a wave of new theatrical offerings will sweep into Boston to liven the holiday season.

William Hodge will open an engagement at the Plymouth Theatre on Monday afternoon in "Dog Love," heretofore known to the stage as "Beware of Dogs."

A. H. Woods will send "Happy-Go-Lucky" to the Selwyn. This comedy will also open with a matinee performance on Monday.

"Irene" will return to Boston for another engagement and this time will make the Shubert her home, opening with a matinee performance on Monday also.

The much-heralded Alice Delysia will make her initial visit to Boston on Monday evening, when she will open an engagement at the Wilbur in Morris Gest's production of "Afgar."

The other important engagement of the week is D. W. Griffith's new screen masterpiece, "Orphans of the Storm," formerly known as "The Two Orphans," which will be seen for its world premiere at the Tremont Theatre Monday evening.

Last, but by no means least, comes the Indoor Circus which the Messrs. Shubert will send to the Boston Opera House for one week beginning Monday afternoon.

Traveler Dec. 24

"Orphans of the Storm"

An all-star cast of players essay the leading characterizations in D. W. Griffith's latest and probably most noteworthy super-production, "Orphans of the Storm," which will be seen for its world premiere at the Tremont Theatre, Monday night, Dec. 26, to continue indefinitely, with matinees each day.

This cast is headed by those famous sisters of the screen, Lillian and Dorothy Gish; Joseph Schildkraut, who, as the star of the Theatre Guild's production of "Liliom," has created a furore in New York for over a year; Frank Losee, Catherine Emmett, Morgan Wallace, Lucille la Verne, Sheldon Lewis, Frank Puglia, Creighton Hale, Leslie King, Monte Blue, Sidney Herbert, Kate Bruce, Leo Kolmer, Adolphe Lestina and others. Ten thousand people take part in this huge production.

Since early summer Griffith has been "shooting" the multiplicity of scenes for this newest work and among the great host of supernumeraries are many actors and actresses of note whose names will never be seen on programs. The hard times prevalent in theatricals and the high wages Mr. Griffith offered for types in his great mob scenes made it possible for him to secure the services of more than ordinary talent for his ensembles.

Mr. Griffith began work on "Orphans of the Storm" more than a year ago and was really engaged in preparing it even before he had fully completed "Way Down East," which was shown first in New York on Sept. 5, 1920. However, the intensive work of filming the great French story did not begin at Mamaroneck until May of this year.

Mr. Griffith will appear personally at the opening performance and the matinee following, and will introduce the Gish sisters to the audience.

Herald Dec. 25

SCENE FROM ORPHANS OF THE STORM" ~ TREMONT

Transcript Dec. 24

PHOTO-PLAYS NEXT WEEK

Tremont—Orphans of the Storm

Telegram Dec. 24

Griffith's Latest Art At Tremont

"Orphans of the Storm" Has Initial Showing Next Monday Night

American Dec. 24

Brings Another Great Stage Drama Here on Silver Screen

DAVID W. GRIFFITH

Post Dec. 25

Post Dec. 25

Telegram Dec. 24

Theatres to Have Many New Bills

Christmas Season Good Night Outlook for the New Year's Business

By E. B. CORBIN

SOME UNUSUAL THEATRE BILLS

By E. F. BARRETT

Advertiser Dec. 26

Newspapers, December 29th, 1921.

Transcript

NEW MARK AND HIGH MARK

MR. GRIFFITH FILMS THE FRENCH REVOLUTION

A Seething and Multifold Paris Set Upon Melodramatic Framework from "The Two Orphans"—Figures of History as Figures of the Screen—Pictorial Imagination Summons Place, Time, Event—The Players Variously

UPON a single paragraph from Carlyle, Dickens turned an entire novel; upon well-remembered bits from the historian, from Taine, and from "A Tale of Two Cities" itself, David Wark Griffith has built stirring narrative about an ancient melodrama, "The Two Orphans," for various reasons retitled "Orphans of the Storm," and on view for the first time on any screen at the Tremont Theatre last evening. Year in, year out Mr. Griffith, still the master of all Ar[illegible]ians, turns from sentiment to melodrama last spring it was "Wistful Windows" and "Dream Street," last night it was the "Ca Ira" and Madame Guillotine. Time and again, he rises to great heights in the purely pictorial, time and again he sets upon the screen the rising of all Paris, drunk with sudden power, the mad measures of the Carmagnole, the diabolical comedy of the "people's justice," the knitting women at the execution block. Madame Defarge might well be hidden in his crowds, Danton, Robespierre, are his pawns. A Griffith at his best here, skilful in his avoidance of earlier crudities, master of his masses, turning his audience this way and that with that trick of fierce partisanship that is Griffith the world over. Now and again, his sets seem flimsy, more often they are unusually good. The serried skyline of Paris against lowering skies with a ruddy flare in the foreground, a battle won and lost as seen through a window, the red riot of revolution rouse him like a trumpet call.

A Paris of a feasting few and starving multitudes this, of a sullen undercurrent that will one day burst forth in the thunders of cannonade, a city of aristocrats and beggars. This, one would say, is magic, Griffith magic, that sees a Paris not as the gay city of splendid adventure that lured d'Artagnan from far Gascony, but a cauldron seething with revolt, a sombre setting for dire events. Louis and his court, well done as they are, yet may not match the excellence of Mr. Lubitsch's well-remembered "Passion," but they are the merest incidents of Mr. Griffith's filming. The foibles and fripperies of a French court appeal to him but little; if he show a fete it is one where swift color comes and goes, fireworks blaze against the quiet skies, fountains run wine, and the whole degenerates into a mere debauch. Mr. Lubitsch looks upon French aristocracy with kindly eyes, Mr. Griffith would damn it utterly. Danton is his man, to Danton all else must bow down. So much for France and the Revolution, and less for the original "Two Orphans."

Yet they are capably done, well done. Certainly no one could wish for a more charming Henriette than Miss Lillian Gish, a more appealing Louise than Miss Dorothy Gish. As to which is the better, no man can tell; on the one hand Miss Lillian may lend much polish and finesse to her part, on the other Miss Dorothy may emerge from a long list of comedy characterizations from the far-off days of "Old Heidelberg," to make her little blind girl the saddest screen figure of many a day. Comedy and heydenish comedy to boot spanned her capabilities, dressed the wisecracks, yet from the first moment of her blindness to the very last flicker of film, she is as one would have her, never a mawkishness disagreeable figure akin to "Little Nell," never a sticky relation of "Pollyanna" and her brothers, but a blind girl, alone and adrift in Paris. Small wonder that breaths catch and throats choke in the audience as she steps towards the Seine, small wonder that her near-meeting with her sister coming a thrill akin to the best moments of "The Two Mars." And so, excellent Miss Dorothy, excellent Miss Lillian.

Upon Miss Lillian must fall the burden of strongest acting, she it is who must woo and be wooed, search Paris for her sister, and at last fall beneath the shadow of Madame Guillotine. In the grace of years goes to she has had many a fine moment, yet never a better one than that in which she implores the jeering mirror of a judge to tell her not to fear, that her mate was not one of the jeerers of death. Again and again, she rises to dominant heights, her sensitive face, her fragile form, her gestures and her voice, the mirror of the drama.

Unfortunately, it is to drama about the character of Danton, magnificently portrayed by Monte Blue, that most of the attention of the film must be given. Danton is the pivot of the Revolution, the man who sways Paris, who sends the Marseillaise ringing through the streets, who sends the tumbrils rolling to the Place de la Revolution, who sends the Terrorists to their doom. Mr. Griffith has made of him a figure of Rodin, a figure of power, of passion, of pity, of tenderness, of cruelty, of all that goes to make up a man. Mr. Blue has given us a Danton who is a man, who is a boy, who is a child, who is a lover, who is a fighter, who is a man who dies. Mr. Griffith has given him a setting that is a setting for a king, a king of men, a king of kings, a king who is a king because he is a man.

Continued on Following Page

NEW MARK AND HIGH MARK

Continued From Preceding Page

behind whose placid mask, plots and counter-plots wove their swiftly brutal way. Robespierre, yes! Danton, yes and no. To Monte Blue, tiresome figure of many a film, he falls, and though Mr. Blue out-do and over-do himself time and again, he may not quite attain true plausibility. Now he is Danton, fiery, hot-headed patriot, again he is Monte Blue, struggling fiercely to master a period part. Of him much might be written, his successes, his failures. Nominally, he should be the strongest figure of Mr. Griffith's fine filming, actually he is less interesting than the remainder of the cast. Underplayed he is Monte Blue, overplayed he is melodramatic. From one extreme to the other, the shuttle weaves, and as it moves, so moves Danton, weakly unconvincing, tremendously impressive, a figure of Drury Lane melodrama. The Frochards, mother and sons, are unforgettable, and even Creighton Hale may lend well-placed comedy to Picard, the valet. The rest convince as do few historical characters, and the merest vendor of brooms gains for the most part vivid individuality.

But for the basis of the film, Mr. Griffith must lead forth his two essentials, suspense and excitement. Both are better done than is his wont. Moments stand out sharply in memory, the swift horror of Louise at learning of h r blindness, the fêtes and fireworks of the Comte de Liniéres, the scurrying rats in the cellar of Frochard, the hag; the cruelly averted meeting of the Two Orphans as the police batter in the door, the charge and counter-charge of troops and sans-culottes, the tense moments at the guillotine, and the last mad ride of Danton and his troopers. Bit by bit, piece by piece, dissected and set forth coldly, dispassionately, Mr. Griffith's every filming might carry nought but flagrant melodrama, but here there is no time for halt. Swiftly the film runs its course, from first to last, there is hardly a moment that had better been omitted.

But it is the Revolution that really moves Griffith, the sweep of crowds across an open square, softened by the contours of a window, the crashing rattle of musketry, the crash of cannonade, charge and shock, foray and retreat. Gutter rats, these maddened by hunger, armed by plot, leaping to swift battle so that the very gutters of Paris may run with blood. His Carmagnole, too, has not been outdone these days with its wild measures, and half naked dancers, toppling here and there to fall exhausted on the flags, as their brothers in arms trample them down and go whirling on to the maddening message of the "Ca Ira." Cannon belch and roar at the grim turrets of the Bastille, butchers, tanners, leering and bloodstained ruffians from the depths of Paris, scale its walls through the wreathing smoke; the director himself, one feels is brandishing the Tricolor and chanting the Marseillaise, driving a nation on to revolt. Then, almost with a perceptible stop, the pendulum swings back once more. The long oppressed people become the oppressors, a grim council sits in judgment of those in disfavor with the chiefs. And such a council! Ruffians, thugs, women of the gutters, gross, vulgar, repellant, with never a kindly face in all that jeering crowd. So much does Mr. Griffith see and more. His climax, his most compelling moment if yet to come, with the strapping down of the fragile Henriette to the blood dripping slabs of the guillotine, the sightless stare of Louise (a moment of which Miss Dorothy Gish may well be proud) the speech of Danton that sets the sans-culottes aflame, and at last, the crashing ride to the rescue.

Melodrama, sham, tickery? Surely, viewed in the cold light of a day after, but piling thrill upon thrill at the evening before. A dashing captain for Danton's aide, a veritable d'Artagnan in himself, cattle of drawn sabres and thunder of mounting hoofs, and the troopers are away. Through the streets they sweep, empty streets, lanes and alleys packed with cursing, muttering humanity, a lightning flash of men, horses and dust, a whirlwind of mounting shapes and naked steel against the sky as they have breasted a rise and gained the gate. Now a flash of galloping hoofs, and the hard swearing, hard riding captain, now the heavenly steel flashes, now a score about three men of a square, now clashes of sabres against pike and musket, now of sabres crashing into helmet and flesh, now of sabres and a dead flash and broken men of Danton's bodyguard.

Here before us is Danton, humanized as thoroughly as with those two masterpieces of "The Two Orphans."

[illegible]

NEW GRIFFITH FILM HISTORY VISUALIZED

American

"Orphans of the Storm" at Tremont Is Wonderful Story of French Revolution

By FRED J. McISAAC,
Dramatic Editor.

David W. Griffith, who is doing for the new art of motion pictures what William Shakespeare did for the English drama, revealed his latest, and what he believes to be his greatest work, last night at the Tremont Theatre. He calls it "Orphans of the Storm," but its central theme is based upon the old French melodrama, "The Two Orphans."

After witnessing the opening performance, I am inclined to agree with Griffith that it surpasses everything he has ever done, and furthermore, it is far and away the finest screen drama ever seen in this country. After seeing it two or three times, and it's a picture that you will not be content to witness once, we may find flaws and weaknesses, but last night I was simply overpowered by the terrific forces this man turned loose in the theatre. It leaves you breathless and astounded.

GRIPPED THE HEART.

"The Two Orphans" was a lurid melodram, inconsistant, incoherent and about as far from being a work of art as was "Way Down East" before it became a film.

It did contain a narrative which gripped the heart, the two pathetic orphan girls, one of them blind, fallen among thieves and vagabonds in the Paris of the eighteenth century.

Griffith took this story and used it as the great composers Beethoven and Brahms used beautiful melodies—as the themes upon which they constructed massive orchestral works called symphonies.

"Orphans of the Storm" is a film symphony, and it is the French Revolution. In the original melodrama the French Revolution figured but very remotely. Griffith has tossed his two orphans in the storm of the Reign of Terror as little boats are tossed in a storm at sea.

Recently we have been shown German motion pictures, films which were praised for their fine acting and very remarkable photography. Also for the fidelity with which historic epochs were treated in them. Griffith has accepted the challenge of the Germans.

OLD CITY RECONSTRUCTED.

He has reconstructed France of 1790 with a faithfulness and accuracy of detail which is absolutely marvellous.

The Paris of Louis Sixteenth and of Danton and Robespierre is mirrored so perfectly that no ordinary student of history could find the slightest flaw in it. The expense of building in this country, this ancient city, copying its habits, customs, dress and atmosphere must have been appalling. This picture may well have cost the million the ordinary picture producer speaks of so glibly.

But these things are comparitively unimportant. The main thing is that here is a film which is intensely dramatic, sometimes horribly intense in its adherence to actual history, a most valuable contribution to the literature of the French Revolution (let us not overlook the fact that films will share with books the privilege of recording history from now on) and at the same time a remarkably human and engrossing love story.

A NOTABLE CAST.

The two orphans were played by Lillian Gish, and Dorothy Gish. Joseph Schildkraut played the young aristocrat who loves one of the orphans. Frank Losee, Monte Blue and Sidney Herbert are among the fine actors who make this a memorable picture.

Of course, Griffith does not adhere to the effete days of Louis Sixteenth through the early phases of the revolution and lands us plump in the Terror. We meet Danton and Robespierre in their power and fury. Danton's nobility and patriotism are emphasized while Robespierre is more fiendish if possible than he actually was.

In the course of the Terror, Lillian Gish and her lover, Joseph Schildkraut, are condemned to the guillotine. It is these two we see riding in the death cart through the drunken streets of Paris with their hordes of frenzied sans-culottes. And it is Danton who wins their pardon by an impassioned oration before the revolutionary tribunal.

HEART RENDING RIDE.

The favorite device of Griffith since "The Birth of a Nation," the ride to the rescue, is used with enormous effect here. Just Lillian is placed upon the scaffold, and her head laid upon the frame of the guillotine before Danton, at the head of his cavalry, arrives to save her.

This ride is most marvelously effective, though we long doubt if he (Danton) will reach Paris in time.

But another scene is almost as impressive. It is a most dramatic and marvelous portrayal of that great event in the progress of the French Revolution, the taking of the Bastille.

Just in the climax of the film we realize, about that at time he is not quite the marvelous artist he was in the earlier episodes of the film. Perhaps he was tired, perhaps he was hurried, perhaps he was ill, perhaps he was drunk with success and success is spoiling him. Whatever it is, we feel that he is not the Griffith we have known in the past.

FOUR SCENES AS BEST.

The acting of Lillian Gish, Dorothy Gish, Joseph Schildkraut, Monte Blue, Frank Losee, Sidney Herbert and Creighton Hale is as good as any picture has shown us in the past. Lillian Gish and Dorothy Gish are wonderful in their roles. Schildkraut is a young actor who will be heard from in the future. Monte Blue is a Danton who will be remembered for years to come. Frank Losee is a Robespierre who will be remembered for years to come. Sidney Herbert is a Marquis de Frochard who will be remembered for years to come. Creighton Hale is a Picard who will be remembered for years to come.

[illegible]

Post

"ORPHANS OF THE STORM" ALLURES

Griffith's Latest Picture Shown for First Time Gratifies Tremont Audience

BY EDWARD H. CROSBY

David W. Griffith's latest picture, "Orphans of the Storm," was given its first public presentation last evening at the Tremont Theater, before an audience which completely filled the house. The performance had been delayed for two days in order that the musical setting, which is quite elaborate, might be in good running order and also to perfect certain details necessary to finish and smoothness. The film was shown last evening without a flaw and apparently was highly enjoyed.

During the intermission Mr. Griffith made a brief speech outlining his ideas of the theme of the picture and at the close both Lillian and Dorothy Gish, who play the leading roles, came before the curtain.

THE REIGN OF TERROR

"Orphans in the Storm" has for its thread, the plot of "The Two Orphans," but while the beginning of the famous melodrama is followed with some fidelity, the second act is entirely original and deals with the reign of terror during the French revolution. In the first part the machinations of the aristocratic "monde" are heard and also is shown the arrival in Paris of Henriette and Louise, the meeting with the Marquis de Frochard and his intercession for Henriette and her persecuted sister. There is also the rescue of Henriette by the Chevalier de Vaudrey and the love episode between the two.

As in the play, Louise falls into the hands of La Frochard and here the original plot is followed, but after that the story moves and the hand of destiny [illegible]

Enthusiasm Acclaimed

[illegible]

Lillian Gish as Henriette

[illegible]

Transcript Dec. 10

In Prospect

At the Tremont, from Dec. 26, for first showings upon any screen, "The Two Orphans," David Griffith's filmed version of the celebrated play of the eighties, in its day acted upon many stages. Episodes, characters and backgrounds from the French Revolution now enlarge and supplement it. Rudolf Schildkraut, the German romantic actor, and the Sisters Gish are pictured in it.

Advertiser Dec. 11.

GRIFFITH FILM SOON DUE HERE

The announcement that D. W. Griffith's new film, "The Two Orphans," will soon have its world premiere in Boston, calls to mind an interesting phase of theatrical history in America and France. The original play was produced in Paris in 1875 and was by two well known dramatists of the period. D'Ennery, one of these, had become famous through a long list of successes, including even the French adaptation of the Harriet Beecher Stowe classic, which was queerly renamed "La Case d'Oncle Tom." His drama, however, of the sister love of the orphans, Henriette and Louise, laid in the Louis XVI. era, achieved the greatest success of all his works.

Strangely enough, the Yankee producers shied at "The Two Orphans" at first. Although A. M. Palmer had brought for $1,800 the Yankee rights, he repented of his bargain. His efforts to sell the script to Junius Brutus and to Lester Wallack failed, however, and he did the piece himself at the Union Square Theatre in New York December 21, 1875.

What was the result? The new D'Ennery work ran for a hundred and eighty nights—the equivalent of a two-year run at the present time—and brought fame to the players of all the big roles. Since then many famed stars have been seen in the play, always with success.

"The Two Orphans" had been filmed twice prior to 1921. Their methods used, however, were those of an earlier era of picture production. D. W. Griffith decided to picturize the drama according to his own big conception of the time and the story.

Advertiser Dec. 11

Coming Events

D. W. Griffith's new picture, "The Two Orphans," which will be seen for the first time anywhere at the Tremont Theatre on Monday night, December 26, has a cast full of notables such as Lillian and Dorothy Gish, Joseph Schildkraut, Frank Losee, Catherine Emmett, Morgan Wallace, Lucille La Verne, Sheldon Lewis, Frank Puglia, Creighton Hale, Leslie King, Monte Blue, Sydney Herbert, Leo Kolmar, Adolphe Lestine and Kate Bruce. More than 10,000 pigeons were employed altogether.

Globe Dec. 11

[illegible]

Post - Dec. 11

[illegible]

Transcript, Dec. 17.

Pikes and Lights

David Griffith Pictures the French Revolution

Fragment From His Impending Photo-Play, "The Two Orphans"

Telegram - Dec. 17

"The Two Orphans", Griffith's Latest Film Play, at Tremont

A cast of unusual excellence and repute essay the various principal roles in D. W. Griffith's newest super-production of "The Two Orphans," to be seen for the first time anywhere at the Tremont Theatre, Monday evening, Dec. 26. Although more than 10,000 people appear in the numerous scenes, program limitation permit of announcing but only the vital characterizations. Leading the remarkable cast is the artiste supreme of the screen—Miss Lillian Gish who, with her talented sister, Dorothy, enact the title roles; Joseph Schildkraut, star in the Theatre Guild's presentation of "Liliom"; Frank Losee, Catherine Emmett, Morgan Wallace, Lucille La Verne, Sheldon Lewis, Kate Bruce, Frank Puglia, Creighton Hale, Leslie King, Monte Blue, Sidney Herbert, Leo Kolmar, Adolphe Lestine and others of note.

Mr. Griffith has expanded the famous story told in Dennery's play and brings forth stirring and spectacular scenes of the French Revolution. The scenes of the Revolution, pitched battles in the streets of old Paris; the terrible trials before Robespierre's famed tribunal and even among the "sansculotte," and wild orgies of the Parisian "sans-culotte," are faithfully portrayed.

American - Dec. 17

LILLIAN GISH and DOROTHY GISH IN "THE TWO ORPHANS" - TREMONT, BOSTON

Post - Dec. 11

[illegible]

Traveler - Dec. 17

"The Two Orphans" Heralded as Another Masterpiece

The Gish Sisters, Lillian and Dorothy, who will play the title roles in Griffith's newest production.

[illegible]

Post - Dec. 11

[illegible]

Advertiser Dec. 17

LILLIAN GISH and DOROTHY GISH THE TWO ORPHANS - TREMONT

Telegram Dec. 17

Xmas Week to See New Bills At Theatres

By F. H. CUSHMAN

The upper portion of the local Rialto will be in eclipse the coming week, with the Plymouth, Wilbur and Shubert theatres dark. The Actors Equity folk have granted a special dispensation permitting the closing of such houses as desired without vitiating contracts, a number of theatres took advantage of the premission rather than to face the usual light business of the week before Christmas.

Meanwhile preparations are going briskly on for the openings of Christmas week when "Irene" comes back to Boston for a run at the Shubert, "Afgar," with Delysia will occupy the Wilbur stage, William Hodge in "Beware of Dogs" opens at the Plymouth. "Happy-Go-Lucky" begins a season at the Selwyn and some real circus stunts, with Poodles Hannaford, of Hippodrome fame will entertain at the Opera House.

On Christmas Monday, too, the Tremont will be given over to pictures for a season. The big attraction will be D. W. Griffith's filming of the famous "Two Orphans," so thoroughly identified years ago with the name and fame of Kate Claxton. Mr. Griffith has outdone himself in this picture, so they say, and has added volumes to patronage of the centre.

American - Dec. 17

COMING

D. W. Griffith's "Two Orphans," the latest great feature by the producer of "Way Down East" and "Birth of a Nation."

American - Dec. 17

TWO ORPHANS AT LAST ON SCREEN

Lillian and Dorothy Gish in Cast of Famous Drama Filmed by David W. Griffith

[illegible]

Ads are in back of this book

Reviews in Boston

Traveler

"Orphans of the Storms" Opens in Boston

Lillian and Dorothy Gish in the title roles of D. W. Griffith's new masterpiece.

By KATHARINE LYONS

David Wark Griffith, the great master of the screen, added another feather to his well-plumed hat last evening in the presentation of his latest contribution to the silent drama, "Orphans of the Storm," with which he honored Boston by selecting this city for its first showing.

In a speech made before the curtain, Mr. Griffith paid tribute to Boston and confessed that his sincere regard for it prompted him to select it for the opening of this great picture.

"Orphans of the Storm" is virtually "The Two Orphans," but the producer wisely changed the title on account of contemporary productions of the same name. It is a screen adaptation of the stage masterpiece which has stood the test of years. As a play, next to "Uncle Tom's Cabin," it has probably had more presentations on the stage than any other.

Mr. Griffith's program informs us that his production is by direct arrangement with Kate Claxton, the old actress, who became so famous in the role of Louise. The story has been taken from the play, but the scenario is undeniably Mr. Griffith's own.

For a background for his colorful story he has selected the French revolution and done some of the big work that is performed in "The Birth of a Nation." The picture is divided into two parts. The first part tells the vivid story of Henriette and Louise Girard, two sisters by adoption, and their terrible experiences in Paris up to a thrilling climax. The big war scenes have been saved for the second part of the picture, without sacrificing the heartrending story of the sisters one bit. The elaborations of the familiar tale reveal more of Griffith's genius, whether or not they are historically true. The attention to detail has been given so that the tear changes to a smile, or vice versa, in the twinkling of an eye. The story of the two sisters, Louise, blind and helpless, and Henriette, young and beautiful, is told with such sympathetic touch of art one believes unconsciously that in the story events should have been made out of every possible situation, and one sits through six hours without being bored a second, and the end comes as before one realizes it has actually arrived.

Scenes of the stories are laid in Paris, which Mr. Griffith transported to his studio at Mamaroneck with his customary skill. Many reproductions of works of the historical period have been copied so as to make the illusion complete, necessary to understand the images, the story where the most fairly takes on the dazed state in a perfect illusion of the spectacle of the Bastille (although it would be impossible to convey the impression in words).

Gish Sisters as Orphans

Most credit of all belongs to Lillian and Dorothy Gish, who are, of course, the central figures of the story. Lillian, as Henriette, and Dorothy, as Louise, are the two orphans, and much could be said about the acting. The Gish sisters, Lillian and Dorothy, have been selected to play the roles of the unfortunate orphans. Once again Lillian has proven herself an artiste, in her superb acting of Henriette. Her work is supreme in every detail. The close-ups are so true they are almost lifelike. As Louise, the blind girl, Dorothy Gish has been handed a big task. Up to this picture she has been known to the screen as a comedienne, but now she has a dramatic role and in a sense is miscast. It is a delight to watch the sincerity between the two sisters, but we must confess we prefer Dorothy in comedy roles.

Mr. Griffith has given great attention to the supporting cast and has selected other screen and stage celebrities for important and minor parts. Monte Blue does a fine piece of work in the role of Danton, the great revolutionary leader and idol of the people. Sidney Herbert gives such a studied part of Robespierre, the powerful tyrant, he is suggestive of George Arliss in some of his recall." Joseph Schildkraut, now appearing in "Lilliom" in New York, plays the role of the aristocratic chevalier with much finesses. His youth and looks does much for the part, but his acting does more. Lucille La Verne as Mother Frochard sustains the repellant character both by her hideous appearance and ability. Some of the smallest parts have been given to actors of a day gone by, all of which helps to make the picture the marvellous production that it is.

The musical program, which has been so carefully selected and rehearsed by Mr. Griffith, is almost 50 per cent. of the entertainment. Despite the unfailing interest of the story the themes used never cease attention and the orchestration at the end of the first part of the picture worked up emotions to a deep high pitch. It was a magnificent climax.

The Gish sisters appeared upon the stage at the conclusion of the performance and were overwhelmed with applause, as was Mr. Griffith also.

Globe

GRIFFITH'S NEWEST PICTURE HIS BEST

"The Orphans of the Storm" Presented First Time

Deals With French Revolution and Reign of Anarchy

When David W. Griffith presents a motion picture to an American audience it is always an event in the film world Boston has always shown the warmest appreciation for Mr Griffith and his work, and when he first shows a completed picture in Boston then the event becomes something quite superlative in the motion picture history of the city.

Last night "The Orphans of the Storm" was exhibited at the Tremont Theatre for its world premiere. And the audience murmured in an ecstatic whisper, "He has surpassed himself again."

Mr Griffith has a way of surpassing himself that is extraordinary. Each new success seems to lead to greater efforts. In a speech made at the intermission, Mr Griffith admitted that "The Orphans of the Storm," which has been renamed from "The Two Orphans," has been his most expensive picture. Indeed, it is said to be the most expensive picture ever filmed.

Mr Griffith spent the money he took in from "Way Down East" to make "The Orphans of the Storm" his best picture. Figures are not available, but no matter how much Mr Griffith spent the results are worth it. He has added to the effectiveness by the really wonderful musical score.

"The Orphans of the Storm" deals with the tragic events which led up to the French Revolution and to the horrors of the Reign of Anarchy which succeeded it. The larger part of the story concerns turbulent Paris. "The Two Orphans," Kate Claxton's play, has been used for the human interest, but the film itself is something bigger and more all-inclusive. As Mr Griffith himself says, "The two orphans in a manner might represent all humanity held between the millstones of tyranny. The first tyrant is that of the autocratic rule by kings and nobility. And then Robespierre, who becomes powerful following the downfall of royalty, uses the guillotine as a weapon for eliminating all who do not think as he does."

It is a wonderful film and Griffith has caught the spirit of the French Revolution. In Pola Negri's play "Passion," there were great scenes of the French Revolution. At the time people said that nothing like those scenes had ever been filmed. But that was before Mr Griffith made "The Orphans of the Storm." It is impossible for anyone to sit through the stirring film without learning first hand many historical events concerning those exciting times, and although most of the Parisian scenes were taken in Mamaroneck, N Y, there is every reason to believe that the entire picture is historically correct.

Lillian Gish as Heroine

Lillian Gish as the lovely Henriette Girard, heroine of the story, has been admirably cast. She has not once been led to the sin of over-acting. Her emotional scenes have been done with refinement and a clear-cut sense of the fitness of things. Her role calls for continual tears and tragedies.

Dorothy Gish as the blind girl shares honors with her sister. The role of blind girl is a new one for the vivacious Dorothy, but she has managed to make herself all over for the part. If one had not seen Dorothy before in films of a lighter nature, then one would write her down as a true tragedienne.

Joseph Sihildkraut, the Austrian actor, who was seen in the stage play, "Pagans," in Boston recently, and is now starring in a New York play, has been "discovered" by Mr Griffith for the role of hero. As Chevalier De Vaudrey, Mr Schildkraut has shown himself an adequate motion picture actor. He has exactly the right manner for the handsome chevalier, and his love-making was so realistic and intense that the audience broke out into spontaneous applause last night.

Lucille LaVerne is another "discovery" for this picture. Mme LaVerne is said to be the best actress in "negro mammy roles" on the American stage. It took Mr Griffith to find out her talent for screen acting. As the old hag, she is simply amazing. The audience breathed a sigh of disgust when she first made her appearance. Her makeup as Mother Frochard is a triumph, and when such a makeup is combined with first-class acting, then the result is an unqualified triumph.

Mr Griffith made many new finds for "The Orphans of the Storm," and Frank Puglia, an Italian player, is still another one. Puglia plays the role of Pierre Frochard, the beggar son of Mother Frochard, with a realism that is most convincing.

There are many other well-known principals in the film. Adolphe Lestina, who plays the role of the Doctor, has been with Mr Griffith for many years, and he was personally introduced to last night's audience by Mr Griffith. Kate Bruce is another Griffith standby. Frank Losee, Catherine Emmett, Morgan Wallace, Sheldon Lewis, Creighton Hale, Leslie King and Leo Kolmeri have all filled the requirements of the roles in the manner of which Mr Griffith might well be proud.

But it is Monte Blue, as Danton, who ought to get much credit for his interpretation. Mr Blue has seldom been seen in such a role as Danton, but he held the interest of his admirers every minute and he was as realistic as might be desired.

Sidney Herbert as Robespierre has little action, but he managed to put across the character of this Revolutionary hero here in spite of the handicaps.

Story Itself a "Thriller"

As for the story itself—it is one of the best "thrillers" ever seen on the screen. It may be historical and educational and instructive, as Mai Carroll Owan, who introduced Mr Griffith, said it was, but it's a mighty good story as well. It's like reading the most exciting kind of a novel. Every few feet something new happens. There are two scenes which stand out particularly. One is the ride of Danton and his men with the reprieve for Henriette, whose head rests on the guillotine as he reaches her.

The other is only a short scene. It is where Henriette, on her ride in the rude cart to her supposed death, says good-by to her blind sister. If there was a dry eye in the house during that scene it was because the man or woman had his eyes tightly shut. It is one of the most tragic and emotional scenes ever filmed, and it lasts scarcely longer than 30 seconds. Yet it has a poignant appeal that only Lillian Gish could portray.

There are great spectacles in "The Orphans of the Storm"—fetes in huge gardens, the fall of the Bastille, the Revolutionary Tribunal. They are great scenes—ones that have taken months of research and care before they might be filmed. Yet the little goodby scene of the two sisters stands out above them all as pure art.

The Gish sisters were introduced to the audience last night and Lillian made a brief speech thanking her admirers.

Herald

'TWO ORPHANS' SEEN ON SCREEN

Griffith's Most Ambitious Film Production Success at Tremont

"ORPHANS OF THE STORM" NEW NAME

TREMONT THEATRE—"Orphans of the Storm," a film drama produced by D. W. Griffith, based on Dennery's melodrama, "The Two Orphans." First presentation in Boston. The cast:

Henriette Girard.....Lillian Gish
Louise.....Dorothy Gish
Chevalier De Vaudrey..Joseph Schildkraut
Count De Linieres.....Frank Losee
Countess De Linieres....Catherine Emmett
Marquis De Presle.....Morgan Wallace
Mother Frochard.....Lucille La Verne
Jacques Frochard.....Sheldon Lewis
Pierre Frochard.....Frank Puglia
Picard.....Creighton Hale
Jacques-Forget-Not.....Leslie King
Danton.....Monte Blue
Robespierre.....Sidney Herbert
King Louis XVI.....Leo Kolmeri
The Doctor.....Adolphe Lestina
Sister Genevieve.....Kate Bruce

In this, Mr. Griffith's latest and most ambitious production, the famous old French melodrama, "The Two Orphans," forever connected with the name of Kate Claxton, comes to life again in much elaborated form. Here is an excellent demonstration of how the "movies" may improve on the speaking stage. In a play whose interest depends on dialogue, the movies are hopelessly out of it, of course. Where the interest centres entirely on the action, the movies triumph. Such a play is "The Two Orphans."

Few people remember any of its lines; countless theatregoers will never forget the story of the two sisters and their perilous adventures in Paris at the time of the French revolution. Many of these adventures were merely suggested in the stage play. Now along comes Mr. Griffith and through the medium of the camera, the adventures of the play and many more are presented to the spectator as they never could be presented on the speaking stage.

It is an engrossing play. To a moving story, Mr. Griffith has added swift action, historical interest, and a masterly sense of suspense and climax. We hesitate to enlarge on its historical interest lest some theatregoers, who believe in entertainment and not education in the theatre, may shy away from it. Nevertheless, it is unquestionably a great historical picture which never for a moment sacrifices theatrical interest on that account.

Through the story of the two orphans and their struggles in the Paris of the revolution, move the figures of Danton, Robespierre and Louis XVI. Danton is pictured as a young idealist; Robespierre as a crafty diplomat. The foolish King is seen but little, but there are enthralling glimpses of his court, of the gorgeous rooms, the mirror-like floors, the gardens of Versailles.

The street scenes in old Paris, the glimpses of the city barriers and the architecture are fascinating. There is, too, a marvellously true reproduction of the great doors of Notre Dame. Incidentally, Mr. Griffith has outdone himself. He has spread the pages of a fascinating period of history on the screen that all who run may read.

Miss Lillian Gish, who long since proved herself a true artist, plays the part of Henriette. She brings to the part her own peculiar gentle charm, her quick intelligence in little details which are so important on the screen, her touching pathos. Her sister, Dorothy, who heretofore in her screen career has appeared almost exclusively in comedy, plays the blind girl, Louise.

The scenes between the two sisters are remarkably beautiful, moving to the extreme. Yet Miss Dorothy is not content with her at particular parts; she has not yet learned to bring out her tears, as Miss Lillian Gish can. Miss Dorothy's work is almost perfect, however, in the scenes where she is called upon to show the emotions of a blind girl.

Joseph Schildkraut, who appeared in "Pagans" in Boston, and who is now in "Liliom" in New York, is the Chevalier De Vaudrey. He has a part which he plays with much charm. Mr. Schildkraut is a young actor who will be heard from in the future. He has the manner of the chevalier, the courtly bow, the gallantry of the day, the fine speech. He is a young man who will be heard from in the future.

Lucille La Verne, who has been known for years as a character actress, is the Mother Frochard. She is a hideous creature, but she plays the part with a realism that is most convincing.

There are many other well-known principals in the film. Adolphe Lestina, who plays the role of the Doctor, has been with Mr Griffith for many years, and he was personally introduced to last night's audience by Mr Griffith. Kate Bruce is another Griffith standby. Frank Losee, Catherine Emmett, Morgan Wallace, Sheldon Lewis, Creighton Hale, Leslie King and Leo Kolmeri have all filled the requirements of the roles in the manner of which Mr Griffith might well be proud.

But it is Monte Blue, as Danton, who ought to get much credit for his interpretation. Mr Blue has seldom been seen in such a role as Danton, but he held the interest of his admirers every minute and he was as realistic as might be desired.

Sidney Herbert as Robespierre has little action, but he managed to put across the character of this Revolutionary hero here in spite of the handicaps.

Telegram

Griffith's "Orphans" Is Masterpiece

By SYLVIA CUSHMAN

One would say that it was impossible for D. W. Griffith to make another picture any better than his last productions, but he has accomplished this miracle and given us his masterpiece, "Orphans of the Storm," adapted from the book and play "Two Orphans," admirably featuring the Gish girls.

This picture, which has shown at the Tremont Theatre last night for the first time in any city outside New York, is, in a word, the best we have had yet from Griffith. First, we have an absolutely true story, that is, it will be a lesson of history to our most prominent and to the people who have been taught that our history ends with the Civil War and the reunion of the North and South. Our ignorance of the French Revolution is more than half responsible for the present condition of affairs. Perhaps, if people knew what happened in France in 1789 and what led up to it, they would be more careful in the future. Perhaps, if people knew what happened in France in 1789 and what led up to it, they would be more careful in the future. Perhaps, if people knew what happened in France in 1789 and what led up to it, they would be more careful in the future.

Gish Sisters as Orphans

Most credit of all belongs to Lillian and Dorothy Gish, who are, of course, the central figures of the story. Lillian, as Henriette, and Dorothy, as Louise, are the two orphans, and much could be said about the acting. The Gish sisters, Lillian and Dorothy, have been selected to play the roles of the unfortunate orphans. Once again Lillian has proven herself an artiste, in her superb acting of Henriette. Her work is supreme in every detail. The close-ups are so true they are almost lifelike. As Louise, the blind girl, Dorothy Gish has been handed a big task. Up to this picture she has been known to the screen as a comedienne, but now she has a dramatic role and in a sense is miscast. It is a delight to watch the sincerity between the two sisters, but we must confess we prefer Dorothy in comedy roles.

Mr. Griffith has given great attention to the supporting cast and has selected other screen and stage celebrities for important and minor parts. Monte Blue does a fine piece of work in the role of Danton, the great revolutionary leader and idol of the people. Sidney Herbert gives such a studied part of Robespierre, the powerful tyrant, he is suggestive of George Arliss in some of his recall." Joseph Schildkraut, now appearing in "Liliom" in New York, plays the role of the aristocratic chevalier with much finesses. His youth and looks does much for the part, but his acting does more. Lucille La Verne as Mother Frochard sustains the repellant character both by her hideous appearance and ability. Some of the smallest parts have been given to actors of a day gone by, all of which helps to make the picture the marvellous production that it is.

The musical program, which has been so carefully selected and rehearsed by Mr. Griffith, is almost 50 per cent. of the entertainment. Despite the unfailing interest of the story the themes used never cease attention and the orchestration at the end of the first part of the picture worked up emotions to a deep high pitch. It was a magnificent climax.

The Gish sisters appeared upon the stage at the conclusion of the performance and were overwhelmed with applause, as was Mr. Griffith also.

Advertiser

GRIFFITH'S NEW FILM TRIUMPHS

BY GEORGE C. MACGRIGGOR

Lillian and Dorothy Gish have set a new standard in the art of emotional screen acting, and D. W. Griffith has filched his claim to be regarded as the world's master of stage and screen, in "The Orphans of the Storm," which had its world premiere last night at the Tremont Theatre.

GISH SISTERS AS ORPHANS

When the People Reach Out, BEWARE!

King Louis XVI. of France Learned It Too Late

ONE single play has been seen by fifty millions of Americans. That play was the TWO ORPHANS, played in every country in the world but Siam.

A hundred million Americans need to see the story of a still greater play of real life, called THE FRENCH REVOLUTION. In looking back at that play of history, a tragedy of passion in which Kings were victims and men from the gutter their executioners, the intelligent man is warned and understands the events of to-day.

✦ ✦ ✦

Beware of the people when it reaches out to grab what it wants. And let the people beware of ITSELF in that moment of hatred, triumph, intoxication and inevitable disaster.

When a nation is plunged into revolution, into a sea of blood, heads of men and women from the upper class fall by the thousands. Then leaders of the revolution themselves fall. THEIR necks pass under the guillotine blade.

Danton, giant in power, went first, then Robespierre, Carlyle's "green-eyed monster," dragged to the guillotine with jaw broken, blood running from his mouth, but defiant. Then Marat was in rule, and Charlotte Corday killed him.

Then came Napoleon, seizing the people by the throat as they, the people, had seized the foolish King Louis. Napoleon marched them all over Europe to be shot on a hundred battlefields, or frozen in the snows of Russia. His day came, and he went to die on his lonely island in misery physical and mental agony.

FROM REVOLUTION, BLOODSHED AND TYRANNY ONLY SORROW CAN COME.

✦ ✦ ✦

In his extraordinary picture production of the Two Orphans, which he calls "ORPHANS OF THE STORM," David W. Griffith makes YOU LIVE for two and a half hours in that horrible storm of blood, hatred and rebellion. The arrogant nobles, yesterday feasting, careless debauches, to-day are hunted like rats. The people are transformed into a howling mob, the King and his wife are beheaded. Then the hour glass turns, and the people again are under the heel of power from above.

✦ ✦ ✦

If an intelligent man could see himself drunk or angry, he would never be angry or drunk again. And intelligent people, seeing real revolution, living, hating and killing, as Mr. Griffith shows it in his marvelous picture of "ORPHANS OF THE STORM," would hate the suggestion of revolution even more intensely than they could hate tyranny or selfish exploitation. For when a whole people go mad, there is wisdom and safety nowhere.

The Orphans Just Escaping Being the Victims of Bloody Justice That Ruled "Its Justice."
Scenes from the Film Play.

The beautiful, pathetic picture of the Two Orphans, the blind girl and her sister, separated and plunged into the horrible maelstrom of the French Revolution, the absolute living portrayal of that revolution with its great figures and horrible brutality, stamps upon the mind that which will never be forgotten by intelligent Americans. The horrible selfishness of the privileged classes, living tax free on misery below them, feasting, squandering, debauched and shameless at a time when there were thirty thousand professional beggars in Paris and when the nobleman might see at the gate of his castle peasants lying dead, with grass that they had tried to eat sticking from their mouths—that is the picture of governing power gone mad. And the Griffith picture portrays it as no other could do.

✦ ✦ ✦

With this wild setting of revolution for a background, the romance and story of the Two Orphans, tale of girlish beauty, devotion and pathos mixed in the stream of hatred, horror and cruelty, stands out with power that words cannot possibly describe.

To see this Griffith play of the Two Orphans, "ORPHANS OF THE STORM," as he has chosen to call his finest production, is a duty, an education, and, in addition, it provides hours of most intense interest, excitement and delight.

The sixty score and scores, unlimited spending of money on a scale hitherto unthought of, plus the knowledge and genius of Griffith, the greatest picture-maker in the world, have produced this picture-story of the Two Orphans, "ORPHANS OF THE STORM." And you are urged to see it while it is still in Boston.

See D. W. Griffith's "Orphans of the Storm" TREMONT THEATRE BOSTON

Orphans, the into the hor-bsolute living and horrible never be for-selfishness of below them at a time
gars in Pari-of his cast
d to eat stic ening pow
as no wo

ch ground, the girlish beauty
d, horror must pass

Clapham,
wer to call
, in addi ertisement

spelling the hunchb in the ope ess Orphan urged to

ATRE

Traveler Dec. 17

TREMONT THEATRE
THOMAS B. LOTHIAN, MANAGER
EVGS. at 8.15 ~ MATS. WED. & SAT. 2.15

LAST 6 NIGHTS
LAST 2 MATS.

SAM H. HARRIS
PRESENTS
THE HEART-WINNING COMEDY

ONLY 38

A NEW COMEDY by A. E. THOMAS
SUGGESTED BY A STORY
BY WALTER PRICHARD EATON

WITH MARY RYAN
STAGED BY SAM FORREST

THE WORLD PREMIERE!

DAVID WARK GRIFFITH
Presents Personally
A DRAMATIC EPIC

"ORPHANS OF THE STORM"

WITH
LILLIAN and DOROTHY GISH
And Ten Thousand Others
Orchestra of Forty
TREMONT THEATRE
Monday Evening
December Twenty-six
Twice Daily Thereafter
Seats Thursday

Telegram Dec. 18

THE WORLD PREMIERE!
DAVID WARK GRIFFITH
Presents Personally
A Dramatic Epic
"ORPHANS OF THE STORM"
WITH
LILLIAN and DOROTHY GISH
And Ten Thousand Others
Orchestra of Forty
TREMONT THEATRE
Monday Evening
December Twenty-six
Twice Daily Thereafter
Seats Thursday

Advertiser

At the Premiere of "Orphans of The Storm"

On NEXT MONDAY EVENING, at the TREMONT THEATRE, MR. D. W. GRIFFITH, the producer of this elaborate development of an old and cherished tale, will appear in person and address the audience. He will likewise appear and speak at the matinee on the day following, and on both these occasions will introduce in person MISS LILLIAN GISH and MISS DOROTHY GISH, who essay the principal characterizations in the new offering. MISS LILLIAN GISH will also have a few remarks to make to the people of Boston.

Sale of Seats at Box Office on Thursday.

Transcript Dec. 20

Amusements | Amusements

An Announcement:

D. W. Griffith has changed the title of his new film production from "The Two Orphans" to that of "ORPHANS OF THE STORM." Under that title it will be presented for a world premiere at the TREMONT THEATRE, beginning Monday night, December 26, and twice each day thereafter.

Although costly and disturbing, the change is made to avoid even greater confusion with several other films bearing the title "The Two Orphans," which various promoters are now offering to exhibitors.

When Mr. Griffith decided to make his picture, his intention was widely advertised, that there might be no coincidence of production to bring about a condition as now exists. To protect himself legally and honorably, he purchased all interests held or claimed by Kate Claxton in the dramatic rights, even increasing the sum Miss Claxton originally named.

The other films are reported to have been made abroad. The release dates were withheld until Mr. Griffith made his announcement of presentation, and now are being widely offered. The motion picture industry has made no effort for protection from such practices. The change in title means a loss of tens of thousands of dollars to Mr. Griffith, the scrapping of much advertising and the abandonment of a title he could have preferred to use.

D. W. GRIFFITH, INC.

Seat Sale at
Tremont Theatre Box Office
This Thursday

Globe Dec. 21

TREMONT THEATRE
BOSTON
מנהאנטן מארגן, מאנטאג אבענד
דעצעמבער 26טן
עווי פאל פעצאיר — 2 אויר נאכמיטאג און
8 אויר אבענד
פיטם שוין צו בעקומען היינט
צום ערשטן מאל אריגינעלמאל
ד. וו. גריפפיטה פרעזענטירט
א דראמאטישע העלדענעפיך
יתומים פון שטורם דעם
ORPHANS OF THE STORM
לוים, דרעסמער, אראנדושענגו פיט קינס
קאמפאנו פיט
ליליען גיש און דאראטהי גיש
צוזאן טויזענד אנדערע
טרקעסטער פון פערציג
אלע פיטם דעזערווירט — פיקעטס צוויי
וואכען קאדוואנס
בעשטרקונג — פיר גרייזאן פיטם ער
שוינען פערזענליך פאנטאם אבענד אוז דאנגסטאג
מאטינעע אוז אראנטשרענן דאס פארהאנג. ער
וועט אויך אנשטעלען, בין דיעזע געלעגענהייט
טעג, פיטם ליליען גיש אוז פיטם דאראטהי גיש,
וועלכע וועלען אויך דערבייזיין.

Christian Science Monitor Dec. 31

AMUSEMENTS
BOSTON

TREMONT THEATRE — TWICE DAILY Except Sundays 2 P.M.—8 P.M.
Impressively Beautiful!
D. W. GRIFFITH'S
ORPHANS OF THE STORM
with
LILLIAN GISH DOROTHY GISH
Ten Thousand Others

Telegram Dec. 20

TREMONT THEATRE — MATINEES, 25c, 50c, 75c, $1 — EVENINGS, 50c, 75c, $1, $1.50

A VERITABLE SENSATION!
Every Boston Newspaper Acclaims Ecstatically
D. W. GRIFFITH'S
New Empire of Emotions
'Orphans of the Storm'
WITH
Lillian Gish and Dorothy Gish
Ten Thousand Others
ORCHESTRA OF FORTY
All Seats Reserved on Sale 2 Weeks Ahead for All Presentations
Twice Daily, Matinee and Night
2 P. M. (Prompt) 8 P. M.

Jewish Morning Journal Dec. 26

TREMONT THEATRE
BOSTON
מאנטאג, דן 26טן דעצעמבער
יתומים
פון
שטורם
ORPHANS OF THE STORM
לוים, דרעסמער, אראנדושענגו פיט קינס
קאמפאנו פיט
ליליען גיש און דאראטהי גיש
צוזאן טויזענד אנדערע
טרקעסטער פון פערציג
אלע פיטם דעזערווירט — פיקעטס צוויי
וואכען קאדוואנס
בעשטרקונג — פיר גרייזאן פיטם ער
שוינען פערזענליך פאנטאם אבענד אוז דאנגסטאג
מאטינעע אוז אראנטשרענן דאס פארהאנג. ער
וועט אויך אנשטעלען, בין דיעזע געלעגענהייט
טעג, פיטם ליליען גיש אוז פיטם דאראטהי גיש,
וועלכע וועלען אויך דערבייזיין.

Globe Dec. 27

It Hypnotized— Held—Swayed— Enthralled!

Thousands turned away! Representative Bostonians, charmed by an Empire of New Emotions, filled every seat in Tremont Theatre last night and their EVERY ENNOBLING EMOTION ENGAGED by

D. W. GRIFFITH'S
Marvelous, Beautiful and Mesmeric Epic

"ORPHANS OF THE STORM"

With
LILLIAN GISH DOROTHY GISH
Ten Thousand Others
SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA OF FORTY

TREMONT THEATRE TWICE DAILY NOW
Matinees 2 P. M. (Prompt) Evenings 8 P. M.
Evenings 50c to $1.50. Matinees 25c to $1.

NOTE:—Mr. Griffith, Lillian Gish and Dorothy Gish will appear in person at showings today, MATINEE and also TONIGHT.

American Dec. 28

truly a hypnotic hurricane of action

Griffith has tapped the secret nerve-messages of a city:
Its scandal—wickedness—love—sacrifice—adventure—romance—peril and triumph
Acting that crowns with art that "sharp female—Guillotine"

TONIGHT
David Wark Griffith's
empire of new emotions

Orphans of the Storm

THE STORY OF AN IMMORTAL BUBBLE
A world premiere. Mr. Griffith and Lillian and Dorothy Gish will appear tonight and at the Thursday performances.

TREMONT THEATRE
Twice Daily, 2 and 8 o'clock
Prices: Mat. 25c to $1; Nights 50c to $1.50

Transcript Dec. 28

An Empire of New Emotions!!

A strong-heart play for those of Today and Tomorrow—not Yesterday

HYPNOTIC! OVERWHELMING! COLOSSAL!

To permit time for important improvements in the presentation, postponement until Wednesday has been made of

DAVID WARK GRIFFITH'S
Dramatic Marvel of the Films

"Orphans of the Storm"

TREMONT THEATRE — TWICE DAILY

Globe Dec. 23

ONLY 38
SEATS ON SALE NOW
ORPHANS OF THE STORM
Lillian Gish and Dorothy Gish

Globe Dec. 24

Amusements

ONLY 38
SEATS ON SALE NOW
D. W. GRIFFITH Presents
A Dramatic Epic
ORPHANS OF THE STORM
Lillian Gish and Dorothy Gish
ORCHESTRA OF FORTY

Globe Dec. 26

ONLY 38
ORPHANS OF THE STORM

Globe Dec. 26

POSTPONED

OPENING OF
D. W. GRIFFITH'S
Orphans of the Storm
TREMONT THEATRE
Until Wednesday Evening
AT 8 O'CLOCK PROMPT

Globe Dec. 27

ONLY 38

Globe Dec. 27

ONLY 38
ORPHANS OF THE STORM

Transcript Feb. 4

Tonight's the Night

to see D. W. Griffith's great masterpiece "Orphans of the Storm"—Tremont Theatre.

2 P.M.——Twice Daily——8 P.M.

Feb. 7

Incomparable

in artistic splendor and dramatic interest is Griffith's masterpiece "Orphans of the Storm" at the Tremont Theatre.

2 P. M.——Twice Daily——8 P. M.

Feb. 8

A Far Step in Art

is Griffith's wonder effort "Orphans of the Storm," now at the Tremont Theatre.

2 P. M.——Twice Daily——8 P. M.

Feb. 9

An Event Unusual

in history of theatre is Griffith's marvel "Orphans of the Storm" at Tremont Theatre.

2 P. M.——Twice Daily——8 P. M.

Globe Feb. 5

Boston Jewish American Jan 13

TREMONT THEATRE
BOSTON

יתומים
פון
שטורם

2 מאל טעגליך
2 נאכמיטאג, 8 אבענד
אום ערשטען מאל
ד. וו. גריפיט
פרעזענטירט
א וואונדערבארע דראמא
מיט די ציטען פון
דער פראנצויזישער
רעוואלוציאן מיט אלע
איהרע שרעקליכקייטען
און פאסירונגען

ליליען גיש און דאראטהי גיש
און צעהן טויזענד אנדערע. ארקעסטער פון פערציג.
אלע סיסט ריזוירווד אין סייל צוויי וואכען אין פאראויס.

Globe Feb. 9

The Tragedy of the Tyrant—

What a pitiful figure was Robespierre, the queer "sea-green formula," of whom Carlyle writes! Rising as the great figure during the French Revolution, he became a fanatic in the matter of reform! He was not bad; really overzealous for good, until his head ran away with him! He put himself above human law and beyond human sympathy! What a crash! He nearly destroyed the hope of civilization! Never has this great character of history been so forcibly brought forth as by D. W. Griffith in his triumphant masterpiece, "ORPHANS OF THE STORM," at the Tremont Theatre. Be sure and see it! Twice daily at 2 and 8 p. m.—Sundays at 3 and 8 p. m.

Traveler Dec. 29

Amusements Amusements Amusements

At Last Griffith has made one better than "The Birth of a Nation"

Every Boston Newspaper in Ecstacy Over

D. W. GRIFFITH'S

Masterful and Beauteous New Sensation

"ORPHANS OF THE STORM"

With

LILLIAN GISH and DOROTHY GISH

Ten Thousand Others

SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA OF FORTY

GLOBE says: "Griffith's 'Orphans of the Storm' his best . . . Audience murmured in ecstatic whisper, 'He has surpassed himself again.' It is a wonderful film . . . One of the best 'thrillers' ever seen on the screen . . . Like reading the most exciting novel. Every few feet something new happens . . . Great scenes."

TRANSCRIPT says: "Griffith still the master of all . . . Time and again he rises to great heights . . . A Griffith at his best . . . He sets upon the screen the rising of all Paris . . . the mad measures of the Carmagnole . . . Its vast canvas of revolt is epic compared to the ice-jam of 'Way Down East' . . . Master of his masses . . . piling thrill upon thrill . . . 'Orphans of the Storm' is his most finished, his most powerful work."

TELEGRAM says: "One would say it was impossible for D. W. Griffith to make another picture any better than his past productions, but he has accomplished this miracle and given us his masterpiece . . . 'Orphans of the Storm' is the finest tribute to art and history the motion picture world could give."

TRAVELER says: "Told with such sympathetic touch of art one becomes unconsciously lost in the story. Great scenes have been made out of every possible situation, and one sits through 2½ hours without being bored a second, and the end creeps in before one realizes it has actually arrived . . . the tear changes to a smile, or vice versa, in the twinkling of an eye."

AMERICAN says: " 'Orphans of the Storm' at Tremont Theatre is wonderful . . . Surpasses everything that he (Griffith) has ever done, and, furthermore, it is far and away the finest screen drama ever seen in this country . . . I was simply overpowered by the terrific forces this man turned loose in the theatre . . . ride to the rescue is used with enormous effect . . . remarkably human and engrossing love story."

HERALD says: "It is an engrossing play. To a moving story Mr. Griffith has added swift action, historical interest and a masterly sense of suspense and climax . . . Scenically Mr. Griffith has outdone himself."

POST says: " 'Orphans of the Storm' allures . . . finish and smoothness . . . shown last evening without a flaw . . . almost continuous action . . . displayed the unmistakable imprint of Mr. Griffith's skill."

ADVERTISER says: "D. W. Griffith has clinched his claim to be regarded as the world's master of cinema spectacles in 'Orphans of the Storm.' . . . amazing visualization."

and WINCHELL SMITH, peer of playwrights, says:

"It didn't seem possible, but Mr. Griffith has made a picture better than 'The Birth of a Nation' or 'Way Down East.' "

TREMONT THEATRE TWICE DAILY NOW

Matinees 2 P.M. (Prompt) Evenings 8 P.M.

ALL SEATS RESERVED——ON SALE TWO WEEKS IN ADVANCE

Transcript Feb. 10

Delighted Throngs

are seeing Griffith's latest triumph "Orphans of the Storm" at the Tremont Theatre.

2 P. M.——Twice Daily——8 P. M.

Traveler Feb. 11

TREMONT THEATRE SOLD OUT TODAY

Matinee Today at 2 P. M.

Every Evening at 8 P. M.

LAST 2 WEEKS!

D. W. Griffith's

New Empire of Emotions

ORPHANS OF THE STORM

Traveler Dec. 31

NOW TWICE EACH DAY EXCEPT SUNDAY NOW

An Enormous Success!

D. W. GRIFFITH'S

Thrilling and Enthralling

"ORPHANS OF THE STORM"

with

LILLIAN GISH DOROTHY GISH

Ten Thousand Others

Broadway Classic Founded on All Times

TREMONT THEATRE

8 P. M. (Prompt) 8 P. M.

Harvard Crimson Jan. 14

Tremont Theatre Twice Daily 2 P. M. 8 P. M.
Boston Prompt

Matinee Every Day
Every Evening

D. W. Griffith presents
a Spectacular Epic

"ORPHANS OF THE STORM"

with

LILLIAN GISH — DOROTHY GISH
Ten Thousand Others

LARGE SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA in this musical setting to Drama

to red-blooded Americans--

interested in the future of their country! Do you wish to see us all led around by the nose and made tools of by scheming cliques, who always have lots of money to further their ends?

Congressman Tinkham

sounded the greatest warning in Washington Tuesday when he told members of the House of Representatives how we had been overburdened with ridiculous laws and how we had become the most notorious law ignorers in the world!

the people of France

years ago dreamed a great dream! They overthrew the rule of silly aristocrats and kings and set about to build up a genuine brotherhood! They failed! Why? They became docile and looked for empty frivolities!

scheming cliques and tyrants

then took hold! They made laws to suit a small number and chaos followed! Before the people realized their danger all government and all law was in the hands of a few to do as they pleased!

the threatening danger

of history repeating inspired D. W. Griffith with the lofty purpose to produce the greatest theatre offering the world has ever known for real Americans! It cost more than all the funny shows now in New York put together! The world was searched for data! Every possible thing done to have it correct in detail! The finest actors to be had were engaged for the various parts!

"ORPHANS OF THE STORM"

was made for people who think! It is not for spineless, nonchalant people who rush to the theatre only for a titter or a base suggestion!

not for vapid people!

It was made at the greatest expense ever known in the history of theatrics so that people might realize the dangers threatening us! It was produced that Americans might stop and think in time to save their land from the fate that befell France!

but—if you like artistic splendor, not thrills that menace every smoldering emotion and a tender, true heart appeal, you will enjoy every minute of "ORPHANS OF THE STORM." Nothing like it has ever been seen in a theatre!

only a few weeks more remain in which it is August Mr. Griffith's home of the Famous Theatre now terminated. To enable to travel his new big Grand Opera and George M. Cohan have previous bookings!

TWICE EVERY DAY—INCLUDING SUNDAYS

Traveler Dec. 17

TREMONT THEATRE — LAST 6 NIGHTS LAST 2 MATS.

THOMAS B. LOTHIAN, MANAGER
EVES. at 8.15 – MATS. WED. & SAT. 2.15

SAM H. HARRIS PRESENTS
The Heart-Winning Comedy

ONLY 38

A New Comedy by A. E. Thomas Suggested by a Story by Walter Prichard Eaton

WITH MARY RYAN

STAGED BY SAM FORREST

THE WORLD PREMIERE!

DAVID WARK GRIFFITH
Presents Personally
A DRAMATIC EPIC

"ORPHANS OF THE STORM"

WITH
LILLIAN and DOROTHY GISH
And Ten Thousand Others
Orchestra of Forty
TREMONT THEATRE
Monday Evening
December Twenty-six
Twice Daily Thereafter
Seats Thursday

Telegram Dec. 18

THE WORLD PREMIERE!

DAVID WARK GRIFFITH
Presents Personally
A Dramatic Epic

"ORPHANS OF THE STORM"

WITH
LILLIAN and DOROTHY GISH
And Ten Thousand Others
Orchestra of Forty
TREMONT THEATRE
Monday Evening
December Twenty-six
Twice Daily Thereafter
Seats Thursday

Advertiser

At the Premiere of "Orphans of The Storm"

On NEXT MONDAY EVENING, at the TREMONT THEATRE, MR. D. W. GRIFFITH, the producer of this elaborate development of an old and cherished tale, will appear in person and address the audience. He will likewise appear and speak at the matinee on the day following, and on both these occasions will introduce in person MISS LILLIAN GISH and MISS DOROTHY GISH, who essay the principal characterizations in the new offering. MISS LILLIAN GISH will also have a few remarks to make to the people of Boston.

Sale of Seats at Box Office on Thursday.

Transcript Dec. 20

Amusements — Amusements

An Announcement:

D. W. Griffith has changed the title of his new film production from "The Two Orphans" to that of "ORPHANS OF THE STORM." Under that title it will be presented for a world premiere at the TREMONT THEATRE, beginning Monday night, December 26, and twice each day thereafter.

Although costly and disturbing, the change is made to avoid even greater confusion with several other films bearing the title "The Two Orphans," which various promoters are now offering to exhibitors.

When Mr. Griffith decided to make his picture, his intention was widely advertised, that there might be no coincidence of production to bring about a condition as now exists. To protect himself legally and honorably, he purchased all interests held or claimed by Kate Claxton in the dramatic rights, even increasing the sum Miss Claxton originally named.

The other films are reported to have been made abroad. The release dates were withheld until Mr. Griffith made his announcement of presentation, and now are being widely offered. The motion picture industry has made no effort for protection from such practices. The change in title means a loss of tens of thousands of dollars to Mr. Griffith, the scrapping of much advertising and the abandonment of a title he would have preferred to use.

D. W. GRIFFITH, INC.

Seat Sale at
Tremont Theatre Box Office
This Thursday

Globe Dec. 21

TREMONT THEATRE
BOSTON

מאנאנגערג מארגן, מאנטאג אבענד
דעצעמבער 26טן
צוויי מאל טעגלעך — 2 אזיגר נאכמיטאג, און
8 אזיגר אבענד
סיטס שוין צו בעקומען הייגט
עס פרעשען מאר אינגעגרוואר
ד. וו. גריפפיטס פרעזענטירט
א דראמאטישע עפּאכמאכענדע

יתומים פון שטורם
ORPHANS OF THE STORM

מיט דורכטער מאדעמאזעלע סיס עיגיס
מאדעמאזעל סיס
ליליען גיש און דאראטדי גיש
צוזאמען מיט זעכצן אנדערע
מרקעסטער פון פערציג
אלע סיסס דעזערווירט — סיטעס צוויי
וואכען מארגן
באמערקונג: — פון נייעמען סיסס ווערן
שוין פערזוכט מאנטאג אבענד און דינסטאג
מארגען און אזיגרסטרון דאס פאבליקום, ער
וועט איך פארשטעלען, ווי דיעזע נעלעגענהייט
טון, סיסס צו ליליען גיש אל סיסס דאראטהי גיש,
(20)

Christian Science Monitor Dec. 21

AMUSEMENTS
BOSTON

TREMONT THEATRE — TWICE DAILY Except Sundays 2 P.M.—8 P.M.

Impressively Beautiful!
D. W. GRIFFITH'S
ORPHANS OF THE STORM
with
LILLIAN GISH DOROTHY GISH
Ten Thousand Others

Telegram Dec. 20

TREMONT THEATRE — MATINEES, 25c, 50c, 75c, $1 — EVENINGS, 50c, 75c, $1, $1.50

A VERITABLE SENSATION!

Every Boston Newspaper Acclaims Ecstatically
D. W. GRIFFITH'S
New Empire of Emotions
'Orphans of the Storm'
WITH
Lillian Gish and Dorothy Gish
Ten Thousand Others
ORCHESTRA OF FORTY
All Seats Reserved on Sale 2 Weeks Ahead for All Presentations
Twice Daily, Matinee and Night
2 P. M. (Prompt) 8 P. M.

Jewish Morning Journal Dec. 26

TREMONT THEATRE
BOSTON

יתומים
שטורם

Globe Dec. 29

It Hypnotized— Held—Swayed— Enthralled!

Thousands turned away! Representative Bostonians, charmed by an Empire of New Emotions, filled every seat in Tremont Theatre last night and their EVERY ENNOBLING EMOTION ENGAGED by

D. W. GRIFFITH'S
Marvelous, Beautiful and Mesmeric Epic

"ORPHANS OF THE STORM"

With
LILLIAN GISH DOROTHY GISH
Ten Thousand Others
SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA OF FORTY

TREMONT THEATRE TWICE DAILY NOW
Matinees 2 P. M. (Prompt) Evenings 8 P. M.
Evenings 50c to $1.50. Matinees 25c to $1.

NOTE:—Mr. Griffith, Lillian Gish and Dorothy Gish will appear in person at showings today, MATINEE and also TONIGHT.

American Dec. 28

truly a hypnotic hurricane of action

Griffith has tapped the secret nerve-messages of a city:
Its scandal—wickedness—love—sacrifice—adventure—romance—peril and triumph
Acting that crowns with art that "sharp female—Guillotine"

TONIGHT
David Wark Griffith's
empire of new emotions

Orphans of the Storm

THE STORY OF AN IMMORTAL BUBBLE

A world premiere. Mr. Griffith and Lillian and Dorothy Gish will appear tonight and at the Thursday performances.

TREMONT THEATRE

Twice Daily, 2 and 8 o'clock
Prices: Mat. 25c to $1; Nights 50c to $1.50

Transcript Dec. 28

An Empire of New Emotions!!

A strong-heart play for those of Today and Tomorrow—not Yesterday

HYPNOTIC! OVERWHELMING! COLOSSAL!

To permit time for important improvements in the presentation, performances until Wednesday has been made of

DAVID WARK GRIFFITH'S
Dramatic Novel of the Film

"Orphans of the Storm"

TREMONT THEATRE — TWICE DAILY

Globe Dec. 26

POSTPONED

On that month effect will now somehow value whose may be entirely arranged

OPENING OF
D. W. GRIFFITH'S
Orphans of the Storm
TREMONT THEATRE
Until Wednesday Evening
AT 8 O'CLOCK PROMPT

Globe Dec. 23

TREMONT THEATRE — ONLY 38 DAYS
Beginning this Evening (Christmas Eve. 18)
2 P. M. Prompt Matinee Today 2 P. M.
TICKET PRICES AT 2 (PROMPT)
EVERY NIGHT AT 8 (PROMPT)
SEATS ON SALE NOW
Lillian Gish and Dorothy Gish
ORPHANS OF THE STORM

Globe Dec. 24

Amusements

TREMONT THEATRE — ONLY 38 DAYS
Beginning this Evening (Christmas Eve. 18)
2 P. M. Prompt Matinee Today 2 P. M.
TICKET PRICES AT 2 (PROMPT)
EVERY NIGHT AT 8 (PROMPT)
SEATS ON SALE NOW
D. W. GRIFFITH Presents
A Dramatic Epic
ORPHANS OF THE STORM
Lillian Gish and Dorothy Gish
THE CONCERTO OPERA
ORCHESTRA OF FORTY

TREMONT THEATRE — ONLY 38 DAYS
Beginning this Evening (Christmas Eve. 18)
2 P. M. Prompt Matinee Today 2 P. M.
TICKET PRICES AT 2 (PROMPT)
EVERY NIGHT AT 8 (PROMPT)
SEATS ON SALE NOW
ORPHANS OF THE STORM
Lillian Gish and Dorothy Gish

Post Dec. 19

TREMONT THEATRE — ONLY 38 DAYS
Beginning this Evening (Christmas Eve. 18)
2 P. M. Prompt Matinee Today 2 P. M.
TICKET PRICES AT 2 (PROMPT)
EVERY NIGHT AT 8 (PROMPT)
SEATS ON SALE NOW
D. W. GRIFFITH Presents
A Dramatic Epic
ORPHANS OF THE STORM
Lillian Gish and Dorothy Gish
THE CONCERTO OPERA
ORCHESTRA OF FORTY

Transcript Feb. 4

Tonight's the Night

to see D. W. Griffith's great masterpiece "Orphans of the Storm"—Tremont Theatre.

2 P.M.——Twice Daily——8 P.M.

Feb. 7

Incomparable

in artistic splendor and dramatic interest is Griffith's masterpiece "Orphans of the Storm" at the Tremont Theatre.

2 P. M.——Twice Daily——8 P. M.

Feb. 8

A Far Step in Art

is Griffith's wonder effort "Orphans of the Storm," now at the Tremont Theatre.

2 P. M.——Twice Daily——8 P. M.

Feb. 9

An Event Unusual

in history of theatre is Griffith's marvel "Orphans of the Storm" at Tremont Theatre.

2 P. M.——Twice Daily——8 P. M.

Globe Feb. 5

Boston Jewish American Jan. 13

TREMONT THEATRE
BOSTON

יתומים
פון'ם
שטורם

2 מאל טעגליך
2 נאכמיטאג, 8 אבענד
צום ערשטען מאל
ד. וו. גריפיס
פרעזענטירט
א וואונדערבארע דראמא
סא פון די צייטען פון
דער פראנצויזישער
רעוואלוציאן מיט אלע
איהרע שרעקליכקייטען
און פאסירונגען

ליליען גיש און דאראטהי גיש

און צעהן טויזענד אנדערע. ארקעסטער פון פערציג.
אלע סיסס ריזוירווד אין סייל צוויי וואכען אין פאראויס.

Globe Feb. 9

The Tragedy of the Tyrant—

What a pitiful figure was Robespierre, the queer "sea-green formula," of whom Carlyle writes! Rising as the great figure during the French Revolution, he became a fanatic in the matter of reform! He was not bad; really overzealous for good, until his head ran away with him! He put himself above human law and beyond human sympathy! What a crash! He nearly destroyed the hope of civilization! Never has this great character of history been so forcibly brought forth as by D. W. Griffith in his triumphant masterpiece, "ORPHANS OF THE STORM," at the Tremont Theatre. Be sure and see it! Twice daily at 2 and 8 p. m.—Sundays at 3 and 8 p. m.

Traveler Dec. 29

Amusements Amusements Amusements

At Last Griffith has made one better than "The Birth of a Nation"

Every Boston Newspaper in Ecstacy Over

D. W. GRIFFITH'S

Masterful and Beauteous New Sensation

"ORPHANS OF THE STORM"

With

LILLIAN GISH and DOROTHY GISH

Ten Thousand Others

SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA OF FORTY

GLOBE says: "Griffith's 'Orphans of the Storm' his best . . . Audience murmured in ecstatic whisper, 'He has surpassed himself again.' It is a wonderful film . . . One of the best 'thrillers' ever seen on the screen . . . Like reading the most exciting novel. Every few feet something new happens . . . Great scenes."

TRANSCRIPT says: "Griffith still the master of all . . . Time and again he rises to great heights . . . A Griffith at his best . . . He sets upon the screen the rising of all Paris . . . the mad measures of the Carmagnole . . . Its vast canvas of revolt is epic compared to the ice-jam of 'Way Down East' . . . Master of his masses . . . piling thrill upon thrill . . . 'Orphans of the Storm' is his most finished, his most powerful work."

TELEGRAM says: "One would say it was impossible for D. W. Griffith to make another picture any better than his past productions, but he has accomplished this miracle and given us his masterpiece . . . 'Orphans of the Storm' is the finest tribute to art and history the motion picture world could give."

TRAVELER says: "Told with such sympathetic touch of art one becomes unconsciously lost in the story. Great scenes have been made out of every possible situation, and one sits through 2½ hours without being bored a second, and the end creeps in before one realizes it has actually arrived . . . the tear changes to a smile, or vice versa, in the twinkling of an eye."

AMERICAN says: " 'Orphans of the Storm' at Tremont Theatre is wonderful . . . Surpasses everything that he (Griffith) has ever done, and, furthermore, it is far and away the finest screen drama ever seen in this country . . . I was simply overpowered by the terrific forces this man turned loose in the theatre . . . ride to the rescue is used with enormous effect . . . remarkably human and engrossing love story."

HERALD says: "It is an engrossing play. To a moving story Mr. Griffith has added swift action, historical interest and a masterly sense of suspense and climax . . . Scenically Mr. Griffith has outdone himself."

POST says: " 'Orphans of the Storm' allures . . . finish and smoothness . . . shown last evening without a flaw . . . almost continuous action . . . displayed the unmistakable imprint of Mr. Griffith's skill."

ADVERTISER says: "D. W. Griffith has clinched his claim to be regarded as the world's master of cinema spectacles in 'Orphans of the Storm.' . . . amazing visualization."

and WINCHELL SMITH, peer of playwrights, says:

"It didn't seem possible, but Mr. Griffith has made a picture better than 'The Birth of a Nation' or 'Way Down East.' "

TREMONT THEATRE TWICE DAILY NOW

Matinees 2 P. M. (Prompt) Evenings 8 P. M.

ALL SEATS RESERVED——ON SALE TWO WEEKS IN ADVANCE

Globe Feb. 5

to red-blooded Americans--

interested in the future of their country! Do you wish to see us all led around by the nose and made tools of by scheming cliques, who always have lots of money to further their ends?

Congressman Tinkham

sounded the greatest warning in Washington Tuesday when he told members of the House of Representatives how we had been overburdened with ridiculous laws and how we had become the most notorious law ignorers in the world!

the people of France

years ago dreamed a great dream! They overthrew the rule of silly aristocrats and kings and set about to build up a genuine brotherhood! They failed! Why? They became docile and looked for empty frivolities!

scheming cliques and tyrants

then took hold! They made laws to suit a small number and chaos followed! Before the people realized their danger all government and all law was in the hands of a few to do as they pleased!

the threatening danger

of history repeating inspired D. W. Griffith with the lofty purpose to produce the greatest theatre offering the world has ever known for real Americans! It cost more than all the funny shows now in New York put together! The world was searched for data! Every possible thing done to have it correct in depth! The finest actors to be had were engaged for the various parts!

"ORPHANS OF THE STORM"

was made for people who think! It is not for spineless, namby-pamby people who rush to the theatre only for a titter or a base suggestion!

not for vapid people!

It was made at the greatest expense ever known in the history of theatricals so that people might realize the dangers threatening us! It was produced that Americans might stop and think in time to save their land from the fate that befell France!

But—

If you like artistic splendor, real thrills that menace every smoldering emotion and a tender, true heart appeal, you will enjoy every minute of "ORPHANS OF THE STORM." Nothing like it has ever been seen in a theatre!

only a few weeks more remain in which to see it in Boston. Mr. Griffith's lease of the Tremont Theatre can terminate! He wishes to extend his lease, but David Belasco and George M. Cohan have previous claims!

TWICE EVERY DAY—INCLUDING SUNDAYS

Transcript Feb. 10

Delighted Throngs

are seeing Griffith's latest triumph "Orphans of the Storm" at the Tremont Theatre.

2 P. M.——Twice Daily——8 P. M.

Traveler Feb. 11

TREMONT THEATRE SOLD OUT TIME TODAY

Matinee Today at 2 P. M.

EVERY WEEKDAY AT 2 P. M.
Every Evening at 8 P. M.

LAST 2 WEEKS!

D. W. Griffith's

New Empire of Emotions

ORPHANS OF THE STORM

NOTICE: Mr. Griffith will be able to accommodate the people of the Tremont Theatre only two more weeks. These months he has taken from 10 AM to 10 PM to be sure that the pictures of all screen masterpieces

SUNDAY AT 3 AND 8 P. M.

Herald Feb. 17

Tremont Theatre Twice Daily 2 P. M.—8 P. M. Prompt
Boston

Matinee Every Day
Every Evening

D. W. Griffith presents
A Spectacular Epic

"ORPHANS OF THE STORM"

with

LILLIAN GISH DOROTHY GISH
The Tremont Stars

LARGE SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
All Seats Reserved
Being a Success

Traveler Dec. 31

NOW TWICE EACH DAY EXCEPT SUNDAY NOW

An Enormous Success!

D. W. GRIFFITH'S

Thrilling and Enthralling

"ORPHANS OF THE STORM"

with

LILLIAN GISH DOROTHY GISH

The Tremont Stars

Biggest Crowd Sensation of All Time

TREMONT THEATRE

2 P. M. (Prompt) 8 P. M.

American Feb. 25

Positively Last Week!

(Beginning Monday)

D. W. GRIFFITH'S

Empire of New Emotions

LAST TIME — SAT'DY MAR. 4

ORPHANS OF THE STORM OR "THE TWO ORPHANS"

Monday to Sat. Twice Daily 2 P. M.-8 P. M.

Tomorrow Last Sunday 3 P. M.-8 P. M.

TREMONT THEATRE

MON., MAR. 6—TWO WEEKS ONLY—SEATS THURS.

Following His Long and Successful New York Engagement

DAVID BELASCO Presents

LIONEL ATWILL

IN "THE GRAND DUKE" A PARISIAN COMEDY By SACHA GUITRY

Supported by the Original Co., Including LINA ABARBANELL VIVIAN TOBIN MORGAN FARLEY JOHN L. SHINE

Wellesley Fri. Feb. 9

NOW 2 P.M.—TWICE EACH DAY—8 P.M. NOW

An Enormous Success!

D. W. GRIFFITH'S

Thrilling and Enthralling

"ORPHANS OF THE STORM"

With

LILLIAN GISH DOROTHY GISH

Ten Thousand Others

Greatest Cinema Sensations Of All Times

Twice Daily TREMONT THEATRE Twice Daily

BOSTON

2 P.M. (Prompt) 8 P.M.

Matinees (Exc. Sat.) 25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (A few at $1.50)

Evenings & Sat. Matinee 50c, 75c, $1, $1.50 (A few at $2.00)

ALL SEATS RESERVED—On Sale at Box Office 2 Weeks Ahead
Mail Orders Filled Add 10% for War Tax

Globe Feb. 2-8

200,000 Fathers

who read The Globe will be delighted by D. W. Griffith's wondrous empire of new emotions, "ORPHANS OF THE STORM," now at the Tremont Theatre for only a few weeks more. It will surprise them and show the possibilities of motion pictures. Seeing this beautiful, enthralling spectacle, fathers will be eager that their sons and daughters see it. Twice every day—2 and 8 P. M.

American Feb. 18

NEXT WEEK

Last Week But One!

Owing to the enormous demand special arrangements have been made to extend the engagement one week more only, ending Sat., March 4.

D. W. GRIFFITH'S

Empire of New Emotions

Ninth Week in Boston — Augmented Orchestra

ORPHANS OF THE STORM OR "THE TWO ORPHANS"

Twice Daily 2 P. M.—8 P. M. — Sundays 3 P. M.—8 P. M.

TREMONT THEATRE

WITH MUSIC AND EFFECTS THAT CANNOT BE REPRODUCED IN ANY OTHER PICTURE PRODUCTION

American Feb. 11

Last Two Weeks!

NEXT MONDAY

D. W. GRIFFITH'S

Empire of New Emotions

Eighth Week in Boston — 88th Time Today

ORPHANS OF THE STORM OR "THE TWO ORPHANS"

Twice Daily 2 P. M.-8 P. M. — Sundays 3 P. M.-8 P. M.

TREMONT THEATRE

"he has surpassed himself again"

(The Globe)

And when you say that of D. W. Griffith, it means the promised Land-of-Plenty for your heart.

It means romance, thrills, excitement, suspense—such as you have never known.

For no one in all history has created so many thrills for the theatre as this wizard of Kentucky.

Silent, . . . hidden away from the world in his studio for months . . . knowing the little things you do when no one is watching and the things that you think when no one is around . . . these little secrets of the world he spins into his golden films.

And now he has spun his greatest, the critics say greater than "The Birth of a Nation," greater than "Way Down East."

Georgeous Hypnotic Prophetic

Teeming with quick little heart throbs
Imperial with the tread of armies

The great and the small of humanity—beautiful girls laughing in festive gay scenes—and again men facing death for an ideal dream.

Unapproached Unbelievable Astounding

"The cast canvas is epic . . . thrill upon thrill" (The Telegram)

DAVID WARK GRIFFITH'S

Empire of new emotions

"Orphans of the Storm"

2 & 8 TREMONT THEATRE 8 &

MATINEE EVERY DAY

MONDAY Matinee at 2 P. M. MONDAY Night at 8 P. M.

Advertiser Feb. 20

TREMONT THEATRE — TWICE DAILY 2 P.M.

The World's Masterpiece

LAST WEEK BUT ONE

D. W. GRIFFITH'S

New Empire of Emotion

ORPHANS OF THE STORM OR "THE TWO ORPHANS"

Advertiser Feb. 26 Transcript Feb.

TREMONT THEATRE — TWICE DAILY 2 P.M. 8 P.M. PROMPT

Matinee Today at 2 P.M.

D. W. Griffith's

LAST TWO WEEKS — ORPHANS OF THE STORM

LILLIAN AND DOROTHY GISH

Today Only, Mat. & Night

TREMONT THEATRE — TWICE DAILY 2 P. M. 8 P.M. PROMPT

MATINEE TODAY at 2 P. M.

D. W. Griffith's

LAST TWO WEEKS — ORPHANS OF THE STORM

100th TIME TODAY

LILLIAN AND DOROTHY GISH

WILL BE PRESENT IN PERSON MAT. & NIGHT

Advertiser Feb. 13

TREMONT THEATRE

Matinee Today at 2 P. M.

LAST 2 WEEKS!

D. W. GRIFFITH'S

ORPHANS OF THE STORM

Post Feb. 13

TREMONT THEATRE

MATINEE TODAY AT 2 P. M.

D. W. GRIFFITH'S

LAST TWO WEEKS — ORPHANS OF THE STORM

LILLIAN & DOROTHY GISH

Globe Feb. 25

TREMONT THEATRE

MATINEE TODAY AT 2 P. M.

D. W. GRIFFITH'S

LAST TWO WEEKS — ORPHANS OF THE STORM

Globe Feb. 19

TREMONT THEATRE

MATINEE TODAY AT 2 P. M.

D. W. GRIFFITH'S

LAST TWO WEEKS — ORPHANS OF THE STORM

Post Feb. 20

TREMONT THEATRE

MATINEE TODAY AT 2 P. M.

D. W. GRIFFITH'S

LAST TWO WEEKS — ORPHANS OF THE STORM

TODAY

Globe Feb. 20

TREMONT THEATRE

MATINEE TODAY AT 2 P. M.

D. W. GRIFFITH'S

LAST TWO WEEKS — ORPHANS OF THE STORM

GRIFFITH DAY TODAY

Week in Boston

EACH NIGHT AT 8 MATINEES AT 2

— NOW AT —

TREMONT THEATRE

The Sensation of All Times!

D. W. GRIFFITH'S

MASTERFUL DRAMATIC EPIC

"ORPHANS of the STORM"

BASED ON DENNERY'S PLAY "THE TWO ORPHANS"

By Direct Arrangement with Kate Claxton

with

Lillian Gish and Dorothy Gish

Ten Thousand Other Players

Symphony Orchestra of 40

SEATS ON SALE AT BOX OFFICE 2 WEEKS AHEAD

Just say, I saw it in "THIS WEEK IN BOSTON" 11

Boston University Jan. 14

NOW TWICE DAILY TREMONT THEATRE TWICE DAILY NOW

Matinees at 2 P. M. Prompt — Evenings at 8 P. M.

The Sensation Success of all Times!

D. W. GRIFFITH

Presents

A SYMPHONY OF NEW EMOTIONS

"ORPHANS OF THE STORM"

with

LILLIAN GISH DOROTHY GISH

Ten Thousand Others.

Symphonic Color and Musical Embellishment.

ALL SEATS RESERVED - ON SALE TWO WEEKS IN ADVANCE.

Advertiser Feb. 5

only few weeks more---

All Seats, All Presentations Reserved. Now on Sale for All Remaining Showings.

Mr. Griffith unable to extend lease of Tremont Theatre owing to previous bookings for Belasco and George M. Cohan.

D. W. GRIFFITH'S

Empire of New Emotions

Seventh Week in Boston — 75th Time Today

ORPHANS OF THE STORM

OR

"THE TWO ORPHANS"

Twice Daily 2 P. M.-8 P. M. — Sundays 3 P. M.-8 P. M.

WITH

Lillian Gish Dorothy Gish

Over Ten Thousand Others

Symphony Orchestra

TREMONT THEATRE

Globe Feb. 6

Today Is Yesterday's Pupil

said wise Ben Franklin. In a cyclonic dramatic epic of color and delight D. W. Griffith shows scenes of the French Revolution in his masterful work, "ORPHANS OF THE STORM," at the Tremont Theatre, and how we can profit today from the mistakes of the past. Twice every day at 2 P. M. and at 8 P. M.—Sundays at 3 and 8 P. M.

Globe Feb 7

A minority

once brought civilization to the brink of ruin. Better see D. W. Griffith's great work of art and reason in "ORPHANS OF THE STORM" at the Tremont Theatre. You'll not regret doing so! It's wonderful! Twice each day—2 P. M. and 8 P. M.—Sundays at 3 P. M. and 8 P. M.

Harvard Advocate Feb. 20

An Emphatic, Sweeping, Sensational Success!

D. W. GRIFFITH'S

Marvelous and Beautiful New Motion Picture Epic

"ORPHANS of the STORM"

with

Lillian Gish Dorothy Gish

Ten Thousand Others

Unusual Symphonic Color and Musical Effect Embellishment

TREMONT THEATRE

NOW TWICE DAILY [Matinees at 2 P. M. Evenings at 8 P. M. Prompt] TWICE DAILY NOW

Globe Jan. 29

MATINEES EVERY DAY AT 2 P. M. PROMPT — TREMONT THEATRE Thomas B. Lothian, Manager — WEEK DAY EVENINGS AT 8 P. M. PROMPT

3 P. M.—TWO TIMES TO A (SUNDAY)—8 P.M.

D. W. Griffith's

ORPHANS OF THE STORM

Over Ten Thousand in Cast

SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Symphonic Color & Elemental Effects

Advertiser Jan. 23

Greatest of all fashion shows--

Never has such an elaborate show of fashions been seen as in D. W. Griffith's master production, "ORPHANS OF THE STORM," now showing twice daily at the TREMONT THEATRE. Costumes, bejewelled, adorning beautiful women on parade before kings; hats requiring specially built carriages; wigs that alone cost a fortune; hundreds of richly garbed women, all noted beauties of stage and screen—some leaders of society in New York and elsewhere—appear in this unrivalled spectacle of all times.

Globe Jan. 23

MATINEES EVERY DAY AT 2 P. M. PROMPT — TREMONT THEATRE — WEEK DAY EVENINGS AT 8 P. M. PROMPT

MATINEE TODAY AND EVERY DAY

D. W. GRIFFITH'S

ORPHANS OF THE STORM

Globe Feb. 5

Globe Feb. 6

Tremont Theatre

יתומים

של

שטורם

Globe Feb. 9

ORPHANS OF THE STORM

TREMONT THEATRE

יתומים

של

שטורם

Globe Feb. 9

Matinee Today at 2 P. M.

Last Week!

D. W. GRIFFITH'S

ORPHANS OF THE STORM

Herald Jan. 10

Globe Jan. 10

Why?

Earnestly, with a capacity for taking infinite pains, described by some as genius, laboring as the days and hours flew by

D. W. Griffith

builded well-knitted drama and scenes of splendor upon scenes of splendor, thrills upon thrills and withal a truly historical representation of the greatest time in the history of civilization. Like sculptors visualize their statues when yet held in crude marble, as artist shuts his eyes and dreams his picture beforehand to come from brush and palette, as the musician dreams his melody and the poet his song, so Griffith dreamed and brought forth his masterpiece,

ORPHANS OF THE STORM

He gave prismatic flashes of life, old as the Pyramids, new as urchins in the Common, apart, brilliant, living, from the years-old existence of Man. From this seeming colorless, unyielding mass and his own dreams he has evolved

The Sensation of All Times

Paris of old was rebuilt, the mad measures of the carmagnole were again called into play as when Napoleon saw his chance to build empire on the ashes of chaos. Master of his masses, Griffith worked with an army of actors, who in multitude form swerved and billowed like ocean swells. Mindful of the slightest detail of exactitude, he worked on and on until record-breaking throngs twice daily fill the

NOW TWICE DAILY TREMONT THEATRE TWICE DAILY NOW

Matinees Every Day at 2 Prompt Each Evening at 8 Prompt

in appreciation of his effort. First thoughtful Boston and next critical New York acclaims Griffith the master of his art and "ORPHANS OF THE STORM" the master effort of all time in the theatre. This wonder photoplay spectacle will be seen by every man, woman and child in Boston eventually.

All Seats Reserved Selling Two Weeks in Advance

Owing to magnitude of presentation with Griffith orchestra, elemental effect and symphonic color plan, this unusual offering cannot be shown in any other than a first class theatre.

Globe Jan. 13

TREMONT THEATRE — TWICE DAILY 2 P. M. 8 P. M. PROMPT
MATINEE TODAY
AND EVERY DAY
D. W. Griffith's
ORPHANS OF THE STORM
NOTE: Two showings each Sunday, beginning Tomorrow, Jan. 13. Matinee at 3 P. M. Night at 8 P. M.

KES DAYS P. M. PT — TREMONT THEATRE — THOMAS B. LOTHIAN, MANAGER — WEEK DAY EVENINGS AT 8 P. M. PROMPT vice Tomorrow---SUNDAY
Sunday Matinee 3 P. M.—Sunday Night 8 P. M.
TWICE EVERY DAY
D. W. Griffith's
ORPHANS OF THE STORM
Over Ten Thousand in Cast
SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Symphonic Color & Elemental Effects
NOTE:—For the benefit of out-of-town patrons, we ld suggest MAIL ORDERS. The prices for each DAILY TINEE (except Saturday) are 25c, 50c, 75c, $1 and a few at $1.50; for EVENINGS and SATURDAY MATI-S, 50c, 75c, $1, $1.50 and a very few at $2. Patrons please enclose SELF-ADDRESSED and STAMPED elope and add 10% for WAR TAX.

Post Jan. 13

TREMONT THEATRE — TWICE DAILY 2 P. M. 8 P. M. PROMPT
SUNDAY NEXT
AND EVERY DAY AT 2 & 8 P. M.
D. W. Griffith's
ORPHANS OF THE STORM
Over Ten Thousand in Cast
SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Symphonic Color & Elemental Effects

Transcript Jan. 21

MATINEES EVERY DAY AT 2 P. M. PROMPT — TREMONT THEATRE — WEEK DAY EVENINGS AT 8 P. M. PROMPT
2 P. M.—TWO TIMES EVERY SUNDAY—8 P. M.
5th Enormous Week of Success!
TWICE EVERY DAY
D. W. GRIFFITH'S
ORPHANS OF THE STORM
Over Ten Thousand in Cast
SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Symphonic Color & Elemental Effects
NOTE: Owing to elaborate musical accompaniment, this symphony orchestra, elemental effect and symphonic color embellishment, "ORPHANS OF THE STORM" can only be properly presented in a first class theatre. Its engagement at the TREMONT THEATRE is limited.

Globe Jan. 10

MATINEES EVERY DAY 2 P. M. PROMPT — TREMONT THEATRE — WEEK DAY EVENINGS 8 P. M. PROMPT
TWICE TODAY — SUNDAY
Special Sunday Matinee 3 P. M. — Sunday Night 8 P. M.
TWICE EVERY DAY
D. W. GRIFFITH'S
ORPHANS OF THE STORM
Over Ten Thousand in Cast
SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Symphonic Color & Elemental Effects
NOTE:—For the benefit of out-of-town patrons, we would suggest MAIL ORDERS. The prices for each DAILY MATINEE (except Saturday) are 25c, 50c, 75c, $1 and a few at $1.50; for EVENINGS and SATURDAY MATINEE, 50c, 75c, $1, $1.50 and a very few at $2. Patrons please enclose SELF-ADDRESSED and STAMPED envelope and add 10% for WAR TAX.

Herald

MATINEES TODAY AND EVERY DAY
D. W. GRIFFITH'S
ORPHANS OF THE STORM

ARE YOU ALWAYS ALONE?

A girl, perhaps? Slender like I am? And with ankles that look trim even in woolen hose! For mine do.

And big eyes? Blue, mine are. And when you raise them to the eyes of these men, so many, many men—do you ever—oh, once in an awful long time—get a little thrill? A warm, little thrill, that makes you think, well, perhaps he is the one—and then he isn't at all.

Does that make you feel so lonely, too? Friends are nice, and you have people to talk with, but you want someone!

I did. Henriette is my name. I was in the city alone. From the country. Everyone looked so nice.

And a man came up to me. He was a grand-looking person, gorgeously dressed, for a man. He had two watches, and I think he used a lipstick. Imagine!

He Wanted Me to Ride With Him

You should see what he rode in, gilt and lined with tapestry, and men in uniform.

I said to myself, 'Henriette, you're either mighty attractive or here's a kettle of fish not to be eaten."

And then—

Well, I woke up at a party. In a garden, a beautiful garden, hung with colored lights, and everyone in beautiful clothes; and, listen to this, four girls swimming in a fountain of wine, red wine.

I had to look after my sister. She couldn't see to go around. She was blind! And I told this man I must go to her. He acted just the way those men do that you Hate.

And I was screaming, for there were people all around who wouldn't help me.

But there was one. At first I was so frightened I didn't realize it, but he was so handsome you couldn't keep your eyes from him. He is supposed to be the handsomest man in the city, and he certainly is.

One Was Hurt Badly

He took me away, after a fight. He hurt the other man badly.

But his uncle wanted him to marry someone else. When he held me in his arms, and just pressed his face against mine, and trembled just slightly. You know what I mean! Well, I knew then he never would marry anyone else, if he couldn't marry me.

I met another man who liked me. Tall, heavy, oh, a giant of a man, with his face pitted from the fever, and a voice that sounded like a great chime. He was famous for having the most beautiful voice in the country. A great orator! And when he said even matter-of-fact things, they gave you the warmest little feeling.

They Dared All for Me

My handsome boy dared death for me. And so did my big man with the voice. They were brave, and they suffered, and if I were to tell you all—well, you wouldn't be lonely any more.

Mr. Griffith tells it for me—tells it in nearly three hours, in which you will sigh, laugh, thrill, grip your seat with suspense, and never know that five minutes are passing.

Come over, any afternoon or evening, at the Tremont Theatre. Mr. Griffith has called my story "Orphans of the Storm," taken from "The Two Orphans." You will never forget it.

Henriette Girard

"Probably the greatest photoplay ever made. . . . beautiful picture follows beautiful picture—thrill follows thrill so fast you can only slump into your seat and gasp."—New York Tribune.

"Far and away the finest screen drama ever seen in this country. . . . wonderful. . . . I was simply overpowered by the terrific forces Griffith turns loose in the theatre. . . . remarkably human and engrossing love story."—Boston American.

Popular Daily Matinees. 25c, 50c, 75c, $1, $1.50
(500 Orchestra Seats, $1.00)

Evenings & Sat. Mat., 50c, 75c, $1, $1.50, $2
(300 Orchestra Seats Each Night, $1.00)

This picture, with its special Griffith music and stage effects, can be shown only in a first-class theatre, such as the Tremont in Boston.

Italian News Jan. 21

MATINEES EVERY DAY 2 P. M. PROMPT — TREMONT THEATRE — WEEK DAY EVENINGS 8 P. M. PROMPT
THOMAS B. LOTHIAN, Manager
TWICE TOMORROW—SUNDAY
SPECIAL SUNDAY MATINEE 3 P. M.—SUNDAY NIGHT 8 P. M.
TWICE EVERY DAY
D. W. GRIFFITH'S
ORPHANS OF THE STORM
OVER TEN THOUSAND IN CAST
SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Symphonic Color & Elemental Effects

Jewish Day Jan. 16

יתומים
שטורם

TREMONT THEATRE

יתומים
שטורם

American Jan. 23

The Romance of the Riders

Listen! the rattle of drawn sabres and thunder of spurning hoofs, and the troopers are away.

"Through the streets they come, empty streets, lanes and alleys packed with swift-scattering humanity . . a lightning flash of men, horses and dust . . a whirlwind of tossing shapes and naked steel against the sky as they have breasted a rise and gained a gate.

NOW a flash of heroic galloping hoofs . . .
NOW the hard-swearing, hard-riding captain . . .
NOW the frantically silent Danton . . .
NOW a sweep about three sides of a square . . .
NOW a combat of sabre against pike and musket . . .
NOW a crashing blur behind suddenly roused roisterers . . .
NOW a final dash between lanes of hostile humanity. . .

—piling thrill upon thrill

"Never before," says the Boston Transcript, "has Mr. Griffith succeeded so thoroughly as with these last moments in

ORPHANS OF THE STORM

Tremont Theatre | Twice Daily, Including Sunday 2 P.M.-8 P.M.

Globe Jan. 16

Post Jan. 16

Your first love kiss—

Lives again—warm, trembling—richer than ever—when you see "The Love Scene That Is the Class of All Screen Love."—N. Y. Mail.

IN

D. W. GRIFFITH'S

Splendid Gorgeous Symphony of Emotions

"ORPHANS OF THE STORM"

with

Lillian Gish and Dorothy Gish

Ten Thousand Others

Excellent Symphony Orchestra

Symphonic Colors and Elemental Effects

NOW TREMONT THEATRE NOW

Matinee Every Day 2 P. M.

Every Evening at 8 P. M. (Prompt)

Transcript Jan. 20

Traveler January 20

This Is Why . . .

You have heard people say they were appalled, overwhelmed and swept out of themselves by the cyclonic emotional climaxes in

"ORPHANS OF THE STORM" WHY?

Harriette Underhill of the Tribune says: "You can only slump into your seat and gasp" WHY?

And the Sun critic's: One has to look away to keep from being entirely swept away by a flood of emotion." WHY?

Here is Griffith's Secret

Sensational . Original . Baffling . Unseen

TELLS YOU THE SECRET THAT UNCOVERS SOMETHING NEW UNDER THE SUN

It is as much what you don't see as what you do.

Behind the scenes at every performance now, sits a Griffith expert with his hand on a great keyboard.

A touch and there comes a blast from distant regions of the theatre!

Another touch! soft murmuring lights creep into your eyes! Again! And your body vibrates with something you can't define, yet know exists. A movement? Noise? MORE!

Fred McIsaac of the Boston American felt it: "I was simply overpowered by the terrific forces Griffith turns loose in the theatre"

Music, color, voices, the beat of a hundred drums, magnifiers sounding distant roars, tramping feet, the rattling rage of hoof-beats . . . all caught in the dynamic sweep of a picture as colossal as "The Birth of a Nation."

Vast-dramatic-hypnotic-thunderous

One scene lasting one half minute cost more than any two dramatic productions in New York.

The Bel-Air fete, lasting a minute and a half cost more than any four.

This production cost more than all the dramatic productions in all the theatres in the city.

Yet this most astounding theatrical entertainment ever known is given at popular prices.

Imagine these unheard-of, unbelievable effects:

The swirl of the mad dance of the Carmagnole

The golden love trumpets sounding in purple twilight

The frenzied sweep of passions through the magic gardens of De Praille.

"Something beyond the emotion of the spoken drama"

—says Archie Bell, famous Cleveland critic.

The thunder of hatred and tyranny!

The world-shaking rush of a thousand horsemen!

The hurricane of that vast, undreamed-of climax!

These you feel . . and hear . . as well as you see

This is the secret of that tremendous power that has made the sensation of the century of

D. W. Griffith's

Empire of New Emotions

Orphans of the Storm

or TWO ORPHANS

By arrangement with Rolf Cleeton

TREMONT THEATRE BOSTON

Matinees Every Day at Popular Prices

Herald Jan. 10

Globe Jan. 10

Why?

Earnestly, with a capacity for taking infinite pains, described by some as genius, laboring as the days and hours flew by

D. W. Griffith

builded well-knitted drama and scenes of splendor upon scenes of splendor, thrills upon thrills and withal a truly historical representation of the greatest time in the history of civilization. Like sculptors visualize their statues when yet held in crude marble, as artist shuts his eyes and dreams his picture beforehand to come from brush and palette, as the musician dreams his melody and the poet his song, so Griffith dreamed and brought forth his masterpiece,

ORPHANS OF THE STORM

He gave prismatic flashes of life, old as the Pyramids, new as urchins in the Common, apart, brilliant, living, from the years-old existence of Man. From this seeming colorless, unyielding mass and his own dreams he has evolved

The Sensation of All Times

Paris of old was rebuilt, the mad measures of the carmagnole were again called into play as when Napoleon saw his chance to build empire on the ashes of chaos. Master of his masses, Griffith worked with an army of actors, who in multitude form swerved and billowed like ocean swells. Mindful of the slightest detail of exactitude, he worked on and on until record-breaking throngs twice daily fill the

NOW TWICE DAILY TREMONT THEATRE TWICE DAILY NOW

Matinees Every Day at 2 Prompt Each Evening at 8 Prompt

in appreciation of his effort. First thoughtful Boston and next critical New York acclaims Griffith the master of his art and "ORPHANS OF THE STORM" the master effort of all time in the theatre. This wonder photoplay spectacle will be seen by every man, woman and child in Boston eventually.

All Seats Reserved Selling Two Weeks in Advance

Owing to magnitude of presentation with Griffith orchestra, elemental effect and symphonic color plan, this unusual offering cannot be shown in any other than a first class theatre.

ARE YOU ALWAYS ALONE?

A girl, perhaps? Slender like I am? And with ankles that look trim even in woolen hose! For mine do.

And big eyes? Blue, mine are. And when you raise them to the eyes of these men, so many, many men—do you ever—oh, once in an awful long time—get a little thrill? A warm, little thrill, that makes you think, well, perhaps he is the one—and then he isn't at all.

Does that make you feel so lonely, too? Friends are nice, and you have people to talk with, but you want someone!

I did. Henriette is my name. I was in the city alone. From the country. Everyone looked so nice.

And a man came up to me. He was a grand-looking person, gorgeously dressed, for a man. He had two watches, and I think he used a lipstick. Imagine!

He Wanted Me to Ride With Him

You should see what he rode in, gilt and lined with tapestry, and men in uniform.

I said to myself, 'Henriette, you're either mighty attractive or here's a kettle of fish not to be eaten."

And then—

Well, I woke up at a party. In a garden, a beautiful garden, hung with colored lights, and everyone in beautiful clothes; and, listen to this, four girls swimming in a fountain of wine, red wine.

I had to look after my sister. She couldn't see to go around. She was blind! And I told this man I must go to her. He acted just the way those men do that you Hate.

And I was screaming, for there were people all around who wouldn't help me.

But there was one. At first I was so frightened I didn't realize it, but he was so handsome you couldn't keep your eyes from him. He is supposed to be the handsomest man in the city, and he certainly is.

One Was Hurt Badly

He took me away, after a fight. He hurt the other man badly.

But his uncle wanted him to marry someone else. When he held me in his arms, and just pressed his face against mine, and trembled just slightly. You know what I mean! Well, I knew then he never would marry anyone else, if he couldn't marry me.

I met another man who liked me. Tall, heavy, oh, a giant of a man, with his face pitted from the fever, and a voice that sounded like a great chime. He was famous for having the most beautiful voice in the country. A great orator! And when he said even matter-of-fact things, they gave you the warmest little feeling.

They Dared All for Me

My handsome boy dared death for me. And so did my big man with the voice. They were brave, and they suffered, and if I were to tell you all—well, you wouldn't be lonely any more.

Mr. Griffith tells it for me—tells it in nearly three hours, in which you will sigh, laugh, thrill, grip your seat with suspense, and never know that five minutes are passing.

Come over, any afternoon or evening, at the Tremont Theatre. Mr. Griffith has called my story "Orphans of the Storm," taken from "The Two Orphans." You will never forget it.

Henriette Girard

"Probably the greatest photoplay ever made. . . . beautiful picture follows beautiful picture—thrill follows thrill so fast you can only slump into your seat and gasp."—New York Tribune.

"Far and away the finest screen drama ever seen in this country. . . . wonderful. . . . I was simply overpowered by the terrific forces Griffith turns loose in the theatre. . . . remarkably human and engrossing love story."—Boston American.

Popular Daily Matinees. 25c, 50c, 75c, $1, $1.50
(800 Orchestra Seats, $1.00)

Evenings & Sat. Mat., 50c, 75c, $1, $1.50, $2
(300 Orchestra Seats Each Night, $1.00)

This picture, with its special Griffith music and stage effects, can be shown only in a first-class theatre, such as the Tremont in Boston.

Globe Jan. 13

TREMONT THEATRE — TWICE DAILY 2 P. M. & 8 P. M. PROMPT
MATINEE TODAY AND EVERY DAY
D. W. Griffith's
ORPHANS OF THE STORM
NOTE: Two showings each Sunday, beginning Tomorrow, Jan. 15. Matinee at 3 P. M. Night at 8 P. M.

TREMONT THEATRE — WEEK DAY EVENINGS AT 8 P. M. PROMPT
THOMAS B. LOTHIAN, MANAGER
Twice Tomorrow---SUNDAY
Sunday Matinee 3 P. M.—Sunday Night 8 P. M.
TWICE EVERY DAY
D. W. Griffith's
ORPHANS OF THE STORM
Over Ten Thousand in Cast
SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Symphonic Color & Elemental Effects
NOTE:—For the benefit of out-of-town patrons, we would suggest MAIL ORDERS. The prices for each DAILY TWICE (except Saturday) are 25c, 50c, 75c, $1 and a few at $1.50; for EVENINGS and SATURDAY MATINEE, 50c, 75c, $1, $1.50 and a very few at $2. Patrons please enclose SELF-ADDRESSED and STAMPED envelope and add 10% for WAR TAX.

Post Jan. 13

TREMONT THEATRE — TWICE DAILY 2 P. M. & 8 P. M. PROMPT
SUNDAY NEXT
D. W. Griffith's
ORPHANS OF THE STORM
Over Ten Thousand in Cast
SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Transcript Jan. 21

MATINEES EVERY DAY AT 2 P. M. PROMPT — TREMONT THEATRE — WEEK DAY EVENINGS AT 8 P. M. PROMPT
2 P. M.—TWO TIMES EVERY SUNDAY—8 P. M.
5th Enormous Week of Success!
TWICE EVERY DAY
D. W. Griffith's
ORPHANS OF THE STORM
Over Ten Thousand in Cast
SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
NOTE: Owing to elaborate scenic equipment, large symphony orchestra, elemental effect and symphonic color arrangement, "ORPHANS OF THE STORM" can only be properly presented in a first class theatre. The engagement at the TREMONT THEATRE is limited.

Globe Jan. 14

MATINEES EVERY DAY AT 2 P. M. PROMPT — TREMONT THEATRE — WEEK DAY EVENINGS AT 8 P. M. PROMPT
TWICE TODAY — SUNDAY
Special Sunday Matinee 3 P. M. — Sunday Night 8 P. M.
TWICE EVERY DAY
D. W. Griffith's
ORPHANS OF THE STORM
Over Ten Thousand in Cast
SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
NOTE:—For the benefit of out-of-town patrons, we would suggest MAIL ORDERS. The prices for each DAILY TWICE (except Saturday) are 25c, 50c, 75c, $1 and a few at $1.50; for EVENINGS and SATURDAY MATINEE, 50c, 75c, $1, $1.50 and a very few at $2. Patrons please enclose SELF-ADDRESSED and STAMPED envelope and add 10% for WAR TAX.

Transcript

TREMONT THEATRE — TWICE DAILY 2 P. M. & 8 P. M. PROMPT
MATINEE TODAY AND EVERY DAY
D. W. Griffith's
ORPHANS OF THE STORM

Italian News Jan. 21

MATINEES EVERY DAY AT 2 P. M. PROMPT — TREMONT THEATRE — WEEK DAY EVENINGS AT 8 P. M. PROMPT
THOMAS B. LOTHIAN, Manager
TWICE TOMORROW—SUNDAY
Special Sunday Matinee 3 P. M.—Sunday Night 8 P. M.
TWICE EVERY DAY
D. W. Griffith's
ORPHANS OF THE STORM
Over Ten Thousand in Cast
SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Symphonic Color & Elemental Effects
NOTE: For the benefit of out-of-town patrons we would suggest MAIL ORDERS. The prices for each DAILY TWICE (except Saturday) are 25c, 50c, 75c, $1 and a few at $1.50; for EVENINGS and SATURDAY MATINEE, 50c, 75c, $1, $1.50 and a very few at $2. Patrons please enclose SELF-ADDRESSED and STAMPED envelope and add 10% for WAR TAX.

Jewish Day Jan. 16

יתומים
שטורם

TREMONT THEATRE

יתומים
שטורם

American Jan. 23

The Romance of the Riders

Listen! the rattle of drawn sabres and thunder of spurning hoofs, and the troopers are away.

"Through the streets they come, empty streets, lanes and alleys packed with swift-scattering humanity . . a lightning flash of men, horses and dust . . a whirlwind of tossing shapes and naked steel against the sky as they have breasted a rise and gained a gate.

NOW a flash of heroic galloping hoofs . . .
NOW the hard-swearing, hard-riding captain . . .
NOW the frantically silent Danton . . .
NOW a sweep about three sides of a square . . .
NOW a combat of sabre against pike and musket . . .
NOW a crashing blur behind suddenly roused roisterers . . .
NOW a final dash between lanes of hostile humanity. . .

—piling thrill upon thrill

"Never before," says the Boston Transcript, "has Mr. Griffith succeeded so thoroughly as with these last moments in

ORPHANS OF THE STORM

Tremont Theatre | Twice Daily, Including Sunday 2 P.M.-8 P.M.

Globe Jan. 16

Post Jan. 16

Your first love kiss—

Lives again—warm, trembling—richer than ever—when you see "The Love Scene That Is the Class of All Screen Love."—N. Y. Mail.

IN

D. W. GRIFFITH'S

Splendidly Gorgeous Symphony of Emotions

"ORPHANS OF THE STORM"

with

Lillian Gish Dorothy Gish
Ten Thousand Others

Excellent Symphony Orchestra
Symphonic Colors and Elemental Effects

NOW TREMONT THEATRE NOW

Matinee Every Day 2 P. M.

Every Evening at 8 P. M. (Prompt)

Transcript Jan. 24

A VERITABLE SENSATION!

D. W. GRIFFITH'S
The Empire of Emotions

'Orphans of Storm'

LILLIAN GISH and DOROTHY GISH

ORCHESTRA OF FORTY

Traveler January 26

This Is Why . . .

You have heard people say they were appalled, overwhelmed and swept out of themselves by the cyclonic emotional climaxes in

"ORPHANS OF THE STORM" WHY?

Harriette Underhill of the Tribune says: "You can only slump into your seat and gasp" WHY?

And the Sun critic's: One has to look away to keep from being entirely swept away by a flood of emotion." WHY?

Here is Griffith's Secret

Sensational . Original . Baffling . Unseen

TELLS YOU THE SECRET THAT UNCOVERS SOMETHING NEW UNDER THE SUN

It is as much what you don't see as what you do.

Behind the scenes at every performance now, sits a Griffith expert with his hand on a great keyboard.

A touch and there comes a blast from distant regions of the theatre!

Another touch! soft murmuring lights creep into your eyes! Again! And your body vibrates with something you can't define, yet know exists. A movement? Noise? MORE!

Fred McIsaac of the Boston American felt it: "I was simply overpowered by the terrific forces Griffith turns loose in the theatre"

Music, color, voices, the beat of a hundred drums, magnifiers sounding distant roars, tramping feet, the rattling rage of hoof-beats . . . all caught in the dynamic sweep of a picture as colossal as "The Birth of a Nation."

Vast-dramatic-hypnotic-thunderous

One scene lasting one half minute cost more than any two dramatic productions in New York.

The Bel-Air fete, lasting a minute and a half cost more than any four.

This production cost more than all the dramatic productions in all the theatres in the city.

Yet this most astounding theatrical entertainment ever known is given at popular prices.

Imagine these unheard-of, unbelievable effects:

The swirl of the mad dance of the Carmagnole

The golden love trumpets sounding in purple twilight

The frenzied sweep of passions through the magic gardens of De Praille.

"Something beyond the emotion of the spoken drama"

—says Archie Bell, famous Cleveland critic.

The thunder of hatred and tyranny!

The world-shaking rush of a thousand horsemen!

The hurricane of that vast, undreamed-of climax!
These you feel . . and hear . . as well as you see

This is the secret of that tremendous power that has made the sensation of the century of

D. W. Griffith's
Empire of New Emotions

Orphans of the Storm
or TWO ORPHANS

By arrangement with Kate Claxton

TREMONT THEATRE BOSTON

Matinees Every Day at Popular Prices

TREMONT THEATRE
THIS DAY
THIS WEEK
D. W. GRIFFITH'S
ORPHANS OF THE STORM
or "Two Orphans"

ORPHANS OF THE STORM

TREMONT THEATRE
יתומים
שטורם

Post & Globe Feb. 2

a great speech—

all Washington astounded by words of Congressman George Holden Tinkham of Massachusetts before the House on Tuesday. Quoting law violations, he said:

"If this is true, then the American Republic is not in REVOLUTION but in DISSOLUTION, not in EVOLUTION but in DEVOLUTION . . . Many causes can be assigned for this amazing, startling and portentous phenomena. One of the causes for this phenomena is undoubtedly the character of the legislation passed during the last eight or nine years by the Congress of the United States, the methods employed for its enforcement, and a consequent loss of respect by the people for these laws and for all laws . . . During these years the people have seen the Congress of the United States controlled neither by principle, courage nor unselfish devotion to the public weal, but surrendering itself and its power for the making of laws subserviently and docilely to the will of others and acting the demagogue for selfish purposes as never before. It has seen an abject and obedient Congress pass laws of profound importance dictated to it by LIBERALLY FINANCED and HIGHLY ORGANIZED MINORITIES outside of Congress, sometimes for the purely personal economic ends of the MINORITIES, sometimes sumptuary laws from a sectarian source, sometimes laws DICTATED BY BLOCS or MINORITIES within Congress itself for purely SELFISH CLASS purposes or PURPOSES PURELY of REPRISAL . . . LAWS PASSED UNDER THESE CONDITIONS CANNOT HELP LESSENING THE OBEDIENCE TO THE LAWS THEMSELVES WHICH ARE SO IMPOSED, AND, IN TURN, TO ALL LAWS."

This is the lesson D. W. Griffith seeks to drive home to the American people in producing the greatest and most costly theatre offering the world has ever known.

"Orphans of the Storm"

NOW—TWICE EACH DAY—NOW

At The TREMONT THEATRE

SEE!

How Minorities brought on the French Collapse!
How Minorities GROUND DOWN THE PEOPLE!
How Minorities can BRING CHAOS TO OUR COUNTRY!

It Is a Great Thought—You Should Not Miss Seeing It!

American Feb. 2

With No Law To Stop You What Would You Do Tonight?

The city before you—
Women . . cafes . . banks . . riches in homes and shops . . .
Take what you want—
Would you be home . . . or with your sweetheart? . . .
How about those secret wishes? . . . those half-thoughts that quiver and jump within you? . .
Take all! Take all!
There was such a day! . . .
In a great city—the smartest city . . and the wickedest . . .
No law! . . and everyone doing what he or she wanted to . . .
They danced . . . and such dancing!
They drank . . . and such drinking!
There was passion . . . but there was also faith!
Bad women . . . and beautiful—but there were good women . . . even more beautiful.
Oh that mad day!
Into it . . . from the country . . . came pretty Henriette Girard . . .
Her little love-heart brimming with sweetness . . .
For her blind orphan sister . . . for all the world.
One man stole her . . . and kissed her . . . and fell—amid wine and revelry and dancing . .
Another kissed her . . . handsomest man of millions . . . and was driven from the city . . .
The third man kissed her—Danton, a nation's hero . . . and they threatened his life!
Love! Laughter! Madness without limit! . . .
Would you have withstood it?

See it Feel it Tremble with it
Lose yourself in it Profit by it

Just as those people did in Paris as shown in that enchanting and seizing last act in D. W. Griffith's hurricane of hypnotic action at the Tremont Theatre, "Orphans of the Storm."

American January 24

DO YOU KNOW

FACTS ABOUT MAKING GRIFFITH'S LATEST MASTERPIECE

"ORPHANS OF THE STORM"

Ten months were occupied in the making.

Twenty-six tons of properties were imported from France that settings, costumes and scenes might be faithful to history.

Every scene was photographed from three to ten times.

Every scene was rehearsed from ten to three hundred times.

The wigs alone in this production cost more than the entire cost of the first five-reel picture Mr. Griffith made.

The filming was done at the great Griffith studios at Mamaroneck, New York, a 10-acre estate. This is the greatest motion picture plant in the world.

The great fountain shown in the scenes of the Bel-Air fete weighed 60 tons and cost $40,000.

The reproduction of old Paris covered 20 acres, the largest studio on river front.

The room in which is shown by Griffith the court of Louis XVI, with hundreds of finely garbed and bewigged people is an exact replica in size, paintings and minute detail of the famed great salon of the Palace of Versailles. It is the largest single set ever built within a motion picture studio. This scene alone is a case more than most entire motion pictures today.

In the construction of the scene showing old Paris and covering twenty acres, over three million feet of lumber were used. [illegible] tons of paving stones, more than [illegible] were used for paving the streets. [illegible] kegs of paint consumed and 4,000 pieces of glass required.

The Bel-Air fete scene was constructed at the Griffith studio and faithfully shows the fashions of the period. Many of the girls appearing in the scenes [illegible] the [illegible] of the Griffith studios are famous beauties of stage and screen, who are usually prominent in New York and elsewhere.

Over fifty thousand names were on the payroll for this wonder picture in the making.

"ORPHANS OF THE STORM"

[illegible] complete, easily [illegible] motion picture in days [illegible] to come to [illegible]

NOW TREMONT THEATRE NOW

2 P. M. PROMPT 8 P. M. Also Promptly Matinee and Night on Sundays

American — 93 county newspapers

TREMONT THEATRE BOSTON MASS.

2 P. M. — TWICE EVERY DAY — 8 P. M.

All Boston and Vicinity Enthralled

D. W. GRIFFITH'S

Marvelous Motion Picture Masterpiece

"Orphans of the Storm"

With

LILLIAN GISH — DOROTHY GISH

Twelve Thousand Others

SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA OF 16

Special Choral Force Detailed to Fill Mail Orders

Following Prices Include War Tax

Daily Matinees (Exc. Sat.)		Evenings and All Sat. Mts.
Orchestra		Orchestra
[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]

Picture [illegible] [illegible] Tax

Griffith Attacks Move for Federal Censorship

THE following signed statement was issued this week by D. W. Griffith addressed "To the Allied Motion Picture Interests of America:"

"Ladies and Gentlemen:

"It is reported that certain interests in the motion picture industry are encouraging a movement for Federal censorship of motion pictures.

"This question was thoroughly threshed out in an open meeting of the allied moving picture interests a few years back The National Association of the Moving Picture Industry, representing 90 per cent of the entire business, unanimously adopted a resolution that it was opposed to all forms of legalized censorship of the screen productions of this country. That resolution still stands upon the books of the association.

"It means that we ask only that same liberty under the constitution which provides for free speech, a free press and the freedom granted spoken and operatic offerings upon the stage.

"Our association unanimously held that there was no valid reason why our pictures should be singled out by a lot of busybody reformers and made the goat of stupid legislation just because it was young and growing in great popularity. There is nothing at present which warrants an alteration of that view. On the contrary much has happened in the past years and even the past month to prove the wisdom and foresight of that action.

"Censorship in the states where it has been fastened upon us has proven a farce. There are ample laws in all parts of the country to protect both the stage and screen without recourse to the prejudgment of a censor board. Dr. Crafts, one of the chief reformers, who has persistently tried to control screen legislation, admits that there are enough laws now to take care of this if these were enforced.

"I have gone into the question of state censorship at this point for a purpose. Do not let anyone humbug you that Federal censorship is the relief for this handicap to your efforts. Politicians like to have snug jobs to give out to their followers. Do not imagine for one moment that these politicians are going to surrender the sovereign rights and police powers of their respective states just because a few of our associates think they can ask the Federal government to step in and take hold of the job for them.

"Even if one were so bigoted as to subscribe to this un-American and blighting principle of Federal censorship it will be found that the state politicians are not such supine asses. We have national banking, railway, insurance and food and drug control but have the separate states surrendered their sovereign rights because these laws are upon the Federal statutes? If any one asks to tell you that the states have abandoned their railway, banking, insurance or food commissions because of these Federal laws laugh in his face and tell him to wake up.

"There is only one result that can accrue from any misguided movement to further Federal censorship and that is to create censorship in states where these proposed laws have been defeated.

"Knowing from actual experience that state censorship has been a failure and only resulted in imposing unjust limitations and burdens upon the most popular form of amusement ever discovered in the world how can anyone with a grain of mentality consistently favor Federal censorship?

"I personally have an abiding faith in the sound judgment and good taste of the American people. Thirty millions of these citizens attend the moving picture theatres of the country every month and I prefer their voice to that of all the self-appointed guardians of our morals in and out of censor boards.

"The people are growing tired of listening to the tom toms of paid reformers and agitators. Let your voice and action join in the awakening protests against this wave of paternalism in government and you will find that politicians with their ears to the ground will be slow in the future about passing unjust and discriminatory laws that hamper your actions and accomplish no good except to find snug jobs for a few henchmen.

(Signed) "D. W. GRIFFITH."

mortals trying to wrest some sport out of the summer season.

Butt, Marion Hammon and also Francis.

theatres.

FRIDAY EVENING SEPT. 3RD AT 8:05

AT THE 44TH ST. THEATRE

D.W.GRIFFITH

WILL OPEN HIS SECOND ANNUAL NEW YORK SEASON

Presenting

"WAY DOWN EAST"

A SIMPLE STORY OF PLAIN PEOPLE ELABORATED FROM THE NOVEL AND STAGE PLAY

A PRODUCTION EMBRACING the FOUR SEASONS

-with amazing storm scene at climax of last part

IT WILL BE IN 12 REELS WITH TYPICAL GRIFFITH PRESENTATION

BOX OFFICE OF THE 44TH ST. THEA. OPEN TUESDAY

ALL SEATS RESERVED · BUY IN ADVANCE · MOTOR CARS AT 1105

A. W. BAKER

11

"Way Down East" is Now Ready

Summer Amusements Out of Doors

Man Who Talks to the Whole World With Shadows Tells Secret That Led Him to Fame and Fortune

D. W. GRIFFITH, FILM CREATOR, INTERVIEWED

Man Who Gave "Birth of Nation" to the World Discusses Screen Future

PREDICTS HIGHER ART

Remarkable Personality of Dominant Figure in 'Movies' Is Revealed

By WILLIS STEELL

IF A boy hungering for knowledge back in the hills of Kentucky twenty-five years ago had been able to see for 1 or 10 cents a real ocean, with real waves breaking on the strand, or scenes from the daily life of a great city, or actual pictures of far distant Cathay, how he would have thrilled to the sight, how much he would have learned, how broad would have grown his vision?

This is what David Wark Griffith, producer of motion pictures, exclaimed about that "new form of expression," the cinema, which has come, he said, to revolutionize in a simple and natural way a world grown somewhat indifferent to its ancient teachers. He said it with no intention of defending the "movies," which, he thinks, need no defense, but to bring to minds filled to repletion and indifference with reflections of familiar scenes some notion of what the cinema carries to the prairie and the desert.

The boy to whom impersonally Mr. Griffith referred was himself, so he spoke from the heart and sincerely of what he believes the motion picture is able to do for other boys similarly situated. It was as far as he cared to go in the path of personal revelation while a very informal conversation went on the other day in his studio at Mamaroneck. And he seemed to be quite as sincere when he added that people wouldn't be keen to read any further revelations.

"The public, remembering 'The Birth of a Nation,' 'Intolerance,' 'Hearts of the World,' 'Way Down East'—to instance but a moiety of his product—believe that they have in him a maker of pictures whose chief, if not sole, purpose is not to grind out money from their pockets, but who aims to give them a degree of what for lack of a better name is called literature.

"The 'people' in spite of Verlaine and a great grist of common prose, Quincts of books, plays, moving pictures; in spite of the vulgar clamor of every form of art expression who for years would have them still the 'simple,' love literature and in some vague, but honest way, are moved by it. In moments Mr. Griffith has become a purveyor of this thing they love, he is a personality worth writing about.

GROWING FINEST TYPE OF EDUCATED ENGLISHMAN

"The man from Kentucky leans, gets, talks like anything but a man from Kentucky or what without accent passes and functions a Kentucky land man should be. Unofficially dressed but the direct, incisive and fearless talking to manner has formation in expression, he makes one think out of an Englishman at all, but of the most true of Englishmen, the type in city and town, remaining that of Robert Bakerman, but by stripping out from the true value of the stage conventionalities of that theme made it strange for a Kentucky chap to speak in such a way. It was not from any effort on his part, but from the fact that he is a product not out of the same tradition.

CHANGE FROM SIMPLE TO SOPHISTICATED

"But it was in my outer thoughts that I naked and also Twelfth Night, Shakespeare and the Shakespeare of the Elizabethan period, the Shakespeare of the Elizabethan period, the Shakespeare of the Elizabethan period,

TELEGRAM
New York City.
OCT 18 19

PLAYS and PLAYERS

On the Silver Screen.

...VERY performance of "Broken ...ssoms" at the Strand Thea... next week will be an honor ...performance in compliment to ... D. W. Griffith players now ... New York.

...nday evening—the opening showing ...ith himself will be the guest ...the Strand management.

...days Miss Lillian Gish, Mr. ...arthelmess, Mr. George Ber... ...others of the cast at present ...will receive honors from the ...

...the first time in their history ...layers that all of the Griffith ...actresses have been in any ...time to "see themselves as ...them."

LEADER
Pittsburgh, Pa. OCT 5

Girl Appears In "Broken Blossoms"

Gladys Williams

...have your ambition realized over ...t is a piece of good fortune that ...not fall to the lot of many. Miss ...ys Williams, of 2332 Buena Vista ..., Swissvale, longed for the stage. ...an advertisement in the columns ...local papers called for a young ... to appear in the prologue which ...des the showing of the D. W. ...ith production "Broken Blossoms," ... is at the Duquesne theater, in ...ond week, she responded the ...g day with a score of other ...ants. The specification called ...t of the type of Lillian Gish. ... to have the same hue of hair, ...d in height and weight and ... to a great extent facially, the ...d motion picture actress. Miss ... was the type desired and she ...ted.

TIMES
Brooklyn, N. Y.
OCT 17 1919

...Before leaving the West Coast to ...up work in his new studio at ...ake Point, Mamaroneck, N. Y. D. ...ffith completed what will proba... his sixth and last Artcraft pic... "Scarlet Days," a picturization of life in California in 1849. Richard Barthel... ...ess, remembered chiefly for his per...formance as the Chinese poet in "Broken Blossoms," plays the part of a lively young Spaniard, who is a scout of Robin Hood of the West; Eugenia Besserer, who has had wide experience on stage and screen, and was last seen in "Ravished Armenia," has an important role as a mother, and others in the cast are Hatch Graves, Clarine Seymour, Carol Dempster, George Fawcett, and Walter Long.

Incidentally "Broken Blossoms," which was at the George M. Cohan Theatre for nearly ten weeks, beginning May 18 last, will come to the Strand next week.

Exhibitors Trade Review
New York City
OCT 4 - 1919

"Broken Blossoms" Sales Make Record in South

...

REVIEW
...ss New York City
OCT 18 1919

LILLIAN GISH.

Star of D. W. Griffith's "Broken Blossoms" at the Strand Next Week.

TIMES
...ress New York City
OCT 12 1919

IN THE NEWS NET.

D. W. GRIFFITH has come East to produce pictures, leaving the West Coast flat, or mountainous, as it may be. He arrived in New York last week and will begin work soon in his new studio at Orienta Point, Mamaroneck, N. Y., where he expects to turn out, first, the three photoplays called for by his contract with the First National Exhibitors Circuit, and then unnumbered pictures for the United Artists Corporation, formed by himself, Charlie Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks, and Mary Pickford. So far his contracts with Artcraft and First National have not permitted him to work for his own organization, although the United Artists Corporation has become the distributor of "Broken Blossoms," which appeared unexpectedly in the middle of a series of Artcraft pictures and by some special dispensation remained in Mr. Griffith's hands.

Before leaving the West Coast Mr. Griffith completed what will probably be his sixth and last Artcraft picture, "Scarlet Days," a picturization of life in California in 1849. Richard Barthelmess, remembered chiefly for his performance as the Chinese poet in "Broken Blossoms," plays the part of a lively young Spaniard, who is a scout of Robin Hood of the West; Eugenia Besserer, who has had wide experience on stage and screen, and was last seen in "Ravished Armenia," has an important role as a mother, and others in the cast are Hatch Graves, Clarine Seymour, Carol Dempster, George Fawcett, and Walter Long.

Incidentally "Broken Blossoms," which was at the George M. Cohan Theatre for nearly ten weeks, beginning May 18 last, will come to the Strand next week.

TRIBUNE
...ress: Minneapolis, Minn.
SEP 28 1919

Griffith and Brothers

The name of D. W. Griffith, a worthy certain expression, will have after it hereafter that of Barry Mark Griffith, popular director of the screen. Although Griffith is reading in New Orleans with the rights of this factory, he will, it is said, place an United Capital in the Brothers's enterprise. In regard of this the Griffith Brothers are stage and screen actors, and have been in Hollywood Arizona, in important parts for a number of years. The Griffith Brothers are George Fawcett and Walter Long.

NEW YORK CHRONICLE
...ress: New York City
OCT 11 1919

Motion Picture News
New York City
OCT 4 - 1919

Police
New York City
OCT 11

EVENING MAIL
New York City
OCT 10

Times
Hartford, Conn.
OCT 8 - 19

Reproduction of a Full Page Advertisement of D. W. Griffith's "Broken Blossoms" which Appears in The Saturday Evening Post, dated October 18th.

What Happened on the Night of May Thirteenth?

Did the Film Advance in Power Beyond the Stage?

Was the Eighth Art Born?

"ON that night the screen jumped five years," says The Literary Digest, and "With the showing of 'Broken Blossoms' a new art indeed arrived, an art as important as music or poetry; and David Wark Griffith immortalized himself," adds Charles Hanson Towne, editor of McClure's Magazine. "Broken Blossoms," according to Amy Leslie of the Chicago News, "is an eloquent and decisive flight beyond the speaking stage."

"It is the most beautiful motion picture we have ever seen, or ever expect to see; and if we were a director, we should give up all idea of ever trying to be original and spend all our time trying to do something as nearly as possible like this wonderful, fragile thing. Don't miss it, oh, please don't miss it!" urges Harriet Underhill of the New York Tribune.

Percy Hammond, writing in the Chicago Tribune, notes that "never in the annals of theatrical doxology have such hosannas been raised," and Ashton Stevens of the Chicago Examiner refers to it "As quick as a nerve and as close as a sonnet, it may not be everybody's picture, but we should be sorry to be one for whom it is not."

"I am a seasoned theater goer, a man of the theater myself, grown ripe in the profession, and my eyes have witnessed the dramas of many countries; but in many a year, I have not been so moved, so stirred as by this lyric masterpiece," declares Herman Devries in the Chicago Examiner. The New York Sun acknowledges it to be "the most artistic photoplay yet produced," and the New York Telegram goes further and says "it is as if Dickens had spoken by means of the camera. Moreover there is a glamour as if Pierre Loti or Victor Hugo had joined forces with Mr. Griffith. Is it any wonder it is the masterpiece of the films?"

"Such art, so real one can think only of the classics and of the masterly paintings remembered through the ages, so exquisite, so fragile, so beautifully and poetically fragrant is 'Broken Blossoms,'" is the tribute paid by Louella Parsons of the New York Telegraph.

New York Paid $2.50 to See It, Says Current Opinion

"Mr. Griffith has brought out another film to intrigue the public and amaze his rivals; and sophisticated New Yorkers are only too willing to pay $2.50 a seat and war tax for the privilege of judging it," according to Current Opinion. The best seats sold for $3.00. "It is a motion picture that converts dramatic critics, to whom the film is an anathema, into film fanatics," admits Charles Collins of the Chicago Post.

"It would be impossible for the greatest master of languages to picture the emotions as Mr. Griffith has perpetuated them. He has far exceeded the power of the written word in 'Broken Blossoms,'" writes Louis Gardy in the New York Call. "Mr. Griffith should think of a new name other than photoplay, for his productions are so different from other directors' that they require a separate classification," says the New York Herald.

The Creator is David Wark Griffith

"Mr. Griffith," states the Chicago News, "is the most imaginative and sane American who ever revolutionized the theater when it needed an emancipator." And Virginia Tracy, writing in the New York Tribune, adds "The maker of 'The Birth of a Nation,' 'Intolerance,' 'Hearts of the World,' and now 'Broken Blossoms'—this man could make a world."

Virginia Dale of the Chicago Journal advances the opinion that "Griffith stands alone," and Mae Tinee, in the Chicago Tribune, says "Again he has shown them all how to do it." And "with a vision even bigger than his tools," thinks Herman Devries in the Chicago Examiner. "Yet here is an amazing thing for us to ponder—that Griffith is the only living American to conquer his art," states the Los Angeles Times, and referring to the art of motion picture productions, the New Republic says "Mr. Griffith is the great creator and inventor of its youth, and still remains the dominant leader."

What Griffith Has Achieved With His Plays

"Lillian Gish arrives in 'Broken Blossoms' as a great tragedienne," is the statement of Herman Devries, the well-known critic, writing in the Chicago Examiner. Percy Hammond of the Chicago Tribune was so impressed with her that he wrote "In case you have good taste in acting, you will enjoy her When upon the stage, was there ever a better picture of absolutely untheatrical terror, which is a difficult emotion of the drama, than when Miss Gish hides in the closet?" "She ranks as one of the rare great screen actresses," thinks Louis Gardy of the New York Call, and the New York Times adds that "with a rôle so difficult as to be beyond the reach of almost any actress one can call to mind, it is well within her grasp."

The New York Sun notes that "as the mystic Chinese lover of gentle spirit, Richard Barthelmess played with a delicacy of feeling and sense of the Oriental character that distinguishes him." "He throws a haunting spell of poetry over the whole play; his long, deep eyes weep without tears as his poetry drips honey without words," is the tribute paid him by the Chicago News. "He conveys the part better than any other screen player one can call to mind," writes Thomas Oliphant of the New York Mail.

"No actor, not even Lynn Harding, could so impudently materialize the father as Donald Crisp," according to the Chicago News. "And he does notable work," adds the New York American.

D. W. Griffith, Originator and Leader

Since the days when Mr. Griffith originated the technique that marked the first advance in the higher development of motion pictures, his creations have been and are the best. His vision foresaw the screen as it is today, and his efforts have been largely responsible for changing what was a novelty in the early days, into a great art.

The supremacy of Griffith films is expressed in the fact that they are the only films shown around the world as special productions. In emphasizing this, the Washington Herald states, "Again and again Mr. Griffith has proved he is the only producer who can make $2.00 pictures for the large theatres and KEEP THEM THERE." During the past six years, he has made "The Birth of a Nation," "Intolerance," "Hearts of the World," "Broken Blossoms," and five of a short-story series.

All Griffith Films are signed with the trademark "D. G." and the name "Griffith," and none are genuine without them.

Whatever your personal opinion may be, to be abreast of the times you must see "the eighth art," of which "Broken Blossoms" is the only expression.

"Broken Blossoms" will be distributed by the United Artists' Corporation and may be seen in many of the largest motion picture theaters during the week of October 20th.

NEW YORK
ESTABLISHED 1881
From CHRONICLE
CHICAGO, ILL.
OCT 11 1919

D. W. GRIFFITH AND FIVE SCENES FROM "BROKEN BLOSSOMS"

THE GRAND DISTINCTION IS THE FACT OF THE GRIFFITH STORY IS TO BE PRESENTED IN DUPLICATE IN THREE ACTUAL EXPERIENCES. THE NEW YORK OPENING OF THE STAR IS SCHEDULED TO BE LONG AND LONG AND LONG AGAIN. THOSE WHO ARE ENTERTAINING THEIRSELF THROUGH THE GRIFFITH PRODUCTION OF BLOSSOMS.

Griffith Film Given Pre-Release

O... Big Four Inaugurates Its Distribution in Pittsburgh

...

TRIBUNE
New York OCT 19 1919

Appealing in the Film "Broken Blossoms"

Lillian Gish

CHRONICLE-TELEGRAPH
Pittsburg, Pa.
SEP 26

WANTED—A BEAUTIFUL GIRL WITH LONG GOLDEN TRESSES

Maid Who Fills Requirements May Become Future Movie Star.

MUST BE A GENUINE BLONDE

Are you a beautiful girl, with long, golden hair? If you are and would like to have the distinct honor of appearing under the management of D. W. Griffith, the great motion picture producer, here is your opportunity. The following help-wanted advertisement appears in today's Chronicle Telegraph:

"Wanted—Girl of exceptional beauty and form. Must be genuine blonde, with long, golden hair, to appear in acted prologue in D. W. Griffith's 'Broken Blossoms' at Duquesne Theater. Apply 10 a. m., Saturday, to Robert Edgar Long, stage entrance, Duquesne Theater."

Not only will Pittsburgh's beautiful girl, whoever she may be, have the honor of appearing under the Griffith banner, but she will be seen on the same program with Lillian Gish and Richard Barthelmess. Of course they will be on the screen, but she will share honors with them, for Mr. Griffith considers the acted prologue that precedes "Broken Blossoms" of equal importance with the picture itself.

Robert Edgar Long, personal representative of Mr. Griffith, arrived in Pittsburgh yesterday to select the blond beauty who will appear in the prologue. He stated that the girl chosen might be employed permanently by Mr. Griffith, and in all probability would be engaged to appear in the prologue of "Broken Blossoms" in other cities. Then, too, if she proves herself an actress, she may have an opportunity to appear in some future Griffith production.

From Gazette Times
Pittsburg, Pa
OCT 5 1919

Herald
Pittsburgh, Pa.
OCT 12

GRIFFITH IN NEW YORK.

David W. Griffith arrived in New York from Los Angeles on Tuesday, October 7, and went directly to his new studios at Mamaroneck, N. Y. He was accompanied by his entire staff of players and executives and will make his permanent producing headquarters at Mamaroneck. In the party were Lillian Gish, Robert Harron, Kate Bruce, George Fawcett and his other players. Richard Barthelmess was already here, having chosen to spend his vacation in New York.

And while we are on the subject of D. W. Griffith, Albert Grey, his general manager, is pointing with pride to a telegram he received yesterday from W. H. Cline of Cline's auditorium, Los Angeles, where "Broken Blossoms" has been playing. On Saturday, September 27, the day's receipts at Cline's was sold for the matinee and sold in the evening, making a total of $2767 for the two showings. In his telegram to Mr. Grey, Manager Cline said:

"This is the most money ever taken for any picture on two shows in one day. When I booked it I knew Broken Blossoms was the most artistic film ever shown, but I did not dream it had such a tremendous drawing power. Our books show that receipts for any picture we ever had, including all Griffith's, broke records—Birth of a Nation, Hearts of the World, Theatre of the World."

Records from Pittsburg, where "Broken Blossoms" is having a popular showing this week, indicate a record attendance at $2.50 prices. It is during the Thanksgiving period under the direction of Richard A. Ditch.

TRIBUNE
...ress New York City
OCT 20

EVENING WORLD
New York City
OCT 15

From Gazette Times
Pittsburg, Pa.
OCT 5 1919

From American
New York City

News
Chicago, Ill.
OCT 9 - 19

Tribune
Chicago, Ill.
OCT 9

What Happened on the Night of May Thirteenth?

Did the Film Advance in Power Beyond the Stage?

Was the Eighth Art Born?

"ON that night the screen jumped five years," says The Literary Digest, and "With the showing of 'Broken Blossoms' a new art indeed arrived, an art as important as music or poetry; and David Wark Griffith immortalized himself," adds Charles Hanson Towne, editor of McClure's Magazine. "Broken Blossoms," according to Amy Leslie of the Chicago News, "is an eloquent and decisive flight beyond the speaking stage."

"It is the most beautiful motion picture we have ever seen, or ever expect to see; and if we were a director, we should give up all idea of ever trying to be original and spend all our time trying to do something as nearly as possible like this wonderful, fragile thing. Don't miss it, oh, please don't miss it!" urges Harriet Underhill of the New York Tribune.

Percy Hammond, writing in the Chicago Tribune, notes that "never in the annals of theatrical doxology have such hosannas been raised," and Ashton Stevens of the Chicago Examiner refers to it "As quick as a nerve and as close as a sonnet, it may not be everybody's picture, but we should be sorry to be one for whom it is not."

"I am a seasoned theater goer, a man of the theater myself, grown ripe in the profession, and my eyes have witnessed the dramas of many countries; but in many a year, I have not been so moved, so stirred as by this lyric masterpiece," declares Herman Devries in the Chicago Examiner. The New York Sun acknowledges it to be "the most artistic photoplay yet produced," and the New York Telegram goes further and says "it is as if Dickens had spoken by means of the camera. Moreover there is a glamour as if Pierre Loti or Victor Hugo had joined forces with Mr. Griffith. Is it any wonder it is the masterpiece of the films?"

"Such art, so real one can think only of the classics and of the masterly paintings remembered through the ages, so exquisite, so fragile, so beautifully and poetically fragrant is 'Broken Blossoms,'" is the tribute paid by Louella Parsons of the New York Telegraph.

New York Paid $2.50 to See It, Says Current Opinion

"Mr. Griffith has brought out another film to intrigue the public and amaze his rivals; and sophisticated New Yorkers are only too willing to pay $2.50 a seat and war tax for the privilege of judging it," according to Current Opinion. The best seats sold for $3.00. "It is a motion picture that converts dramatic critics, to whom the film is an anathema, into film fanatics," admits Charles Collins of the Chicago Post.

"It would be impossible for the greatest master of languages to picture the emotions as Mr. Griffith has perpetuated them. He has far exceeded the power of the written word in 'Broken Blossoms,'" writes Louis Gardy in the New York Call. "Mr. Griffith should think of a new name other than photoplay, for his productions are so different from other directors' that they require a separate classification," says the New York Herald.

The Creator is David Wark Griffith

"Mr. Griffith," states the Chicago News, "is the most imaginative and sane American who ever revolutionized the theater when it needed an emancipator." And Virginia Tracy, writing in the New York Tribune, adds "The maker of 'The Birth of a Nation,' 'Intolerance,' 'Hearts of the World,' and now 'Broken Blossoms'—this man could make a world."

Virginia Dale of the Chicago Journal advances the opinion that "Griffith stands alone," and Mae Tinee, in the Chicago Tribune, says "Again he has shown them all how to do it." And "with a vision even bigger than his tools," thinks Herman Devries in the Chicago Examiner. "Yet here is an amazing thing for us to ponder—that Griffith is the only living American to conquer his art," states the Los Angeles Times, and referring to the art of motion picture productions, the New Republic says "Mr. Griffith is the great creator and inventor of its youth, and still remains the dominant leader."

What Griffith Has Achieved With His Players

"Lillian Gish arrived in 'Broken Blossoms' as a great tragedienne," is the statement of Herman Devries, the well-known critic, writing in the Chicago Examiner. Percy Hammond of the Chicago Tribune was so impressed with her that he wrote "In case you have good taste in acting, you will enjoy her. When upon the stage, was there ever a better picture of absolutely untheatrical terror, which is a difficult emotion of the drama, than when Miss Gish hides in the closet?" "She ranks as one of the rare great screen actresses," thinks Louis Gardy of the New York Call, and the New York Times adds that "with a rôle so difficult as to be beyond the reach of almost any actress one can call to mind, it is well within her grasp."

The New York Sun notes that "as the mystic Chinese lover of gentle spirit, Richard Barthelmess played with a delicacy of feeling and sense of the Oriental character that distinguishes him." "He throws a haunting spell of poetry over the whole play; his long, deep eyes weep without tears as his poetry drips honey without words," is the tribute paid him by the Chicago News. "He conveys the part better than any other screen player one can call to mind," writes Thomas Oliphant of the New York Mail.

"No actor, not even Lynn Harding, could so impudently materialize the father as Donald Crisp," according to the Chicago News. "And he does notable work," adds the New York American.

D. W. Griffith, Originator and Leader

Since the days when Mr. Griffith originated the technique that marked the first advance in the higher development of motion pictures, his creations have been and are the best. His vision foresaw the screen as it is today, and his efforts have been largely responsible for changing what was a novelty-in-the early days, into a great art.

The supremacy of Griffith films is expressed in the fact that they are the only films shown around the world as special productions. In emphasizing this, the Washington Herald states, "Again and again Mr. Griffith has proved he is the only producer who can make $2.00 pictures for the large theatres and KEEP THEM THERE." During the past six years, he has made "The Birth of a Nation," "Intolerance," "Hearts of the World," "Broken Blossoms," and five of a short-story series.

All Griffith Films are signed with the trademark "D. G." and the name "Griffith," and none are genuine without them.

Whatever your personal opinion may be, to be abreast of the times you must see "the eighth art," of which "Broken Blossoms" is the only expression.

"Broken Blossoms" will be distributed by the United Artists' Corporation and may be seen in many of the largest motion picture theaters during the week of October 20th.

From RECORD
Address Philadelphia, Pa.
Date OCT 12 19

GRIFFITH IN NEW YORK

Has Deserted Los Angeles and Has Studios on Big Estate.

David Wark Griffith, protagonist of the photoplay and creator of such productions as "The Birth of a Nation," "Intolerance," "Hearts of the World" and "Broken Blossoms," has arrived in New York. All his future productions will be made there. He has literally forsaken Los Angeles. It was at No. 11 East Fourteenth street, New York, where Griffith first attracted attention by the productions he turned out for the old Biograph Company. He returns to Orienta Point, Mamaroneck, N. Y., on the estate of the late Henry M. Flagler, where there has been erected a group of studio buildings on a "location" that cost nearly a million dollars. Griffith's first operations at Mamaroneck will be the production of a series of special feature pictures for the First National Exhibitors' Circuit and for the United Artists' Corporation.

From Morning Telegraph
New York City
OCT 14 1919

Lillian Gish Arrives.

Despite all stories to the contrary, and all other reports, Lillian Gish did not arrive in town until Sunday. She and her mother came in on the Twentieth Century and are domiciled at the Commodore. It is the custom of D. W. Griffith to rehearse all his characters except the principals, not bringing them in until the support is well versed in its roles. All last week Mr. Griffith had been rehearsing the rest of his company in the ballroom at the Claridge, using that until his new studio is in readiness.

News
Baltimore, Md.
OCT 18 1919

CLOSE-UP VIEWS

DAVID W. GRIFFITH arrived in New York from Los Angeles to make his production headquarters here in the East.

Robert Harron, Clarine Seymour and Kate Bruce are expected in New York today from the coast; Lillian Gish and her mother will arrive here on Sunday, while Dorothy Gish will, for the present remain on the coast, where she is making pictures.

HERALD
Washington, D. C.
Oct-9-19

Griffith Quits California As Producing Center

With no wide heralding, such as might have preceded the arrival of so prominent a figure of the theater, David Wark Griffith, protagonist of the photoplay and creator of such productions as "The Birth of a Nation," "Intolerance," "Hearts of the World," and "Broken Blossoms," quietly slipped into New York last Monday morning.

There is more than passing significance to this event, for Mr. Griffith does not come to New York as a visitor this time. He will not hurriedly "put on" a Griffith production and as hurriedly steal away to California. He comes to New York to stay. All his future productions will be made in New York. He has literally forsaken Los Angeles for the city where he first achieved the success that since has opened into real achievement in the world of the screen.

It was at No. 11 East Fourteenth street where D. W. Griffith first attracted attention by the productions he turned out for the old Biograph Company. But it is not to that Fourteenth street that he returns, but to Orienta Point, Mamaroneck, N. Y., on the estate of the late Henry M. Flagler. Standard Oil money has been erected a group of studio buildings, and here, it is hinted that just north $1,000,000 the future Griffith productions will be made.

Since this migration from the Pacific coast to America's Riviera, another picture player with a world wide reputation in the strong production of the screen, prefers to be associated with Griffith.

It is authorized for the statement that Griffith will make New York his home, and that he will never come back to California except for a visit. He has purchased a home in Los Angeles, and has given instructions that it be disposed of.

Griffith's first operations at Mamaroneck will be the production of a series of special feature pictures for the First National Exhibitors' Circuit and for the United Artists' Corporation.

Journal
Kansas City, Mo.
OCT 9 - 1919

Griffith Comes Home

D. W. Griffith, producer of "Broken Blossoms," "Hearts of the World," "Intolerance" and "The Birth of a Nation," has arrived in New York from Los Angeles. He will make his home in New York and will make his productions there. He has purchased a home in Los Angeles.

Evening Public Ledger
Philadelphia, Pa.
OCT 13 1919

From American
New York City

On the Screens at the Leading Theatres

D. W. GRIFFITH'S masterpiece, "Broken Blossoms," opened a week's engagement at the Strand Theatre yesterday.

The same prologue of suggestion and color, and the original musical score heard at the time of the picture's premier at the George M. Cohan Theatre last Summer, are again offered with the presentation, making the engagement doubly notable.

Of the picture, it is such a classic as to make reviewing a dignified, serious occupation. It is the occasion one takes the screen skeptic to view, the happy hunting ground for people who ken of the cinema's power and possibilities, but who, in their faith, are sorely tried by reels and reels of piffle on the market.

The work of Lillian Gish as the love-starved child again reminds one that where else in the whole world of players could one find another possessed with the ability to so characterize, while Richard Barthelmess and Donald Crisp stand mighty in the play's structure.

The orchestra, under the baton of Carl Edouarde, rises to fine heights in the rendition of three numbers from the "Peer Gynt Suite," while dainty Eldora Stanford sings charmingly from one of the "Red Mill" melodies.

106-110 SEVENTH AVE.
NEW YORK
ESTABLISHED 1881
From Eve
CHICAGO, ILL.
OCT 18 1919

Bookings Heavy on "Broken Blossoms"

"Broken Blossoms," the D. W. Griffith production which played at $2 admission prices at legitimate theatres in Chicago, New York, Philadelphia and other cities and is now offered exhibitors on the United Artists schedule, will begin a three weeks engagement at the Randolph theatre, Chicago, on October 19.

This will be followed by a week at the Castle theatre, after which the picture will open in the neighborhood theatres, the Central Park, Riveria, Woodlawn and Peoples. It will then play three-day engagements at each of the houses composing the Lubliner & Trinz and Asher Bros. chains. Twenty prints will be playing simultaneously in Chicago by the week of November 16.

m TELEGRAM
ress: New York City.
e OCT 21

"Scarlet Days," a new D. W. Griffith production, will be released as a Paramount-Artcraft picture in November. "Scarlet Days" is a tale of the olden West, and included in the cast are Richard Barthelmess, Eugenie Besserer, Clarine Seymour, Ralph Graves, George Fawcett, Estelle Dempster, Walter Long and Herbert Sutch.

From Illustrated News
New York City
OCT 17 1919

News About Movies

D. W. Griffith, while awaiting the installation of a heating system in his new studios at Mamaroneck, N. Y., has been using the main ballroom of the Hotel Claridge for rehearsals. Nearly all the prominent Griffith players are at present in New York.

BROKEN BLOSSOMS

D. W. GRIFFITH'S art masterpiece, "Broken Blossoms," is exactly as presented for one hundred and thirty-seven times at the Geo. M. Cohan Theatre, is this week's offering at the Strand Theatre, Broadway and 47th Street.

Of this production the New York Tribune says: "When we saw 'Broken Blossoms' first we wrote of it, 'The most beautiful picture we ever have seen,' and nothing has appeared since to make us change our mind."

"BROKEN BLOSSOMS" is the only motion picture ever shown in New York at $3 a seat, and this week's showing at the Strand is the first at popular prices, there being no advance over the usual Strand prices.

Owing to the unprecedented demand for seats patrons are urged to attend the MATINEES DAILY.

STRAND

Public Ledger
Philadelphia, Pa
OCT 19 1919

Evening Star
New York City

Evening Star
New York City

AT THE STRAND

From American

From Morning Telegram
New York City

ON THE SCREEN.

By ALISON SMITH.

The big studio was almost empty except for a few stage hands and "extras" huddled together in a Rembrandt group in the shadows. It was dark too, save for an orange splash of light which brought out the set in the centre of the room. A Hawaiian set it was, blazing and vivid like a Winslow Homer sketch—a thatched hut made of driftwood, a table covered with native dishes and around it three young people in native costume eating poi.

As I drew nearer I saw that the three figures were Richard Barthelmess, Claurine Seymour, and Carol Demster. They were talking in undertones, but I gathered that they were discussing the shipwreck that has just tossed them up on the sands. And in one corner, with a green shade over his eyes, stood David Wark Griffith watching the set with the detached air of a slightly bored spectator.

The scene went on without interruption until one of the girls raised her eyes in an expression which was a shade melodramatic. And suddenly the spectator turned into the director and raised his hand and his voice and pleaded:—

"No acting, please, children; no acting."

Whereupon the "children" dropped again into their natural rôles and the scene went on. And not even the unnatural, violet glare of the lights nor the grinding of the camera could make it seem anything but real.

After it was finished Mr. Griffith picked his way through the gloom to my corner and we talked. I told him that his plea for "no acting" was the most characteristic thing I had heard about his work.

"They know what I mean," he said calmly. "The first thing they learn in my studio is not to attempt to show any emotion that they do not feel. I can't have anybody 'registering' anything while I'm working. If they can't feel the rôle as a human being they can't play it at all. But those tricks of the actor's trade are the hardest things to unlearn."

I recalled Heywood Broun's remark that a certain ingénue thought innocence was something you did with your neck.

Mr. W. grinned. "I've met them like that," he admitted, "and others who think brutality is something you do with your chin and benevolence something you do with your eyebrows. They try to get their effects with their facial muscles instead of with their imagination."

It is this uncanny ability to deal with the emotions of his people instead of with their mechanical gestures that has kept Griffith and his pictures years ahead of any other director since the game began.

He is sub-consciously a hypnotist, although he would roar with derision if you told him so. But nothing else can explain his genius for making anybody believe anything because he tells them it is so.

"They are taking your father away," he told Carol Demster. "He will never come back any more." The words meant nothing to Carol, who knew perfectly well that "they" were doing nothing of the kind to her father. But, at the quiet words in that tense voice, the big tears welled up in her eyes. And the unimpressionable Bitzer went on grinding out a sob-scene which couldn't be anything but real without benefit of glycerine.

Even when you meet him casually, he unconsciously directs you as if you were one of the "children." "Sit down in that chair," he will say. "Not that one, the one nearer the set. Now wait there and don't move till I come back." And there you wait and would wait till sundown because he told you to. You can't analyze it, but it is the same thing that would send his actors into a fiery barrage or over the roofs of Babylonian walls at his direction.

He works with human beings and not with "marvellous scenic effects" and thunderstorms twice as large and real as nature, and luxurious interiors which rival the glory that was Greece. And the keynote of his work is summed up in that one laconic direction:—

"No acting, please, no acting."

EVENING SUN
New York City
DEC 13 1919

TRADE REVIEW FEB 7

"Rainbow Isle" is Film Griffith Took in Bahamas

"Rainbow Isle" is the tentative name of D. W. Griffith's second production for the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, to be released during February. This is the production on which Mr. Griffith was at work last December when his party experienced a harrowing trip from Miami Florida to the Bahama Islands where the final scenes were secured.

Among the prominent players who will appear in this latest of the Griffith features are Clarine Seymour, Richard Barthelmess, Creighton Hale, Anders Randolph, Kate Bruce, Porter Strong, Herbert Sutch, Florence Short, and Walter James.

FEB 7
TRADE REVIEW

Griffith Loans Fawcett for Dorothy Gish Film

George Fawcett, one of the distinguished actors of the American stage, and for a number of years chief character actor in the screen productions of D. W. Griffith, has been loaned by Mr. Griffith to the Dorothy Gish Company to direct Miss Gish in her forthcoming Paramount-Artcraft production. "Her Majesty." Among those already engaged for principal parts are Ralph Graves, William Riley Hatch, George A. Siegmann and Marie Burke.

DRAM. MIRROR
FEB. 5

To Direct Dorothy Gish

George Fawcett has been loaned by D. W. Griffith to the Dorothy Gish Company to direct Miss Gish in her forthcoming Paramount-Artcraft production, "Her Majesty." Among those already engaged for principal parts are Ralph Graves, William Riley Hatch, George A. Siegmann and Marie Burke.

Mabel Normand, Comedienne

Goldwyn Pictures Star Began her Screen Career With the Biograph, With D. W. Griffith as her Director.

Some people, not satisfied with getting a hammer-lock on fame, manage also to obtain a head-lock to make their hold secure. For instance, Mabel Normand, Goldwyn star and present heroine of "Jinx," not satisfied with being one of the most celebrated screen actresses had to go out and discover Charlie Chaplin, thus assuring herself of a double immortality. Yet few people know that it was the inimitable boy-clown of the screen who first recognized the merits of the funniest man in the world.

Mabel Normand was born in Atlanta, Ga. One of its principal exports to begin days was a hospital young lady with deep brown eyes and a full rounded mouth, with soft hair usually put "up" so that people might think her mature. This attractive young lady left the scene of her infancy to have, how to paint, having received nothing in daughter from Mother—you know, but the art centre of the New York City. There to work the mystery of life and the humanity of color. Like so many people with talent she was serious minded, and in order to show a living with the method she learned a month going for work artists in Times Square, the great home, and Times Square was the Mecca of the world. It was the work of the Photograph. It was the work of the

ONE OF FILMDOM'S HOYDENS.

Mabel Normand. Perhaps above picture, taken in her field, is one of the highest priced screen actresses in the world. The latest picture is "Jinx."

News
Chicago, Ill.

PIONEER PRESS
St. Paul, Minn.

40

Lady Diana Cooper—The Most Famous of English Beauties

Who Is to Act, in America, in Motion Pictures Under the Direction of D. W. Griffith

DEC 14 1919
Times
New York City

PICTURE PLAYS AND PEOPLE.

VICTOR HUGO'S "Toilers of the Sea" will be put on the screen by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. Definite details of the production have not yet been decided upon. Screen versions of "Les Miserables" have been made in this country and France, but others of Victor Hugo's works have not been cinematically treated.

The towns of Westchester county may look to expected to take place in the motion picture war. D. W. Griffith has moved his studio from Los Angeles to Mamaroneck. It is the director's plan, he announced, to try out his productions before releasing them for regular run and subsequent runs. Thus Yonkers and the Bronx, N.Y., now the leading motion producing cities, will be the first to see the Griffith pictures.

Angeles, New York, and Boston had a view of them. And now Mr. Griffith is slipping over to Mount Vernon and Yonkers with his pictures. Recently the Westchester Theatre, in the former town, and the Hamilton Theatre, in the latter, each had one.

Dr. H. H. Prokofiy Tverky, a Russian working in London, is reported to have evolved an emulsion which will make the universal use of color photography practicable, but Dr. C. E. K. Mees, director of the research laboratories of the Eastman Kodak Company, according to The Moving Picture World, does not accept the announcement at its face value. He is reported to have stated that color photography cannot be placed on an adaptable city. He believes that there will be artificial sunshine some day, but not now nor in the immediate future.

Variety
New York City
DEC 5 1919

ANOTHER FOREIGN IN PICTURES

London, Dec. 5.

Lady Diana Manners is to appear as a girl in motion pictures and in the film version of "The Blue Bird" by Maeterlinck. Lady Diana is one of the most famous women in London society and is a member of the family of Lord Anglesey. She is married to Duff Cooper, a member of the Guards who has been in the diplomatic service and who is now serving under Premier Clemenceau at the Peace Conference in Paris. Lady Diana is said to be the most famous woman in London society.

AMERICAN
Chicago, Ill.
NOV 16 1919

From TIMES
Address: Washington, D. C.
Date DEC 11

Today

Another Slow Peace.
Saul $600, Pigs $3,600.
A Chinese Face.
A Japanese Discovery.

By ARTHUR BRISBANE.

The labor men are now in movement from West to East with great rapidity.

Industrial wars are almost as numerous as international wars. The big war ended a year ago, apparently, but there is no peace yet. First the coal miners will have a long go "on the strike" and the rest.

The Boston American, printed a story that a company in Texas made cast iron pipe cheaply by using blast furnace slag.

It is believed that human beings should use a man made from the same stuff as their pipes, and the Texas pipe is made. But that solves the problem of what to do with the human pipes.

Man and animal experiments are leading to half-human half-animal beings. Perhaps the time will come when we will have a race of half-men half-pigs, half-men half-sheep, half-men half-cows, half-men half-chickens, half-men half-fish, half-men half-birds, half-men half-insects, half-men half-reptiles, half-men half-bacteria, half-men half-nothing. Man will be able to supply the world with food, clothing and shoes.

A group of Japanese men, recently visited the Bronx Zoo. It is perhaps not the proper thing to call them men, because they looked like men, and were dressed like men, but they were not men. They were Japanese.

It is believed that Japan intends to send a man from the Japanese Empire, Mr. Griffith could not have found one face that, cast upon a screen, could by any possibility have expressed the characteristics that he attributes to the Chinese hero in a picture taken from the "Limehouse Nights" stories.

Only a white man's face can express the qualities wanted in a white man's country.

Our Chinese friends will tell you that white faces all look much alike to Chinese eyes, as Chinese faces look alike to the eyes of white men, and that a Chinese Griffith, making a "Broken Blossoms," would have to select a Chinese to play the part of the American hero because no Chinese could see anything really good and pure in an American face.

That, however, is another story.

The Japanese newspaper, through Hanogaku Sumoto, that it is impossible for the Japanese at the moment to assist the Russian people in Siberia.

While a strike gathers, the Bronx Lama of Tibet, and the Dalai Lama of Tibet, and the Dalai Lama of the Tibetans will also announce that in the long run one hundred and two million Japanese will assist their own race of people.

And a little later, there will probably come an announcement that even the highly educated Japanese of the United States have made the same discovery.

Times
Hartford, Conn.

From Morning Telegraph
New York City
DEC 7 1919

GRIFFITH FINDS TWO "DOG" TOWNS NEAR HIS STUDIO

The citizens, and especially the motion picture fans, of Yonkers and Mount Vernon, N. Y., are all agog over the recent visit of a party of world known celebrities. And these same famous persons innocently have been the cause of precipitating the keenest rivalry between the two towns.

D. W. Griffith and several of his most prominent players have stirred up all the excitement in the otherwise peaceful municipalities in southern New York. Now that Mr. Griffith has moved his production headquarters from Los Angeles to Mamaroneck, he can no longer run down to Santa Ana or San Pedro to see what one of his new pictures looks like before an audience. Hence it was quite natural for him to select a spot about twenty-five minutes from Broadway to "try it on the dog."

One night recently Mr. Griffith sent one of his new pictures to the Westchester Theatre in Mount Vernon and that night, accompanied by G. W. Bitzer, his chief photographer; Lillian Gish and her mother; Robert Harron, Clarine Seymour, Richard Barthelmess and others of his players, he quietly slipped into town and "went to the picture show" just as any other fan would go. Not a soul in the audience knew of the presence of the party not that the picture shown was a new Griffith feature.

About a week later Mr. Griffith had another production ready for this important test before an audience. This time he selected the Hamilton Theatre in Yonkers, and took with him, in addition to the players already mentioned, Dorothy Gish, Carol Dompster, Kate Bruce, Elmer Clifton and a staff of executives, including Albert L. Grey, his general manager.

But Griffith did not escape so easily in Yonkers. A young high school girl recognized the producer and went right up to him and asked point blank if he wasn't Mr. Griffith.

"I'm afraid I am," he smiled.

And then he had to tell the young lady that the picture was "The Greatest Question" and that the two companions standing with him were Lillian Gish and Robert Harron, whom she had just seen on the screen.

As the Griffith party left the theatre and entered their motor cars, they attracted considerable attention and were given a round of cheers.

The news soon traveled back to Mount Vernon, and now the two towns are at daggers points over the question of who gets the next Griffith tenant.

Forces she could not understand left the peddler's daughter an orphan —D. W. Griffith's "The Greatest Question," a First National special attraction.—Advt.

Griffith Safe

Cable Advises of His Reaching Nassau With Party—Missing Four Days

A cable received at the D. W. Griffith offices at one o'clock this morning advised of the safe arrival of the producer with his party at Nassau, the Bahamas after a perilous voyage.

Griffith left Miami on Wednesday last with a party including Richard Barthelmess, Carol Dempster, Elmer Clifton and his wife, John Lloyd, George Mac Quarrie, Anders Randolph, "Billy" Bitzer, cameraman and others. He should have arrived at Nassau about 12 hours later. A message from Leigh Smith, of the Griffith organization told of the producers' absence.

The Navy Department was immediately asked for co-operation and seaplanes sent out. A number of conflicting reports reached New York yesterday of the reported sight of the boat but it was early this morning that the news of the safe arrival was definitely learned.

When the news of Mr. Griffith's absence became known on Saturday, Oscar A. Price, president of the United Artists with whom Griffith is associated immediately communicated with Albert L. Grey, Griffith's general manager and offered his services if they were needed.

William G. McAdoo, former secretary of the treasury and legal adviser for the United Artists, wired Josephus Daniels, secretary of the navy last night asking for the assistance from navy vessels.

From Times
New York City
DEC 21 1919

D. W. Griffith's next picture, fortunately, despite the hostility of wind and waves, will not be his last, will come to the Strand next week. It is "The Greatest Question," and in the cast are Lillian Gish, who [illegible] Harron. It is Mr. Griffith's first [illegible] for the First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

From TRIBUNE
Address New York City
Date DEC 23 1919

D. W. Griffith's latest picture, Greatest Question, starring Lillian Gish, will be presented at the Strand next week.

From State Gazette
Trenton, N. J.
DEC 18

On the Job

One of the big dailies of yesterday morning was the announcement that David Griffith, the famous motion picture producer, and his two score of screen folk, had arrived safely at Nassau, in the Bahama Islands after battling five days with the heavy seas of the semi-tropics.

The news item was of greater and somewhat unusual interest to fans of motion picture news in Trenton, in whom the name of David Griffith is almost as well known as that of President Wilson in Trenton theatres.

With one exception the Press Dispatch was the only morning newspaper of consequence to carry in its news columns the story of Griffith's safe return.

The newspaper from out of town was in fact now making a special stunt of serving "morning" news to the people of Trenton primed a story in the whole that the home people were not too anxious to hang out the colors of the most famous man and woman in the motion picture business.

It is not good to know that it pays to be a good sport, even in the matter of giving good service.

EVENING NEWS
Buffalo, N. Y.

From Bill Board

GRIFFITH'S CO-OP

From News
Baltimore, Md.

CHEAPER VIEWS

From Morning Telegraph
New York City

Section III
Part 8
Vol. 94
No. 174

Christmas Number
The Morning Telegraph

New York,
December 21,
1919.

DO YOU KNOW THIS MAN?

"In one day the screen jumped five years."—Literary Digest, June 14, 1919.

"Griffith is the most imaginative and sane American who ever revolutionized the theatre when it needed an emancipator."—Amy Leslie in the Chicago Daily News, June 7, 1919.

"The new Griffith picture attracts crowds of sophisticated New Yorkers who are only too willing to pay $2.50 a seat (and the additional war tax) for the privilege of judging the latest achievement of the greatest master of 'movie showmanship."—Current Opinion, July, 1919.

Photo by Hoover Art Co.

"Never in the annals of theatrical doxology have such hosannas been raised."—Percy Hammond in the Chicago Tribune.

"It is the greatest step forward that we have known; and what other producers are to do now is a problem. It will be hard for them to keep pace with you. You have immortalized yourself."—Charles Hanson Towne, Editor of McClure's Magazine.

"He has far exceeded the power of the written word. It would be impossible for the greatest master of language to picture the emotions as Griffith has perpetuated them."—Louis Gardy in the New York Call, May 16, 1919.

"Again he has shown them all how to do it."—Mae Tinee, in the Chicago Tribune.

"Griffith is the only living American to conquer his art."—Los Angeles Times.

"Griffith still remains the dominant leader."—The New Republic.

"Mr. Griffith should think of a new name other than 'photo-play' for his productions are so different from other directors' that they require a separate classification."—New York Herald, May 14, 1919.

"It is as if Dickens had spoken by means of the camera. Moreover there is a glamour as if Pierre Loti or Victor Hugo had joined forces with Mr. Griffith."—N. Y. Eve. Telegram, May 14, 1919.

"It needs only the showing of a Griffith picture to stop all cavil about his preeminence in the cinema field."—Monroe Lathrop, in the Los Angeles Express.

DAVID WARK GRIFFITH

ORIGINATOR AND LEADER

All Griffith films are signed with the trademark "D.G." and the written word "Griffith" on every title. Watch for this trademark. None are genuine without it. Others are frauds.

During the past six years Mr. Griffith has made NO OTHER PICTURES except the following:

"The Birth of a Nation"	"The Mother and the Law"	"A Romance of Happy Valley"
"Intolerance"	"The Great Love"	"True Heart Susie"
"Hearts of the World"	"The Greatest Thing in Life"	"Broken Blossoms"
"The Fall of Babylon"	"The Girl Who Stayed at Home"	"Scarlet Days"

In Preparation

"THE GREATEST QUESTION"—A "First National" Attraction
"ROMANCE"—With DORIS KEANE

GENUINE GRIFFITH PRODUCTIONS ARE SHOWN ONLY IN FIRST CLASS THEATRES THROUGHOUT THE WORLD.

FINAL ★★★★

The Evening Telegram

FINAL ★★★★

THE WEATHER:—RAIN, FOLLOWED BY CLEARING; MONDAY FAIR AND COLDER.

NO. 28,001.—DAILY ENTERED AS SECOND CLASS MATTER POST OFFICE, NEW YORK, N. Y. NEW YORK, SUNDAY, DECEMBER 14, 1919.— TWENTY-SIX PAGES. PRICE FIVE CENTS New York City and Elsewhere.

OCEAN DRAGGED FOR BODY OF BLAKE BOY

LOST GRIFFITH BOAT FOUND, REPORT FROM FLORIDA COAST

EXTRA!

Local Offices of Motion Picture Producer Gets Telegram That Missing Craft Has Been Located–Nothing Said About Party.

The first news received of David Wark Griffith, moving picture producer, who has been missing with thirty-sixx members of his company off the Florida coast in the yacht Rosando since last Wednesday was received at the New York office of Mr. Griffith today.

A telegram was received by Mr. Alfred Gray, of the Griffith staff, stating:—"Boat reported found. Sea planes and submarine chasers on way to scene." The telegram was sent from Fort Lauderdale, Fla.

Navy seaplanes, submarine chasers and coast guard cutters had been searching every inch of the coast within hundreds of miles of Miami, Fla., since Thursday for the party.

The party left Miami Wednesday afternoon on board the Rosando, a sixty-foot motor yacht, bound for Nassau, in the Bahama Islands.

When the yacht failed to arrive at Nassau, but little was thought of it, because there was a gale blowing, and it was believed her captain had put to some place for shelter. After being missing a day and a night the search was started.

Every effort was made by Mr. Griffith's representatives here to speed up the search by the navy, and it was said that William Gibbs McAdoo had been asked to get into communication with Secretary Daniels.

"I have not been asked to take up the matter," said Mr. McAdoo today. "There must be an error somewhere."

Mystery is added to the case by the news from Los Angeles that a telegram dated "Nassau, December 12," has been received there from Mr. Griffith, saying that he expected to be in New York over Christmas.

Success on Beach.

Will A. Rush, Mayor of Fort Lauderdale, Fla., a man seventy-eight years old, of Miami, and a member and former operator, and his seven-year-old daughter, Marion, were on board the boat when it was sighted by Mr. Griffith in Grand Bahama Bank. A Nassau boat, Miami Pilot, Mr. Ernest Cox, Mr. Jack Lloyd, Robert Beach, Mr. Jack J. H. Hamilton, H. W. Miller and Mr. Miller, E. Miller, E. Griffith, Capt. Dougherty, Robert H. Alexander, Frank Fabian, J. Hamilton, Jack E. Hamilton, Frank Moore, Edward Fabian, Charles Hunter, Abraham Hamilton, Capt. Fabian, J. Hamilton, Jack Lloyd, H. Hamilton and Mack H. Hamilton.

[illegible]

NY JOURNAL DEC 15

GRIFFITH PARTY LOST ON YACHT MAKES PORT

Wireless from Bahamas Says All Are Safe—Without Food Three Days.

MIAMI, Fla., Dec. 15.—Given up for lost, David W. Griffith, the motion picture producer, and his party are now reported safe at Nassau, Bahama Islands. The message, which is considered authoritative, came by wireless from Nassau to the Miami Beach radio station.

The news came in a private dispatch to a Miami newspaper. Shortly after church services were conducted at which prayers were offered for the thirty-six persons in the Griffith party on the missing yacht Rosando, she was found by a Nassau boat, the Pilot, which had on board Mayor Will A. Rush, of Fort Lauderdale, and his daughter, Marion, who had been lost in a small boat for three days.

Capt. Dougherty, of the Rosando, and three other men left Nassau in a small boat with food and water, and succeeded in reaching the Pilot, which then proceeded to the Rosando, she having drifted to the Grand Bahama Bank, where she was found by the Pilot. The Pilot then took on board Mayor Rush and his daughter, who had been lost in a small boat for three days.

Among the passengers on the Rosando are Miss Lillian Gish, Miss Dorothy Gish, Miss Ruby Gish, Mr. Griffith, H. W. Miller and Mr. Miller, E. Miller, E. Griffith, Capt. Dougherty, Robert H. Alexander, Frank Fabian, J. Hamilton, Jack E. Hamilton, Frank Moore, Edward Fabian, Charles Hunter, Abraham Hamilton, Capt. Fabian, J. Hamilton, Jack Lloyd, H. Hamilton and Mack H. Hamilton.

[illegible]

MIAMI, Fla., Dec. 15.—The yacht Grey Duck, on which David W. Griffith, motion picture producer, and a party of thirty-six persons left Miami Wednesday, is safe at Nassau, Bahama Islands, with all on board, and a radio message received at midnight in the Miami Beach radio station from Nassau.

The yacht, which left Miami Wednesday afternoon for Nassau, ran into a gale and was thought to have been lost. The message said that the passengers and crew had suffered much from the storm and lack of food and water.

Mayor Will A. Rush, of Fort Lauderdale, and his daughter, Marion, who had been lost in a small boat for three days, were found by the Grey Duck and taken aboard.

Among the passengers on the Rosando are Miss Lillian Gish, Miss Dorothy Gish, Miss Ruby Gish, Mr. Griffith, H. W. Miller and Mr. Miller, E. Miller, E. Griffith, Capt. Dougherty, Robert H. Alexander, Frank Fabian, J. Hamilton, Jack E. Hamilton, Frank Moore, Edward Fabian, Charles Hunter, Abraham Hamilton, Capt. Fabian, J. Hamilton, Jack Lloyd, H. Hamilton and Mack H. Hamilton.

[illegible]

Mayor New York City

Nov. 15 19

MOTION PICTURE PRODUCER WHOSE PARTY OF ACTORS IS SAFE AFTER STORMY TRIP

N. Y. COMMERCIAL

New York City

Nov. 15 1919

GRIFFITH PARTY SAFE

[illegible]

EAGLE

Brooklyn, N. Y.

D. W. GRIFFITH AND PARTY SAFE AT THE BAHAMAS

[illegible]

Times Herald of Commerce

New York City

Nov. 15 1919

GRIFFITH AND PARTY SAFE

[illegible]

N. Y. COMMERCIAL

New York City

Nov. 15 1919

Wm. Loeb

[illegible]

N. Y. COMMERCIAL

New York City

Nov. 15 1919

[illegible]

Wm. Loeb

[illegible]

THE NEWS

No. 148. Copyright, 1919, by News Syndicate Co., Inc. Entered as 2d class matter Post Office New York, N. Y. New York Monday, December 15, 1919. 20 Pages. Daily Except Sunday. 2 Cents

N. Y. COMME
ess: New Yor

The yacht Grey Duck arrived at Nassau, Bahamas, safely from Miami. D. W. Griffith and party safe. The rty was three days without food and without water. Twb persons were ed overboard but rescued.

NO CONCESSIONS BY WILSON

PAGE 2

Pledge of Loyalty to Be Demanded Hereafter of All N. Y. High School Graduates Page 2

David Wark Griffith and Party Arrive Safely at Nassau Page 2

DAVID WARK GRIFFITH, noted producer of motion picture plays, and his company of players, on his yacht Rosando en route for Nassau, in the Bahamas, whether they had departed, were reported safe early this morning. Mr. Griffith was planning to take some films for a new screen play and the report that the Rosando was missing which New York first heard late Saturday afternoon, had started all in the metropolis. Since Thursday naval seaplanes, submarine chasers and coast guard cutters searched the Florida coast in an effort to locate the yacht. With Mr. Griffith (left) on board the Rosando were Misses Lillian and Dorothy Gish and Ruby Gish, Mr. Dougherty and Carol Dougherty (centre) and Andrew Randolph. The map shows the course usually followed by yachts from Miami to Nassau.

Griffith Party Reaches Nassau; Was Lost at Sea for Four Days

Anxiety Relieved When Reports of Safety Are Received; Naval Sub-Chasers and Planes Searched for Lost Yacht

[illegible]

N. Y. COMMERCIAL

New York City

Nov. 15 1919

Wm. Loeb

[illegible]

New Yorker Staatszeitung

New York City

Wm. Loeb

FINAL ★★★★★ LATEST NEWS

The Evening Telegram

10TH EDITION EXTRA

THE WEATHER:—RAIN, FOLLOWED BY CLEARING; MONDAY FAIR AND COLDER.

NO. 28,001.—DAILY ENTERED AS SECOND CLASS MATTER POST OFFICE, NEW YORK, N. Y. NEW YORK, SUNDAY, DECEMBER 14, 1919.— TWENTY-SIX PAGES. PRICE FIVE CENTS New York City and Elsewhere.

GRIFFITH YACHT AGROUND ON BAHAMA BANKS WITH 36 ON BOARD, LATE REPORT

GRIFFITH'S PARTY IS SAFE AT NASSAU; WERE LOST 4 DAYS

36 Motion Picture Actors Go Without Food for 72 Hours—Two Are Washed Into Sea and Rescued After Fight.

BOAT WALLOWED IN STORM AND ALMOST CAPSIZED.

Airplanes and Navy Vessels Aided in Search—Cable and Wireless Communication Is Broken for Time.

MIAMI, Fla., Dec. 14.—The yacht Grey Duck, on which David W. Griffith, motion picture producer, and a party of thirty-six left here Wednesday, arrived late to-day at Nassau, Bahama Islands, with all on board, said a radio message received tonight by the Miami Herald from Nassau.

The yacht, which was first seen aground on her arrival at Nassau, encountered heavy seas, and members of the party had been without food for three days, the message said. Two passengers were swept overboard during the voyage, but were rescued.

The message said the Grey Duck was aground and the crew and passengers were safe on board. Efforts to land were being made by the crew with members of the party.

The party was made up of thirty-six persons, including Mr. Griffith, his wife, a child of Mr. Griffith's and a nurse. Mrs. Griffith is the daughter of Fort Lauderdale, Fla., and is a member of the Magnolia Club. The Angeles Times said recently that she is [illegible]

HE WORLD: MONDAY, DECEMBER 15, 19

Personnel of Party.

Among the others in the party were Elmer Clifton, director of photoplays for Dorothy Gish, and a co-director with Mr. Griffith on two pictures to be taken in the Bahamas; Mrs. Clifton, John Lloyd, personal representative of Mr. Griffith; Herbert Sutch, assistant director; Mrs. Sutch, Miss Carol Dempster, leading woman of the company; George McQuarrie, leading man, husband of Helen MacKellar, now playing the leading woman's role in "The Storm" at the 48th Street Theatre, New York; J. A. Manning, financial manager of the company; G. W. Bitzer, camera man, one of the best in the business; Mrs. Bitzer, Peter Strong, A. Reed, E. Sommers, Robert H. Alexander, Selma Patten, Anders Randolph, Edward Pilpitt, Charles Snyder, Abram Hamberg and Mr. Billingsley, actors, and G. Steffes property man.

Several who came to Miami with Mr. Griffith were unable to sail on the Grey Duck, which was not large enough to accommodate them all, and were left behind for another ship.

Among these was Richard Barthelness, one of the best known young men of the screen, who won fame in the leading part of "Broken Blossoms," the Griffith picture adapted from "The Chink and the Child," a story of London's Chinese quarter. Another was Miss Seymour, who returned to New York.

A dramatic feature of the search was the part played by aircraft. C. N. Reinhart, manager of the Aero Limited of New York, which operates a commercial air line between Miami and the Bahamas, had instructed his pilots to be on the alert. Mr. Reinhart and some of his employees were able to clear up the report that the yacht had gone aground off Berry's Island by sending out a plane on a scouting trip.

Patterned by Reports.

F. Harlow and Miss Gertrude Southern, pilots, and Harry Rodgers, mechanic, took off here in an airplane yesterday morning. They were the friends between Miami and Nassau, and returning early in day, reported that they had visited the spot where the yacht had been aground, but had seen no sign of the vessel.

Los Angeles Studio Receives Wireless From Griffith

[illegible]

GRIFFITH'S PARTY IS SAFE IN NASSAU

(Continued From First Page.)

she had received a message from Mr. Griffith dated Nassau, Dec. 12. She says no word has been received at the studio here from the Griffith party since Dec. 8, when she received word from Mr. Griffith he would start for Nassau Wednesday.

NAVY AIDED SEARCH FOR MISSING CRAFT

All Atlantic Stations Ordered to Use Airplanes and Chasers to Look for Griffith.

Until 1 o'clock this morning a number of friends and business associates of D. W. Griffith remained in the local offices of Mr. Griffith, at No. 1476 Broadway, keeping in touch with the search for the Grey Duck. They learned of the safety of the Griffith party from newspaper despatches, and received no direct information.

All day yesterday and far into the night a widespread search for the party was conducted by sea and air. The Navy Department lent its marine and aerial craft to the hunt, and private owners of ships and airplanes which ply between Miami and Nassau scoured the sea.

William G. McAdoo, a warm personal friend of Mr. Griffith, sent a telegram to Secretary of the Navy Daniels yesterday morning, asking him to double the number of men and craft sitting in the search. Early last evening this reply came from Secretary Daniels:

"Every effort is being made by the department to locate and render assistance to that craft with party on board from Miami to Bahamas. Have directed efforts redoubled."

[illegible] the sightings of telegrams, all Atlantic stations and all naval reports in the Atlantic were relayed by radio from Washington to aid in the search for the Griffith party. Naval airplanes and submarines chasing were used.

[illegible] Griffith, an amateur director of Mr. Griffith, who left behind when the party sailed from Miami and [illegible] Griffith's friends here [illegible] Griffith, in the form of a report that [illegible] between Miami and Nassau, reported that members of the crew saw the Grey Duck aground off Berry's Island, but the crew told conflicting stories. Early yesterday an airplane returned to Nassau after a long search and reported that two visits to Berry's Island failed to show up any trace of the yacht.

These reports first buoyed and then dashed the hopes of Mr. Griffith's friends here.

EVG. TELEGRAM DEC 15

GRIFFITH PARTY SAFE; WITHOUT FOOD THREE DAYS

Film Players Reach Nassau After Hard Battle with Gale and Suffering Hunger.

TWO SWEPT OVERBOARD, BUT ARE RESCUED.

MIAMI, Fla., Monday.—The David Wark Griffith party is safe, after having been lost at sea for four days. A wireless despatch received here from Nassau, in the Bahama Islands, has reported the arrival at that port of the yacht Grey Duck with all the thirty-six on board safe, though nearly exhausted by their terrific fight with the storm and by lack of food and water. Two of the passengers were swept overboard, but were rescued.

The message also said that the Grey Duck, aboard which the motion picture producer and his party left here last Wednesday, was almost capsized several times, and that the ship was injured. Efforts to board dried food to take care of the shipwrecked party were [illegible] the yacht should have made the journey from here to Nassau in twelve hours.

[illegible]

Plans of Rescue

[illegible]

GRIFFITH PARTY SAFE; LOST FOUR DAYS AT SEA

(Continued from First Page.)

usually takes about twelve hours. Fear for the safety of the moving picture director and his party arose at the end of the first twenty-four hours. Weather in the Gulf at this season is treacherous and the Gulf Stream moves at five to six miles an hour. Motor engine trouble alone might have caused the little craft to drift several hundred miles off its course.

U. S. Vessels Join Search.

Josephus Daniels, Secretary of the Navy, had started the great machinery of his department to search for the missing actors. Already the Coast Guard vessels had been busy, but it was the intention of the Navy Department to search every square mile of the Gulf and the reefs and island that spot it.

Destroyers and torpedo boats at the Key West naval station had received orders to steam out this morning, accompanied by two seaplanes from an air station. The Key West seaplanes were to use the Miami air station as a base.

An airplane sent out by the Aero Limited of New York, which operates an air line between Miami and the Bahamas, returned in the afternoon without news. The airplane was piloted by Gertrude Southern and carried C. T. Reinhardt, manager, as observer and F. V. Blattner and Harry Rogers.

Reports of heavy weather increased fear for the safety of the party. It was believed that Captain Burton L. Mank, in command of the Grey Duck, might have been compelled to put in at one of the smaller islands in the face of heavy seas. As it was known that provisions sufficient for only one day were on board, it was feared that the party were suffering for food.

On board the Grey Duck besides Mr. Griffith and the motion picture party were William J. Reed, Mayor of Fort Lauderdale, Fla., and his daughter Marion, eighteen years old; a vaudeville troupe and the crew of ten. Captain Mank was once in the theatrical business in New York and had opened a hotel at Nassau recently.

GRIFFITH OFFICES HERE RELIEVED BY REPORT

Representatives of Mr. Griffith in his office at the Longacre Building, Broadway and Forty-second street, expressed great relief when news that the Grey Duck had safely reached Nassau and that all members of the party were safe was transmitted to them.

Preparations had been made to keep the offices open all night by some staff of the working principals. At one evening, it was thought that the office could stand it for a week. Three representatives had arrived from Los Angeles, Cal., to-day, and Mr. Griffith's brother, John Lloyd, who is a Navy lieutenant, and Mr. Reinhardt, who is a director of the Aero Limited, New York, arrived in the afternoon. Mr. Reinhardt had been in the Bahamas when the Grey Duck was there, and had left Nassau only a few days before the Griffith party sailed from Miami. He said that the Grey Duck should have made the journey from here to Nassau in twelve hours.

[illegible]

Plans Here in Doubt.

[illegible]

EXTRA!

Communications Sent to Headquarters Here Only Deepen Mystery Surrounding Disappearance of Picture Producer and His Company.

MIAMI, Fla., Sunday (by Associated Press).—A vessel answering the description and believed to be the yacht Grey Duck on which D. W. Griffith, the motion picture producer, and thirty-six other persons left here last Wednesday for Nassau, Bahamas, where they should have arrived that evening, is lying hard aground on the Bahama bank, about midway between this city and Nassau, according to Sol Pappas, master of the gasolene boat Maysie, which arrived from Nassau.

Conflicting reports reaching the D. W. Griffith offices here have only served to heighten the mystery surrounding the disappearance of the famous motion picture producer and thirty-six members of his company in the power yacht Rosando off Florida last Wednesday.

A telegram sent from Fort Lauderdale, Fla., about half way between Miami and Palm Beach, stating that the boat had been located, was received by the Griffith offices here. The telegram was signed "Leigh Smith." Smith is a member of the company who had been left in Florida.

Shortly afterward a Mrs. Gilman called up the Griffith offices and said:

"I have just received word from Nassau that Walter Kolokuka, a musician accompanying the Griffith party, has been brought to Nassau by a rescue ship."

Mrs. Gilman is known to members of the Griffith staff here, and they are making efforts to find out the source of her information.

Outside of these two usages and authenticated communications, the Griffith office here have heard nothing. To the relatives relatives of the members of the missing party here, Southern trying to get some clue here in regard to the disaster.

Yacht Here in Dock.

We have heard absolutely nothing outside of the telephone message from Mrs. Gilman and the telegram from Fort Lauderdale, Fla., and a New York news [illegible] of Mr. Griffith's [illegible]

Rosando had motor trouble and might have gone down in the storm. A several period in drifting in waters between Miami and Nassau.

Members of the Griffith company who remained behind here joined in the search for their missing companions.

The company has been filming a picture here for several weeks and left for Nassau on some additional scenes.

Fort Lauderdale Excited.

The Griffith representatives at Miami have charered machines to participate in the search and particular supplies of food and water are being sent out in boats and by air to the scene.

It is understood that Mr. Griffith had a staff of men left with the yacht when it left Miami, and it is thought that the yacht [illegible]

[illegible]

FROM AMERICAN NEW YORK CITY

GRIFFITH PARTY LANDS SAFELY

Picture Actors Lost Four Days at Sea Without Food Near Bahama Park

[illegible]

FROM EVENING GLOBE NEW YORK CITY

GRIFFITH BOAT SAFE AT NASSAU

[illegible]

FROM EVENING SUN NEW YORK CITY

DAVID AND GERRIER

[illegible]

FROM EVENING MAIL NEW YORK CITY

D. W. Griffith and All Party Are Safe

[illegible]

FROM Morning World NEW YORK CITY

MIAMI NOW CERTAIN GRIFFITH PARTY SAFE

[illegible]

DEC 15 1919

Griffith and Party Working on Picture After Sea Escape

[illegible]

א נייער גרופטה פראדאקשאן

...רחי מאל פון כאביליאן" (דאס מאלען פון בבל) איז דער מיטעל פון דער נייער ד. וו. גריפיטס פראדאקשאן. וואס ברענגט ווידער דיזען דראמאטישען געניוס צום מאדערנזוגד אלס דאס עס פון די פראדוצירער פון דיזיגע פארשטעלונגען. די יעניגע וואס האבען געהאט דאס פארגענוגען זיך מיט דער ווונדער פון "בעבילאן" און "הארסט פון ע ביישאן" און "הארסט פון רחי תשירלר". וועלכע בארי די באשטאנטסטונג, אז רחי מאל פון בבילאן" וועט דא געביטן ווערן, אז דעם דוש. מ. שוב מאמער, בראדוויי אן 48טע סט. פאנגענדיג מאנטאג דעם 21טען יולי.

CONSTANCE TALMADGE "THE FALL OF BABYLON" GEO. M. COHAN THEATRE

EVE TELEGRAM JUL 13

CONSTANCE TALMADGE, in "THE FALL of BABYLON" GEO. M. COHAN THEATRE.

"The Fall of Babylon" will be the second offering in the D. W. Griffith repertory season at the Geo. M. Cohan Theatre, opening Monday evening, July 21, at which time "Broken Blossoms" will conclude an uninterrupted run of one hundred and thirty-eight performances.

From CLIPPER
Address New York City
Date JUL 16

GREY INJURES ARM

Albert W. Grey, general manager for D. W. Griffith, is carrying his right arm in a splint as a result of receiving injuries when trying to adjust the windshield of his automobile.

From JOURNAL OF COMMERCE
Address: New York City
Date JUL 19

"FALL OF BABYLON" AT COHAN THEATRE

D. W. GRIFFITH OFFERS THE SECOND FILM IN REPERTOIRE.

Clara Kimball Young Is Star in New Picture at the Rivoli, Madge Kennedy at the Strand, and Vivian Martin at the Rialto.

At the George M. Cohan Theatre Monday night, D. W. Griffith will present "The Fall of Babylon," the second of his film repertoire. Living actors, dancers, singers and pantomimists will appear incident to the production of the picture. These diversions of the speaking stage, announced by Mr. Griffith as part of his repertoire idea, will be a considerable part of the entertainment. The picture itself is an amplification of the Babylonian scenes in "Intolerance," preceded by an acted and spoken prologue. Among the players in the cast of "The Fall of Babylon" are Constance Talmadge, Tully Marshall, George Fawcett, Mildred Harris Chaplin, Pauline Stark, Seena Owen, Alma Rubens, Kate Bruce, Elmo Lincoln, Ruth Darling, Elmer Clifton, Alfred Paget and Winnifred Westover. The incidental music is by Louis Gottschalk. Following the Monday evening opening two performances will be given daily.

From EVENING JOURNAL
Address New York City
Date JUL 19 1919

CONSTANCE TALMADGE in D. W. Griffith's "The Fall of Babylon" at the George M. Cohan Theatre, opening Monday evening.

From AMERICAN
Address: New York City.
JUL 20 1919

GEORGE M. COHAN'S—Actors, dancers, singers and pantomimists will appear in person on the stage of this playhouse to-morrow evening, when D. W. Griffith's production of "The Fall of Babylon," the second offering in that producer's local repertory season, will have its first Broadway exhibition. The diversions of the speaking stage, announced by Mr. Griffith as part of his repertory idea, will have ample and varied expression in the programme, added to which will be the colorful splendor of the days of Babylon, so graphically depicted in "Intolerance," now expanded and amplified with many changes and additions, and preceded by an acted and spoken prologue. Among the more prominent players in "The Fall of Babylon" are Constance Talmadge, Tully Marshall, George Fawcett, Mildred Harris Chaplin, Pauline Stark, Seena Owen, Alma Rubens, Kate Bruce, Elmo Lincoln, Ruth Darling, Elmer Clifton, Alfred Paget and Winnifred Westover. Incidental music by Louis F. Gottschalk will be played by an augmented orchestra. Following the opening there will be a matinee every day at 2:30 o'clock throughout the engagement.

From WORLD
Address: New York City

"The Fall of Babylon" Is Week's Screen Feature

"THE FALL OF BABYLON," the second film offering in the D. W. Griffith repertory season at the George M. Cohan Theatre, will be shown for the first time tomorrow night. Actors, dancers, singers and pantomimists will also appear in person on the stage. Among the players in this big spectacular production are Constance Talmadge, Tully Marshall, George Fawcett and Mildred Harris Chaplin.

From TIMES
Address New York City
JUL 20 1919

GEORGE M. COHAN—D. W. Griffith's "The Fall of Babylon," based on the Babylonian episode in "Intolerance," with a cast including Constance Talmadge, Tully Marshall, George Fawcett, Mildred Harris Chaplin, Pauline Stark, Seena Owen, Alma Rubens, Kate Bruce, Elmo Lincoln, Ruth Darling, Elmer Clifton, Alfred Paget, and Winnifred Westover. Dancing, singing and pantomime numbers. Incidental music by Louis F. Gottschalk played by the orchestra—the sound production of the Griffith Repertory Season, beginning Monday evening.

NY REVIEW JUL 20

'FALL OF BA... NEXT IN GR... REPERTORY SE...

Gigantic Spectacle Wi... Monday at G. M. C... Theatre.

"The Fall of Baby... fering in the D. W. ... season at the George ... tre, Monday, will inclu... master motion picture ... many novel diversions of t... stage, including a ballet ... dancers, an acted prologue ... special appearance of Kyra, ... tional classic dancer.

It was to have been expec... David Wark Griffith, who ga... motion picture world such ... works as "The Birth of a ... "Hearts of the World" and ... Blossoms," would soon focu... era on a gigantic assemblag... and produce another colos... picture for the enjoyment ... who seek the unusual in en... ment. Hence the announcement ... in "The Fall of Babylon" he has a... tually surpassed his former achiev... ments will be welcome news to t... admirers of this indomitable produ... of big, throbbing, startling plays.

Local interest is keen in "The Fa... of Babylon" since it is announced ... open Monday evening for a limited e... gagement, with daily matinees.

Turning from the smoke and roar... battle in "Hearts of the World" ... Griffith has taken the historical Bab... lonian period as the background ... this spectacular romance, and has peo... pled his play with all the picturesqu... characters of that colorful era, wi... its dancing girls, its bacchanali... feasts of splendor, its high priests, ... massive grandeur of its mighty, w... its chariot races, its bizarre life ... intrigue, greed and treachery.

Some idea of the magnitude o... Fall of Babylon" may be gaine... the announcement that 125,0... and women appear in the tre... scenes attending the Feast of ... sar, while seemingly countle... sands take part in the assa... the walls during the great ... Babylon.

A special musical accom... has been provided by Mr. C... the further enjoyment of ... duction.

From Women's Wear
Address New York City
JUL 14

Last night at the Geo. M. ... Theatre, D. W. Griffith's pro... of "Broken Blossoms" enter... its last week. It will be follo... Monday evening, July 21, by ... Fall of Babylon," a super-sp... based on the Babylonian episo... Mr. Griffith's production of "I... ance," one of his greatest triu... The players to be seen in "The ... of Babylon" include Constance ... madge, Tully Marshall, Elmer ... ton, Alfred Paget, Seena Owen, ... ith O'Connor, George Siegmann ... Lincoln, George Fawcett, ... rie Chaplin, Pauline Stark, ... bens, Kate Bruce, and Winn... Westover.

From HERALD
New York City
JUL

TODAY, 2:40 & 8:40
LAST 2 TIMES
Broken Blossoms

LIVING DANCERS

ACTED PROLOGUE

KYRA EGYPTIAN MARVEL IN PERSON

PLAYERS AND SINGERS IN PERSON

BEGINNING TOMORROW MONDAY AT 8:30 PROMPTLY
TWICE DAILY THEREAFTER
SECOND OFFERING D. W. Griffith REPERTORY SEASON
A SPECTACULAR ROMANCE

THE FALL OF BABYLON

An Expansion and Amplification of the Thrilling Babylonian Story from "Intolerance," with Complete Changes and Additions. Personally Directed by David Wark Griffith.

GEO. M. COHAN ICE COOLED THEATRE
B'way & 43rd Street

SLAVE GIRLS IN PERSON

SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

CHARIOT RACES

BRILLIANT ENSEMBLE

FOUNTAINS OF WINE

DAVID WARK GRIFFITH
Producer of "The Fall of Babylon" George M. Cohan's Theatre

"דער אונטערגאנג פון בבל"

אין דזשארדזש מ. קאהן'ס טהעאטער בראדוויי אן 43טע סטריט, וועט אנהויבן מאנטאג אבענד, דעם 21טן דזשולי, געוויזען ווערן "דיא מאל פון בעבילאן" וועלכע פארשפרעכט צו בערשטיינען אלעס וואס דער גרעסטער מואווינג פיקטשור פראדוסער האט אויסגעזוכט.

By KELCEY ALLEN

MONDAY EVENING
Geo. M. Cohan's Theatre
Living actors, dancers, singers and pantomimists will appear in person on the stage of the Geo. M. Cohan Theatre Monday evening incident to D. W. Griffith's production of "The Fall of Babylon," second offering in the Griffith repertory season.

The diversions of the speaking stage, announced by Mr. Griffith as part of the repertory idea at the Cohan Theatre, will have full and worthy expression. In the coming week's program, added to which will be the colorful splendor of the days of Babylon, so brilliantly depicted in "Intolerance," now expanded and amplified with many changes and additions, and preceded by an acted and spoken prologue.

Among the more prominent players in "The Fall of Babylon," are Constance Talmadge, Tully Marshall, George Fawcett, Mildred Harris Chaplin, Pauline Stark, Seena Owen, Alma Rubens, Kate Bruce, Elmo Lincoln, Ruth Darling, Elmer Clifton, Alfred Paget and Winnifred Westover.

Incidental music by Louis F. Gottschalk will be played by an augmented orchestra. Following the Monday evening opening there will be a matinee every day at 2:30 o'clock throughout the engagement.

"Fall Babylon".

Constance Talmadge in "The Fall of Babylon" on the screen at the George M. Cohan Theatre

"דער אונטערגאנג פון בבל"

אין דשארדזש ס. קאהן'ס טהעאטער, אדוויי און 43סט סטריט, זיינען אנפאנג נעגריג מאנטאג אבענד, דעם 21סטן דזשולי, געווען ווען "דיא פאל אוו בעביל'אן" וועלכע מארשפרעכט צו אי־ בערשטיינען אלעס וואס דער גרעסטער מואוויינג פיקטשור פראדוסער האט ווען אויפגעפירט.

מר. ד. וו. גריפיטה, דער מערסאסער פון "די בוירטה אוו א נייטשאן" און די "הארט אוו די ווילדר" האט אריינגע־ נעבען א נייע נשמה אין דיעזע גרויסע מייסטערווערק, "די פאל אוו בעביל'אן". ווען איהר וועט זעהן דיעזע מיליאן דאלער פראדאקשאן וועט איהר מארשטעהן די נבואות פון ירמיה און ישעיה.

EVENING SUN
New York City
Date July 19, 19

CONSTANCE TALMADGE, in "The Fall of Babylon" at the Geo. M. Cohan Theatre

COHAN—Living dancers, singers and pantomimists will appear Monday evening incident to the opening of D. W. Griffith's production, "The Fall of Babylon." In this the colorful splendor of Babylon, depicted in "Intolerance," is expanded. Among the players are Constance Talmadge, Tully Marshall, George Fawcett Mildred Harris Chaplin, Pauline Stark, Seena Owen, Alma Rubens, Kate Bruce, Elmo Lincoln, Ruth Darling, Elmer Clifton, Alfred Paget and Winnifred Westover.

From TRIBUNE
Address New York
Date JUL 20

Living actors, dancers, singers and pantomimists will appear on the stage of the George M. Cohan Theatre tomorrow evening incident to D. W. Griffith's production of "The Fall of Babylon," second offering in the Griffith repertory season.

The diversions of the speaking stage, announced by Mr. Griffith as part of the repertory idea at the Cohan Theatre, will have full expression in the coming week's programme, added to which will be the colorful splendor of the days of Babylon as depicted in "Intolerance." Among the more prominent players in "The Fall of Babylon," are Constance Talmadge, Tully Marshall, George Fawcett, Mildred Harris Chaplin, Pauline Stark, Seena Owen, Alma Rubens, Kate Bruce, Elmo Lincoln, Ruth Darling, Elmer Clifton, Alfred Paget and Winnifred Westover.

Incidental music by Louis F. Gottschalk will be played by an augmented orchestra. Following the Monday evening opening there will be a matinee every day at 2:30 throughout the engagement.

TIMES
Brooklyn, N. Y.
JUL 21

"The Fall of Babylon," the D. W. Griffith spectacle," will be open in Manhattan July 21.

AS GOOD AS THE "FOLLIES" — ZIEGFELD 9 o'CLOCK REVUE & MIDNIGHT FROLIC — THE PICK OF ALL THE ZIEGFELD BEAUTIES

LIBERTY — THE BEST REVUE IN TOWN — GEORGE WHITE'S SCANDALS OF 1919 — with ANN PENNINGTON and 50 BEAUTIFUL SCANDAL MONGERS

GAIETY — LIGHTNIN' — B'way & 46th st. Evgs. at 8:30. Mats. Tomor'w & Sat. 2:30. SMITH-GOLDEN SUCCESSES

CRITERION — 3 WISE FOOLS — LAST WEEK. LAST 7 TIMES. B'way, 44th St. Evgs. 8:30. $1.50 Mat. Tom'w $1.50.

CORT — West 48th st. Evenings at 8:30. Matinees Tomor'w & Sat. at 2:30. SPANISH OPERA CO. (Big Hit) in "The Old Lady" & "Dreams of 3"

COHAN & HARRIS — BIGGEST SUCCESS SINCE "THE merry WIDOW" — ROYAL VAGABOND — A COMIC OPERA COMIQUE

Henry Miller's Thea., 124 W. 43d. Evs. 8:15. Mats. Thurs. & Sat. — LA LA LUCILLE — A New Musical Farce

GLOBE. Evs. 8:20. Mts. Tom'w (Pop.) & Sat. Charles Dillingham's Latest Musical Comedy. SHE'S A GOOD FELLOW

KNICKERBOCKER B'way, 38th St. Evs. 8:15. Mts. Tomor'w & Sat. 2:15. 8TH BIG MONTH! COOLED BY ICED AIR. John Cort's Musical Comedy — LISTEN LESTER!

Another Griffith Knockout "The Fall of Babylon" GEO. M. COHAN THEATRE. Best Seats at McBride's Ticket Offices. PRICES 50C TO $3.00.

GEO. M. COHAN Ice-Cooled Theatre. B'way & 43d St. TWICE DAILY—2:30 & 8:30. Repertory Season. D. W. GRIFFITH New Playing "The Fall of Babylon" Ballet of 50 Living Dancers.

TYSON & CO. Have choice seats for D. W. Griffith's sensation, "THE FALL OF BABYLON," at Geo. M. Cohan Theatre. GOOD SEATS AT $1.50.

PALACE — B. F. Keith's B'way & 47th St. Mats. Daily, 25c.-$1. Charles King, Albertina Rasch, Ben Welch, Klein Bros., Billie Reeves & Co., Toto, Frisco and Loretta McDermott, oth.

RIVERSIDE — B. F. Keith's B'way & 96th St. EDDIE FOY & Young FOYS, Lucas & Hale, Jerome Fisher, Bert Fitzgibbon, Ashley & Skipper, Greene & Parker.

B. S. Moss' Broadway — Broadway & 41st St. Continuous Noon to 11 P.M. (Pop. Prices) Engagement Extended MACK SENNETT'S YANKEE DOODLE IN BERLIN — BATHING BEAUTIES — BOTHWELL, BROWNE, Sennett —IN— PERSON.

LOEW'S NEW YORK THEATRE & ROOF 10, 20, 30. Cont. 11 A. M. to 11 P. M. Roof to 1 A. M. "FALSE GODS."

Loew's American Roof 42 St., W. of B'way. Every Eve. at 8:15. RESISTA? LANGDON & SMITH. ARMSTRONG & SMITH, 6 others. In Theatre, "FALSE GODS." All Seats Reserved 25, 35, 50

RIVOLI B'way 49th St. — RIALTO Times Square — CLARA K. YOUNG, "The Better Wife." Prizma. Sennett Comedy. RIVOLI ORCHESTRA. VIVIAN MARTIN, in "Louisiana." Pictorial. Soloists. RIALTO ORCHESTRA.

STEEPLECHASE FOR FUN CONEY ISLAND

STRAND B'way at 47th — MADGE KENNEDY, "Through the Wrong Door." Sennett Comedy. STRAND ORCHESTRA

COLUMBIA. B'way-47th. Twice Daily. Pop. Prices. PEEK-A-BOO. All Summer Show.

FOR SALE.

Woman's Wo
ess New York City
JUL 19 1919

By KELCEY ALLEN

MONDAY EVENING.
Geo. M. Cohan's Theatre.

Living actors, dancers, singers and pantomimists will appear in person on the stage of the Geo. M. Cohan Theatre Monday evening incident to D. W. Griffith's production of "The Fall of Babylon," second offering in the Griffith repertory season.

The diversions of the speaking stage, announced by Mr. Griffith as part of the repertory idea at the Cohan Theatre, will have full and worthy expression in the coming week's program, added to which will be the colorful splendor of the days of Babylon, so brilliantly depicted in "Intolerance," now expanded and amplified with many changes and additions, and preceded by an acted an spoken prologue.

Among the more prominent players in "The Fall of Babylon," are Constance Talmadge, Tully Marshall, George Fawcett, Mildred Harris Chaplin, Pauline Stark, Seena Owen, Alma Rubens, Kate Bruce, Elmo Lincoln, Ruth Darling, Elmer Clifton, Alfred Paget and Winnifred Westover.

Incidental music by Louis F. Gottschalk will be played by an augmented orchestra. Following the Monday evening opening, there will be a matinee every day at 2:30 throughout the engagement.

"THE FALL OF BABYLON."

A Great Screen Spectacle at the Cohan Theatre.

D. W. Griffith presented the second offering in his repertory season at the George M. Cohan Theatre last night, when "The Fall of Babylon" was shown; it is the Babylonian episode from his "Intolerance," somewhat enlarged, with singing and dancing numbers interspersed, making it as a whole, an elaborate programme.

The magnificence of this episode is undoubtedly remembered by many, its size, scope, the marching hordes of Cyrus, the Feast of Belshazzer, the accurate representation of the people and life of Babylon.

The picture is a spectacle that holds the spectator by its scenes of crowds, combats and vistas of great walls; the really dramatic action coming at the last and quickly.

In depicting the story Mr. Griffith has been careful in his selections of the principals. Constance Talmadge, as the Mountain Girl, who loves Belshazzer and tries to counteract the machinations of the High Priest of Bel (Tully Marshall); Seena Owen, as Attares, favorite of Belshazzer; Elmer Clifton, as the Rhapsode, in love with the Mountain Girl; George Siegmann, as Cyrus, and Alfred Paget, as Prune Belshazzer, by their excellent work stand out clearly.

The dancing and singing numbers helped the general effect of the screen play.

The dancers were exceptionally good. Kyra especially, in a shawl dance and dance of Undulation. Betty Kaye was also effective.

Margaret Fritts and Samuel Critcherson sang well.

New York has been chosen by David Wark Griffith as the first city in the world to be afforded an opportunity to see a complete welding together of the motion picture and the speaking stage.

Tomorrow night, at the Geo. M. Cohan Theatre, Mr. Griffith will present, as the second offering in the Repertory Season; his production of "The Fall of Babylon," to which has been linked in one chain of entertainment all the functions of the theatre, including drama, music, pantomime, dancing, song and spectacle.

THROBBING with the precious ferment of love, devotion, loyalty, adoration, heroism and sacrifice.

IMPERIAL in its mighty splendor, its royal luxury, its lavish beauty and magnificent pomp and ceremony.

PRODIGIOUS in its picturesque multitudes, its gorgeous galleries teeming with the bizarre life of the ancients.

ENLIGHTENING with its vivid truths, the thundering assemblage of historic fact, the knowledge of another day.

MAJESTIC in its massive grandeur, its colossal theme, its inspiring romance, its sumptuous settings.

ENORMOUS in the cyclonic fray of ambition, jealousy, intrigue, greed, treachery, craftiness and deceit.

TEEMING with laughter and love, with feasting and wine, with romance and madness, with charm and beauty.

One of the most remarkable companies ever assembled by Mr. Griffith:—

CONSTANCE TALMADGE
MILDRED HARRIS CHAPLIN
TULLY MARSHALL
GEORGE FAWCETT
SEENA OWEN
ELMER CLIFTON
ALFRED PAGET
GEORGE SIEGMANN
KATE BRUCE
ELMO LINCOLN
CARL STOCKDALE
LOYOLA O'CONNOR
JAMES CURLEY
HOWARD SCOTT
ALMA RUBENS
RUTH DARLING
MARGARET MOONEY
PAULINE STARK
WINNIFRED WESTOVER

More than 50,000 men and women in the mighty production. Four thousand dancing girls at the feast of Belshazzar. Dazzling array of 7,500 horses and charioteers in the sensational onrush of the Persian Army against the walls of Babylon. Fountains sparkling with perfume and wine. Virgins of the sacred fires. Slave girls of the marriage market.

Following tomorrow evening's premier, there will be a matinee every day at 2:30, including Sundays. Evening programs at 8:30, including Sundays. Special symphony orchestra. Gorgeous ballet of Living Dancers.

EVENING MAIL
New York City
JUL 19 1919

TELEGRAM
New York City
JUL 19 1919

New York City, Mo.
JUL 6 1919

CITIZEN
Brooklyn, N. Y.
JUL 19 1919

"THE FALL OF BABYLON"

from Morning Telegraph
New York City
JUL 20 1919

NEXT WEEK'S PROTOPLAYS

COURANT
JUL 19 1919

Jewish Forward Jan. 6

Tremont Theatre
BOSTON

2 מאל טעגליך
2 נאכמיטאג — 8 אבענד
צום ערשטען מאל
ד. וו. גריפיטס ערצעגנטירט
א וואונדערבארע דראמא פון די פראצענטישע רעוואלוציאן מיט אלע איהרע וואונדערבארע פאסירונגען און שרעקליכקייטען

יתומים
פונ׳ם
שטורם

ליליען גיש און דאראטהי גיש
צוזאמען מיט אנדערע
ארקעסטער פון סערצינ
אלע טיסש ריזערוירט אין טייל 2 וואכנ׳ן מארגנס

Harvard Crimson Jan. 7

Tremont Theatre Twice Daily 2 P. M.—8P. M. Prompt
Boston

Matinee Every Day
Every Evening

D. W. Griffith presents
A Spectacular Epic

"ORPHANS OF THE STORM"

with
LILLIAN GISH DOROTHY GISH
Ten Thousand Others
LARGE SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
All Seats Reserved
Selling in Advance

Herald Dec. 26

Postponed!

So that Music Effect and New Symphonic Color Scheme May Be Perfectly Arranged

OPENING OF
D. W. GRIFFITH'S
"ORPHANS OF THE STORM"
At TREMONT THEATRE
Until WED. EVE., at 8 PROMPT

Tickets Purchased Will Be Exchanged for Wednesday Evening or Money Refunded at Box Office

Advertiser Jan. 2

TREMONT THEATRE NOW! TWICE DAILY
Griffith Has Surpassed Himself!
D. W. GRIFFITH'S
New Empire of Emotion Spectacle
"ORPHANS OF THE STORM"
—WITH—
LILLIAN GISH DOROTHY GISH
TEN THOUSAND OTHERS
Matinees 2 P. M.——PROMPT——Nights 8 P. M.

American Jan. 5

WHY?

It contains graphic pictures of the most intense heart interest; scenes of splendor and thrill and withal a high moral thought which Americans will do well to consider in this uneasy day. With a love story and an exciting rescue which experts declare far surpasses even "The Birth of a Nation," Griffith has put forth, in rare good taste a drama of compelling power and grandeur.

D. W. GRIFFITH'S

The acting in "ORPHANS OF THE STORM" is by far the most complete and excellent that the screen has ever known. Each member of the wonder cast of players was particularly chosen with a view to his or her fitness. Lillian Gish, the greatest of all screen artistes and now recognized as "the Bernhardt of the silent drama," has never had a more wonderful role. Dorothy Gish has startled her host of followers by her wonder portrayal of the blind girl. All the other principals are of the highest type.

"ORPHANS OF THE STORM"

Twelve thousand people take part in the various scenes. Roistering throngs of merry-making Parisians and again this same host hurling against the King's troops, together with the freedom-crazed mobs in the public tribunal, are picture scenes the like of which has never before been even attempted on silver sheet or stage. Through this all weaves the golden story of the waifs and their love; through it is woven the triumph of right over might and the throes of love and misery.

Is the Sensation of All Times

Small wonder that every Boston newspaper proclaims "ORPHANS OF THE STORM" the masterpiece of all screen offerings; that Winchell Smith declares Griffith has made a far greater work than "The Birth of a Nation" or "Way Down East." Small wonder that the TREMONT THEATRE is filled to capacity twice every day by the most wonderful, truly American audiences that have been seen in a Boston theatre in years.

In History of the Theatre in Boston

Every man, woman and child in Boston and vicinity will want to see "ORPHANS OF THE STORM" because it is so human, so beautiful, so stirring and so great!

NOW 10 A.M. TO 11 P.M. DAILY TREMONT THEATRE 10 A.M. TO 11 P.M. DAILY NOW

Herald Jan. 3

romance a-gallop—

"charge and counter-charge of troops and sans-culottes, the tense moments at the guillotine, and the last mad ride of Danton and his troopers. Bit by bit, piece by piece, dissected and set forth coldly, dispassionately, Mr. Griffith's every filming might carry naught but flagrant melodrama, but here there is no time for halt. Swiftly the film runs its course, from first to last, there is hardly a moment that had better been omitted . . . piling thrill upon thrill . . . a dashing captain for Danton's side, a veritable d'Artagnan in himself, rattle of drawn sabres and thunder of spurring hoofs, and the troopers are away. Through the streets they come, empty streets, lanes and alleys packed with swift-scattering humanity, a lightning flash of men, horses and dust, a whirlwind of tossing shapes and naked steel against the sky as they have breasted a rise and gained the gate. . . . Never before has Mr. Griffith succeeded so thoroughly as with the last moments of 'Orphans of the Storm' . . . melodrama if you will, but excellent melodrama for all that. 'Orphans of the Storm' is his most finished, his most powerful work."

"Orphans of the Storm"
TREMONT THEATRE

Traveler Dec. 24

TREMONT THEATRE
THOMAS B. LOTHIAN, MANAGER

Beginning Tomorrow Evening at 8 O'Clock PROMPT
Matinees Every Day Thereafter at 2 O'Clock PROMPT
Seats Now on Sale Two Weeks in Advance. Mail Orders Accepted
Evenings 25c to $2.00. Matinees 25c to $1.50.

To the Public Whose Servant We Are--

Since it is impossible for us to control the many advertising sources that speak of our plays, we take this means of giving you our personal viewpoint on our new production.

You perhaps recall we frankly had little to say of our last production, "Dream Street," when we presented it in the regular theatre, but we feel this is an entirely different proposition.

Our present production is "ORPHANS OF THE STORM," taken from the old play, "The Two Orphans." We have attempted to combine with this story a phase of the great French Revolution, with at least a little of the spirit and manners of that period.

Excepting for certain scenes in the latter part, we do not claim any particular spectacular features. Its greatest merit, if it has any, lies in the characterizations which reflect as best the players can the natural features of the great moving face of humanity.

If you chanced to like "The Birth of a Nation" and "Way Down East," we believe you will find something in this to please you.

As I have nothing to do with the acting, I feel I may discuss it freely. My own opinion, strengthened by sentiment voiced at preliminary showings, is that this most important contribution to my work reveals a higher standard of acting than these artists have previously reached.

Our staff has made all possible effort to reproduce the atmosphere of the time in which the action is laid. The appearance and manners of our historical characters have been portrayed with faithful regard for physical and mental characteristics.

And for this uneasy day, we believe the political features of our drama will not be unimportant.

I can assure that this production represents our greatest investment in time, labor and money. We have spared nothing.

To you, the people of Boston, who have ever been so sympathetic and appreciative, I bring my newest offering—the rest is for you to say.

Most sincerely yours,

(Signed) D. W. GRIFFITH.

Morning Journal Jan. 5

TREMONT THEATRE
BOSTON

2 מאל טעגליך
2 נאכמיטאג — 8 אבענד

יתומים
פונ׳ם
שטורם

Jewish Advocate Jan. 5

TREMONT THEATRE
BOSTON

MATINEE TODAY AND EVERY DAY
D. W. GRIFFITH'S
Orphans of the Storm
Lillian Gish and Dorothy Gish
Symphony Orchestra of Forty

TREMONT THEATRE
BOSTON

יתומים
פונ׳ם
שטורם

Jewish Advocate Jan. 5

TREMONT THEATRE
BOSTON

Last 2 Times Today at 2:15 & 8:15
SAM H. HARRIS presents
ONLY 38 NIGHTS
A NEW COMEDY BY A. E. THOMAS
ORIGINAL N.Y. CAST & PRODUCTION

Beginning Mon. Evening (Christmas) Dec. 26
2 P.M.—Twice Daily Thereafter—8 P.M.
DAILY MATINEE AT 2 (PROMPT)
EVERY NIGHT AT 8 (PROMPT)
SEATS ON SALE NOW
First Time Presented Anywhere!
D. W. GRIFFITH Presents
A Dramatic Epic

ORPHANS OF THE STORM

(By Direct Arrangement with Kate Claxton) with
Lillian Gish and Dorothy Gish
TEN THOUSAND OTHERS
ORCHESTRA OF FORTY
All Seats Reserved—On Sale 2 Weeks in Advance

MR. GRIFFITH will appear in person and address the audience on Monday Night and Tuesday Matinee. On these occasions he will present MISS LILLIAN GISH and MISS DOROTHY GISH in person, and they also will speak.

Jewish Daily American Dec. 30

TREMONT THEATRE
BOSTON

עם נעהם יעצט אן
2 מאל טעגליך
2 נאכמיטאג — 8 אבענד
צום ערשטען מאל
ד. וו. גריפיטס פרעזענטירט
א וואונדערבארע דראמא

יתומים
פונ׳ם
שטורם

Jewish Daily News Dec.

TREMONT THEAT
BOSTON

יתומים
שטורם
ORPHANS OF THE STORM

Chronicle

THEATRICAL
BOSTON

TREMONT THEAT

ORPHAN OF THE STORM
Lillian Gish and Dorothy
SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

TREMONT THEATRE
BOSTON

יתומים
שטורם

ORPHANS OF THE STORM

MATINEE TODAY

ORPHAN OF THE STORM

New York Times October 1 - 1922

(Copyright, 1922, by The New York Times Company.)

THE AGE OF HEROINES

By ALVA JOHNSTON

HEROINES on the stage or in fiction must still be beautiful, but they need not be young. In spite of the tired business man, the fashion of 1922 prefers the woman to the girl. Composite opinion of seventeen authorities consulted on the subject fixes thirty-two years as the age at which women reach the top-notch of the beauty scale. The seventeen arbiters include D. W. Griffith, Elsie H. Shaffield, Gutzon Borglum, Augustus Thomas, Morris Gest and Florenz Ziegfeld Jr. The rest are prominent authors, painters, sculptors, photographers, play producers and actors.

Several of these denied that beauty existed at all in a woman under 25. A majority voted that the highest beauty of expression did not come until several years later. Morris Gest and D. W. Griffith held that women did not achieve their greatest beauty until they were 40 or older.

The verdict of this court of beauty corroborates other evidence that in the appreciation of the public of today mature beauty eclipses mere girlish loveliness. It was not always so. Fifteen or twenty years ago the heroines of love stories were 18 or 20 years old, arguing a contemporary public view that this was the most interesting time of life in woman. A canvass of the recent novels shows that the average heroine today is 28 years old.

Sir Walter Scott's heroines were usually coldfingers of 18 or 19. Dickens often rubbed the nursery rime into his romantic feminine types. But today Herzogheimer chooses a woman a year or two past forty to be the temptress of his elderly respectable hero. Hichens writes a romance around an enchantress of 60.

Balzac, who was quoted by some of the fathers as the paramount authority on women, was accused in his day of overappreciation of the mature type as compared to the younger. But the taste for the fully developed type of beauty seems to have overtaken and passed even Balzac's standards. He said that not beauty existed in a girl of 15, but only the promise of beauty which might ripen into true beauty many years later. At 25, according to Balzac, a woman should be at her best. Balzac's best age of woman, managed by the advanced standards of today, is thus monitors by four years. With Juliet irresistible at 14 and Cleopatra wheeling her greatest triumph after 50, Shakespeare is content between extreme youth and the outermost maturity.

Another witness of the current supremacy of full-grown beauty against the mere bud is to be found in the lists of the most beautiful women that have recently been picked by illustrators. One of these has on her list at least one woman who is past 50, three or four in the forties and several in the thirties. The average age of the twelve of her selection is about thirty-seven years.

How long a woman may maintain her beauty at its maximum is a question on which opinion differ widely. Dalloff, the Russian interpreter of "Chauve-Souris," allowed a woman but three years in which to remain at her prime. Daniel Frohman gave her a possible thirty years in which to enjoy the full crown of her beauty. Shaw Parker, the portrait painter, said that there was no limit. D. W. Griffith said that he had known a perfectly beautiful woman of 60, and Aristide Bruant, the cabaretier, told of a woman of 85 who was perfectly beautiful. I think the most beautiful woman I ever saw was probably Queen Alexandra, who was well on toward 70 when I was presented to her. She had been receiving people all day and yet she met each newcomer as if he were the most interesting person in the world. That is hard and self-sacrificing work. It had given her a charm, a graciousness, a sweetness, together with a regal quality, so that I would put her first among the beautiful women that I have seen."

Arnold Genthe, photographer: "In answering the question, a distinction should be made between mere physical beauty and that type of beauty which gains its greatest charm from the life and spirit which show through it. For the beauty which might please the tired business man the fatal age limit arrives very quickly. The beauty which reflects personality and character comes later and is more enduring.

"In very young women you find not real beauty, but the raw materials, which may or may not develop into beauty. Frivolity is the greatest enemy of beauty. Too many women lead a life of frivolity after they reach the age of 16 or 17 and never do develop. I have seen girls who studied, worked and developed mentally for six or seven years at this period and who gained the beauty of personality at the age of 22 or 23. But this kind of beauty is rare at so early an age.

"Twenty-five is usually the earliest age when the two types of beauty combine in one woman, and beauty of this kind is likely to last. I have seen women between 50 and 60 so beautiful that girls of 20 were completely eclipsed in their presence. I think women's lives are different today and they are more beautiful in advanced maturity than they used to be. If Balzac lived today he would probably have changed the title of that novel from 'The Woman of Thirty' to 'The Woman of Forty.'"

Emil Fuchs, portrait painter: "There are two periods when the greatest beauty is reached. The same woman may be at the height of her beauty at two periods many years apart. They become most beautiful first at 16 or 17, when the bud is beginning to be a rose. For myself, I prefer to paint women at this age. For many years they may be less beautiful, but if their mind develops and they live the right life they may become wonderfully beautiful again at 30 or later, as the loveliness of expression is developed.

"Those who are beautiful at 25 may continue so for a great many years. I knew Lady Randolph Churchill well in 1908 when she had a son of 26. She was then marvelously beautiful, her wit, brilliancy and charm shining in every feature. The Countess of Warwick was one of the greatest beauties in England in 1914, when she was the mother of a grown-up family. Mrs. George Keppel was astonishingly beautiful long after she had a grown-up daughter. There is no age limitation whatever on beauty."

Michel Fokine, producer of dance and pantomime: "Women may arrive at their highest beauty any time from 17 to 40 years. There are different types of beauty for different ages."

Sir Gilbert Parker, author: "Climate makes a great difference. In India women mature at 16. Considering only our Northern races, I would say that women usually arrive at their greatest beauty from 30 to 35. Women do not come to their full development of body, brain and temperament until that time. It is the combination of those things that makes the greatest beauty. Those who have it may be beautiful for many years thereafter. On the way up one finds two women the predecessors a woman of 30 years, gray-haired, black-eyed and calm, and every man said, 'That is the most interesting face on the ship.' There are many beautiful women of 20 and 30, but there is a difference in their beauty. Five years the top years of this physical charm which begins at 30. Women and 30 who are twice as old were from a girl of 20 or 25 are rare.

"Sexual freedom, politics, a place in a musical organization tends to push back the age between the ages of 25 and 30. A girl of 25 is a mature woman. Women who have not gone through the experience of marriage, of the upbringing of children, of the management of a household, of the responsibilities of life, are not women. They have not developed the mature woman. They have to learn, to grow, how to [illegible] themselves. They have how [illegible] and they are more to [illegible] They have their time to shine, they make the most of it. A [illegible] their beauty gradually [illegible] Men [illegible] women, [illegible] Only that of 30, and I speak of him.

"I am from the Germanic [illegible] are interesting at 18 [illegible] to him their beauty to the [illegible] The Germans and Teutons [illegible] regarded for a long time [illegible] dency today to appreciate mature beauty. I have just returned from abroad, and in Paris I found that the favorites at the Comédie Française were women along in years. A century ago Scott was selecting for his heroines women between 15 and 20 years. I think our taste has altered very much from that day."

(Continued from Page 1)

Augustus Thomas, playwright: "There are seven ages of man, and each age has a different standard for judging beauty in women. The boy of 8 years nearly always falls in love with his school teacher, probably a buxom person of 40. The boy of 14 usually falls in love with a woman of 35. On the other hand Stanford White held that at 17 years a woman was becoming a little passé. The aged beauty fancier, sipping his absinthe, which Barrymore calls the paregoric of second childhood, might say 14. The young man of 25 will prefer a woman somewhere near his own age. All this is in accordance with the eugenic mechanism of nature which seeks to balance opposites.

"A woman reaches the full Juno-like qualities of beauty, I should say, at about 35. As to the most beautiful woman I have ever seen, no one occurs to me in a sudden flash. Adelaide Neilson was in my boyish estimate the most beautiful woman in the world, but I find that her photographs do not stand analysis. The chin is a trifle too retreating and the upper teeth are too prominent. Speaking from a mature standpoint, I should name Maxine Elliott."

Childe Hassam, painter: "I don't know who can say at what age women are most beautiful. It depends on what kind of beauty you mean. The most beautiful human beings are children, in my opinion. There are many old people who are beautiful. Women may be beautiful at all ages. It is necessary to specify the type and kind of beauty that is meant before any particular age can be named.

Florenz Ziegfeld Jr., producer of "Ziegfeld's Follies": "Women do not achieve the highest beauty under 25 years. They may remain at the height of their beauty for many years. For chorus and show purposes I choose girls between 18 and 20, but women cannot be correctly called beauties at that age. The woman who is beautiful at full maturity may remain so for many years—for an indefinite number of years. The most beautiful woman I have ever seen, I think, was Lanteime."

Augustus Lukeman, sculptor: "Women become most beautiful anywhere between 25 and 35. Between those ages the face is lighted up by the intellectual personality. While such beauties arrive between the ages of 25 and 35, they may, with a healthy intellectual life, grow more beautiful as they grow older, as a leaf changes from the green into the more beautiful autumnal tinges. There is no beauty in young girls, only the promise of beauty which may or may not be fulfilled. The figure does not necessarily lose its beauty in mature or elderly women.

"The theory that you can tell a woman's age by her ankle is foolish. The high-bred ankle remains as fine in an old woman as in a young one. A sculptor can tell by the ankle and by the way the arm joins the shoulder whether a woman is bred from thoroughbred stock, but you cannot determine age that way. The most beautiful woman I ever saw was Mary Anderson, and she grew more beautiful as long as she lived. The most beautiful woman I know of today is Miss Alison daughter of Brooklyn, Mass., show of Percy Haughton, the former coach. Next I would name the Wade sisters of Charlottesville, Va."

D. W. Griffith, film producer: "The question is a point. I would say, What are the lines that everybody remembers the most? As a rule it is the mother's face, outside of the mother, the greatest force of the mother. The greatest faces that we remember are always the young ones. They are usually the faces of women of 20 and 30. The most young great beauty arrives in early after experience, after pain and suffering, usually somewhere between 30 and 40. Some have fought a great fight and have won it in their time. We are [illegible] by a few physical charms. The beauty of young women is usually fading. I have had at my disposal [illegible] I would say that in the [illegible] and a developed mind. This beauty is higher than mere physical perfection. I have a sister who is 40 years old and a grandmother, and she is more beautiful today than she has ever been before. Motherhood often increases beauty.

(Continued on Page 8)

The Age of Heroines

(Continued from Page 8)

"Under conditions of life in America today age does not cut the figure that it used to. Men are younger for their age than they used to be, and so are women. I have seen women who were wonderful to look at, but their beauty vanished the instant they spoke. I have seen women who were plain in repose and became beautiful when they spoke. You cannot safely name the age of greatest beauty any more than you can choose the type of greatest beauty. I have made a cast of the foot of a woman of about 65, a perfect foot, and you would think it belonged to a woman of 20. I have seen both men and women past 60 who possessed the fine and flexible skin of youth.

"I could not say who is the most beautiful woman I have ever seen. I saw Mrs. Langtry in her prime and she struck me as cold and repellent. I have seen Mrs. Campbell many times and she made just the opposite impression. Both were marvelously beautiful."

Irving R. Wiles, artist: "The question is hard to answer without qualification. The flapper has a certain type of beauty. An old woman may have beauty of a certain kind. Beauty should be at its best at about 30 years. The greatest beauty is not to be found in very young women. There must be something besides superficial form and color. A woman who is beautiful at 30 may remain so for many years.

"When I saw Mme. Gautherean at Paris, many years ago, I thought she was the most beautiful woman in the world. She was born in New Orleans and lived in Paris. Her portrait by Sargent is in the Metropolitan Museum. When I saw her she had an enameled complexion and striking red hair, which I do not think was natural, but, allowing for the artificiality, I still thought her the first among beautiful women."

Alfred Cheney Johnston, photographer: "You have to divide beauty into types before you can answer the question. You find women of the girlish, innocent type who are marvelous around 17 and 18. Then there are mature beauties in whom the charm of expression is increased. I have seen any number of beautiful women with white hair. You cannot compare the types. Speaking for myself, I would say the greatest age of beauty is from 25 to 35, when culture and personality register themselves and the physical beauty remains near the perfection."

Otis Skinner, actor: "A man's ideal of feminine loveliness changes as he advances in years. When I was 10 years old I was absolutely convinced that my teacher was the most beautiful woman in the world. She was 40. The age of greatest beauty has lowered since that time in my estimation, but I am still not old enough to have acquired the idea that women are only beautiful at or under 18.

"The most beautiful women, I think, reach the zenith of their loveliness when they have not only reached physical perfection, but have a full appreciation of their beauty and are able to display it to the best advantage. I think that time is, with gifted women, somewhere between 30 and 35."

Nikita Balieff, producer and introducer of "Chauve-Souris": "Women are most beautiful between 30 and 35. By 30 they have acquired knowledge of the world and experience. This gives them beauty which is superior to that of the undeveloped woman. They know how to dress, how to [illegible] themselves. They know how [illegible] things and they are more to [illegible] They know their time to shine, they make the most of it. A[illegible] their beauty gradually [illegible] Men [illegible] women, [illegible] Only that of 30, and I speak of him.

"I am from the Germanic [illegible] are interesting at 18 [illegible] to him their beauty to the [illegible] The Germans and Teutons [illegible] regarded for a long time [illegible]

Nikita H. Hatfield, President of the National Academy of Design: "The age of greatest beauty differs greatly in different women. Women who study and work hard and develop intellectually often grow more beautiful with mature years. In my opinion, the greatest beauty in country attained between 30 and 40 and may continue for many years. I think that is an increasing [illegible]

(Continued on Page 8)

War and the Movies

NEW YORK GLOBE Sep 24-1922

New Griffith Film Here

[illegible]

NEW YORK TELEGRAM Sep 22-1922

Griffith Finds Gish

ROW OVER "ORPHANS"

Angry Among Paris Audiences Led to Stop Showing

Paris, Sept. 21.

Although a number of enthusiastic and evidently influential [illegible] demonstration of young attaches [illegible] the opening of D. W. Griffith's film "Orphans of the Storm" at the Opera last night, the opinion prevailed in many quarters that the picture was [illegible] [illegible] of opinion, and Paris [illegible]

[illegible] Paris audiences present [illegible] [illegible] the [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

MONTCLAIR (N. J.) TIMES
SEPTEMBER 23, 1922

FIRST SHOWING AT BELLEVUE

NEW PHOTO-PLAY HAS PREMIERE IN NORTH END THEATRE LAST NIGHT.

Great Film Feature by D. W. Griffith Presented Here in Advance of Metropolitan Appearance—Famous Producer, His Personal Staff and Members of Company in Audience. New Film Absorbs and Thrills. Outline of Plot—Those Who Have Parts in Picture.

D. W. Griffith, that irrepressible and ever-resourceful leader in films, has done the unexpected again in a picture which has been given the tentative title of "The Haunted Grange." This time he has reached into the realm of mystery, seized a plot of startling and ever surprising elements; touched it with the radiance of pure beauty; and hurled it in the climax to a majestic and tempestuous height that literally leaves the audience gasping.

This film was shown at the Bellevue Theatre last night through personal arrangements between Mr. Griffith and Edmond Lyale, the managing director, in advance of its presentation in the New York theatres as a regular theatrical attraction. Mr. Griffith, his personal staff, and members of his company were present, as well as a number of motion picture celebrities from other companies here to get the first glimpse of the latest Griffith work.

Suspense Mounts Steadily.

As startling and unusual as the storm scene is, it receives stern competition in suspense from the story itself. In this film, Griffith has given the final touch to mystery drama as well as scenes of a storm. From the opening scene to the close, the suspense mounts steadily, weaving in brilliant pattern a mystery that grows ever more baffling.

Who did it?

Now one, now another sets himself in the reviewer's mind as the real villain of the play. But always something occurs to sow doubts again; and the masterly telling of the story leaves one more and more interested but never irritated to know the identity of the hooded one.

The entire play occurs in one night and in one house. A love story, sensitively and winningly portrayed by Carol Dempster and Henry Hull, brings a romantic interest that lives in harmony with the gripping mystery of the drama.

Through this determined and increasingly vigorous advance in suspense, there dashes a comedy character, one Romeo, who is a delightful and new acquaintance. Here Griffith has presented us with a new comedy character, one so real, so human that he must always live amid pleasant chuckles and pure laughter in the memories of those who meet him. For Romeo, as played by Porter Strong, is more than a character in a play—he is life and will survive.

Splendid Cast.

The cast of players presents a ballet of exceptional excellence. The featured beauty of Carol Dempster lifts her apart from other screen stars. Henry Hull is a refreshing and most promising new comer to the screen, recalled by the audience as the star in "The Cat and the Canary" of the stage. Morgan Wallace, suave, foppish, always carries the suggestion of concealed force. No more unusual face has come to the screen than C. H. Croker King, an English actor, who gives a powerful and impressive performance. Others doing exceptionally effective work are Frank Wunderlee as the black butler, Frank Sheridan as the detective; Margaret Dale, as the adventuress; Grace Griswold, as the mother, and Irene Harston, who should be decorated with honors for being the person who induced Romeo to remain on that lively night.

Mr. Griffith's new picture is a success, and a success of the same proportions as his other great works, "The Birth of a Nation," "Hearts of the World," "Broken Blossoms," "Way Down East" and "Orphans of the Storm."

LOS ANGELES (CALIF.) TIMES
Sep 28-1922

Griffith's New One

D. W. Griffith's latest production was given its first public showing in Derby, Ct., last week under the working title of "The Haunted Grange." The presentation, say the dispatches, was made in order that the producer might cut his film under the guidance of an audience. No date has yet been set for release of the feature, but it is expected that the picture will show here late in November.

BOSTON TRAVELER
SEPT. 29, 1922

GRIFFITH'S NEW PICTURE

The new David Wark Griffith production is going to have its first real showing right here in Boston, at Tremont Temple, beginning Oct. 9. A regular Griffith first night will start it off, with Mr. Griffith and his stars on hand. The title that has been decided upon is "One Exciting Night," instead of "The Haunted Grange," the working title. It is a modern tale of flappers and so forth, with Carol Dempster as flapper-in-chief, and Henry Hull to play opposite her.

N. Y. EXHIBITOR'S TRADE
SEPTEMBER 30, 1922

Griffith Finishes New Production; May Go Abroad

D. W. Griffith has finished the production upon which he has been working for the last five months. It will be presented in New York in the manner Mr. Griffith always follows in showing his work.

His plans for the future are complicated by the present coal shortage. It has been Mr. Griffith's intention to make at least one or more pictures in this country before taking up his plans for the productions he intends to make abroad.

His studio at Mamaroneck is equipped for hard coal fuel, and the shortage may cause an immediate shutting down of the work there. The necessity for even temperature in laboratory work makes an adequate supply of fuel imperative.

Not a visitor has been allowed at the Griffith studio while the new picture has been in the making. Costly experiences with the advanced news about his productions has recommended a conservative policy of information. With the coal shortage altering his plans, Mr. Griffith has arranged a conference with a committee of English representatives next week, when a definite decision may be made about his next production.

Exhibitors Herald Chicago
Sep 30-1922

Griffith May Produce Next Film in England Due to Coal Shortage

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

NEW YORK, Sept. 19.—The threatened coal famine may cause D. W. Griffith to make his next picture in England instead of in his own studio at Mamaroneck as planned.

The Mamaroneck studio is equipped for hard coal fuel and the coal shortage may cause an immediate shutting down of the work there. The production on which Mr. Griffith has been working for the past five months has been finished and will be presented in New York at one of the theatres before being turned over to United Artists for distribution.

A conference with a committee of English representatives has been arranged for this week and may result in an announcement of the early departure of Mr. Griffith and a company for England.

MOVING PICTURE WORLD
SEPTEMBER 30, 1922

Finishes Film

D. W. Griffith has finished the producing upon which he has been working for the last five months. It will be presented in New York in the manner Mr. Griffith always follows in showing his work.

His plans for the future are complicated by the present coal shortage. It has been Mr. Griffith's intention to make at least one or more pictures in this country before taking up his plans for the productions he intends to make abroad.

With the coal shortage altering his plans, Mr. Griffith has arranged a conference with a committee of English representatives next week, when a definite decision may be made about his next production.

NEW YORK REVIEW
Sep 30-1922

'ONE EXCITING NIGHT' NEW GRIFFITH PICTURE

Director Makes Departure by Doing a Mystery Comedy

When the residents in the vicinity of the Sterling Theatre, Derby, Conn., sent the town marshal to stop the laughter and applause in that house one evening recently, the first public recognition was given to D. W. Griffith's latest photoplay production, "One Exciting Night."

The picture first was called "The Haunted Grange," but it was found that this is the copyrighted title of a book published a long time ago. The lithograph paper, however, is being made under the title "One Exciting Night."

This picture, on which Mr. Griffith has been working since he completed "Orphans of the Storm," is made for United Artists' Corporation release. Its try-out length was in thirteen reels, but Mr. Griffith always starts his pictures far beyond the length at which they close for standard release, preferring to cut his work before an audience, listening to mass reaction for guidance.

The actual filming of "One Exciting Night" took about three months. The story is by Irene Sinclair, and the action is laid in a country home in Baltimore. The main action takes place in one afternoon and evening, with the principal scenes all laid in one house. The settings are modern in every sense. The players appear in the latest of present-day fashions. For this picture Mr. Griffith has stepped entirely away from costumes, mob scenes and vast sets.

In this departure from the present-day trend toward the costume picture Mr. Griffith has taken the mystery story as the material for popular entertainment. The new picture is said to be very fast in action. The public is familiar with what Mr. Griffith can do in the way of suspense in his pictures, and the mystery play furnishes unusual opportunity for this feature of his production.

For his cast Mr. Griffith drew largely from the legitimate stage, every player in the picture having had experience before the footlights. For the leading man he selected Henry Hull. Carol Dempster is the heroine. C. H. Croker-King, a famous English character actor, plays the part of the doctor. For the comedy in "One Exciting Night" Mr. Griffith took Porter Strong, formerly a minstrel man, whom he has been training in blackface parts.

Frank Sheridan is seen in the role of the detective; Frank Wunderlee is the butler; Margaret Dale is a society adventuress; Morgan Wallace also has an important part. With others in the cast are Percy Cox, Herbert Hatch, Irene Harston, Grace Griswold, Charles Mack and Alice Fleming.

Hendrik Sartov, who did the photography for "Orphans of the Storm," handled all the camera work for this new Griffith picture.

Albert L. Grau, general manager of D. W. Griffith, Inc., has arranged for the opening of the picture at Tremont Temple, Boston, early in October. The New York opening will follow shortly afterward and the picture will then be placed in Chicago and Philadelphia.

BROOKLYN MOTION PICTURE MAG.
Nov. 1922

All photographs by Frank Dien

Griffith Goes In For Mystery

Mystery plays are popular this season. Perhaps because of the contrast they offer to the realistic and often depressing dramas which have predominated. The next D. W. Griffith offering goes in for mystery—mystery and rapid action—namely, "One Exciting Night"

The cast, as you might judge from those previous, is an interesting one, comprised of Carol Dempster, Henry Hull, Charles Mack and other competent players

---

FROM
Theatre Magazine N.Y.
Oct 1922

Frank Diem

Henry Hull—once again the harassed hero of a melodrama—in "One Exciting Night"

Theatre Magazine N.Y.
Oct 1922

Frank Diem

Carol Dempster as the heroine of a new D. W. Griffith offering—"One Exciting Night"

FROM WASHINGTON TIMES
Sep 28-1922

GRIFFITH'S NEW FILM READY FOR US

"One Exciting Night" Present Name of Latest Production. Local "Shubs" Hereafter to Be Called "Rajahs"—Other Gems of Screen and Stage.

By [illegible]

D. W. Griffith is doing up in his style—the plan of his theatre at Mamaroneck—one never knows what this producer has up his sleeve or behind the walls of his studio. We have learned the information that he has finished the production upon which he has been working for the last five months.

The problem of the coal shortage has brought complications into the plans. It was Mr. Griffith's intention to make at least one or more pictures in this country before taking up the plans for the productions he intends to make abroad.

With the coal shortage altering his plans, Mr. Griffith has arranged a conference with a committee of English representatives next week, when a definite decision may be made about his next production.

Motion Picture News Mag
Sep 30-1922

D. W. GRIFFITH is doing up in his style—the plan of his theatre at Mamaroneck—one never knows what this producer has up his sleeve or behind the walls of his studio. We have learned the information that he has finished the production upon which he has been working for the last five months.

The problem of the coal shortage has brought complications into the plans. It was Mr. Griffith's intention to make at least one or more pictures in this country before taking up the plans for the productions he intends to make abroad.

It is doubtful whether the Mamaroneck studio can be operated since it is now equipped for hard coal fuel and the shortage may cause an immediate shutting down of the work there.

It is not allowed any visitors in its studio while the new picture was being produced. Costly experiences with the advanced news about his productions has recommended a conservative policy of information.

Griffith Shows Screen Time

TO ACCOMMODATE THOSE UNABLE TO SECURE TICKETS LAST NIGHT
WE HAVE PERSUADED

MR. D. W. GRIFFITH

AND HIS ENTIRE PARTY, INCLUDING MOTION PICTURE CELEBRITIES, TO REMAIN IN DERBY, AND APPEARING IN PERSON AT

ONE MORE PERFORMANCE

AT EIGHT O'CLOCK

TONIGHT

OF THIS NOTED PRODUCER'S LATEST PRODUCTION AT THE

STERLING THEATER

All Seats Reserved — Orchestra, 46c; Balcony, 25c, including tax

SEE IT HERE BEFORE IT OPENS ON BROADWAY AT $2.00 PRICES

Ansonia Conn

J. R. SHIELDS, Manager.

(Derby Conn) 9/3/22 Evening Sentinel

Ansonia Conn
Evening Sentinel
9/3/22
Derby Conn

TO THE THEATER GOING PUBLIC!

Tomorrow (Thursday) evening, promptly at 8 o'clock, a performance will be given at the Sterling Theater, Derby, which the management confidently believes will be one of the most unique and notable in the history of the theatrical and motion picture profession. It is not too much to say that the management believes it will make theatrical history in the City of Derby.

The arrangements under which the performance is to be given are personal and friendly, rather than business, existing between the management and the producer; and, for reasons which will be disclosed after the performance, we have given our word of honor not to divulge the title, character, or producer's name of the attraction. But we believe it is to become famous, just as other efforts of this great producer have; and we feel it is no small honor to be able to afford the patrons of this theater the opportunity of being the first to see it.

Some very famous persons in the profession will be present personally and we will have the opportunity of seeing—and probably listening to—persons of whom we have heard a great deal.

This is not a money-making scheme—as stated above the performance is to be given in the theater for personal and friendly reasons. The regular admission prices of 25c for gallery seats and 46c for balcony seats, have been the rule, will be charged. All seats have been reserved, and tickets are now on sale.

We ask you to accept our personal guarantee that the attraction is worth seeing and worth a good table, and that we will take pleasure in personally introducing you to the people who will be on the stage.

Make your reservations for seats ... Friday, Sept. 8.

STERLING THEATER,
J. R. SHIELDS, Manager.

(Derby Conn) 9/5/22

N. SEYMOUR

CITY OF

BIG ATTRACTION FOR LOCAL HOUSE

Manager John R. Shields Writes Open Letter to Patrons of Sterling.

Moving Picture Production Extraordinary Is Promise by Him—Details Not Given But Manager Promises Something Big—Famous Producer Will Be Here Tomorrow.

A theatrical advertisement that is greatly out of the ordinary appears in the theater advertisements of The Sentinel this evening. In an open letter to the people of the associated communities John R. Shields, manager of the Sterling theater, calls attention to an attraction which will be seen at that theater Thursday evening.

It is unusual for an advertisement of this kind to appear in any newspaper, not only in Derby but in any other city. Readers who peruse the advertisement will realize that something out of the ordinary is to be presented tomorrow evening. Mr. Shields guarantees his patrons that the advertisement is not a money-making scheme that it is not inserted to attract people and then to present an ordinary picture; rather an extraordinary occasion is promised for tomorrow night.

A Notable Occasion.

The reason for the advertisement is included in the second paragraph of the open letter, which is as follows:

"The arrangements under which the performance is to be given are personal and friendly, rather than business, existing between the management and the producer; and, for reasons which will be disclosed after the performance, we have given our word of honor not to divulge the title, character, or producer's name of the attraction. But we believe it is to become famous, just as other efforts of this great producer have; and we feel it is no small honor to be able to afford the patrons of this theater the opportunity of being the first to see it."

Mr. Shields says that some very famous persons in the profession will be present personally and that the audience will have the opportunity of seeing, and probably listening to, persons of whom they have heard a great deal.

Manager Shields declined to talk for publication about the production which will be shown here when seen by a reporter today. He said that the occasion will be unlike anything that has ever taken place here and that it will mark a high point in local theatrical history. The letter speaks of a "great producer" being present tomorrow evening and of the presence of people well known in the moving picture world. Who the great producer is and who the others are Mr. Shields declined to state, but he was manifestly very much in earnest about the presentation and was emphatic in declaring that the open letter is not an advertising dodge. He has written the letter in good faith and believes the people of this locality will accept it in the good spirit in which it was written.

The regular meeting of the District Nurse Association of Ansonia, Derby and Shelton will be held in the welfare station, 4 Olivia street, Friday afternoon, September, 15 at 2:30 o'clock. As this is the first fall meeting of the association it is expected that there will be considerable new business to come before the members.

The Corner of Good Shoes

CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK TELEGRAPH
OCT 1 1922

NEW YORK TELEGRAPH
OCT 1 1922

WASHINGTON
OCT 1 1922

(Derby Conn) 9/5/22

THE EVENING SENTINEL

CITY OF DERBY

D. W. GRIFFITH SHOWS NEW FILM

Sterling Theater Taxed to Capacity and Sees First Presentation.

Noted Producer Gives Short Speech—Tells of His Aims—Picture, Yet Unnamed, Studied and So Is the Audience—Carol Dempster Is the Star.

David W. Griffith, most famous motion picture producer in the world, gave a premier showing of his latest production, as yet unnamed, in the Sterling theater last evening. The house was sold out at 7:15 o'clock and hundreds of patrons were turned away from the box office before 8 o'clock. In the audience were actors who took part in the picture, including Carol Dempster, the star, and others, members of Mr. Griffith's tremendously large organization, moving picture experts and men prominent in that industry.

Expected Surprise.

The management of the Sterling theater, in an open letter to the people of the associated communities, announced Wednesday and yesterday that a famous moving picture producer and famous actors would be in the theater last evening. The nature of the show which was to be given was not announced, and the majority of those who bought tickets did so out of curiosity. It was rumored throughout this locality that the Gish sister were coming, that Mary Pickford would be there, and all sorts of stories were in circulation. It was generally guessed that Mr. Griffith would be the producer, because the names of the Gish sisters were mentioned most often.

The producer came here with so many people that the capacity of the Hotel Clark was overtaxed. The Griffith party occupied most of the rooms and other transients took the others. Manager Clark put up cots in the coat room off the main lobby, in the ladies' room off the lobby, and everywhere that it was possible to do so he made room for the overflow.

Previous to last evening's performance the moving picture machine experts employed by Mr. Griffith installed his own moving picture machines and expert projectionists arranged the apparatus so as to give the best results. An orchestra of nine pieces came here and held a rehearsal with the picture during the afternoon. The full score had not been completed and parts had to be filled in last night.

The reason for the secrecy is understood by few people. Mr. Griffith has put over some splendid successes, his most notable being "The Birth of a Nation," the first big spectacular production and considered by millions of moving picture fans as the greatest. The success of his productions have been taken as a foregone conclusion.

Reason for Secrecy.

In opening new productions it was for years customary to have them in New York. Before an audience of New Yorkers, including actors, experts and men in the business were in the audiences. It was realized after a time that such tryouts were not before typical American audiences, the people who eventually make or break a picture. Mr. Griffith forsook New York for his opening productions and tried Stamford. The openings were announced and as a result the theater was packed with about the same audiences that attended the New York tryouts.

This week the great producer decided upon something new. Despatching a representative to Derby the latter made arrangements with the management of the Sterling to give the tryout and to surround it with mystery. This was done so that a typical American audience might see the picture and that Mr. Griffith and his experts might study it before the final cuts are made and it is given its real showing on Broadway.

As shown last night there were 11,800 feet of film. This was about 13 reels, several more than can be used. As it was shown Mr. Griffith watched the picture as did his experts. They also took note of the audience. They realized that it was a long show, much longer than people usually consent to sit out. Last night they did so, until the last few minutes, when the usual number started to leave.

Producer Makes Speech.

Mr. Griffith was introduced by Mayor James B. Atwater during the intermission of five minutes. The mayor spoke of the place the producer holds in the motion picture world and said he was "the ace of producers." Mr. Griffith, a man of pleasing personality, gave a brief curtain speech. It was replete with delightful humor and the audience responded to his remarks. He spoke of the reports that have been circulated of motion picture people and said that in the majority they were just like the people who sat in the audience. He spoke of the hard work that is put into pictures before they are ready for the public and said that his aim is to give good, clean productions of which no American might ever be ashamed no matter where they are shown.

The picture itself was interesting. There was a locket which later served to prove the identity of the missing heiress, mysterious murders, cloaked figures stealing through hallways in subdued light, and hands, the latter very reminiscent of "The Bat," reaching forth from behind doors and curtains and even from the walls. There was a half million dollars, which the close-ups revealed to at least one in the audience as Confederate money and which took half the fun out of the efforts of the villains to get their clutches on it. Confederate money hardly being worth today what it was back before that particular person in the audience was born. In fact, half a million dollar's worth of Confederate money is probably worth much less than the same amount in German marks today, to say nothing of committing a murder of two for.

Miss Dempster Stars.

Carol Dempster was the star. She made a tremendous hit in "Dream Street," and she was in the audience last evening. She wore a red blazer, a plaid skirt and carried a cane. She sat on the right center side of the house and in the seat next the aisle. On the other side of the aisle were two local girls who talked most of the night. But this sort of pest attends every moving picture performance.

She was charming in her part last night and the audience took to her. She was ably supported by a company of genuine actors. Henry Hull was her leading man. At present he is appearing in "The Cat and the Canary" in New York and was unable to be here last night. Miss Dempster has also had speaking stage successes, one of her greatest being with Jack Barrymore in "Sherlock Holmes." The villain, and he was an illustrious villain, was Morgan Wallace, who is at present registering one of the hits of the season in London playing in "Lawful Larceny."

It was a great night last night for Porter Strong. He began to work for Mr. Griffith in "The Birth of a Nation." Since then he has been playing "bits." Last night he put in the audience and sat in the box. He registered on the screen. He was under the spell of the picture and he was the chief patron of the occasion. He registered a complete success. The audience applauded every time he appeared on the screen. The acting and the scenery was delightful.

CE'S PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
W YORK — BOSTON
RAY STREET — 8 BOSWORTH STREET
PPING FROM
NEW YORK TELEGRAPH
OCT

TRY OUT LATEST GRIFFITH FEATURE

"One Exciting Night" First Presented to Public at Sterling Theatre, Derby, Ct.

UNITED ARTISTS RELEASE

Using the methods in the history of the Sterling Theatre, Derby, Ct., last night marked an step the theater and audience in that house the showing of Griffith's, the first public exposition was given to D. W. Griffith's latest sensational production, "One Exciting Night."

As yet this film has not been definitely named, however. The picture was "one of the theatrical things" but it was found that this is the temporary title of a book published a long time ago. The photoplay starts, however, to bring about some title "One Exciting Night."

This picture, in which the thrills are long drawn out to suspense "thrillers" of the stage, is made not twice around expectation when it is not one in this case, but Mr. Griffith always starts out to be the unexpected in his pictures. The story is of a young man who is left a fortune on condition that he spend it in a year. He is to be married to a girl who is poor and who is in love with another man. The girl's father is a crook and the young man is in love with the girl. The story is full of suspense and thrills. The story is full of suspense and thrills. The story is full of suspense and thrills

CLIPPING FROM OCT 1 1922

Griffith's Hand Guides Cycle In Film Stories

Director's New Production Built on Lines of "The Bat" Will Doubtless Bring Wave of Mystery Movies.

By HAROLD HEFFERNAN.

D. W. GRIFFITH bears the enviable reputation of setting the season's style in the movies. In addition to being something of an artist in the making of motion pictures, Griffith is the best shown in the business. What the general public wants in film entertainment Griffith seems to sense far in advance of other producers. It is true that he has had more auspicious financial failures than perhaps any other leading American director, but it is equally true that he has experimented much more radically than his competitors. In testing new highways he has struck two or three impenetrable barriers notably his "Intolerance," and "Broken Blossoms."

On the other hand, there are his "Way Down East" and "Orphans of the Storm," released during succeeding seasons, each of which was successful enough to stir interest in a wave of film dramas along the same lines by other producers. "Way Down East" started the cycle of melodramatic films derived from stock stage successes. "Why Girls Leave Home," "Ten Nights in a Barroom," "The Fast Mail" and dozens of other gallery favorites had their inception through the Griffith film. "Orphans of the Storm" inaugurated the costume story, and now every leading director has produced, or is producing, something on the same order.

Directors and producers are, and probably always will be, like so many sheep, eager to follow in the footsteps of the leader. The craze for mounted police and sheik films further evidences this producer trait.

With these facts in mind the mere announcement that Griffith's newest film, which has just been finished and "tried on the dog" in the little town of Derby, Conn., is a mystery story, patterned on lines of "The Bat," should be gravely considered. The mystery story may come into great vogue on the screen, now that the master has made public the nature of his new picture. Scenario writers will probably be ordered to turn out all the material of this nature they can concoct and the pictures to be released after the next six months may possess more yellow-backed impossibilities than the dime novel authors ever dreamed could be forced on the public.

Griffith's new film is now in 13 reels and was shown at its tryout under the title of "The Haunted House." It is being re-cut and will be ready for exhibition this month under the title of "One Exciting Night." The action takes place in one night and involves some new lighting effects. Not a visitor was allowed on the lot during the filming of the play. The only information Griffith made public was that the picture would be of a different nature than any he had previously done.

Toledo, Ohio News Bee. Oct 25 1922

D. W. GRIFFITH, who has been working on his new picture for the last five months without disclosing the nature of the production, comes out of his shell long enough to announce that it's title is "One Exciting Night."

The entire action takes place in one night, involving many lighting effects. The play is a mystery story. Leads are handled by Carol Dempster and Henry Hull.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS (N. Y. City) OCTOBER 7, 1922

Campaign Over Four Counties to Announce Coming of "Way Down East"

Atlanta, Mo.—The management of "The Picture House" under direction of J. Greene-Mackenzie, reports gratifying results on a campaign for "Way Down East," which entailed little expense in heralding the coming of the picture. A "flivver" was painted white, then lettered with black, spelling out New England phrases, the name of the picture and advance play date. The machine was driven over adjoining counties, from which a boy threw out handbills. Stops were made long enough to tack up pole cards. On Saturday, the day the picture was scheduled for Atlanta, an aeroplane was hired to go from the park where the skydome is located to a neighboring town where there was a large crowd assembled for a free automobile drawing. The plane dived down low over the crowd and threw out hundreds of handbills.

EXHIBITORS HERALD, CHICAGO OCTOBER 7, 1922

JACK LLOYD journeyed to the wilds of Derby, Conn., to see a showing of the new Griffith picture, which was exhibited under the working title "At the Grange." It is now about thirteen thousand feet, which Lloyd says isn't any too long for such a good picture. But they're going to cut it into about ten reels and threaten to call it "One Exciting Night."

* * *

And speaking of Derby, Conn., JACK LLOYD verifies Tim Leahy's oft repeated statement that it is really a town and not a state of mind.

N. Y. EXHIBITOR'S TRADE REVIEW OCTOBER 7, 1922

THE sway of the costume picture continues in full swing, with a change of mood visible in the announcement of D. W. Griffith's new film, which bears the present title of "One Exciting Night." It will open in Boston October 9, and all the indications are that it will be a sensation. Mr. Griffith, sensing the demand of the public for mystery plays, has put upon the screen what is described as all the mystery anybody wants plus comedy relief that sent the two try-out audiences—at Derby, Conn., and Montclair, N. J.—into peals of laughter.

CLIPPING FROM Syracuse Herald Sunday 9-24-22

GRIFFITH FILM GETS SHOWING

Trial Showing Held This Week Reveals It as 13,000 Feet Long

Derby, Conn., Sept. 21.—D. W. Griffith's picture was brought here this week for a trial showing incidental to the cutting of the picture. It was over thirteen thousand feet long, but carried a full quota of sub-titles.

The new film was shown under the studio title of "The Haunted Grange," which title, however, is only tentative.

When the picture is completed, it will be shown in several of the larger cities, the openings probably being about the same time.

These showings will be under the management of Albert L. Grey, general manager of the Griffith organization, who has successfully handled "Hearts of the World," "Broken Blossoms," "Way Down East" and "Orphans of the Storm." present plans are to show it immediately in a few of the key cities.

No additions to the executive staff will be necessary, including the booking department in which Grey has generally employed J. J. McCarthy.

Griffith plans to cut the picture during the trial showings to a standard length, which may be under ten thousand feet.

Columbus O. Citizen 9-20-22

D. W. GRIFFITH isn't saying just what his next picture, "At the Grange," is all about. He never tells much about his pictures until they are ready for exhibition. "Orphans of the Storm" was one of the first in the present deluge of costume pictures. More than $10,000,000 have been spent on costume pictures this year.

N.Y. Mail 9-22-22

D. W. GRIFFITH'S latest production, which has been kept for months under lock and key in so far as these columns are concerned, was given its first public showing in Derby, Conn., last week under the working title of "The Haunted Grange." The presentation was made in order that the producer could "cut" his film under the guidance of an audience. No date has been set as yet for the Broadway showing of the picture.

NEW YORK NEWS 9-24-22

D. W. Griffith's latest production, which has been kept for months under lock and key in so far as these columns are concerned, was given its first public showing in Derby, Conn., last week under the working title of "The Haunted Grange." The presentation was made in order that the producer could "cut" his film under the guidance of an audience. No date has been set as yet for the Broadway showing of the picture.

N.Y. Telegraph 9-22-22

CLIPPING FROM N.Y. Mail 9-22-22

A Subtle, Clever, Passionate Nature

Being the Character Analysis of David Ward Griffith

By MARY TOWLES

HEAD—Crown, high and broad, indicates firmness, veneration, a knowledge of human nature and constructive ability. The great fullness in and about the ears shows a decided love of life, a desire to fight and argue for individual rights, energy, severity of temper, and strong animal tendencies. Fullness and breadth in the upper back of the head shows caution and a love of praise.

Forehead—The bony structure means power, discrimination, the width through the center of the head, from side to side, just in front of the ears, means great constructive ability, a fondness for invention and a reaching out for knowledge along all lines.

Eyebrows—Bushy, drawn down over the eyes and dark, indicates something of genius, excelling in one direction rather than in all. A personality that will be strong, vigorous and compelling, almost hypnotic in its power.

Eyes—Deep set, shows intensity, observation, analysis and penetration. Narrow, with a fullness of surrounding tissue at the outer corners, rather close together, indicates one suspicious of others, passionate, eager and enthusiastic in action. The fullness of the upper lid means sensualness.

Nose—Bony structure, shows intensity, executive ability and energy. The height of the bridge means power, a love of danger and excitement. The septum, or the middle cartilage of the nose, drawn downward, making it extend below the wings of the nostrils, indicates keen analytical powers. This is the nose of genius and power.

Mouth—Slightly thinned upper lip shows intensity and temper, a love of action and immediate realization. The oblique line means sarcasm and the power of cutting speech. A dip in the center of the upper lip indicates a power of thought combined with physical action to consummate what the mind suggests. Projecting under lip indicates coldness and shrewdness. The full corners mean passion, sensitiveness and ambition.

Chin—Bony and muscular, drawn up in the middle, means an amorous, impulsive and passionate nature, quick of action, affections easily aroused and hard to control.

The personality that the face suggests is that of a subtle, clever, passionate nature. Magnetic, almost hypnotic, a surging will and one who would be ruthless to obtain results.

CLIPPING FROM Boston American 9-30-22

NEW GRIFFITH FILM COMING TO HUB

"One Exciting Night" Will Be Seen at Tremont Temple Early in October

This picture, on which Mr. Griffith has been working since he completed "Orphans of the Storm," is made for United Artists Corporation release. Its try-out length was in thirteen reels, but Mr. Griffith always starts his pictures far beyond their final length, preferring to do his cutting after getting the reaction of an audience.

The actual filming of "One Exciting Night," took about three months. The story is by Irene Sinclair, and the action is laid in a country home in Baltimore. The main action takes place in one afternoon and evening, with the principal scenes all laid in one house. The settings are modern in every sense. The players appear in the latest of present day fashions. For this picture Mr. Griffith has stepped entirely away from costumes, mob scenes and vast sets.

For his cast Mr. Griffith drew largely from the legitimate stage, every player in the picture having had experience before the footlights. For the leading man he selected Henry Hull, actor and dramatist, who is presently successful in "The Cat and the Canary," one of the most popular of the stage plays now running. Carol Dempster, of the Griffith players, is the heroine. C. H. Croker-King, a famous English character actor, plays the part of the doctor. He made a great impression in New York as the doctor in "Bull Dog Drummond."

Frank Sheridan is seen in the role of the detective; Frank Wunderlee is the butler; Margaret Dale is a society adventuress; Morgan Wallace, now leading man with the "Lawful Larceny" company, in London, also has an important part. While others in the cast are Percy Carr, Herbert Sutch, Irma Harrison, Grace Griswold, Charles Mack and Alice Fleming.

Hedwig Reicher, who did the photography for "Orphans of the Storm" handled all the camera work for this new Griffith feature. During the making of this picture Mr. Griffith put up the bars of his studio entrance and permitted none but members of the company to get in or out. He spent three weeks taking several scenes for his big climax, and at the time showed the utmost impatience for the sun when around for the proper and effective rays to be used in the work.

Thus the most powerful manager of the motion picture industry is now at the head of a company of players who are working under the direction of a man who is a master of his art, and who is using the best talent available for the production of his new picture.

CLIPPING FROM St. Louis, Mo. Star 10-1-22

Griffith's Next Film Has Mystery Theme

D. W. Griffith's new picture, which has been filmed under the title, "One Exciting Night," received a pre-showing recently at Derby, Conn. In its present shape the production is in thirteen reels, but Griffith always starts his pictures far beyond their final length, preferring to do his cutting after getting the reaction of an audience.

The story is a radical departure from the previous Griffith photodramas, being modern in every sense and entirely away from costumes, mob scenes and vast sets. Griffith has taken the present vogue for mystery stories as a hint for a subject for his new production, and has indulged to the limit his propensity for inducing suspense.

Henry Hull, now playing successfully in "The Cat and the Canary," is the leading man.

Newark, N.J. Star-Eagle 9/2/22

THE mystery play promises to come into great vogue on the screen since D. W. Griffith has made public the nature of his latest picture.

Not a visitor was allowed on the lot during the filming of the play. The only information Griffith made public was that the picture would be of a different nature than any he had previously done.

The film is thirteen reels, was "tried on the dog" under the title of "The Haunted House," at Derby, Conn. It is being recut, and will soon be ready for exhibition under the title of "One Exciting Night." The action takes place in one night, and involves some new lighting effects.

Jackson Mich. Citizen Patriot 10-1-22

Mystery Play In Vogue

The mystery play promises to come into great vogue on the screen since D. W. Griffith has made public the nature of his latest picture.

No a visitor was allowed on the lot during the filming of the play. The only information Griffith made public was that the picture would be of a different nature than any he had previously done.

The film, in 13 reels, was "tried on the dog" under the title of "The Haunted House" at Derby, Conn. Its being re-cut and will soon be ready for exhibition under the title of "One Exciting Night." The action takes place in one night and involves some new lighting effects.

Boston Post 10-2-22

THE CHANGE IN TITLE

Chicago Herald 10/2/22

Boston Post 10/2/22

Boston Advertiser 10/1/22

Griffith's New Picture Has Big Cast

N.Y. EXHIBITOR'S TRADE REVIEW OCTOBER 7, 1922

D. W. Griffith Production Given Preview

D. W. GRIFFITH'S latest photoplay entitled "One Exciting Night" was given a preview at the Sterling theatre, Derby, Conn., the evening of September 15th. This picture made by Mr. Griffith for release by United Artists was shown at its preview in thirteen reels, but this footage will be reduced, the cuts being based on the reaction of the audience to the production. The picture was three months in the making and is based on Irene Sinclair's mystery story.

Henry Hull, featured player in the stage production, "The Cat and The Canary," is presented in the leading male role. Carol Dempster appears opposite. C. H. Croker-King, a well-known English character actor; Porter Strong, Frank Sheridan, Frank Wunderlee, Margaret Dale, and Morgan Wallace, are also seen in important roles. Others in the cast are Percy Carr, Herbert Sutch, Irma Harrison, Grace Griswold, Charles Mack and Alice Fleming.

Fifty sets built for the show are the work of Frank Wortman and the designs are by Charles Kirk. Arrangements are being made for the opening of the picture at the Tremont Temple, Boston, early in October.

The picture was first titled "The Haunted Grange," but this was abandoned owing to the fact that this title was found to be the name of a copyrighted book published a long time ago. "One Exciting Night" has not as yet been definitely settled as the permanent title.

New Griffith Film a Mystery Story

Pre-Showing Given in Connecticut Town —Present Title, "One Exciting Night"

When the residents in the vicinity of the Sterling Theatre, Derby, Conn., sent the town marshal to stop the laughter and applause in that house the evening of September 15, the first public recognition was given to D. W. Griffith's latest photoplay, "One Exciting Night."

As yet this title has not been definitely accepted, however. The picture first was called "The Haunted Grange," but it was found that this is the copyrighted title of a book published a long time ago. The lithograph paper, however, is being made under the title "One Exciting Night."

This picture, on which Mr. Griffith has been working since he completed "Orphans of the Storm" is made for United Artists release. Its try-out length was in thirteen reels, but Mr. Griffith always starts his pictures far beyond the length at which they close for standard release, preferring to cut his work before an audience, listening to mass reaction for guidance.

The actual filming of "One Exciting Night" took about three months. The story is by Irene Sinclair, and the action is laid in a country home in Baltimore. The main action takes place in one afternoon and evening, with the principal scenes all laid in one house. The settings are modern in every sense. The players appear in the latest of present day fashions. For this picture Mr. Griffith has stepped entirely away from costumes, mob scenes and vast sets.

For his cast Mr. Griffith drew largely from the legitimate stage, every player in the picture having had experience before the footlights. For the leading man he selected Henry Hull, actor and dramatist, who is presently successful in "The Cat and the Canary." Carol Dempster, of the Griffith players, is the heroine. C. H. Croker-King, famous English character actor, plays the part of the doctor.

UNIFORMS

you'll be mighty proud to have your employees wear

Write for Catalogue and Samples

BROOKS UNIFORM CO.

1433 B'way., N. Y. C.

Every Manager and Agent should see

THE JULIUS CAESAR BILL GROUP

JULIUS CAESAR BILL GROUP

Griffith Now Member Hays Organization

Griffith's Newest Given Pre-Showing

Mack Dempster Charmed for New Griffith Film

NEWPORT (R. I.) NEWS
OCT. 3, 1922

FILM A MASTERPIECE.

"One Exciting Night" Presented at Colonial.

Presence of D. W. Griffith and Two Members of Cast Adds Not a Little to Presentation.

The very large number who attended the opening presentation of D. W. Griffith's latest screen production, "One Exciting Night" at the Colonial Theatre last evening not only saw a masterpiece of the screen art, but also had the opportunity of hearing brief addresses by Mr. Griffith, the producer, and Miss Carol Dempster and Mr. Porter Strong, two prominent members of the cast which created the play. Mr. Griffith was introduced by Mr. H. A. Titus during the intermission at the close of the first part and Miss Dempster and Mr. Strong after the conclusion of the picture, the spectators remaining in their seats to see and hear the speakers. Mr. Griffith spoke of the production of his former successes, "The Birth of a Nation," "Way Down East" and the "Orphans of the Storm," and of the present production in which the object was "to bring just a little smile to your lips and forgetfulness to your hearts." He spoke of the various members of the cast who are widely scattered, one in England and various parts of this country. Two members, Miss Dempster and Mr. Strong, were here and he had asked them to speak to the Newporters who had given the production such a cordial support. Miss Dempster and Mr. Strong spoke briefly, expressing their appreciation of the hearty reception given to them.

"One Exciting Night" is a story of a night of mystery, with a plot which keeps the spectators in doubt until the final denouement. The prelude is laid in a South African camp where a baby is born, her mother dying as she receives news of the death of the father, and is left by an uncle in the care of an unscrupulous woman that he might claim the large fortune which is the baby's. The play centered in a mysterious murder in a New York residence and involves the search by several men for the booty which the murdered man hidden in the house. Incidentally the search for the girl to receive her inheritance is involved, and adds to the complications. The crowning event of the picture is the very realistic reproduction of the great hurricane which swept New York last June and which tore down hundreds of trees in the rear vicinity of the Griffith studios. This scene is presented with representations of flashes of lightning, peals of thunder and the shrieking of the wind, and with the uprooting of massive trees and the dismantling of small houses gives a thrill of excitement which is irresistible.

The play, which was written by Irene Sinclair, a young Kentucky authoress, has many comedy features, mainly in the acts of Romeo Washington, the scared-to-death colored boy, who is portrayed by Porter Strong. Miss Carol Dempster is the heroine, Agnes Harrington, and the closing scenes rise to high levels of dramatic action. The hero, John Fairfax, was cleverly portrayed by Henry Hull; Margaret Dale was good as Mrs. Harrington, the supposed mother of the heroine; Morgan Wallace gave the unpleasant part of J. Wilson Beckmann a strong presentation; Frank Sheridan as the detective did some very clever acting, and Irma Harrison made the part of the colored maid a bright bit of comedy.

A special orchestra, brought by Mr Griffith, aided by several members of the Colonial Theatre orchestra, played during the evening, the incidental music being appropriate to the various scenes, and adding to the success of the production.

My Telegraph Oct 4/22

"ONE EXCITING NIGHT."

NEW GRIFFITH FEATURE

BOSTON HERALD
OCT. 6, 1922

GRIFFITH TUNING UP HIS NEW FILM

Likes to Make Initial Productions in Boston

David W. Griffith, motion picture producer and director, who arrived in Boston yesterday with his latest film, "One Exciting Night," which opens at Tremont Temple Monday, in an interview last evening declared that he found Boston the best of all large cities for initial displays of his pictures. The reason, he said, is that the viewpoint of Boston people more nearly represents that of the nation than does the viewpoint of the average resident of New York, Philadelphia or Chicago.

"I find the Boston viewpoint a healthy one to take away with me," he said, "and it holds good not only in America but throughout the world. Then, too, I open here because I like Boston. A person usually likes a place where he is well received, and Boston has always treated me well."

When seen yesterday, Mr. Griffith was hard at work synchronizing the music with his new film. The scene of the picture is laid near Louisville, and the music largely consists of adaptions of southern airs. It was quite a task for the musicians, who were more used to Italian opera than to darkey tunes to catch the spirit of that type of music, and Griffith constantly interrupted them in order to stress a note here or a strain there.

"This new picture," he said, "contains more comedy than most of my productions. Its main object is to entertain, and I hope the majority will find it pleasing."

Questioned as to his attitude on the censorship law which will go into effect in Massachusetts unless defeated in the referendum this November, he said he did not wish to make any recommendations to people as to how they should vote. He admitted, however, that he considered censorship, carried to its logical conclusion in curbing not only films but newspapers and kindred of endeavor, would eventually be thought.

Boston Morning Post Oct 6/22

Reformed Church Messenger Phila Pa. 9/14/22

MAKING YOUR LIFE A SERMON

"Every honest craftsman is at his best a preacher. That is, he conceives his calling as a sort of gospel, and has the desire to go into all the world and preach it." In these words a popular writer explains the greatness of D. W. Griffith as a moving picture producer. We may not agree with his estimate of the man, but we can agree in the claim that "every sincere worker magnifies his calling;" and even though he may not pose as an uplifter or reformer, he should believe that the work he is in has a message that will promote the welfare of mankind.

"Griffith has a great vision of the future of the moving picture," says this writer; "he apprehends it as the true universal language. Difference in language is one of the things that keeps the nations of the world apart, and thus does its bit toward promoting wars. And he has deep hopes that somehow through the world-wide appeal of the pictures the peoples of earth may be brought into a better brotherhood." Let us hope that this vision may be realized and be glad for all who help to achieve such a purpose. In every sphere of action we have great need of a similar spirit, the practical idealism that, while keeping its eyes on the goal, keeps its hands busy in transforming things as they are into things as they ought to be. No matter what position we occupy, why should not every man and woman think of his or her calling "as a sort of gospel?" You must believe in yourself and your work, if you would bring things to pass that will be of real service to the world. Jesus said to all His followers: "As ye go, preach."

Those of us who have identified Mr. Griffith with massive backgrounds and smashing crowds and gorgeous spectacles may be surprised to learn, also, that it is not these things that receive his most concentrated attention; no, what he values most is the simple human touch. Listen to his words: "My greatest efforts are devoted to working out those intimate human touches which count for more in the success of a photo play than all the spectacular elements. And this is a humbling thought for the producer when he is tempted to stage the whirlwind and dramatize the cyclone."

Is not this true of the greater play of life? We may be preaching most effectively when we lead quiet and peaceable lives in all godliness and honesty. Is not the mother's ministry in the home a beautiful sort of gospel? Is not the "still small voice" more potent than the earthquake and the fire? Are not all men hungry for "the human touch?"

Portland Ore Sovereignty 9/26/22

The Fighting Parson

A leader, honest-to-goodness fighting person is the Rev. Christian F. Reisner. He presides over the Chelsea Methodist Episcopal church, one of the largest in New York City. He has crowded his twenty pastors by inviting motion picture producers and actors to speak from his pulpit.

"Yes, I have been criticized for this," says Dr. Reisner, "but I want the people to get in close touch with the people who furnish their entertainment. I have no patience with the class of people who are forever put theorizing people who market with motion pictures. The church is in touch in business with motion pictures and should do more to promote advantage.

I wonder if the movie people realize the responsibility they have the high opportunity to do a great work and the temptation to do a great deal of harm. I have seen some of the finest pictures and some of the most vicious pictures. I have seen pictures that have caused people to go out and do wrong. I have seen pictures that have caused people to go out and do right. I have seen a young man who had lost his job, thought he was going to commit suicide, but he saw a picture that showed him the way to success, and he got a job and made good. I have seen pictures that have caused people to go out and do wrong. I have seen pictures that have caused people to go out and do right. I have seen a young man who had lost his job, thought he was going to commit suicide, but he saw a picture that showed him the way to success, and he got a job and made good.

Dr. Reisner smiled as he recollected the incident and with a little laugh, answered:

"Why, he admitted that he knew nothing about the young woman and made the remark because of her calling."

As Dr. Reisner stands six feet and is built in proportion and is athletic, it was not hard to believe that the liberal underlying an inspiration to thought.

"The trouble with the people is that the motion picture actors are too far removed from them and we not understand

Choice Title for Griffith Film

BOSTON TRANSCRIPT
OCT. 2, 1922

OVERLOOKS OF FILMS

Light Dalliance with the Ways and Works of Messieurs, the Directors

THE most notable tempest to take place in a teapot must have been when the Hatter and the March Hare of fond memory dropped in on the Dormouse. The next began when Mr. David Wark Griffith and Miss Mary Pickford made melodrama for the movies in Jersey backyards. From the merest breeze of summer arose tempest and typhoon, and nowadays the teapot guggles and gurgles as if the Dormouse were awake at last and making a mess of things inside. The censors are prying at the lid, and for the most part getting themselves severely scalded, while the general public stand aside in wide-eyed wonder, occasionally gratified by the published observations of prominent journalistic gentlemen who have been looking down the snout. Mr. Chesterton's pet paradoxes would be strained in summing up the present modes of the movies, and that canny gentleman keeps astute silence on the subject, while the teapot clatters about the table, gathering up Mr. Will Hays on its way, for a sort of sympathetic strainer to keep in the grounds.

Mr. Griffith boils to the top anon, is swiftly succeeded by Mr. Lubitsch, who is in turn downed for an instant by Rex Ingram. Down below in the bowels of the pot, the minor movie makers eddy round and round, now going up a notch, now falling back again like the celebrated frog in the arithmetical problem. Mr. Griffith, having boiled the latest, and being withal a kindly gentleman with a taste for tea himself, draws first delineation. He is a most contradictory personage, a master maker of real humanity in impossible situations, a beater of Mr. Kipling's big drum, a creator of artistic detail and a god of the films above all other gods. Accuse him of melodrama, and he smoothly inquires what in your most exalted opinion, melodrama may be. Score him with sentimentality and he turns out a cold, callous, brutal bit of reality like "Broken Blossoms," a kaleidoscopic firmament compared to that one-toned tawdry twinkle of Thomas Burke's original tale. Or ask Mr. Hergesheimer as to Griffith, set inquiry afoot among the folk of the street, and you will hear rare tales of his greatness. His methods proclaim him expert, his pictures proclaim him artist. Damn him with "Dream Street," and his reply is that blood-glutted canvas of revolt, "Orphans of the Storm."

Then turn to this most notable rival in the weaving of historical tapestry, Ernst Lubitsch, tailor, tagger at the heels of Max Reinhardt, and teller of tales most extraordinary. There is no Continental like unto him, he leads the Latins; he eclipses the Italians; he makes Maxfield Parrish look to his laurels in crimson and gold picturing of the Arabian Nights. Considering this most ingenuous little man with a large cigar, no one would deem him capable of historic romance, so done and dealt with that Sir Walter Scott himself might raise eyes in envy. So helpless does he look that the most humble passer-by would not scorn to tell him how to take his pictures, and yet he knows more of stage or screen than any man in America or out and turns that knowledge to rare account in glittering Germanic dramas that go to grim ends through pagentry infinitely more colorful than that with which we are wont to deck our heroes of history. So Griffith, so Lubitsch, monarchs of all they survey and like Alexander Selkirk more or less pleased with the prospect and caustically censorious of the public they serve.

In this they are joined by another atom in the adventure of art, a bit of the "Sea Wolf's" ferment, on top of the boiling and bound to stay there, Rex Ingram. Ingram—the educated product, a follower of Balzac and the Russians, a director who made films with such deft artistry that screen salesmen threw up their hands and swore they could not give them away, a trafficker in the human touch, and a scorching censor of his own screen-craft. Ingram has nearly as much power as Griffith, power unmalleable and unwieldy, a veritable cannon gone charging down the decks of "Ninety-Three!" A sense of proportion is his also, a hearty distaste for sickly sentimentality, and a pretty eye for sentiment.

Here if you please are the three musketeers, Griffith the lean Kentuckian, jacks-of-all-trades; Lubitsch, the East Prussian tailor; Ingram of Yale. But here comes Gascon d'Artagnan, revelling the plough-horses red and raising a very hell's racket at the city wall. Norman Dawn he is, a name for an adventurer! His sword is robust romance, and he has been seventeen years sporting up stern roads and strange. Norman Dawn, gentleman adventurer! Norman Dawn, cameraman, wanderer on the face of the earth, maker of motion pictures! In his glittering lengths of film, head-hunters go prowling down dark seas, trade-wind and typhoon come singing on the surf, steel bites cast and battle whirls beneath the sky, death-riding romance for Dawn, romance of red blood and realism! London, Kipling, Conrad rolled into one; a cameraman with crew true of the trade at finger-tips, an artist sensation, a believer in burnt-umber, d'Artagnan of cameras come to serve the King.

Somewhere about but not in sight for a while is John Robertson, scion of noble sire of the screen, spoiled of his fought out Mr. Hyde and Dr. Jekyll, Mr. Hyde and Dr. Jekyll, Mr. Hyde and Dr. Jekyll, going back to Vitagraph, Mr. Hyde and Dr. Jekyll, Mr. Hyde and Dr. Jekyll, Mr. Hyde and Dr. Jekyll

My American Sunday Oct 1

UTTERLY FASCINATING—

D. W. GRIFFITH'S

new edition of love, laughter and mystery

"ONE EXCITING NIGHT"

Another Sensation for the Theatre

IT WILL BE SHOWN SOMETIME IN OCTOBER

My American Oct 22

APOLLO THEA., 42d St., W. of Broadway. Twice Daily, 2:30 and 8:20

D. W. GRIFFITH'S

ONE EXCITING NIGHT

PRICES: Orchestra, Nights, $1 & $1.50. Balc., 50c, $1. Mats. 50c & $1.

APOLLO THEA., 42d St., W. of Broadway. Twice Daily, 2:30 and 8:20.

D. W. GRIFFITH'S

ONE EXCITING NIGHT

PRICES:— Orchestra, Nights, $1.00 and $1.50. Balcony, 50c, and $1.00. Matinees, 50c, and $1.00.

Sunday American Oct 29

I Can Thrill You!

I can make you Laugh—I can make you Cry
I can make you Love—I can make you Sigh
I can make you Happy—I can make you Sad
I can make you Good—I can make you Bad
I can make you Sleep—I can make you Dream
I can make you Shudder—I can make you Scream

I am

"ONE EXCITING NIGHT"

D. W. Griffith's Latest Masterpiece!

Apollo Theatre
42nd St., West of B'way

TWICE DAILY
2:30—8:20
Sunday Mat. at 3:00

PRICES: Nights, $1.00 & $1.50 Balcony, 50c and $1.00
Matinee, Lower Floor, $1.00 Balcony, 50c

I Will Thrill You!

My Sunday News. Oct 1-22

UTTERLY FASCINATING—

D. W. GRIFFITH'S

new edition of love, laughter and mystery

"ONE EXCITING NIGHT"

Another Sensation for the Theatre

IT WILL BE SHOWN SOMETIME IN OCTOBER

THE B. F. KEITH VAUDEVILLE THEATRES

Eve Telegram Oct 29 — Sunday 29

Morning Tribune Oct 30

Eve Telegram Oct 30

"And don't forget the storm. You won't if you see it."—The Times.

"An onslaught of comedy."—The Sun.

D. W. GRIFFITH'S

Sparkling Epic of Laughing Thrills.

ONE EXCITING NIGHT

APOLLO THEA., 42d, W. of Bway. Twice Daily, 2:30 and 8:20.

PRICES Nights: Lower floor $1 & $1.50. Balcony 50c. and $1.00. All Matinees 50c. and $1.00.

WITH SPECIAL MUSIC, EFECTS AND PRESENTATION UNDER MR. GRIFFITH'S PERSONAL SUPERVISION.

Heaven Smiles When Children Laugh!
And how children laugh at and love

D. W. GRIFFITH'S

Joyous Romance of Mystery

ONE EXCITING NIGHT

The Most Fascinating Film Ever Made

Opening Apollo Theatre — Monday Night October 23rd
42nd St. West of B'way

My American Sunday Oct 8/22

Heaven Smiles When Children Laugh!
And how children laugh at and love

D. W. GRIFFITH'S

Joyous Romance of Mystery

ONE EXCITING NIGHT

The Most Fascinating Film Ever Made

Opening Apollo Theatre — Monday Night October 23rd
42nd St. West of B'way

My Sunday Herald 9/8/22

Heaven Smiles When Children Laugh!
And how children laugh at and love

D. W. GRIFFITH'S

Joyous Romance of Mystery

ONE EXCITING NIGHT

The Most Fascinating Film Ever Made

Opening Apollo Theatre — Monday Night October 23rd
42nd St. West of B'way

Sunday News Oct 8/22

AMUSEMENTS. | AMUSEMENTS. | AMUSEMENTS.

different and delightful

For the first time ever upon the screen

The Laughing Thrill

No ponderous sets — No annoying subs — No queer costumes

Something fresh and new in the films—not the old thing dished with a little more elaboration—But Something Really New

D. W. GRIFFITH'S

bilthe romance of exhilarating mystery

ONE EXCITING NIGHT

[illegible]

"[illegible] Mistry" (The American)

A distinct and refreshing relief from the commonplace and the delicacy commonplace on the screen.

APOLLO THEATRE 42d St., West of B'way | [illegible] | [illegible]

To see it right, see it at this theatre with music, effects and presentation under the personal supervision of Mr. Griffith.

Sunday World Oct 29

Sunday Herald Tribune Oct 29

9 o'clock

"Then the murders stop and all is well" (Herald)

"A Hilarious Thriller" (Times)

A Laughing Thrill—the rarest delight of the theatre

D. W. GRIFFITH'S

One Exciting Night

Matinee Today at 2 o'clock.

APOLLO THEATRE 42nd West of Broadway — Popular Prices — Twice Daily 2:30 and 8:20 — Popular Prices

---

Sunday Herald-Tribune Oct 29

Morning World-Tribune Eve Herald Oct 30

"And don't forget the storm. You won't if you see it."

"An onslaught of comedy."

D. W. GRIFFITH'S

Sparkling Epic of Laughing Thrills

ONE EXCITING NIGHT

APOLLO [illegible]

YOU'LL BE SURPRISED!—

D. W. GRIFFITH'S

fascinating edition of love, laughter and mystery

ONE EXCITING NIGHT

The High Tide of Entertainment!

Opening Apollo Theatre — Monday Night October 23rd
42nd St. West of B'way

YOU'LL BE SURPRISED!—

D. W. GRIFFITH'S

fascinating edition of love, laughter and mystery

ONE EXCITING NIGHT

The High Tide of Entertainment!

Opening Apollo Theatre [illegible]

My Sunday Oct 22-1922

D. W. GRIFFITH presents

ONE EXCITING NIGHT

Opening Apollo Theatre Tomorrow Night

N.Y. American Eve. Journal Oct 30-1922

Soft Stealthy Steps in Her Bedroom

A crouching figure! A moving door! She sleeps! Her slender body outlined by the dainty coverings.
Silks . . . laces . . . down of duck . . but no one to warn her!
The jungle steps come noiselessly closer!
A hunter . . . but yet a man!
A powerful Kaffir and the girl of eighteen!
Alone!
Downstairs, dreaming of her, the boy who loves her is asleep!
What happens is one of the most thrilling moments in

D. W. GRIFFITH'S

colossal story of mystery, laughter and thrills

One Exciting Night

"Tense moments when one thinks one's heart just can't last—and then onslaughts of comedy that congest the theatre" (Sun)

APOLLO THEATRE 42nd Street West of B'way TWICE DAILY 2:30—8:20

PRICES:
Nights, $1.00 & $1.50
Balcony, 50c & $1.00
Matinee, Lower Floor, $1.00
Balcony, 50c

"It will be the popular evening's entertainment for the rest of the season."—Post.
D. W. GRIFFITH'S
Pyramid of Pulsing Delights
ONE EXCITING NIGHT
APOLLO

Tribune Oct 1

Tribune World Herald Oct 31

"At the risk of being thought a low-brow, I maintain that Mr. Griffith has never made such an enjoyable picture. In the vernacular, it is the daddy of them all," says Miss Louella Parsons in the Telegraph.
"Comedy Bushels of It"
D. W. GRIFFITH'S
pyramid of pulsing delights
ONE EXCITING NIGHT
APOLLO

N.Y. World Telegraph Oct 30

D. W. GRIFFITH'S
Sparkling Fate of Laughing Thrills
ONE EXCITING NIGHT
APOLLO

N.Y. World Oct 30

American Post Times World Tribune Herald Nov 3-1922

"Never in pictures has there been anything so full of thrills, suspense and everything that makes for 100 per cent entertainment. This one is better."—Telegraph.
"The most exciting picture ever seen."—Journal
D. W. GRIFFITH'S
"Brilliant Thriller."—Times
ONE EXCITING NIGHT
APOLLO THEATRE

D. W. GRIFFITH'S
ONE EXCITING NIGHT

Morning N.Y. Telegraph Sunday Oct 29

D. W. GRIFFITH

Producer of "The Birth of a Nation" and "Way Down East"—Says:

"It is our policy that our press department say nothing in praise concerning our productions. Therefore, before our opening of our latest production, 'One Exciting Night,' we made no statement.

"Others have now spoken. The laughter and applause at the theatre upholds the high praise. Therefore, we take the liberty of directing your attention to what has been said.

"We believe, if you wish to see this picture, it will be to your interest to see it in this theatre, as we have some special effects and special music arrangements with which we have taken great care."

"One Exciting Night is a hilarious thriller . . . . And don't forget the storm. You won't if you see it . . . A screaming, streaming climax, a magnificent piece of work, that brings the picture to a whirling, whirring end . . . The negro Romeo's comedy is broad and busy, but he's funny" . . . (Times)

"One Exciting Night will be the popular pleasure for the rest of the season" (Post)

"We feel safe in advising you not to miss it" (News)

Enormously Funny

"If you don't die of fright you will laugh yourself to death. Tense moments when one thinks one's heart just cannot last another yard . . . then comes an onslaught of comedy that congests the theatre . . . As exciting as 'The Bat' . . . . Superior to anything of the sort the screen has known . . . Griffith's art most tellingly evident" (The Sun)

"A great many enormously funny bits were uproariously received . . . The storm scene is the directorial genius at his best" . . . . . (The Globe)

Surpasses All

"The most exciting motion picture ever witnessed . . . breathtaking climax. . . . Even remembering what the master film producer had done in 'Way Down East' his present storm surpasses all. . . . Griffith has added the funniest type of negro comedian" (Evening Journal)

"Well worth the price . . . even the war tax" (Evening World)

"'One Exciting Night' it is . . . 7328 thrills in two hours with the storm still raging" . . . (Morning Telegraph)

"The screen does it so much better than the stage" (Alan Dale)

All gasp, and so will you—

"Griffith's picture will live among the immortals of the silver screen . . . 'One Exciting Night' is one of the best photoplays ever shown . . . . A storm scene the most realistic ever produced . . . two thousand turned away . . . all the guests gasp, and so will you" (Evening Telegram)

"The audience, as one man, shivers at 'One Exciting Night' . . . actions so terrific . . . highly successful" (Herald)

"Everbody agrees that it is exciting" (Tribune)

Gale after gale of applause—

"And One Exciting Night it is for anyone . . . . a thrilling melodramatic climax brought gale after gale of applause . . . Entire forests seem to be uprooted and go drifting across the scene . . . Buildings go hurtling through the air . . . titanic . . . compared with other storms as a terrific cyclone to a zephyr . . . a mighty spectacle well worth seeing . . . ludicrous flights of comedy" . . . (Mail)

"The tornado is indescribably dramatic . . . . Griffith has constructed a thrilling detective drama as skillfully as he can build an epic of history" . . . (American)

D. W. GRIFFITH'S

APOLLO THEATRE One Exciting Night TWICE DAILY

Matinee To-day at 2 o'Clock

PRICES—Nights, $1.00 & $1.50—Balc., 50c & $1.00—Mat., Lower Floor, $1.00—Balc., 50c

Journal World Globe Mail Telegram Sun. Nov 5

"Never in pictures has there been anything so full of thrills, suspense and everything that makes for 100 per cent entertainment. This one is better."—Telegraph.
"The most exciting picture ever seen."—Journal
D. W. GRIFFITH'S
"Brilliant thriller."—Times
ONE EXCITING NIGHT
APOLLO THEATRE

my Globe. Post oct 28.

D. W. GRIFFITH CHALLENGES the STAGE

The stage or the much-maligned screen! Which is superior? Are there not elements of drama where the cinema dwarfs the older art?

With his new art, Mr. Griffith has chosen the mystery story for a direct comparison with the stage.

NOW AS TO DRAMA

"'One Exciting Night' is a hilarious thriller," says The Times. "And don't forget the storm. You won't if you see it. A screaming, streaming climax, it is a magnificent piece of work that brings the picture to a whirring, whirling end."

"If you don't die of fright, you will laugh yourself to death," says The Sun. "As exciting as 'The Bat' and 'The Cat and the Canary.' Tense moments when one thinks one's heart just can't last another moment."

"The storm raised our hair just a little higher," says The Evening Post. "This drama will be THE POPULAR EVENING'S PLEASURE FOR THE REST OF THE SEASON."

AND ITS BEAUTY

"The white bending birches, uprooted trees, the rush of the storm-driven rain, and the slim figure of the girl twisting and swaying like the tortured birches, are magnificent pieces of photography and composition," says Mr. Gallico in The News.

ANE THE COMEDY

Where in the theatre is there a bigger laugh than when the colored Romeo meets the mysterious figure in the garret?

"An onslaught of comedy that congests the theatre" The Sun found it.

"Enormously funny and uproariously received," says The Globe.

"Flights of comedy not in the least incongruous," continues The Mail.

HOW DOES IT ALL COMPARE?

"The screen does all this sort of thing so much better than the stage," says Alan Dale in The American.

D. W. GRIFFITH'S

delight of laughing thrills

"One Exciting Night"

APOLLO THEATRE | Sunday Mat. at 3 Twice Daily 2:30 and 8:30 | Prices 50c to $1.50 Matinee 50c & $1.00

To see it right, see it at this theatre, with music, effects, and presentation under Mr. Griffith's personal supervision.

American World News Times Tribune Herald Oct 4-1922

"Never in pictures has there been anything so full of thrills, suspense and everything that makes for 100 per cent entertainment—this one is heaven."
—Telegram.

"The most exciting picture ever seen."—Herald

D. W. GRIFFITH'S

"Hilarious thriller."—Times.

ONE EXCITING NIGHT

APOLLO THEATRE

my American oct 28

Business Telephone Columbus 7000 R

A BEAUTIFUL YOUNG GIRL WAS BEING SACRIFICED

She was being sacrificed.... Beautiful in her slim youth! Nothing new, nothing old to this..... it happened yesterday, it is happening this minute.

The man approaches her....the old passions that have destroyed kingdoms, slain millions, scorching in his eyes. The young girl turns away...there must be some escape!

Outside in the garden, an eager youth, with clear young voice, is singing, "I love—I love—In the morning I love—Until day is done, I love—I love—you." Her heart pounds towards the young voice, almost breaking the sweet little bosom.

But in the room, with his hand upon her shoulder, is the other man. He is rich. Her mother is going to sacrifice her upon the old stained altars of Greed and Passion.

The young voice outside—If he could only save her! If she could only escape! The Boy and The Girl, together! You will go with them to meet strange mysteries; to face thrilling trials; you will laugh with them; you will love with them in "One Exciting Night," Mr. Griffith's new picture at the Apollo Theatre, where The Girl and The Boy appear twice each day at two-thirty and eight-twenty.

my Herald Tribune oct 26 1922

IF

YOU don't die of fright, you will laugh yourself to death" (Sun)

A Laughing thrill—the rarest delight of the theatre—

"Onslaught of Comedy" (Sun)

"Hilarious Thriller" (Times)

"Will live among the immortals of the Screen" (Telegram)

"Enormously funny hits uproariously received" (The Globe)

"Gale after gale of applause" (Mail)

"They do these things so much better in the films than on the stage" (American)

"Most exciting motion picture ever witnessed" (Journal)

D. W. GRIFFITH'S

Triumph of Cheerful Mystery

One Exciting Night

APOLLO THEATRE 42d Street West of Broadway | Twice Daily 2:30, 8:30 | Popular Prices

Eve. Journal oct 31

my American oct 31

Love

The soft surprising thrill! That surges to a great tide of happiness when true! That lurches to a destructive bolt of passion, greedy—devouring—when false!

Laughter

That brings the blush of happiness to the pale face of life When people laugh, Heaven laughs!

Mystery

The stealthy things of life! Peeping here! Peering there! Secrets! Now a healthy fascination! Now an absorbing puzzle! What is more interesting?!

Thrills

The throb with the thrill! The heart stirring with the mind! Awakening — quickening — punching pounding thrills that scatter worries; wipe out weary trifles—make life fresh again!

"ONE EXCITING NIGHT"

is warm with love
rollicking with laughter
tense with mystery
throbbing with thrills
As Miss Parsons says in the Morning Telegraph
"It is the daddy of them all"

Apollo Theatre

42nd Street West of Broadway
Twice daily at 2:30 and 8:30
Prices evenings: Orchestra $1 and $1.50, Balcony 50c and $1
Matinees 50c and $1

My Sunday American Oct 29

I Can Thrill You!

I can make you Laugh—I can make you Cry
I can make you Love—I can make you Sigh
I can make you Happy—I can make you Sad
I can make you Good—I can make you Bad
I can make you Sleep—I can make you Dream
I can make you Shudder—I can make you Scream

I am

"ONE EXCITING NIGHT"

D. W. Griffith's Latest Masterpiece!

Apollo Theatre
42nd St., West of B'way

TWICE DAILY
2:30—8:20
Sunday Mat. at 3:00

PRICES: Nights, $1.00 & $1.50 Balcony, 50c and $1.00
Matinee, Lower Floor, $1.00 Balcony, 50c

I Will Thrill You!

ADVERTISEMENT. Eve Sun. World. ADVERTISEMENT.

A FEW WORDS ABOUT A YOUNG WOMAN AND YOUR MONEY

Miss Louella O. Parsons is the motion picture editor of The Morning Telegraph. Her business for quite some years has been to study and judge the values of motion pictures.

Most motion picture editors have the fortune of addressing a casual audience, but Miss Parsons speaks to the motion picture trade. By her position, she is accepted as an advisor and judge for the motion picture exhibitors. Men invest tens and probably hundreds of thousands of dollars on this young woman's judgment.

The very fact that she continues in her position many years is proof that her judgment is exceptionally keen and accurate. Her judgment is proven by hundreds of thousands of dollars through the years. Perhaps in spending your money for entertainments, you will be concerned in her interesting remarks:

I took to see "One Exciting Night" a man who confesses to ennui when he is forced to look at the "movies." He said he had an engagement, but would look at one or two reels.

"Don't be offended," he begged, "when I leave, because I have an important business appointment."

"It's all right," I assured him. "I have an idea this isn't up to the Griffith standard anyway."

The picture came on. We sat through the intermission without a word.

"Your engagement," I gasped. "I forgot. You'd better hurry, perhaps you can make it."

"My engagement be hanged," he said. "If I had an appointment with President Harding, I wouldn't leave this theatre. The most important thing in my life is to learn who murdered Johnson."

The amusing part—I, who have seen thousands of films, felt the same way. Only a few weeks ago, in a mental cross-examination, I had accused myself of having seen too many pictures and here I was, sitting on the edge of my chair, breathlessly waiting the next development.

"One Exciting Night" is the best medical prescription I know. It will take you out of yourself and make you forget you ever had a trouble. It is so absorbing, if you invested your fortune and lost every penny you would forget it once you entered the Apollo Theatre.

Even at the risk of being thought a low brow, I maintain David Wark Griffith has never made such an enjoyable picture. Finer things, yes. More artistic and delicately wrought, yes; but for comedy and satire par excellence, and with thrills, this, in the vernacular of the day, is the daddy of them all.

Mr. Griffith has furthermore given us an innovation. "One Exciting Night" is the first picture of its kind I have ever seen, and I have seen many in my time. Just when one feels the suspense is more than he can bear, along comes a delicious bit of comedy that brings a laugh and relieves the atmosphere.

The picture is so good—it seems too short. And beauty is by no means conspicuously absent. Carol Dempster is lovely enough to satisfy the most esthetic soul.

Without being conscious of having done so, Mr. Griffith has given the screen something entirely new. He has made it possible for a mystery play to be presented in motion picture form and still retain its surprises and its unexpected denouement at the end.

Never in the history of motion pictures has there been a melodrama so full of thrills, suspense and everything that makes for 100 per cent. interest.

"One Exciting Night" has all the satire of "Bulldog Drummond," with the situations of "The Bat" intensified.

Comedy—buckets of it. Romeo Washington is as amusing a character as I have ever seen on the screen.

If you have a mocking feeling "pictures ain't what they utsu ta" trot down to the Apollo and disabuse your mind of this rank disloyalty. This one is better. And in addition to getting back your motion picture respect, you will have the best time you ever had.

Remember Miss Parsons has her position because she can give a summing up which business men accept to invest tens of thousands of dollars. Doesn't your money deserve the same kind of advice?

My Sunday American Oct 29

[illegible] Telephone, Rockaway 2000 NEW YORK AMERICAN

"I'm sorry, but really I can't marry you," says the girl (Carol Dempster) to the boy (Henry Hull) in D. W. Griffith's mystery film, "One Exciting Night," at the Apollo Theatre.

ONE EXCITING NIGHT

Oct. 29/22

AMERICAN PICTORIAL—A Paper for People Who Think—FRID

The Call to Arms! H

Sunday Telegraph Nov 5 1922

BROADWAY THEATRE

ONE EXCITING NIGHT

American Pictorial

of the White Lights

Says Miss Lillian Gish,

the foremost actress of the screen:

My dear Mr. Griffith:—

"I spent two exciting nights seeing 'One Exciting Night' and was wondrously thrilled."

"Dorothy and I almost disgraced ourselves by laughing so loudly. I think it is the best entertainment I have ever seen, and hope it will have the success it deserves."

Sincerely,
Lillian Gish.

Says the Famous Al Jolson:

Dear Mr. Griffith:—

"Something entirely new and masterly in the films is 'One Exciting Night'. It is poetry. If the picture were twenty reels long, I couldn't get enough of it; particularly the comedy of Mr. Porter Strong."

Sincerely,
Al Jolson.

Here are two distinguished people who are qualified to speak. Tragedienne and comedian, they think the same of Mr. Griffith's new film now showing in the last two weeks of its run at the APOLLO THEATRE, twice daily.

Ny American Nov 21-1922

CAROL DEMPSTER IN D. W. GRIFFITH'S "ONE EXCITING NIGHT"

WHY WASTE YOUR TIME ON OLD THINGS?

See the only new thing in the films this year

Mystery Laughter Excitement Suspense!

A different story told in a different way

"Popular evening's pleasure for the season."—Post

D. W. GRIFFITH'S

ONE EXCITING NIGHT

APOLLO THEATRE
42d St. West of B'way

Sunday Matinee at 3, Ev., 8:20—Other days at 2:30 & 8:20—Prices: Nights, 50c to $1.50. All Matinees, 50c & $1.00

Special Presentation Under Mr. GRIFFITH'S Own SUPERVISION

Ny News

American Times Nov 20

Now they raise it

to the very pinnacle!

A subtle, brilliantly-woven story—beyond anything ever done before.

A real love story . . . great comedy . . . a baffling mystery . . . . and a spectacular thrilling ending!

This combination has been denied the stage . . . and never before successfully is so in pictures.

It is a new triumph for a new art! Its new . . . so absolutely different, it that many even prophesied

Now from Chicago to Boston, the decision is:

"A sensation unequalled by anything of its kind." (Herald)

"Big both as only a master like Griffith can do it." (Herald)

"Will live among the immortals of the silver screen." (N. Y. Telegraph)

"D. W. Griffith has given us another masterpiece of a new variety." (Chicago Herald & Examiner)

D. W. GRIFFITH'S

"The first of its kind you saw—but we've had many an innovation." (Telegraph)

One Exciting Night

Apollo Theatre | Twice Daily | Sunday Matinee

BOSTON (Mass.)
OCTOBER 7, 1922

NEW GRIFFITH FILM AT TEMPLE

"One Exciting Night" a Mystery Drama Full of Fun and Excitement

D. W. Griffith was the first to teach history on the screen. He gave the world the first great spectacular productions and wrote the first film epics. Now that history is being taught by many modern picture producers and great spectacular productions are becoming the rule, he has suddenly left his chosen field to others.

The author of "Birth of a Nation," the American "Civil War," "Intolerance," Babylonian times; "Hearts of the World," the great war just ended, and "Orphans of the Storm," the French Revolution, has invited Boston to witness "One Exciting Night," his latest picture, at Tremont Temple, Monday.

"One Exciting Night" is a mystery melodrama, dealing with fun and excitement all packed into a single evening. There is no great lesson, no moral, no mission. And yet the greatest genius of the screen has spent many months upon this comparatively simple theme. Griffith has made numerous program pictures, dealing with small subjects, but these were of conventional length, five or six reels. "One Exciting Night" is as lengthy a picture as "Orphans of the Storm," being eleven reels long. It was originally sixteen reels when shown in a Connecticut town recently. Then it was cut to thirteen reels, shown again, and now it is down to eleven. Griffith, himself, will be on hand to manage the first production, which will be given with all the care of any of his epics. Reports from Newport tell of audiences being tremendously delighted during the showings there last week. Boston is the first big city to

BOSTON TRANSCRIPT
OCT. 10, 1922

GRIFFITH AS TROUBADOUR

MYSTERY, TEMPEST, ADVENTURES, HUMOR

In "One Exciting Night" the Director of Spectacular Films Condescends to a Pleasant Tale of the Moment—Good Story-Telling, Comic Embellishments, Little Moralizing

IN the history of motion pictures the name of David Wark Griffith has been associated with many moods. Once and again he has brought to the screen mighty spectacles—a panoramic canvas of Babylon the Great, glimpses of Red Terror in the streets of Paris, the flame-seared march through Georgia to the sea. Days when nations or dynasties trembled in the balance-pan, have served him as background against which romance and tragedy, human yearnings and human strivings might stand forth in sharp relief. Films less pretentious, too, have come from his hand, instinct with exotic or familiar color—witness the docks of Limehouse and the snowbound uplands of New England. But the public has never seen quite that side of Mr. Griffith which the cinema revealed last night at Tremont Temple, when for the first time in completed form he unrolled his newest picture, "One Exciting Night." Griffith the large romancer, Griffith the historian, Griffith the interpreter of the mob were absent. Instead came Griffith the teller of a tale of mystery, fashioned and pieced, a story of a haunted house, of bootleggers, young lovers, and detectives. Griffith the troubadour, to repeat his own phrase, he would be recounting a story to while away a pleasant hour.

Convention decrees that solutions of mystery plays remain secret. It will be violating no confidence, however, to indicate the manner with which the master director has worked this time, and to consider the manner in which he has arranged his materials. The events of "One Exciting Night" take place in a rambling mansion on Long Island. Long disuse has made it a safe and convenient spot for dealers in illicit liquor. Extensive grounds dotted with heavy shrubbery, long hallways, curtained alcoves, capacious storerooms, sliding panels and darkened shutters make it an ideal place for intrigue and shady "doings." To this mansion comes a week-end party. There are present the cheery and enthusiastic young host; the winsome and modern young girl who has gained his interest; her unmatronly "mother"; a suave and cool-mannered gentleman, acquaintance of card-table and lawn party; a fond and effusive maiden aunt. To these are added, by ways unforeseen or irregular, a middle-aged neighbor of unknown standing, a wealthy rum-dealer; a butler; a prying second man, coal-black and curious; a harum-scarum blackface pair, maid and helper; and last, a detective. Having thus assembled the kernels in the hopper, the director blows on his bed of coals, and waits for the corn to "pop." Pop it does with a vengeance. The twelve hours which limit the action are crowded with events, including at least two improbable murders, and culminating in the "surprise ending" imperative in all mystery dramas.

Matching his method to his plot, Mr. Griffith has relied upon straightforward narrative. Gathering the threads of his story in leisurely fashion, he has braided his strands first with deliberation, then with gathering swiftness and dexterity, towards the last tangling the whole inextricably together until the solution, like a sword-flash, parts the knot. His casting could scarcely be bettered. Henry Hull, known to the speaking stage in plays of crooks and mysteries, is the high-spirited hero; Miss Carol Dempster the equally spirited heroine; Morgan Wallace provides a smooth and calculating enlocker; C. H. Croker-King, a heavy-browed, supple-fingered "neighbor." Frank Sheridan is the snooping detective, in token of which rank he keeps his hat on in the house—even Mr. Griffith could not gainsay tradition on such a capital point. Porter Strong and Miss Irene Harrison bring comic relief, with farcical touches reminiscent of the Griffith of other days. Miss Margaret Dale as the unthinking mother, Miss Grace Griswold as the aunt, Herbert Sutch as the rebellious bootlegger and Frank Wunderlee as the massive second man supply rounded characterizations. Because each part is taken with a responsiveness to the commands of the director which makes for even performance, and because each in its several kind seems to add the flavor of personal quality, mention of all seems not superfluous.

As is ever the case with a Griffith picture, the orchestral score adds several fold to the effectiveness of "One Exciting Night." Always Fame this time, under the direction of Mr. Griffith himself, arranged and synchronized the music. A not too intrusive subtlety of motives extend to varying characters and moods of the story serves as score for the interpretive composition. Miss Dempster sang her solo to a song arranged by Mr. Griffith himself, the music of which was written by Mr. Sutch, and the song words by Miss Dempster and Mr. Hull. Nothing more than a pleasant or, in the tense and serious moments, a phrase for the violins, and a phrase for the cello, goes to the music. Mr. Griffith has shown a good deal of discretion in the use of the orchestral score, and the music has been used to heighten the effect of the story, not to distract from it.

CLIPPING FROM Philadelphia Public Ledger
10-1-22

"One Exciting Night" Next Griffith Feature

Carol Dempster, who appeared in "Dream Street" and other Griffith Productions, will co-star with Henry Hull, who has been playing in the legitimate attraction, "The Cat and the Canary," in D. W. Griffith's new production, "One Exciting Night." Although the feature now measures 13,000 feet it will be cut to approximately ten reels. It is expected to release the picture at the arliest possible date.

CLIPPING FROM Pittsburgh Pa Post
10-4-22

The mystery play promised to come into vogue on the screen since D. W. Griffith has made public the nature of his latest picture.

Not a visitor was allowed on the lot during the filming of the play. The only information Griffith made public was that the picture would be of a different nature than any he had previously done.

The film, in 13 reels, was "tried on the dog" under the title of "The Haunted House" at Derby, Conn. It is being re-cut and will soon be ready for exhibition under the title of "One Exciting Night." The action takes place in one night and involves some new lighting effects.

NEW YORK EVENING WORLD

SOCIETY.

Newport society turned out almost en masse last Monday night to witness the opening of D. W. Griffith's "One Exciting Night" and, says Gerrit J. Lloyd, one Griffith puffleist, many were turned away.

The film will start a long run in Boston next week and will have its New York premier at the Apollo Theatre in the near future.

CLIPPING FROM
N.Y. Jour of Commerce
10-6-22

Newport society accepted the opening of D. W. Griffith's new picture "One Exciting Night" as an occasion for appearance Monday night. The picture ran there Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday preliminary to the Boston opening next Monday. The mystery story succeeded in breaking the attendance records of the past two seasons at the Colonial Theatre. Albert L. Grey, general manager for Griffith, has leased the Apollo Theatre for the New York engagement. This is the theatre in which Griffith showed "Orphans of the Storm."

CLIPPING FROM
Providence, R. I.
10-8-22 Journal

Griffith Film Renamed

"One Exciting Night" is the new title given to D. W. Griffith's latest photoplay which was given a pre-showing under the title of "The Haunted Grange."

The actual filming of "One Exciting Night" took about three months. The story is by Irene Sinclair and the action is laid in a country home in Baltimore. The main action takes place in one afternoon and evening, with the principal scene all laid in one house, with the settings modern in every sense.

Supporting Henry Hull and Carol Dempster in the leading roles are C. H. Croker-King, Porter Strong, Frank Sheridan, Frank Wunderlee, Margaret Dale, Morgan Wallace, Percy Carr and Irene Harrison.

BOSTON MORNING GLOBE
OCT. 6, 1922

GRIFFITH DENOUNCES FILM CENSORSHIP

"It Autocracy Weapon," He Declares

Movie Director Defends Modern Girl In Latest Productions

"Censorship is the weapon which autocracy has always used to repress the public," said David W. Griffith.

The master-director of motion pictures, the man who has started a score or more stars on their brilliant careers, [illegible] his feet in the intensity of his emotion and walked back and forth across the floor of his suite at the Parker House.

"A year ago, I [illegible] how in this this November," he said, "that I was too [illegible] friends here how I feel on the matter of censorship. From the beginning censorship has been used by autocracies. It originated in Germany and reached its height in Russia.

"Censorship for motion pictures means that an idea expressed in pictures and words may be censored and obliterated by an arbitrary few. It is one little step from that kind of censorship to the censoring of the written word. The final step is the censorship of thought and ideas.

"New England began the fight against censorship. If it is voted that motion pictures shall be censored it means that the fight will have to be begun all over again. And let me remind you now that it was the 'best people,' the men and women of money and property and education, who in old Jerusalem demanded a censorship of the ideas and beliefs of the Son of God."

Mr Griffith's hand gripped the arm of his chair and his face was flushed as he concluded his speech. "I am now awaiting the issue." he smirked in an embarrassed fashion. "But you now know what I think of censorship. I hope I am not talking too strongly."

Here to See Picture

However, Mr Griffith, who is known all over the world as the most famous director ever produced by motion pictures, is not in Boston to discuss censorship. He is here in connection with the showing of his next picture, "One Exciting Night" at the Tremont Temple next Monday night, and incidentally to announce his temporary change of policy.

Heretofore Mr Griffith has given great spectacles to his motion picture audiences. "I think there is enough sadness in the world," said the director. "Recently, when I listened to an audience coming out of a theatre where one of my photoplays was being shown, I noticed that everyone bore the signs of a stormy afternoon. I saw traces of weeping and everyone looked sad and depressed. I began to wonder to myself if it was all worth while. So I determined to put on a bright picture with a lot of excitement, thrills and laughter in it. I am doing my best to bring a little amusement to that same audience, you see."

There is another reason why Mr Griffith is putting out the new photoplay. He is attempting to defend the modern girl.

Mr Griffith is a great admirer of the modern girl and he thinks that the more athletic she is the more she is to be admired. "Frankly," he said, "I like the bobbed-haired young Amazon that knocks us flat if we annoy her and can fight beside the hero when the villain is getting in his dirty work. When I was younger it was proper for the well-brought-up-girl to faint in the midst of an emergency.

"Today, although she may be gentle and modest and refined, she will come up to expectations every time and use her good right arm in defense of her principles. I think it is better for the young girl to be playing basket-ball or hockey than to be sitting in a corner reading neurotic novels and thinking about boys and men. If I had a daughter I would bring her up with plenty of athletics to keep her busy and happy."

New Faces Good

Mr Griffith is one of the few producers who refuses to go to Los Angeles to make pictures. "One sees the same faces in those pictures," he said. "I believe that the best pictures are the ones in which one thinks of the character being portrayed rather than the actress who is playing the role. That is why new faces are always good for a photoplay. In 'One Exciting Night' there are several actors who have never appeared in pictures before, including Henry Hull, the stage star; C. H. Croker-King, Margaret Dale and Frank Wunderlee."

Answering the question as to whether he would ever again make pictures with the Gish sisters, as the featured actresses he said that he did not know. "They are having a wonderful opportunity to be starred and their salaries are to be much, much more than I could ever pay," he said. "I am glad to see Lillian getting this opportunity to forge ahead, because I [illegible] was able to pay her all that she deserved. I never starred anyone, either, but I am always happy to see such actors as Richard Barthelmess and Mary Pickford making financial successes after they leave me. Mr. Barthelmess makes eight or ten times what he did with me, and his pictures are artistic successes as well."

Everyone who has worked under Mr Griffith has the highest praise for the director, and there is none of the professional jealousy and ill-feeling between him and his former stars that are so often seen elsewhere. It is generally conceded that if there were more David W. Griffiths in the film business the talk about censorship would die a natural death. But when this was suggested Mr Griffith modestly shook his head and changed the topic of conversation hurriedly.

D. W. GRIFFITH HONORED.

Given Key to City by Mayor of Boston.

Conservative Boston broke all precedent last Monday night when Mayor Curley summoned D. W. Griffith, the noted motion picture director, to the City Hall, upon his arrival there to witness the opening performance of his latest production, "One Exciting Night," and presented him with the key to the city. It is said that Griffith is the first motion picture or theatrical man to be so honored.

"One Exciting Night" is the picture upon which Mr. Griffith has been steadily at work since the launching of "Orphans of the Storm," and is scheduled to open at the Apollo Theatre Monday evening, October 23.

St Paul Minn
News. Oct 8-22

"ONE EXCITING NIGHT," IS D. W. GRIFFITH'S LATEST

D. W. Griffith's new picture will be shown in New York under the title "One Exciting Night."

But Broadway is not to see it first. Owing, according to the Griffith offices, to the difficulty in obtaining a theater there, the film will go into the Tremont theater in Boston for an extended run tomorrow.

"One Exciting Night" is said to be a story of the Kentucky mountains. One of its first temporary titles was "At the Grange."

SACRAMENTO (Cal.) UNION
OCTOBER 4, 1922

An Editorial Symposium

Views of California Editors Upon Current Events of the Day

HISTORY AND THE MOVIES.

According to reports from Paris, the exhibition of D. W. Griffith's "Orphans of the Storm" has raised a "hurricane of protest." A group of young royalists who were present in one of the motion picture houses of the boulevards when the film was first shown objected to episodes in which nobles of the old regime were depicted as monsters of cold-hearted cruelty. Many Frenchmen, not royalists, joined in the outcry on the ground that the picture offended French pride and self-respect.

The trouble with such historical episodes when adapted to a dramatic plot is that their isolation gives them undue emphasis and leads to false generalizations. A number of naive and ignorant spectators will undoubtedly make the mistake of picturing revolutionary France as "Orphans of the Storm" on a large scale. But this difficulty is inseparable from any historical play. If the objections it involves were to be taken over-seriously no one would dare produce a historical drama of any kind. It will only be possible to avoid them entirely when the public comes to prefer history to drama as the main ingredient of a novel or play, and that possibly is very remote.—San Francisco Journal.

CINCINNATI (O.) BILLBOARD
OCTOBER 14, 1922

"ONE EXCITING NIGHT" OPENS

No Effort Made To Block Presentation of New Film Play in Boston

Boston, Oct. 9.—When D. W. Griffith's latest film play opened here [illegible] with most of the officials of the Griffith producing and distributing organizations on hand, it is said that all concerned were prepared to check any effort to block the presentation such as had been rumored for several weeks. Some time ago word came from New York that Wagenhals & Kemper, the producers of Avery Hopwood's "The Bat", from Mary Roberts Rinehart's story, having been informed that the new Griffith film, "One Exciting Night", was somewhat of an infringement on the record-breaking play, were prepared to safeguard their property. Later it was learned that both Avery Hopwood and Mrs. Rinehart had seen the picture and that no move had been made to prevent its presentation. However, when the lights went up on the Colonial Theater here, advertising the premiere, the rumor that litigation was not unlikely persisted and the film people said to be ready with a trump card should court action materialize. Those who know Griffith insist that it is not likely he would leave himself open to an attack of this sort after having spent a small fortune, or a large one as reported, to make the photoplay. The picture was made at Mamaroneck "behind closed doors".

NEW YORK SUN
Oct 14 1922

The new D. W. Griffith production, "One Exciting Night," will be given its New York opening at the Apollo Theater the evening of October 23, thus introducing Mr. Griffith's fifth annual season on Broadway. "One Exciting Night" has been arranged for a full theatrical performance, running about two and one-half hours.

CINCINNATI (O.) BILLBOARD
OCTOBER 14, 1922

"ONE EXCITING NIGHT"

New Griffith Picture To Have First New York Showing at Apollo

For the New York engagement of D. W. Griffith's latest screen special, "One Exciting Night", the Apollo Theater has been secured for the premiere showing on or about the first of November. This is the same house in which "Orphans of the Storm" enjoyed its profitable run.

"One Exciting Night" was shown in Newport last Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday preliminary to the Boston opening at the Colonial Theater.

CLIPPING FROM OCT 15 1922
BROOKLYN (N. Y.) EAGLE

Bad enough for an actor to lead a double life, but Henry Hull now appearing in "The Cat and the Canary," will blossom forth in triplicate this week when, in addition to his stage work at the National Theater, he will be seen in D. W. Griffith's picture, "One Exciting Night," all the while appearing in his third capacity as co-author of "East Side—West Side" at the Nora Bayes Theater. As a stage star, playwright and movie actor, Mr. Hull should have enough to keep him out of mischief.

CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK TELEGRAM
Oct 13-1922

D. W. Griffith may be setting a new precedent for motion pictures by dedicating his latest production, "One Exciting Night," to Charles Dickens. In many of his public talks Griffith has said that the motion picture owes more to Charles Dickens than any other one man. The humanity, sentiment, vivid characterizations and entertainment value of the Dickens stories have always been pointed out by Griffith as being a textbook for motion picture directors.

The new picture will be shown here for the first time October 23 in the Apollo Theatre, inaugurating Griffith's fifth annual season.

CLIPPING FROM OCT 15 1922
NEW YORK

GRIFFITH DEDICATES PICTURE TO DICKENS

'One Exciting Night' in Memory of Author.

Books and plays are often dedicated to some friend, relative or person whom the author admires, but it has remained for David Wark Griffith to dedicate a motion picture. Because of his great admiration for Charles Dickens he is dedicating his new motion picture, "One Exciting Night," to the memory of the famous English author. Mr. Griffith has always had a great admiration for the books of Dickens and is in fact a great Dickens student. He had always wanted to make "David Copperfield," but has hesitated because he feared if he did there would be a demand when they saw their favorite on the screen.

CLIPPING FROM WASHINGTON HERALD

Dyke

Variety

Griffith Makes His First Mystery Drama for Screen

When the residents in the vicinity of the Bleeding Heart Inn, Derby, Conn., sent the latest charivari to drive the laughter and exuberance in that house the evening of Wednesday last, the first public acquaintance was given to D. W. Griffith's latest photoplay production, "One Exciting Night." As yet late into the night [illegible] detecting [illegible]

This picture, as each one that has been before it, [illegible] the Griffith stamp of [illegible] [illegible] the Griffith [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

Film Pirates Are New Robber Class Of Modern Period

Old-Time Buccaneer Who Sailed High Seas Is Reincarnated In Thieves Who Loot Theaters And Exchange Houses and Then Peddle Plays At Small Prices Over Face of Globe.

RECENTLY the United Artists' corporation, pursuing its latest innovation of tapping the Far Eastern districts, decided to show the Griffith film, "Way Down East," in Tokio. It was the kind of picture that would from all probability make strong appeal to Oriental audiences, it was believed. Large attendance and returns were expected, writes Ernest Brennecke in the New York World.

A theater was leased, the program was advertised, the doors were thrown open to all who delivered the necessary yen at the box office.

There followed a strange and disastrous series of events. Instead of the swarm of patrons epected at the first performance, only a score or so appeared. And for several days the universally popular photoplay flickered before row upon row of empty seats.

What was wrong?

The mystery was solved after diligent inquiry among native film-goers. Many of them declared they already had seen the picture in Tokio.

The thing seemed impossible. The United Artists had, we thought it had, exclusive ownership and control of "Way Down East." It began an investigation. The results were startling.

It proved a rather simple matter to catch many of the petty thieves who originally stole the films. Arrests soon was reported from Chicago, Seattle, Honolulu and other points. But the real difficulty was to trace the stolen goods through receivers and agents to the headquarters and ramifications stations of the organization.

A few typical cases will make clearer how the "system" eventually functioned. Morris Tatus was a shipping clerk in a Buffalo film manufacturing plant. Tatus possessed an engaging personality and had succeeded in winning the confidence of the plant manager. Tatus was missing one day, as were three trunks which were twelve new and popular films. He was traced to Sweetwater, Texas, and arrested there. When questioned, he claimed to be the partner of one "Bill" Pearson, reputed to be the director of the big film "ring" which shipped film loot to foreign parts.

Later, the investigators heard of the activities of a Japanese named Shino, who operated in the Far West, with headquarters in San Francisco. One story was his associate, Detectives Wing from a stranger at Honolulu, together with several missing films. Shino was traced back to Seattle, where his rooms were raided and found to contain much stolen property. Clerks for the apprehension service saw pirate films in W. C. Hawkins, one of the most estate film detectives in this country. Both of the men admitted they were implicated in the pirate business.

Local agents of the popular Cabinet of Dr. Caligari, "The Kid," were seized in Los Angeles and extradited to New York and Brooklyn. Thence it was traced toward the heads of a syndicate in Paris, who saw to under the films, and from him to a Japanese company, organized for which there were four in the Hawaiian. A branch in the Far Orient, gathering in the trade in the health of the Mikado, was found in Shino's home.

Prices were not exactly for Paris. Prices were not exactly for Paris. Prices were not exactly for Paris.

EXHIBITORS HERALD, CHICAGO
OCTOBER 21, 1922

Raps Royalists for Attitude on "The Two Orphans"

"Cine-Journal" Answers Article Censuring D.W. Griffith's Film Published in "Action Francaise"

D. W. GRIFFITH'S "The Two Orphans" has been the basis of much controversial writing since its presentation at the Gaumont-Palace in Paris, the "Action Francaise" severely criticising it, and the "Cine-Journal" admonishing the Royalists for their fanatical attitude toward the opus. Articles published in the two journals have just been received from Julian M. Thomas, Paris attorney.

THE Action Francaise heads its article, "The History of France Libelled by a Foreigner," and raises the question, "Whom does the history of France Belong to?"

After asking this question the article continues: "To the French themselves or to the foreign film directors who take pleasure in making hash of it and defaming and disfiguring it as they may see fit? Is a foreigner entitled to come and tell us that our ancestors were a lot of madmen, brutes or rascals, and we to keep mum?"

* * *

Cine-Journal takes an absolutely contrasting viewpoint of the situation and in a humorous vein censures the "King's Men" for their rash attitude toward the production. The trade paper says:

"The 'Camelots du Roy,' who revel in kicking up the dust, both in the street and in theatres, have received rather a noisy reception to the first show of 'The Two Orphans' at the Max Linder Cinema. Of course, boys will be boys, and Mr. Léon Daudet, who is a born enemy to the 'mute art,' can be expected to remind the versatile Parisian of the necessity of 'French action.' (This is an allusion to the title of Mr. Daudet's paper, L'Action Francaise. — Translator.) These little political disturbances do no harm to the work they would like to taboo; nay, they act as so much loud publicity, and prove once more that a little dose of that sort of business makes for success. Let us therefore allow the 'King's Men' to have their way; if they go too far and bother us out of all patience, they will be dealt with by whom it may concern.

"It must be said, however, that those gentlemen, who are nothing if not 'doctrinaires,' invoke a principle which is worth while looking into. The history of France, they claim, belongs to French people, and not to foreigners. But the events which are connected with the fall of a regime are also connected with the history of the world. There are in this end of the French monarchy and in this first advent of the people to power thousands of subjects which appeal to the curiosity of all sound minds, and I see no reason why any should be debarred from delving in this mine.

* * *

"That the work is a delicate, even a perilous one, this is obvious. D. W. Griffith, evidently a stranger to our feelings and to our views, may very well have steered his craft over many a dangerous reef, and we must admit that his 'adaptation' is apt to take strange liberties, and that we Frenchmen fail to find in his 'Orphans' an echo of our memories and a truthful image of our national feelings.

"On the other hand, I would say to the 'King's Men' that the history of our revolution has not been dealt with in the same way by all, and that it is not taught in the same manner in all our schools. Now Mr. Griffith saw it through his own temperament; this is very obvious; he saw it, too, as a cinema artist, and, according to his cherished system, he has resorted particularly to 'contrasts' in the execution of his work.

"All the same, the history of this or any other country is everybody's property."

(Editor's Note: The Griffith picture refered to in this article is distributed in the United States under the title, "Orphans of the Storm.")

Boston Telegram 10-10

Griffith Play Great Thriller

By SYLVIA CUSHMAN

In "One Exciting Night," the new Griffith picture that opened at Tremont Temple last evening, Griffith departs from any heavy or spectacular type of drama, and takes a modern story of mystery. What "The Bat" is to the legitimate stage, "One Exciting Night" will be to the screen, and it is equally as thrilling as any stage drama I have ever seen.

The first part of the picture is, however, too long, and Griffith wastes too much time getting to the point. People were actually becoming bored, and no such thing has ever occurred before in any production with which D. W. had anything to do.

It would be a shame to tell the plot and spoil the play, for those who are to see it, for no lover of the artistic, the drama or the detective story should miss this thriller, where fire places circular into space swallowing up those within range, where white hands reach out of nothingness and clutch the unsuspecting heroine, and last, but not least, the storm!

Those who lived through the spectacular tornado of June 11, 1922, will appreciate what Griffith has done in combining the forces of nature with his wind and rain machines, and the storm that he gives us in "One Exciting Night" bids fair to rival his ice jam in "Way Down East," his battle scenes in war productions and many other realisms wielded by the master hand of the motion picture.

The picture is also a great tribute to the new woman, the woman of our day, from seven to 70. The type that develops the body and mind; while at school takes up athletics imitating and equalling the man. Griffith has his here say: "The new girl is the sweetest in history of the world, who after marriage can live for and with her mate; unlike her sister of old fainting away in moments of danger."

The cast is well chosen, headed by Carol Dempster of "Dream Street" fame. Miss Dempster, in the great storm scene, actually astonishes with the physical force that is never suggested by her dainty appearance. In the emotional work she is sincere and honest and always convincing. Henry Hull was the hero, John Fairbanks, and Morgan Wallace one of the greatest villains ever filmed; in his manner he is ably assisted by Macey Harlam of stage fame. Charles Mathews acted as the unfortunate youth who was murdered.

Mr. Hull's work is always sincere and forceful, and I cannot help but hope that some day Mr. Griffith will give him a lasting part. Harlam is equally good, and John Fairbanks is a young actor who shows great promise.

Griffith never pours out any advance matter on pictures before he completed them. For that reason it is impossible to obtain anything definite on the character of the one he is now undertaking, other than its title is "At the Grange," and that it will not be a costume picture. "Orphans of the Storm" was one of the first of the present wave of costume films to come from the screen. Every director in the country now has the costume film idea. More than $10,000,000 have been spent on costume pictures this year. Still it remains to be seen whether the costume picture will pay for the great outlay necessary to make it.

Griffith may have good reasons for his decision to abandon this style. He spent everything he had, it is said, in producing "Orphans of the Storm," and it is just possible that the gross to date is not equal

Boston Advertiser 10-12-22

BOSTON PLAYER WITH GRIFFITH

Boston is represented in "One Exciting Night" by Frank Sheridan, who impersonates the detective. The selection shows the care with which Griffith cast the new picture showing at Tremont Temple. Sheridan has been famous for years through his success in detective roles and similar strenuous, virile characterizations in stage productions.

Frank Sheridan

Henry Hull, Morgan Wallace, C. H. Croker-King and Margaret Dale also illustrate Griffith's preference for players who have made their mark on the stage, although this rule has its notable exceptions. Carol Dempster, for instance, has won screen fame exclusively, and as heroine in Griffith productions. She is a Griffith "find."

Sheridan is well remembered here for his impressive work as the Scotland Yard sleuth in "Three Faces East," one of the popular war melodramas that came to Boston a few years ago. More recently he appeared as detective in the Cohan play, "Madelaine and the Movies," which had a long New York run. His powerful playing has made a place for him on both stage and screen. Last year he was starred in a big picture made in Maine, "The Rider of the King Long," in which he appeared as a hard-shelled lumber king.

Sheridan is a native of East Boston. He has always loved adventure, and at one time was mixed up in a South American revolution. That was before he became an actor.

New York City 10-14-22

Griffith Reviews

More Excerpts From What Boston Newspaper Critics Say About "One Exciting Night"

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Boston, Mass.—Extracts from the six Boston newspaper reviews of "One Exciting Night," the new D. W. Griffith production now at Tremont Temple, in addition to those already reprinted from the Herald and Post follow:

The Daily Advertiser said in part:

"The audience nearly lost its dignity and cheered. * * * It (the plot) races along so fast and contrives to include so many tooper-lifting episodes that only a foolhardy person would test his powers of description trying to put it in mere words. * * *

"It may be said safely, however, that never did ladies gasp more horrifiedly, nor strong men wonder more dazedly at any screen mystery fable. * * *

"Griffith said he hoped that the second act would be a bit exciting. And it was. A typical Griffith big scene, visualizing a hurricane, came as a surprise climax."

The Transcript says in part:

"Griffith the large romancer, Griffith the historian, Griffith the interpreter of the mob were absent. Instead came Griffith, the teller of a tale of mystery, fashioned and pieced, a story of a haunted house, of bootleggers, young lovers and detectives. Griffith, the troubadour, to repeat his own phrase, is recounting a story to while away a pleasant hour. * * * The events of 'One Exciting Night' take place in a fumbling mansion on Long Island. * * * State rooms dotted with heavy shutters, long hallways, curtained alcoves, capacious store rooms, sliding panels and darkened shutters make it an ideal place for subterfuge and shady doings.

"The twelve hours which bear the action are crowded with events including at least two improbable murders and culminating in the terrific crisis impossible in mystery dramas. * * *

"In advancement of his photoplay as opposed to literary writing of quality Griffith is in deadly earnest. * * * In the second act, for example, there happens something which will astonish all who are familiar with Griffith's methods in the magnificent storm sequence. Not only does the storm rage upon the screen but the audience is made to feel the force of the gale. The storm effects are so realistic that the audience shivers, hunches its shoulders and gives every indication of being in the midst of a real storm. Not only the sight but the sound effects are perfectly good. The wind howls, the rain pours, the thunder rolls and the lightning flashes. The audience sits in the midst of a storm. The storm is so realistic that it is almost too much for the average person. Perhaps it would have stirred John Fairbanks more than it did the audience if he had been there. The storm is so realistic that it is almost too much for the average person. Perhaps it would have stirred John Fairbanks more than it did the audience if he had been there.

The Tempest Breaks in "One Exciting Night"

Boston American 10-14-22

REAL STORM HELPED OUT GRIFFITH

On June 11 this year a terrific hurricane swept over New York city and vicinity. It came down upon that locality early in the afternoon and continued with ferocity up to sundown. Warnings were sent ahead of it as it progressed from the southwest.

D. W. Griffith and his staff were at work on a new picture, "One Exciting Night," at the producer's plant at Mamaroneck, N. Y., in Westchester County, just twenty miles direct northeast from the city. Griffith saw his chance and gathered his expert photographers about him. The coming of the storm and its height was registered on many moving cameras. Newly perfected photographic apparatus was used to record falling trees, uprooted shrubbery and houses or sheds dismantling.

Some of these actual scenes are embodied in the climax of Mr. Griffith's new picture.

The famous motion picture producer had no idea at the time of ending his new work with a great storm scene, but the real one that caused such ruin in and around New York in June gave him the thought. With the scenes he was able to adapt he added others. All this serves to give a touch of realism to his storm scene, the like of which have never been shown on stage or screen before.

Some idea of the force of the storm at the time may be had from the fact that more than one hundred people lost their lives in it. In Westchester County alone and adjacent to Mr. Griffith's plant five thousand

Comedian Wants to Play Classic

Funny Darkey In Griffith Picture Would Like Tragic Role

D. W. Griffith may have made Porter Strong a striking figure in the motion pictures through his work as Romeo Washington, the hapless darky servant in "One Exciting Night," now at the Tremont Temple, but this young man is far from satisfied. Everyone predicts that Strong will be to the screen what Al Jolson is to the stage, but Porter keeps on reading Shakespeare and hoping that Sothern and Marlowe give him a chance.

Strong began his career on the Pacific coast with a traveling repertoire company, presenting the works of Shakespeare and other masters. As a result he had much glory for himself but his meals didn't come regularly. Stranded once, he got a chance to join Kolb and Dill, who west of the Rocky mountains are what Weber and Fields were to Broadway some years ago. Porter Strong made a hit immediately in darky character parts.

Mr. Griffith "caught" him in one of these shows some years ago and engaged him for pictures. He will be remembered as Seth Holcomb in "Way Down East," the funny village rube who drank long-life bitters on the sly and was hopelessly in love with Martha Hopkins, the gossiping old maid.

Strong next led the weird mobs of the carmagnole in "Orphans of the Storm." He will probably continue to act more comedy character roles for Mr. Griffith, but he will continue to read Shakespeare omnivorously and live in hopes that the people some day may find him to their liking in the classic drama.

Peoria Ill. Journ 10-8-22 Transcript

Griffith never pours out any advance matter on pictures before he completed them. For that reason it is impossible to obtain anything definite on the character of the one he is now undertaking, other than its title is "At the Grange," and that it will not be a costume picture. "Orphans of the Storm" was one of the first of the present wave of costume films to come from the screen. Every director in the country now has the costume film idea. More than $10,000,000 have been spent on costume pictures this year. Still it remains to be seen whether the costume picture will pay for the great outlay necessary to make it.

Griffith may have good reasons for his decision to abandon this style. He spent everything he had, it is said, in producing "Orphans of the Storm," and it is just possible that the gross to date is not equal

N.Y. Telegraph 10-12-22

N.Y. Star 10-14

NEW YORK EVENING WORLD 10-14-22

Toledo Blade 10-14-22

N.Y. Times 10-15-22

GRIFFITH FILM SEEN IN BOSTON

CAROL DEMPSTER and Henry Hull in "One Exciting Night," D. W. Griffith's newest picture, opening at the Apollo Theatre next Monday evening.

The Storm Scene From Mr. Griffith's Newest Picture Is One More Example of His Skill and Imagination With Unloosed Forces of Nature

N.Y. Am. 10-24-22

Telephone, Bryant 3000

Griffith Picture Opening Event of Note on Broadway

FEW persons would have believed that D. W. Griffith could ever persuade the forces of nature again to give him as thrilling a climax to a photoplay as the memorable ice scenes in "Way Down East," but he has done so in "One Exciting Night."

D.W. GRIFFITH

There is a storm, or rather a tornado, in this new screen production, which had its first Broadway showing at the Apollo Theatre last night, which is indescribably dramatic. It was rumored in the lobby that Griffith took advantage of a hurricane, which struck this vicinity last Summer and killed many people, to get most of his storm pictures, just as he watched the White River in Vermont until the ice broke up for his ice scenes in "Way Down East."

"One Exciting Night" is a new adventure for Griffith. He has invaded the field of the lurid melodrama, proposing to go "The Bat" and the "Cat and Canary" one better. He has boldly utilized such properties as moving fireplaces, clutching hands, mysterious panels, strange masked individuals prowling through a lonely mansion, tricks which were distinguishing features of the two popular stage melodramas. He has even taken as his chief theme a vast treasure of stolen money, hidden in this isolated manor, and responsible for all the excitement.

He has shown that he is able to construct a thrilling and harrowing detective drama as skillfully as he can build an epic of history.

Carol Dempster, whom Griffith introduced as a film actress in "Dream Street," is the heroine of this picture, and Henry Hull is the hero.

Many society and motion picture people of note were present at the opening.

Alan Dale's review of "One Exciting Night" will appear in a later issue of the New York American.

"ONE EXCITING NIGHT" TO OPEN SOON IN CHICAGO

N.Y. Telegraph Sunday Oct 22

Will Have Premier at the Illinois on November 20.

D. W. GRIFFITH'S FORTHCOMING PRODUCTION "ONE EXCITING NIGHT"

"One Exciting Night" Is a Real Thriller

There is a thrill, a chill and a good laugh at the Apollo Theatre, where David Wark Griffith's new cinema, "One Exciting Night," had its premiere last night to perhaps one of the most critical audiences that ever sat throughout a picture. The "ooh" of the spoken and silent drama were present, while some two thousand were turned away.

"One Exciting Night" is a mystery drama, with just enough to relieve a tense situation when the plot begins to thicken. While Mr. Griffith has departed from the heavy and spectacular, he has produced a picture that will live among the immortals of the silver screen. It is one of the best photoplays ever shown and has a well balanced cast of characters, which is headed by Miss Carol Dempster, who shares the honors with Henry Hull. The cast includes Porter Strong, Morgan Wallace, C. H. Crocker-King, Miss Margaret Dale, Frank Sheridan, Frank Wunderlee, Miss Grace Griswold, Miss Irma Harrison, Herbert Sutch, Percy Carr and Charles E. Mack.

The producer has left nothing undone to make the picture a real thriller. Spooky hands, secret panels, shadows and darting figures all have their play, while Peter Strong and Miss Harrison, playing servants, are humorous throughout. Just before the identity of the mysterious villain becomes known there is a storm scene, which is about the most realistic ever produced on the screen. It was the belief of several in the audience that some of the storm could be cut out of the picture without endangering its quality.

The scene of the play, which is called a comedy-drama, is laid in Louisville, Ky. Unknown to her, Miss Dempster is the rightful heir to a vast estate, left by her parents when they died in Africa of the fever. Her father's brother, desiring to gain possession of the estate, sends the child—who proves to be Miss Dempster—away. The estate is about to be divided among the brother's heirs, when a Kaffir, played by Frank Wunderlee, arrives and tells a story of the sending away of the baby.

The mansion of Henry Hull, which has been vacant for a long time, is being used by bootleggers as a storehouse. His arrival caused the bootleggers to transfer their liquors. They become panic-stricken when the revenue agents close in on them and more than $500,000 in cash is placed in a hand satchel. The satchel is hidden in a secret panel in the old mansion as they flee from the scene.

One of them gains entrance to the house and is about to carry away the money when the leader of the bootleggers arrives and is killed in a pistol duel. The butler in looking over the house accidentally finds the secret panel and takes the bag to another secret hiding place, in the lower part of the house, not knowing that it contains anything but old papers.

Meanwhile there is concerted effort on the part of the other bootleggers to gain the money. Some of them gain access to the house as servants while another plays the part of a detective. An old doctor is a real Scotland Yard detective, also two other servants.

Miss Dempster's mother, played by Miss Margaret Dale, who is not her real mother, decides to let a society raffle marry her daughter. She does not love him, but instead loves Henry Hull. Through the action, which occupies only thirty-six hours, and is actually "One Exciting Night," Hull continues to prove his love, and while no one suspects who killed the bootlegger, Miss Dempster has often seen his shadow on his hand. A friend of Hull's, in a desperate attempt to find out who the mysterious man is, is killed as he pulls off the mask. In a chase from the house which follows after the man of mystery, and at the height of the storm, Miss Dempster and Hull never relax their efforts to run the villain down. All are caught in the storm. Hull saves his finances just as a big tree is blown to earth, and when the villain is felled by another tree they catch him, and are in a desperate battle when the detectives arrive on the scene.

When the man of mystery is exposed all the guests gasp, and so will you, if you go to the Apollo.

Telegraph

American

Telephone, Beekman 2000

Griffith Picture Opening Event of Note on Broadway

EVERY person would have believed that D. W. Griffith could ever persuade the forces of nature assist to give him as thrilling a climax to a photoplay as the memorable ice scenes in "Way Down East," but he has done so in the "One Exciting Night."

There is a storm, or rather a tornado, in this new screen production, which not only surpasses anything ever seen before, but Miss Dempster is caught in the storm and her life is in jeopardy. Mr. Griffith has made a picture that will be talked about for years to come.

World

AY, OCTOBER 24, 192

The New Films

"ONE EXCITING NIGHT."

Oct 24

W YORK HERALD, TUESDAY, OCTOBER 2

THE NEW MOVIES

By Robert E. Sherwood

A Griffith Comedy.

D. W. Griffith has never been noted as a producer of comedy. In fact, the lighter touches in his photoplays have generally been of a rather crude order, and have not added materially to the value of his work. As an instigator of tears he has always been supreme, but as a mirth provoker he has been somewhat of a dud.

However, it's a long lane that doesn't lead ultimately to Yonkers—and in his latest production, "One Exciting Night," which opened last night at the Apollo, Mr. Griffith has concocted a slapstick farce which is well worthy of Mack Bennett at his best.

"One Exciting Night" is very much on the order of "Bulldog Drummond." It is a mystery melodrama, so liberally leavened with broad burlesque that the casual spectator never quite knows whether he is laughing at or with Mr. Griffith. Just when the action becomes so terrific that the audience is constrained to smile patronizingly in self defense, Mr. Griffith steps in and pushes his characters over the line which separates ham melodrama from utter nonsense; and the audience suddenly realizes that it is being effectively kidded.

The early stages of the picture are not particularly promising. For a reel or so "One Exciting Night" shapes up like another "Dream Street," and the prospect is none too alluring. But then the murders start and all is well. Hands appear through trap doorways and clutch at the empty air. Villainous eyes gleam like automobile headlights from the depths of the night. Door knobs turn mysteriously. And the audience, as one man, shivers.

Of course there is a burnt cork negro, who indicates extreme fright by blinking his eyes rapidly and knocking his knees together. There is also a suitcase which contains $500,000, and a grim visaged detective who never takes his hat off. What is more, there is a foreword from Mr. Griffith which starts: "We welcome you to our new offering—a little romance—just a little mystery, we hope just a few thrills," and so forth.

What would a Griffith opening be without a foreword!

The general spirit of the thing is well carried out by the members of the cast. Most of them are veterans at this sort of work. The hero, Henry Hull, has been doing it for several months now in "The Cat and the Canary," and C. H. Crocker-King, unless we are very much mistaken, was the arch villain upon whom a green spotlight was always focused in "Bulldog Drummond."

"One Exciting Night" is in reality a pot boiler—and a highly successful one at that. It will do well in the box office wherever it goes. Mr. Griffith often has to devote his attention to pictures like this, because it is an open secret that some of his more ambitious offerings have n't been quite as profitable as they might be.

Let us trust, then, that "One Exciting Night" will make enough money to pay for another "Broken Blossoms."

THE SCREEN

Griffith Gives Thrills.

ONE EXCITING NIGHT. Produced and directed by D. W. Griffith, with Henry Hull, Carol Dempster, Porter Strong, Morgan Wallace, C. H. Crocker-King, Margaret Dale, Frank Sheridan, Frank Wunderlee, Grace Griswold, Irma Harrison, Herbert Sutch, Percy Carr and Charles E. Mack. From a story by Irene Sinclair. At the Apollo.

D. W. Griffith has given himself completely and frankly to old-fashioned, hair-raising melodrama and broad comedy in his latest production, "One Exciting Night," which opened at the Apollo Theatre last night. He has not attempted melodramatic interpretation of history, as in "Orphans of the Storm," nor melodramatic moralizing, as in "Way Down East," but simple mystification and high jinks without an overlaid purpose—except when the inevitable pulpiteering appears in subtitles that seem to have been taken from "Dream Street" and its self-consciously solemn predecessors.

But, if you can shake off the weight of these incongruous subtitles and if you are not disconcerted by the obviousness and exposed machinery of the plot, there is in store for you at the Apollo Theatre one really exciting evening. For Mr. Griffith's motion pictures, as pictures, are stirring. Cloaked figures steal about, murders are committed, frightened women run and scream, white arms reach out from secret passages and two terrified negroes are always trying to escape from it all. And at the end there is a storm. This is the screaming, streaming climax of the film. And it is a magnificent piece of work. Mr. Griffith has even gone beyond his ice scene in "Way Down East." In itself it is a thrilling thing to watch, it would be if there were no story attached to it. It brings the picture to a whirling, whirring end.

You are not supposed to know any more about the story than you can guess as it goes along—and many, certainly, will always be ahead of it—but you may start off with the knowledge that a number of people are looking for a $500,000 fortune amassed by bootleggers and a number of others are seeking a missing heiress. And the searches cross each other in the Kentucky home of a youth with the fixed idea that he must marry the heroine of the piece.

This youth is impersonated by Henry Hull, and those who have seen him in "The Cat and the Canary" know that he is a natural pantomimist. Those who haven't will be glad if when they see him in "One Exciting Night" he is one of the unadulterated delights of the show. There's Porter Strong, too, as Romeo Washington, a frequently, if not always, fearful negro servant and an ardent wooer. His comedy is of the broad and busy kind, but he's funny, so he qualifies. C. H. Crocker-King, one of the masters of mystery in the plot—if you don't guess who he is—does more than any one else, perhaps, to make the thing creep. His presence is enough, usually, to make any scene uncertain.

Carol Dempster, as the helpless heroine, until she begins to fight, gives vitality to the picture, and all the others are vividly present, also. The picture is nearly cast. Margaret Dale, supporting Miss Dempster as the heroine's mother, does especially good work, as does Irma Harrison, as a mulatto maid.

The film is somewhat too long, it hasn't the photographic finish that all of Mr. Griffith's pictures have, it lacks the touch of a master producer and, we believe, there are three sub-titles that try to make a rampant melodrama an allegory or something—thing it is not. But for all that, and despite everything, "One Exciting Night" is a fabulous thriller. And don't forget the storm. You won't, if you see it.

Oct 24

LEGRAPH, TUESDAY, O

GRIFFITH'S FILM SEEN AT APOLLO

"One Exciting Night" Is Super-Thriller Which Compresses All Melodrama Into Hours.

SPLENDID CAST FOR FILM

Porter Strong Carries Away Comedy Part—Dempster and Hull in Leading Roles.

By SUZANNE SEXTON.

"One Exciting Night" it is.

D. W. Griffith's newest production, inaugurating his fifth annual New York season, had its premiere at the Apollo Theatre last night. For sheer bloodcurdling inventiveness, it is going to snatch a lot of royalties away from Avery Hopwood and stary Roberts Rinehart and put them back into the film industry. If there is one single spine-tingler or goose-flesh inducer that Pinkerton, Doyle, Poe, Jac. Boyle and the other mystery spinners have overlooked here you have it.

Totally unlike anything Mr. Griffith has presented since the thrills of the old biograph days, "One Exciting Night" pays its respects to the old Green unities. Four murders, the vicissitudes of half a million dollars, a charming love story, a tale of deeds which began in South Africa years before, the modern game of bootlegging, Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde and a dozen or so other ingredients have been lifted generously from Mr. Griffith's catacomb of plots and condensed in a few hours' entertainment.

Mr. Griffith himself claims no more for the picture than that it is a "modern" study of mystery. Just to make it a little more 1922 he has added a Harlem actor, Porter Strong, who carries off the comedy as Romeo Washington with the aid of two loose feet. Another artist, who may be to the screen what Bert Williams was to the stage in the uniqueness of his art, is Henry Hull, who has been a Griffith player for years, playing, under a rock, make-up. His comedy efforts are aided by a little dark brown girl with exotic eyes, Irma Harrison. To have this pair dance through the mystery play at least 50 per cent. is entertainment.

Thus there is every good reason for the doubtful heroine, Miss Dempster, who have played tackle at Smith. When she walks a rather hazy as the heroine of a mystery play, it is Henry Hull, Porter Strong, Irma Harrison, Frank Sheridan, Morgan Wallace, C. H. Crocker-King, Frank Wunderlee, Grace Griswold, Margaret Dale and Charles E. Mack who are the stars, not her.

In addition to the thrills in the film, Mr. Griffith added the Pinkerton touch of a mere mortal in Harrison Greene, who, through the agency of a Dictaphone, proved to be the guilty man. The story is set in the Kentucky home of Miss Dempster, who, unknown to herself, is the heiress of a vast estate. Her father's brother, who is the villain of the piece, sends the child away. The death of a Kaffir, who knows the secret of the estate, brings the heiress back to her home. The bootleggers get and the stage is set for the

'ONE EXCITING NIGHT' IS A THRILLER

Storm Scene in New Griffith Film Proves Breath-Taking Climax.

Even the elements move on occasions in favor of David W. Griffith. When the germ of a mystery play was showing signs of life in the fertile brain of the great producer, along came the storm of last June, which rode so spectacularly over New York and Westchester County. It is this storm, not to betray any secrets of Mr. Griffith, that one may see in undoubtedly the most exciting motion picture fandom ever has witnessed.

It is this storm that winds up the photo-melodrama, "One Exciting Night," which had its first Broadway showing last night at the Apollo Theatre, inaugurating Mr. Griffith's fifth annual New York appearance. Even remembering what the master film producer has done in other pictures, such as the spectacular ice scene in "Way Down East," it is safe to say that his present storm surpasses all. It is a thriller.

On the programme spectators and presumably reviewers are requested not to reveal the plot of the film to those who have not seen it. Fair enough. But here are two mysterious murders done by some dark, sibilant force as the wind howls without and the women and men howl within, while over it all one may see as well as feel the stark hand of disaster ready to strike.

Gigantic cloaked figured steal about through secret passageways. Great white statues fall in hallways of the great house. On top of these rather disquieting episodes the storm breaks.

MYSTERY THERE.

Naturally the man who neatly performed the murders—was it the glowering negro, posing as a bellhop the evil visaged guest of the chief of the bootleggers?—is run to earth when the storm is all over and the man and the maid may more more placidly toward their destinies.

Leading role in the film play is taken by Carol Dempster, as a Lorgnette heroine, who begins as the apparently unknown heroine a rapturized dancer before the story is all closed. Henry Hull, whose New York tenure is present, proved to love with another in spite of a broken marriage with Mrs. J. Wilson Buckmaster, played by Morgan Wallace, who the narrow, the bootlegger gang and the storm, are her foes.

In addition to the roster in the film, Mr. Griffith added the Pinkerton touch of a mere mortal in Harrison Greene, who, through the agency of a Dictaphone, proved to be the guilty man. The story is set in the Kentucky home of Miss Dempster, who, unknown to herself, is the heiress of a vast estate. Her father's brother, who is the villain of the piece, sends the child away. The death of a Kaffir, who knows the secret of the estate, brings the heiress back to her home. Miss Dempster has not yet reached the heights which other of Griffith's heroines have attained, but she is coming along and she has some splendid moments in this film. Other leading of general mention are Porter Strong as Romeo Washington, Morgan Wallace, C. H. Crocker-King, Frank Wunderlee, Margaret Dale and Frank Sheridan.

my Journal, Oct 24.

my Sun Oct 24-1922

ON THE SCREENS IN CITY THEATERS

'One Exciting Night' Is Shown at the Apollo.

"Please do not reveal the plot to those who have not seen it." These words mark a startling departure in the cinema methods of David Wark Griffith. They appear in three places on the program of "One Exciting Night," which thrilled the people sufficiently fortunate to occupy seats in the Apollo Theater last evening.

This new product of the man who has been called the master of the screen is a mystery play in the manner of Avery Hopwood and Mary Roberts Rinehart. It is just as exciting as "The Bat," "The Cat and the Canary" and other prize nerve wreckers which have held the American stage in recent years. The piece is listed as a comedy drama—if we recall the label correctly—but Mr. Griffith evidently worked on the principle that farce is the only comedy, because the continuity is full of exaggerated humor. In fact, this is its chief charm.

We are inclined to believe that Mr. Griffith spent some exciting nights at a number of the mystery plays previously cited. After attending four or five he probably decided to see what he could do in the direction of such a presentation. A brilliant mind likes to use new weapons, we are told. Mr. Griffith had effectively demonstrated his dominance of the spectacular school of the motion picture. In fact, he created it, or made it an art, which is the same thing. Now he wanted to have some fun. He has had it in "One Exciting Night," and the audiences will experience the same pleasure for a few years to come.

We have seen numerous mystery films, but Mr. Griffith's offering is eminently superior to anything of the sort that the American screen has known. Throughout every inch of the celluloid the director's art is evident, most tellingly evident. There are tense moments when one thinks one's heart just cannot last another yard. Then comes an onslaught of comedy that congests the theater. If you don't die of fright you will laugh yourself to death.

The plot is an excellent news story, but we can't break it in THE SUN today, as we previously explained. This much must be said: It has male and female crooks who make things decidedly unpleasant and dangerous for the hero and the heroine and other people who wish they would leave them alone.

my Mail TESDAY Oct 24 1922

In Filmland

"ONE EXCITING NIGHT"

"ONE EXCITING NIGHT," D. W. Griffith's latest production, came to the Apollo Theatre last evening and it may as well be said at the outset that it was, and that it will be for every one who sees it.

For Mr. Griffith has caught the infection from the prevailing craze for mystery plays and has set out to outmystery them all. Whenever he decides to portray an idea he can always be depended upon to do it a bit more emphatically and a bit more completely than any one else.

And so he has done in "One Exciting Night." In it he has something of "The Bat," more of "The Cat and Canary" and a little from various other mystery plays, in addition to a few specially selected chills and thrills of its own. There are two separate and distinct murders, half a million dollars in cold cash—bootlegging profits—as the stake sought by the assorted crooks, several mysterious gentlemen who wander about shifty-eyed and noiselessly through the shadows, usually hiding behind huge mantels; a house with secret panels, mystic doors and hidden passageways, several continually frightened girls and women and an appealing young hero.

All these devices has Mr. Griffith employed in the plot, and though it is somewhat drawn out and though the solution is somewhat obvious quite a while before the end of the last reel, still it manages to hold the interest with comparative ease. It is a theatrically unreal plot, and Griffith frankly admitted as much in his curtain speech last night, stating that his purpose in the film was simply to entertain.

But the big Griffith punch comes in the titanic storm in which the picture has its denouement. There have been storms and storms on the screen. Only recently it seemed that the high-water mark had been reached in the picturization of "The Old Homestead," but compared with this terrific cyclonic blast in "One Exciting Night" that storm was a mild zephyr.

And the players carry on through the hurricane, giving the picture a thrilling melodramatic climax that brought gale after gale of applause from the audience. Entire forests seem to be uprooted and go drifting across the scene, buildings go hurtling through the air. It is all a mighty spectacle and in itself makes the picture well worth seeing.

And Griffith has demonstrated in this film a distinct comedy sense. The humor is furnished by a young colored Romeo and his lady love, who interchange the tenuity of the dramatic episodes with lightsome flights of comedy that yet appear not in the least incongruous and are indeed a welcome relief from the mystery.

The cast is on the whole exceptionally good, led by Henry Hull and Carol Dempster. The former, who has been playing in "The Cat and the Canary" on the stage, appeared entirely at home in his familiar surroundings in "One Exciting Night," and gave a consistent performance as the hero. Miss Dempster has not yet reached the heights which other of Griffith's heroines have attained, but she is coming along and she has some splendid moments in this film. Other leading of general mention are Porter Strong as Romeo Washington, Morgan Wallace, C. H. Crocker-King, Frank Wunderlee, Margaret Dale and Frank Sheridan.

my Globe. Oct 24-1922

THE NEW FILM

By F. P. Adams

"One Exciting Night"

D. W. Griffith, at Apollo

D. W. Griffith, of Hugh Chesterfield, is the world's greatest producer of mystery pictures. This is an open secret. The remaining point, however, really is, is "One Exciting Night" about the greatest of Griffith's mystery pictures? Well, about New York's only 20 years ago, Griffith's "Way Down East," "The Birth of a Nation," "Orphans of the Storm," "Dream Street," "The Idiot" and "Broken Blossoms" are the Griffith works that stand out in my memory. The plots are arranged by Hugh Chesterfield.

Telephone, Beekman 2000 NEW YORK AMERICAN

Oct 25

"One Exciting Night," Griffith Picture, Shown at the Apollo

By ALAN DALE

WHO-DID-IT-ISM crept into the pictures, or was rushed into the pictures, in the film entitled "One Exciting Night," at the Apollo Theatre. It was rushed in with plenty of comedy, a dash of three of spookery, and a rather remarkably suspenseful story.

You and I—callous ones!—may scoff at the utter "mystery" of "One Exciting Night," but those who revel in riddles and were "top of the class" in mathematics will enjoy this picture. Then, the screen does all this sort of thing much better than the stage.

Frinstance, there is a situation. There is some malefactor. There are various figures arrayed upon the stage. Then comes the close-up. You see a set of features that seem to give the show away. You watch a pair of magnified eyes that creep into your marrow. Every wrinkle in the enlarged countenance means something. These close-ups that the stage ignores mean infinitely more than anything the stage has to offer. To my mind they can hardly be abused. They are the wonderful assets of the films.

Carol Dempster.

"Please do not reveal the plot to those who have And the instructions, as far as I am concerned, are not seen it," says the programme at its very top, unnecessary. I couldn't reveal the plot. I'm too dense to reveal the plot. I was always bad at guessing contests. I want diagrams of all plots. Oh, I have imagination, but the who-did-it-drama surely does not call for imagination. It calls for perspicacity, and concentration, neither of which I possess. No; I shan't reveal your plot. I wouldn't if I could, and I couldn't if I would.

But "One Exciting Night" has plenty of comedy. You may experience a shiver or two, but immediately there is comedy, and you are relieved of your tension.

The darky roles in this picture are extremely well done. They are artistically done, and they add a great deal to the commercial possibility of "One Exciting Night." They vie with the who-did-it-ism.

Margaret Dale must be congratulated for her work, and Carol Dempster absolutely defied the close-up to do its worst. Poor Miss Dempster was the target of the close-ups, and she emerged intact. More could not have been expected. For those who like an agreeably young "hero" there is Henry Hull, and Morgan Wallace gave a satisfactory performance.

I simply WOULDN'T give away the plot. As soon as I read the programme and noted the request my spirits went up. I should have been lost—lost explosively!!

APOLLO THEATRE—"One Exciting Night," by Irene Sinclair, directed by D. W. Griffith.

THE CAST.

Agnes Harrington	Carol Dempster
John Fairfax	Henry Hull
Roger Ashbrook	A. Porter Strong
J. Wilson Buckmaster	Morgan Wallace
Jim Harrington	C. H. Crocker-King
Vi Delacroix	Frank Sheridan
Bennett Fairfax	Frank Wunderlee
Mrs. Fairfax	Grace Griswold
Jim Kaffir	Charles E. Mack
Mrs. Wilson	Irma Harrison
Mrs. Harrington	Margaret Dale
Jerome	Herbert Sutch
Atlantic City girl	Percy Carr

DAILY NEWS, WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 25, 1922

GRIFFITH, THE ALCHEMIST, TURNS DROSS INTO GOLD

By D. W. Gallery

Title of picture: "ONE EXCITING NIGHT"
Name of Theatre: APOLLO
Director of Picture: D. W. GRIFFITH
Producer: D. W. GRIFFITH
Presented at the APOLLO THEATRE

my Tribune Oct 25

WEDNESDAY, OCTOB

lems which might be overlooked in just an ordinary man. The name "Griffith" has been breathed reverently. He has made fashions in movies, he has made fashions in stars and he has made stars. He is a great and an exceptional man, yet he has taken a holiday and made the picture which opened at the Apollo Theater Monday night. Therefore any one may take a holiday and enjoy it. It isn't necessary to go in the spirit which people used to have when they would explain their presence at a Charlie Chaplin picture by saying: "You know, I like Charlie Chaplin. I really think he is an artist." Go ahead and enjoy "One Exciting Night" and don't stop to apologize.

Mr. Griffith certainly decided before the picture was finished that it was just a lark, but we are not sure that he had so decided when he began it. Otherwise why are there all those titles about "mother love" and the "latent instinct" which makes a young woman who is old enough to be married carry a china doll around in her pocket and caress it surreptitiously? This heroine never looked to us as though she was more than half witted and she did not do anything to make us change our opinion until she began to hunt the murderer. In attempting to prove that his heroine knew no evil Mr. Griffith seemed to prove she knew nothing at all. When people talked to her she gazed dreamily into space, fluttered her eyelids and let her upper lip twitch. But then, perhaps, Mr. Griffith was burlesquing his own and other people's ingenues just as he was burlesquing other people's melodramas. As you never can be quite sure which you are to take seriously, it is better not to take any of it seriously, not even the love interest.

In the foreword it is written, "You will enjoy the picture more if you watch carefully through the leisurely beginning some of the seemingly unimportant scenes, as we believe you will find they have significance when the one exciting night comes." This is good advice, although the layman will find it difficult, for there are flashes of this and of that, with long explanatory titles. At the end we heard people all around exclaiming,

"But I don't understand it at all. Why did the man murder him, and who was the bootlegger's partner, and why did he disguise himself?" And it is quite simple if you just watch the beginning and remember what you see.

"One Exciting Night" isn't in the least like any other picture you ever saw, so don't try to catalogue it. Just enjoy it! There is a great deal of slapstick comedy in it and a great deal of mystery, and bookcases open of their own accord and white hands reach out and clutch people about the throat and drag them behind the wainscoting, and people are murdered by other people whose faces are in shadow, and a number of different persons are working on a number of different clews which you, out in front, do not know exist. So it is not difficult to enjoy yourself if you care for any of these ways. The bootlegger meets his death because he is not content to steal only the cash, but he must also steal the receipts so his partner will have nothing on him. The man behind us exclaimed:

"Wish I could get hold of those receipts! I'd roll my own!" And we wanted to turn around and say, "Mr. Griffith does not say 'receipt' when he means 'recipe.'"

No Griffith picture, even a comedy melodrama, is complete unless the spectators see the heroine held in a horrifying position expecting instantaneous death, but saved by the hero. In this picture it is a storm which makes the night more exciting than it could possibly have been otherwise.

Henry Hull gives an excellent performance as the ardent young hero. Carol Dempster is the heroine and her hard-hearted mamma is well played by Margaret Dale. Porter Strong gets most of the laughs as Romeo Wallington, though he shares them with Irma Harrison as his dusky sweetheart. Morgan Wallace is one suspect, C. H. Crocker-King is another, Frank Sheridan is another, Frank Wunderlee is another, and Herbert Sutch, Percy Carr and Charles Mack are still others. Irene Sinclair wrote the story.

On the Screen

"One Exciting Night" at Apollo Shows That Mr. Griffith Has His Lighter Moods

By Harriette Underhill

"One Exciting Night" is exciting, but just what else it is is difficult to say. You may safely apply this one adjective to it, however, for so far we have not found a single person who disagreed with that, and probably it would not be possible to find one. So everybody agrees that it is exciting, and in calling it what he has D. W. Griffith has forestalled all criticisms.

Many people have referred to Mr. Griffith as high-brow. They expect his pictures to delve into history, to deal with big subjects, to hold a sermon; and they go to his plays prepared not to tolerate any weaknesses or anachron-

Film Daily 10/25

4

Newspaper Opinions

"One Exciting Night"—Griffith—Apollo

TIMES—Cloaked figures steal about, murders are committed, frightened women run and scream, white arms reach out from secret passages and two terrified negroes are always trying to escape from it all. And at the end there is a storm. This is the screaming, streaming climax of the film. And it is a magnificent piece of work. Griffith has even gone beyond his ice scene in "Way Down East." In itself it is a thrilling thing to watch. It would be if there were no story attached to it. It brings the picture to a whizing, whirring end.

WORLD—The part of the play that has a speaking acquaintance with "The Bat" possesses all the mechanics and all the characteristics—but no to make mystery thrillers, and despite this equipment the picture is tedious and involved and rambling . . . If there is anything about this picture that is worth while it is the storm.

HERALD—Griffith has connected a clinic force which is well worthy of Mack Sennett at his best. "One Exciting Night" is very much on the order of "Nothing Dreamed." It is a mystery melodrama, so literally beyond all hard bestowal that the usual scattered over some hours whether to be laughing at or with Mr. Griffith. Just when the action becomes so tangled that the audience is convinced to smile patronizingly at all things, Mr. Griffith steps in and pushes his characters over the edge which separates bad melodrama from good comedy and the audience actually realizes that it is being physically tickled. "One Exciting Night" is rather a fine bedtime story. It is rather a fine bedtime story. It will do all right in the film offices where it goes.

AMERICAN—This is a storm, of course, and a comedy. In the one, Mr. Griffith has given a wonderful demonstration of what can be done with a thunderous storm. In the other, he has proved that he can be as funny as anybody in the film offices where it goes.

MORNING TELEGRAPH—For good measure, Griffith has connected a clinic force with a comedy, in the one, Mr. Griffith has given a wonderful demonstration of what can be done with a thunderous storm. In the other, he has proved that he can be as funny as anybody in the film offices where it goes.

[illegible]

Moving Picture World Oct 21-1922

Newest Ro

CHA

"One Exciting Night"

Griffith Scores With Thrilling Detective Drama That Should Appeal to All Classes of Patrons.

Reviewed by C. M. Inman

David W. Griffith's new screen thriller "One Exciting Night," is a picture that in every way lives up to its name. To the legion of film fans who have followed the Griffith flag in the past, his new offering will appear much of a radical departure from the beaten paths, but even they will have to admit that he has achieved the seeming impossible in producing a picture that combines the elements of love, mystery, burlesque and melodrama, and woven a story that is as full of thrills as a cocoanut is of meat.

It has an appeal for virtually every class of theatre-goer, for it contains all the elements that go to make up a complete whole. While it is not a spectacular film, like "Intolerance," nor a historical production, like "Orphans of the Storm," he has shown that he is able to construct a thrilling detective drama with the same skill as a historical narrative, and, at the same time, present an entertainment that is thoroughly Griffithesque. To do this properly, however, there must be at least one big scene that will leave its impress upon the audience. In "One Exciting Night" it is the storm scene, one of the most realistic tempests ever simulated upon stage or screen. This inspiration came from the terrific hurricane that struck the vicinity of New York last summer. The photography in this scene is superb. Flying branches and streaming rain fill the air, huge trees are uprooted, and the howl of the wind and the concussion of the thunderbolts is given with a graphic intensity that causes the most hardened theatre-goer to gasp with excitement. It gives opportunity for some of the most thrilling moments of the story as well, when the heroine is in search of the mysterious intruder through the darkness and is horrified upon hearing a fellow tenant in the house.

Carol Dempster, who appeared in "Dream Street," leads the cast, with Henry Hull who gives a fine performance. Miss Dempster has some remarkable work, and her sense of humor stands a little ahead of her dramatic ability. Porter Strong as a colored boy has supplied much of the laughter and Irma Harrison provides the thrills most convincingly. Morgan Wallace is an ideal villain, and C. H. Crocker-King, as the detectives, and some fine work. Jack Dempsey, the hero of the picture, too, and the rest of the players too, and cast . . . The photography and sets are fine. The story is well written and well acted.

Motion Picture News Oct 21-1922

"One Exciting Night"

(D. W. Griffith, Inc.—Twelve Reels)

(Reviewed by Richard Spencer)

A TRUE drama of suspense, and though far, far different from anything the "Wizard" has heretofore attempted, it is none the less successful for that. Griffith has done away with his old standard chums, mob, costumes, and spectacle, and in a straightforward manner he has evolved a highly thrilling, gripping, and above all lovable story. Words fail in an attempt to describe its grip. More than that he has created effects never before seen. It does not need the enticing title to draw after the first audience in a city has seen it.

Hull as John Fairfax often seemed too enthusiastic over trivial matters, and indulged in gymnastic gestures that grated at times. That too was, however, trivial in itself, and was forgotten almost as soon as seen. It is saying a lot for a film when one minor flaw is the only one to be found. Griffith has also done wonders for Carol Dempster, who, always good, is in this latest production, showing the hand of the "Wizard" himself. She should take place among the highest after "One Exciting Night" is well known.

As what might be termed a waif of Africa, though legitimate heiress to a vast English estate, and deprived of her lawful heritage, she portrays the modern girl in all her intensity of life, play, and frivolity, bubbled or not, but above all sincere and sweet and right when the things that count enter her life. After acting in the storm that brings the climax is superb; and that storm! Now of [illegible] A storm that it is hard to believe within the reach of photography! Obviously Griffith has made another masterpiece. The work of Porter Strong was fine. Photography, direction, lighting, and settings all excellent.

The Cast

[illegible]	[illegible]
[illegible]	[illegible]
[illegible]	[illegible]
[illegible]	[illegible]
[illegible]	[illegible]
[illegible]	[illegible]
[illegible]	[illegible]
[illegible]	[illegible]
[illegible]	[illegible]
[illegible]	[illegible]
[illegible]	[illegible]

[illegible]

my American Oct 25-1922

ork's Most Widely Consulted Help Exchange—WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 25, 1922 Business Telep

Shun Talkers—Aim Five Years Ahead

One of a series of inspirational articles written especially for the Hearst Newspapers by America's most successful men.

D. W. GRIFFITH,
Famous Motion Picture Producer.

Persons Who Talk Much Seldom Have Much to Talk About—Accomplishment Is the Real Satisfaction—To Escape Competition, Aim Five Years Ahead

ANY person who makes money constructively will at the same time make a success which is not to be measured by money.

It is to be hoped that success in life will be more and more divorced from the money measure.

A dollar makes a poor lens for a young man to use in viewing his future.

In my business we deal in pictures, not in words, therefore we shall try to express a few thoughts with no expectation that the wording will be sufficiently vivid to impress them in the memory of the young man beginning his working career.

One of the first things to do is to raise yourself above throttling competition.

There appears to be no simpler way than to think and plan for at least five years ahead. The moment a young man or young woman begins doing that rigidly, he or she immediately advances into a preferred class that steps ahead of at least eighty per cent of the public.

To see yourself in the desired goal, in all its details, is in itself some accomplishment.

Another simple thing is to shun talkers and talking. You have observed that persons who talk much seldom have much to talk about.

Talk and talkers divert one's efforts and drain one's initiative. After much talking one feels one has done much but really has ACCOMPLISHED nothing. In the end there is no satisfaction like accomplishment

After all, what each one of us is striving for is happiness. Oftentimes it seems this nation is a merry people rather than a happy people. Perhaps this is because we are a people of very fine and high ideals, yet set up standards of attainment that are decidedly material. It is the old fight of the money changers in the Temple.

We do not understand how anyone can ever succeed while regarding work as an ordeal. If you do not like your work and cling to it, it would seem you were practising an unconscious treachery towards yourself and your fellow man. The moment you don't like your work, that work becomes shameful; and where there is shame there is degradation. And if you degrade yourself by doing something you intensely dislike, any success that may come from it must be a mockery.

By your work you should bring happiness and thought and information to the world. You should increase the love of one for another; destroy the primitive prejudices of one person against another who happens to live in a different place.

Real work benefits your neighbor as much as yourself. This is a day of rapid change in the lives of the American people. Within a few years revolutionary things have happened in our religious and social attitudes. They are happening even more vigorously in our economic laws.

Yesterday was the day of the Warrior. To-day is the day of the Capitalist. To-morrow will be the day of the Thinker.

Those of us caught in this changing period may be very much confused. But I think this may be accepted: that there is no happiness without accomplishment; and there is no accomplishment unless it helps your brother man.

D W Griffith

my Eve. Journal - Sun - World Oct 25-1922

a crash of praise

"'One Exciting Night' it is . . 7328 thrills in two hours with the storm still raging" . . . (Morning Telegraph)

"If you don't die of fright, you will laugh yourself to death . . Tense moments when one thinks one's heart just cannot last another yard . . . then comes an onslaught of comedy that congests the theatre. . . . As exciting as 'The Bat' . . Superior to anything of the sort the screen has known . . . Griffith's art most tellingly evident" (The Sun)

"The most exciting motion picture ever witnessed . . . breath-taking climax . . Even remembering what the master film producer had done in 'Way Down East' his present storm surpasses all . . Griffith has added the funniest type of negro comedian" (Evening Journal)

And so will you—

"The audience, as one man, shivers at One Exciting Night . . . acting as terrific . . . . highly successful" (Herald)

But he's funny—

"One Exciting Night is a hilarious thriller. . . . . And don't forget the storm. You won't if you see it . . . . A screaming, streaming climax, a magnificent piece of work, that brings the picture to a whistling, whirring end . . . . . The negro Romeo's comedy is broad and busy, but he's funny" . . . . (Times)

"A great many uproariously funny bits were uproariously received . . . The storm scene is the directorial genius at its best" . . . . (The Globe)

All gasp and so will you—

"Griffith's pictures will live among the memories of the silver screen . . . "One Exciting Night" is one of the top photoplays we know . . . . A storm scene the most realistic ever produced. . . . Two thousand figured away . . . . all the green gas, and is still on" (The Telegram)

Gale after gale of applause—

"The comedy is inimitable humor . . . . Griffith has constructed a thrilling detective drama as skillfully as he can build an epic of history" . . . . (Journal)

"And this Exciting Night it is the storm . . . a thrilling melodramatic climax brought gale after gale of applause . . Turtle boxes seem to be uprooted and go drifting across the screen . . . Buildings go flying through the air . . . trees . . . compared with other storms is a gentle cyclone to a zephyr . . . . a sighing breeze will warm today . . . . . hurricane blast of climax" . . . . (Post)

D. W. GRIFFITH'S

Apollo Theatre "One Exciting Night"

my World Oct 26-1922
my American

D. W. GRIFFITH

Producer of "The Birth of a Nation" and "Way Down East" Says:

"It is our policy that our press department say nothing in praise concerning our productions. Therefore, before our opening of our latest production, 'One Exciting Night,' we made no statement.

"Others have now spoken. The laughter and applause at the theatre upholds the high praise. Therefore we take the liberty of directing your attention to what has been said."

We believe, if you wish to see this picture, it will be to your interest to see it in this theatre, as we have some special effects and special music arrangements of which we have taken great care.

Enormously Funny

"One Exciting Night is a hilarious thriller...

And don't forget the storm. You won't if you see it .... A screaming, streaming climax, a magnificent piece of work, that brings the picture to a whirling, whirring end ..... The negro Romeo's comedy is broad and busy, but he's funny" .... (Times)

"One Exciting Night will be the popular evening pleasure for the rest of the season" (Post)

"We feel safe in advising you not to miss it" (News)

Surpasses All

"The most exciting motion picture ever witnessed ... breath-taking climax ... Even remembering what the master film producer had done in 'Way Down East' his present storm surpasses all ... Griffith has added the funniest type of negro comedian" (Evening Journal)

"'One Exciting Night' it is .. 7328 thrills in two hours with the storm still raging" ... (Morning Telegraph)

"The screen does it so much better than the stage" (Alan Dale)

"If you don't die of fright, you will laugh yourself to death

Tense moments when one thinks one's heart just cannot last another yard ... then comes an onslaught of comedy that congests the theatre ... As exciting as 'The Bat' ... Superior to anything of the sort the screen has known ... Griffith's art most tellingly evident" The Sun

"A great many enormously funny bits were uproariously received .. The storm scene is the directorial genius at his best" .... (The Globe)

"Well worth the price .... even the war tax" (Evening World)

All gasp and so will you—

"Griffith's picture will live among the immortals of the silver screen .. "One Exciting Night" is one of the best photoplays ever shown ... A storm scene the most realistic ever produced ... two thousand turned away .... all the guests gasp, and so will you" (Eve. Telegram)

"The audience, as one man, shivers at One Exciting Night .... actions so terrific .... highly successful" (Herald)

"Everybody agrees that it is exciting" (Tribune)

Gale after gale of applause—

"And One Exciting Night it is for anyone ..... a thrilling melodramatic climax brought gale after gale of applause ... Entire forests seem to be uprooted and go drifting across the scene ... Buildings go hurtling through the air ... titanic .. compared with other storms as a terrific cyclone to a zephyr .. a mighty spectacle well worth seeing .. ludicrous flights of comedy" .... (Mail)

"The tornado is indescribably dramatic ... Griffith has constructed a thrilling detective drama as skillfully as he can build an epic of history" ... (American)

D. W. GRIFFITH'S

APOLLO THEATRE One Exciting Night Twice Daily 8:30—8:30 All Seats Reserved

PRICES:—Nights, $1.00 & $1.50—Balcony, 50c & $1.00—Matinee, Lower Floor, $1.00—Balcony, 50c

DAILY NEWS, THURSDAY, OCTOBER 26, 1922

MOTION PICTURES MOTION PICTURES MOTION PICTURES MOTION PICTURES

D. W. GRIFFITH

Producer of "The Birth of a Nation" and "Way Down East" Says:

"It is our policy that our press department say nothing in praise concerning our productions. Therefore, before our opening of our latest production, 'One Exciting Night,' we made no statement.

"Others have now spoken. The laughter and applause at the theatre upholds the high praise. Therefore, we take the liberty of directing your attention to what has been said."

We believe, if you wish to see this picture it will be to your interest to see it in this theatre, as we have some special effects and special music arrangements with which we have taken great care.

Enormously Funny

"'One Exciting Night' is a hilarious thriller..... And don't forget the storm. You won't if you see it .... A screaming, streaming climax, a magnificent piece of work, that brings the picture to a whirling, whirring end .... The negro Romeo's comedy is broad and busy, but he's funny" .... (Times)

"'One Exciting Night' will be the popular evening pleasure for the rest of the season." (Post)

"We feel safe in advising you not to miss it." (News)

Surpasses All

"The most exciting motion picture ever witnessed ... breathtaking climax ... Even remembering what the master film producer had done in 'Way Down East' his present storm surpasses all .. Griffith has added the funniest type of negro comedian." (Evening Journal)

"'One Exciting Night' it is .. 7328 thrills in two hours with the storm still raging" ... (Morning Telegraph)

"The screen does it so much better than the stage." (Alan Dale)

"If you don't die of fright, you will laugh yourself to death

Tense moments when one thinks one's heart just cannot last another yard ... then comes an onslaught of comedy that congests the theatre. ... As exciting as 'The Bat' .. Superior to anything of the sort the screen has known ... Griffith's art most tellingly evident." (The Sun)

"A great many enormously funny bits were uproariously received .. The storm scene is the directorial genius at his best" ..... (The Globe)

"Well worth the price .... even the war tax." (Evening World)

All gasp and so will you—

"Griffith's picture will live among the immortals of the silver screen ... 'One Exciting Night' is one of the best photoplays ever shown ... A storm scene the most realistic ever produced ... two thousand turned away ... all the guests gasp, and so will you." (Eve. Telegram)

"The audience, as one man, shivers at 'One Exciting Night' ... actions so terrific ... highly successful." (Herald)

"Everybody agrees that it is exciting" (Tribune)

Gale after gale of applause—

"And One Exciting Night it is for any one ... a thrilling melodramatic climax brought gale after gale of applause ... Entire forests seem to be uprooted and go drifting across the scene ... Buildings go hurtling through the air ... titanic ... compared with other storms as a terrific cyclone to a zephyr ... a mighty spectacle well worth seeing ... ludicrous flights of comedy" ... (Mail)

"The tornado is indescribably dramatic ... Griffith has constructed a thrilling detective drama as skillfully as he can build an epic of history" ... (American)

D. W. GRIFFITH'S

APOLLO THEATRE One Exciting Night Twice Daily 8:30—8:30 All Seats Reserved

PRICES:—Nights, $1.00 & $1.50—Balcony, 50c & $1.00—Matinee, Lower Floor, $1.00—Balcony, 50c

my Herald - Tribune Oct 26-1922

Illustrated Screen Reports

Edited by GEORGE T. PARDY Assistant Editor, JAMES M. DAVIS

One Exciting Night

D. W. Griffith Production in Ten Reels, Personally Directed by Mr. Griffith—Story from the Play by Irene Sinclair—Photographed by Hendrik Sartov—To Be Released by United Artists.

Cast and Synopsis

Agnes Harrington, Carol Dempster; John Fairfax, Henry Hull; Romeo Washington, Porter Strong; J. Wilson Rockmaine, Morgan Wallace; The Doctor, C. H. Crocker-King; Mrs. Harrington, Margaret Dale; The Detective, Frank Sheridan; Sam Jones, Frank Wunderlee; Auntie Fairfax, Grace Griswold; The Maid, Irma Harrison; Clary Johnson, Herbert Sutch; The Butler, Percy Carr; A Guest, Charles E. Mack.

The main action, which takes place in one night, centers about the attempt of a gang of bootleggers to recover a large sum of money hidden in the house of John Fairfax. Agnes Harrington, with her supposed Mother, is a guest at the Fairfax home. Rockmaine, to whom Mrs. Harrington is attempting to wed Agnes, is also a guest. Various other people appear and reappear in the house and there is great confusion of identity until two mysterious murders are cleared up when the culprit is caught outside the house in a terrific storm and Agnes and Fairfax are wed.

Reviewed by Oscar Cooper

The Griffith of "One Exciting Night" is Griffith working in a new vein—mystery combined with romance, and the two merged into comedy-melodrama.

Before any reviewer can attempt to appraise the worth of a picture, he must make it his business to understand the mood and the intent of the producer. If the picture—for instance—is designed as pure entertainment, without teaching a great moral lesson, it must be reviewed for what it is. Anything else is not only worthless as criticism, but is absolutely unfair to the producer.

Well, "One Exciting Night" is intended, in the words of its maker, as a "story of entertainment." The only question the reviewer has before him is this: does it succeed in fulfilling its purpose?

We wish all questions were as easy to answer. "One Exciting Night" is a rattling good piece of entertainment, put together with remarkable cleverness. It joins blood-curdling thrill to farce-comedy of a high order. Nor has Mr. Griffith forgotten romance. Around Carol Dempster and Henry Hull he has built a love story that never gets in the way of the mystery, but reinforces the total effect splendidly.

For the better part of the first act, the picture moves slowly, building atmosphere for the rapid action and climax of the second. The spectator is bewildered, of course. He is let in on no secrets, but he gets the firm idea that something very exciting is coming later. It does. And it is mixed with the antics of the negro Romeo in such manner that the audience is alternately frozen with fear and swept by gales of laughter.

Having prepared his ground, Mr. Griffith proceeds, in the later reels, to give his story full swing. There are two murders to be cleared up. The finger of guilt is pointed first at one character and then another. There is scurrying to and fro. There are entrances and exits by mysterious persons. The detective increases his activities. Women's screams, the appearance of hands from behind doors, secret panels and all the panoply of mystery are brought into play.

When the audience has been worked up to the highest pitch of suspense, the smash comes in the form of a terrific storm. The heroine and the detective and the handcuffed hero chase the villain while the elements rage. Trees are uprooted and their branches stream through the air; wind and rain blow across the screen in fearful gusts.

The negro Romeo, at last given his chance to escape, slips and slides and stumbles through the cyclone, his face a perfect picture of comic despair. He is not interested in what happens to the villain. He just wants to get home to his little shack. And he arrives there to have the house all but blown out of his hands. Finally, he secures himself in the doorway and the house is lifted from its foundations, whirled topsy-turvey through the air, and lands, a mass of splintered wreckage.

Meanwhile, the heroine, pursuing the villain, and followed by the hero—all of them by this time drenched to the skin—is very nearly pinned beneath falling trees, only to be rescued at the final moment of suspense. Then the murderer is caught by the reunited lovers.

It is a magnificent melodramatic climax—the finest handling of storm-forces the screen has ever seen—a photographic marvel.

The cast, without exception, gives excellent performances, with Miss Dempster revealing remarkable promise. Henry Hull is a new and refreshing screen type. The comedy of Porter Strong as Romeo is sure-fire. Fine dramatic work is contributed by the other principals.

"One Exciting Night," summed up, is just what the title says it is. Mr. Griffith set out to create sheer entertainment of the first rank. He has succeeded, beyond the flicker of a doubt.

Griffith's Newest Has Thrills, Hokum and a Great Storm

D. W. Griffith presents
"ONE EXCITING NIGHT"
Griffith Prod.

DIRECTOR ..... David W. Griffith
AUTHOR ..... Irene Sinclair
SCENARIO BY ..... Irene Sinclair
CAMERAMAN ..... Hendrik Sartov
AS A WHOLE.... Good hokum; creepy mystery stuff with comedy well interjected, and big storm episode
STORY..... All about an African heiress mixed up with boot-leggers, loot, creepy hands, and spooky stuff
DIRECTION..... Good enough, but Griffith wastes his tremendous talents
PHOTOGRAPHY..... Uneven; some shots not up to Griffith's standard
LIGHTINGS.... Fair; at times smoke from carbons can plainly be seen at the edges PLAYERS..... Carol Dempster charming and cute as the heroine; Henry Hull fairly satisfactory, but Porter Strong as the colored Romeo carries off chief honors; others unimportant
EXTERIORS ..... Satisfactory
INTERIORS ..... Good
DETAIL ..... Well handled
CHARACTER OF STORY..... The first real good mystery photo comedy drama shown in years
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION..... 11,005 feet

A long time ago, back in the old days of the Biograph, when he was "Larry" Griffith, and not "D. W.," the accepted grand master of screen art, he might have made this one easily enough, and it would have been accepted without one-tenth of the criticism which naturally will come today.

This isn't to say that "One Exciting Night" isn't a good box-office because it is. As a matter of cold dollars and cents, this possesses a tremendous lot of box-office value. It has all of the tried and true mystery hokum. It is piled on in gobs, slabs, and extra slabs. There is everything from creepy hands with long fingers that mysteriously grope at nothing, to doors opening by trick buttons; moving book-cases, door-knobs, twisting from unseen hands, and all of the other sure-fire motives.

In addition, the musical department of the Griffith organization has thrown together a squeaky fiendish nerve tingling score, and a lot of people who laughed at the opening, did not realize that half of their laughter was due to sheer nervous tension.

Never in his long experience as a showman has Griffith played so definitely on an audience as he does in this mystery comedy drama. He not only pulls the strings of the marionettes in his cast, but reaches out far beyond the foot lights and miles away from the camera, and handles his audience with that certainty and sureness that has made him what he is today, the greatest showman producing pictures, in the world.

There is a mystery story and a lot of other stories in "One Exciting Night," and there is comedy galore. It is hard to tell whether D. W. is laughing with or laughing at what he produces, but all in all, while this lacks many of the features which one expects or rather demands of Griffith, he has certainly put over a sure-fire box-office success.

A word in passing of the storm. It is not as effective nor as well handled as the "ice jam" in "Way Down East," but it is very, very good indeed, especially that part showing the heroine directly in the way of a falling tree. The suspense at this point is excellent. Carol Dempster is cute and charming as the heroine, and Henry Hull has quite a likeable personality on the screen. Porter Strong was probably the truest of all characters as the colored Romeo, although Morgan Wallace as the villain is fair. Others have little to do.

Tell Them Griffith Has Made a Great Mystery Picture

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

This should be a clean-up. First, you have Griffith's name to work with, in what is probably the best of all his "low-brow" pictures. Then you have a mystery story, and mystery stories have always been good and probably always will be. After this production gets through with a few pre-release showings at top prices in several of the larger cities, you will probably get it from Griffith's distributing organization, United Artists.

One of the points you should carry out is that which Griffith uses effectively on his own programs. He prints a line saying: "Please do not reveal the plot to those who have not seen it." This is very good stuff because it will naturally be betrayed by some people. Others, however, will bear out the suggestion and refuse to tell what they have seen, and this will add to the mysteriousness.

You can surely use some of the stills of the hurricane-storm to advantage, and this with the creepy hands and other usual accessories for a mystery production, should be sufficient to put this over in good shape.

"I'M sorry, but really I can't marry you," says the girl (Carol Dempster) to the boy (Henry Hull) in D. W. Griffith's mystery film, "One Exciting Night," at the Apollo Theatre.

Boston Herald 10-15-22

LAST MYSTERY PLAY FOR D. W. GRIFFITH

Says "One Exciting Night" Took Too Much Labor

Boston Herald 10-15-22

Wonder Storm in New Griffith Picture

Marshal Called When Griffith Set Crowd Laughing

BOSTON AMERICAN
OCT 1 9 1922

TERRIFIC FILM GALE PARTLY STUDIO STUFF

Those who have seen the terrific storm in "One Exciting Night" admit that it is the most thrilling and exciting natural phenomenon ever seen on the screen. Where nature stops and art begins it would be very difficult to say, but the truth is that about half of the storm is what is known as studio stuff and half actual photography of a terrific gale in rain and wind.

Margaret Dale,

D. W. Griffith laughs and says, "guess" when he is asked which scenes are real and which manufactured, but in a general way you can figure that the exciting incidents in the storm were studio and the storm scenes themselves real.

The storm hit the Griffith studio several hours after warnings of a tornado had been sent out. The entire D. W. had a dozen camera men located at different points of the island with orders to keep turning the crank and get what they could when the blow fell. The Griffith studio is located on an island in the river above New York.

The camera men took their lives in their hands by staying on post, but none of them quit. Some got falling beams, others crumbling sheds, all the terrific downpour and exciting natural scenes.

Then Mr. Griffith set to work to imitate nature in the studio. Huge aeroplane engines with vast propellers were set to work to simulate a gale. Half a dozen such instruments can whip the wind up to sixty miles an hour. Great hoses emptied streams of water from above and this water was seized by the wind and whirled around in a downpour which even surpassed the real storm.

And it was in this artificial hurricane that the actors were put to work. They could hardly keep their feet so powerful was the wind and they were in actual danger of being pulled into the propellers as they ran back and forth, fought, struggled and acted under conditions which caused them to drop exhausted after a very few minutes.

They worked in this atmosphere for several weeks before Griffith was satisfied. Then he deftly pieced together the real storm scenes and the artificial ones and achieved the astounding results shown in "One Exciting Night."

NEW YORK COMMERCIAL
OCT 1 9 1922

"ONE EXCITING NIGHT" AT APOLLO THEATRE

D. W. Griffith presents his latest picture, "One Exciting Night," at the Apollo Theatre next week. Special radio broadcasting equipment is being completed so that the Griffith production may be heard by radio fans. Arrangements are being completed with the Bell Telephone Company for a broadcasting station by which a broadcasting apparatus will be installed on the stage of the Apollo. This will be the first time a "first night" has ever been distributed by radio. The radio fans will be able to follow the progress of the film by the music of the orchestra and by the laughter and applause of the audience.

The new film will be shown in eleven reels. Mr. Griffith describes his picture as "having been made to entertain the public; to make the audience laugh and forget its own troubles; a story told just as the story tellers of old told them, for the entertainment of the hours and not to preach a moral or propound a thought." The Apollo showing will be under the personal direction of Mr. Griffith, with special effects that are distinctive of his presentations.

CELEBRITIES IN GRIFFITH FILM

By S. F. McMICHAEL

Boston American
ISSUE OF
OCT 20 1922

Negro Minister Had Forty Wives

DAYTON, Ohio, Oct. 20.—Rev. Bill Jones, negro preacher, admitted having 40 wives today. Reverend Bill said he had never been divorced. He was arrested when a $10,000 check he paid for a local picture show turned out to be a bogus one.

BOSTON AMERICAN
OCT 2 0 1922

Largest Evening

ALL CHILDREN SHOULD SEE BIG MYSTERY FILM

Fathers and mothers everywhere throughout Greater Boston are being asked to "have a heart" and let the young hopefuls betwixt the ages of ten and sixteen look at D. W. Griffith's mystery thriller of "One Exciting Night" at Tremont Temple.

Those who can put their own youth in the correct memory perspective and perhaps recollect whole nights devoted to the perusal of detective mysteries—these are heading the request.

CLEANEST PLAY YET FILMED.

"One Exciting Night" is perhaps the cleanest play ever filmed, motifs idyllic love and true nobility, but with the tangle or puzzle theme that delights young folks worked out in two great mysteries woven side by side.

Seeing such a play stimulates the kid's power of analysis. It also helps to show exposure and punishment as sin's logical reward.

There were many children at the last Saturday matinee. The producer was keenly interested in their comments. He says that juveniles often grasp the heart of the mystery in advance of the adults.

JUVENILE TRYOUTS.

In future Mr. Griffith intends to play all his more elaborated plot dramas with juvenile as well as adult tryouts. There are still one or two points in dispute about scenes in the play. The producer, as soon as the New York opening of "One Exciting Night" is over, will return to Boston to impanel the children's jury of youthful experts and pass on these.

Meantime special accomodations are made for child auditors and their grown escorts at Saturday matinee, a block of seats being reserved well front where the heads of older folks will not obstruct the view.

ORCHESTRA NOVELTIES.

The third week of "One Exciting Night" will be marked by some interesting novelties in the orchestration and effects, as well as greater speed in getting into the heart of the story.

Albert Poore on the musical end, and Anthony Paul Kelly on the story-telling, were working here all week under the Griffith direction, removing crudities and occasionally creating.

Mr. Griffith was also invited to elaborate their printed suggestions, and audience reactions were studied from every seat of the house.

While not an experience as to the name of "Orphans" or "Way Down East," the artist gets the complete picture and knows every line of the delightful characters that Dorothea Gish brought to life. The boy and girl of Mr. Hull and Miss Dunbar, Dustin Farnum's villain, Frank Shannon's Chevalier, Mr. Schenck's "old Pop" neighbor, and the rest of the artistic current cutters of the Gems of Memory.

SCENE A REASONS.

The scene in the street on the night that girl early left at the Hospital because of Louise's illness, the scene in the Jacobin Club, the scene in the prison, the scene in the Bastile, the scene in the Place de la Concorde, the scene in the Place de la Bastille, the scene in the Place de la Bastille, the scene in the Place de la Bastille

FROM NEW YORK TRIBUNE OCT 22 1922

Carol Dempster

In D. W. Griffith's "One Exciting Night," at the Apollo Theater.

NEW YORK COMMERCIAL OCT 23 1922

CAROL DEMPSTER "ONE EXCITING NIGHT" APOLLO

71 MURRAY STREET — 8 BOSWORTH S

CLIPPING FROM NEW YORK MAIL OCT 22 1922

In Filmland

"ONE EXCITING NIGHT"

"ONE EXCITING NIGHT," D. W. Griffith's latest production, came to the Apollo Theatre last evening and it may as well be said at the outset that it was, and that it will be for every one who sees it.

For Mr. Griffith has caught the infection from the prevailing craze for mystery plays and has set out to outmystery them all. Whenever he decides to portray an idea he can always be depended upon to do it a big more emphatically and a bit more completely than any one else.

And so he has done in "One Exciting Night." In it he has something of "The Bat," more of "The Cat and Canary" and a little from various other mystery plays, in addition to a few specially selected odds and ends of his own. There are two murders and another murder, half a million dollars in old cash—hoarding profits—an aged miser, a rich young man, a poor young man, a girl and two and an assortment of other people.

Previous to the production of "One Exciting Night," the producer announced he was going to make a mystery story on the idea of "The Bat." This is an error, as he has done, for it was only during the actual work the thing took on so vast a size. It was then that Mr. Griffith decided to make it a mystery play in a class by itself. This he has done. It is not a mystery play in the usual sense of the word, but it is a mystery play in the sense that it is a comedy, a melodrama, a romance, a thriller, a mystery story, a comedy drama, a farce, a burlesque, a vaudeville, a musical comedy, a part of things to come, a part of things that have been, a part of things that are, and a part of things that are not.

It is a mystery play in the sense that it is a mystery play. It is a mystery play in the sense that it is a mystery play. It is a mystery play in the sense that it is a mystery play.

FROM
NEWARK, N. J. NEWS
OCT 26 1922

...s and Directors Launched by Griffith

Men and Women, Now High in Filmdom, Began in "The Birth of a Nation."

Unknowns Risen to Prominence

When David Wark Griffith produced, in 1915, "The Birth of a Nation" he not only created a picture that was the most elaborate and spectacular seen up to that time, but he launched on their careers no fewer than eight stars or featured players, seven directors, and various other men and women who since have gained high places in the motion picture world. He also put himself permanently in the forefront of the profession, trade, business or whatever the "movie" game may be called. No other picture has done the same, so far as the records show.

Everybody who knows anything about the pictures knows all about "The Birth of a Nation," that strange mixture of superlatively good and exceptionally trashy melodrama and spectacle of Civil War days and the reconstruction era. One does not have to be a graybeard to remember the row it kicked up in the South and among the colored population because of its Ku Klux episodes. Based on Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman," it was a creation principally of Griffith and his exciting imagination. Some of its scenes have never been excelled for genuine thrill, and some of it was the last word in banality. Yet it was a truly great feat and still stands as a mark for other directors to shoot at.

But the merits and demerits of the picture are not of present interest. The main achievement of Griffith when he cast the play was in putting together a company that in after years justified the characterization of "all-star." Here is the complete cast of characters prominent enough to have "program parts:"

Col. Ben Cameron....Henry B. Walthall
Margaret Cameron, the elder sister, Miriam Cooper
Flora, the pet sister.....Mae Marsh
Elsie Cameron.....Josephine B. Crowell
Tod Cameron.....Spottiswoode Aiken
Wade Cameron, the second son, George A. Beringer
Duke Cameron, the youngest son, Maxfield Stanley
Mammy, their faithful servant, Jennie Lee
Hon. Austin Stoneman, leader of the House.....Ralph Lewis
Elsie, his daughter.....Lillian Gish
Phil, his elder son.....Elmer Clifton
Tod, his younger son.....Robert Harron
Jeff, the blacksmith.....Wallace Reid
Lydia Brown, stoneman's mulatto housekeeper.....Mary Alden
Silas Lynch, mulatto lieutenant governor.....George Siegmann
Gus, a renegade negro.....Walter Long
Abraham Lincoln.....Joseph Henabery
John Wilkes Booth.....Raoul A. Walsh
Gen. U. S. Grant.....Donald Crisp
Gen. R. E. Lee.....Howard Gaye
Jake, a black man, faithful unto death.....William Freeman
Nelse, an old-fashioned negro, William P. De Vaull
Stoneman's servant....Thomas Wilson

One wonders what it would cost to get together and together in one cast today! Yet they were working together only seven years ago, and glad of the chance, most of them.

Their Present Whereabouts.

Taking into consideration the fact that moving picture people change about with lightning speed, and that the latest "trade directory" may not be up to the minute, research into the present activities of the men and women of that remarkable cast is disclosed the following as what they are doing now. To begin:

Walthall is a star of feature and has been almost from 1915. He had been a stock or combination actor before he and Griffith got together in 1910 in the old Biograph days. After "The Birth of a Nation" he went with Thomas H. Ince and played leads in many of the latter's productions. He is rated as among the best of the leading men. His last release is "The Long Chance," in which Blanche Sweet also appears.

Miriam Cooper not only has gone through the wedding ceremony with Raoul Walsh, the South of the old cast, and is featured heavily in pictures directed by her husband. Fans will remember the beautiful portrayal of Lucy in few months ago in "The Birth of a Nation." She does not a prominent role in a picture that was a rather stiffish development. Walsh was director. Miss Cooper is a girl who has played the part of the girl who lives on the mountain and encounters "One Exciting Night" in the current screen production.

Though the star numbers of the cast may not be revealed, it is permitted to explain the plot. The window in the hands of E. H. Crosby, an actor who lives here, and who, in his spare time, Frank Sheridan, noted for his portrayal of Mr. Dixon's "The Clansman," and Charlie H. Mack, a most elaborate cast, worthy, indeed, of an Griffith.

Added to together excellent fun, and in connection with "One Exciting Night" is the inventive musical program which was arranged by Arthur Fiedler. It added a great deal to the atmosphere of mystery which pervaded the Apollo Theatre.

Irene Sinclair, who wrote the story, seems to be somewhat of a mystery herself. It seems that she is trying to have fans think she is a man, thus perpetuating situations the author is trying to create. Miss Sinclair does not appear in person.

"One Exciting Night" is a fine type of picture for the public to enjoy, and from the quality of the cast and the production, it is a safe bet that it will be shown in the Grand Opera House.

her picture beginnings with Griffith. She was on the legitimate stage for a while before entering the shadow drama, working with Mrs. Fiske for a time, and in stock. She was a member of which later made so much "movie" history, and got her first big chance in "The Birth of a Nation." Her portrayal of the mulatto housekeeper will be remembered by those who saw it as a particularly haunting bit. A year or so ago she made the whole country cry by her wonderful presentment of the mother in "The Old Nest." As the mother in "The Bond Boy," starring Richard Barthelmess, her performance adds to her reputation.

George Siegmann is now a director as well as actor and has been such ever since his Griffith days. With a brief intermission when he was in the army during the war, he has been on the business end of a megaphone for Griffith, Neilan and Fox and has worked with Fairbanks. He has a prominent part in "Oliver Twist," with Jackie Coogan. He was with "The Three Musketeers," with Douglas Fairbanks.

Walter Long is today the best known "bad man" on the screen. He has played villainous sea captains, hard faced bootleggers and other untidy individuals for years and is known from one end of the country to the other. In "The Dictator," in which Wallace Reid starred recently, Long played the taxi driver who was an unwilling visitor to Central America, and was so amusing that he almost stole the show from Reid.

Joseph Henabery is another director of today. He began life as an architect and developed so good a singing voice on the side that he got a place with the old San Carlo Opera Company. He was one of the pioneers of the screen in 1910. After making up to look like Lincoln in the big Griffith production he has worked as actor and director to the Famous Players, the Realart and the United Artists organizations.

Raoul Walsh is another man who made good in "The Birth of a Nation" and is now one of the big men of the screen. He began with Griffith and went right up. He has been a director for Fox and the First National and is now directing his wife, Miriam Cooper.

Donald Crisp is another director of today. He was with Griffith quite a while after "The Birth." Do you remember him as the prize fighter and brutal father in "Broken Blossoms?" He has directed for Pioneer, Famous Players and Famous Players British.

Howard Gaye also is a director. He directed Elsie Ferguson in "Sacred and Profane Love" for Robertson-Cole. He also has directed for Paramount. He is an Englishman and began life in the diplomatic service of his country. His part in "The Birth of a Nation" was his first job on the screen.

William Freeman is a victim of the war. Before joining the army he was an assistant director for Griffith. He was gassed in the great conflict and for the last two years he has been in a government hospital.

William P. De Vaull was twenty years on the legitimate stage before he went with Griffith. He was with him nearly five years after the big picture and then was with King Vidor and Dustin Farnum.

Thomas Wilson jumped from the Griffith company to comedies and worked in several pictures with Chaplin. He was in "A Dog's Life" and "Shoulder Arms." He also has played with Marshall Neilan, Charles Ray and the Selig organization. He has had an adventurous life, having been at times a soldier, boxer, in vaudeville and on the speaking stage. He helped to train Fitzsimmons in his fight with Corbett.

There is what has happened since to the players who worked with Griffith in "The Birth of a Nation." That was only seven years ago, but in the "movies" that is a lifetime. A remarkable company, take them by and large.

Fall River (Mass) Herald
Oct 27 1922

"One Exciting Night" Just Whimsy of Master

Mysterious Sign Flown by Kites

"One Exciting Night" at the Apollo Theatre

My Review Oct 28 1922

An 'Exciting Night' Indeed Is Furnished By Mr. Griffith in His Latest Picture

Master Director Turns His Hand to Mystery Stuff and Turns Out as Fine a Piece of Work as Anything He Has Done in a Spectacular Way—Every Thread in the Intricate Story Is Properly Tied at the End—Realistic Storm Effects and Delightful Negro Comedy

THE CAST

Agnes Harrington	Carol Dempster
John Fairfax	Henry Hull
Romeo Washington	Porter Strong
J. Wilson Rockmaine	Morgan Wallace
The Doctor	C. H. Crocker-King
Mrs. Harrington	Margaret Dale
The Detective	Frank Sheridan
Samuel Jones	Frank Wunderlee
Auntie Fairfax	Grace Griswold
The Maid	Irma Harrison
Clary Johnson	Herbert Sutch
The Butler	Percy Carr
A Guest	Charles E. Mack
Story by	Irene Sinclair
Assistant Director	Herbert Sutch
Produced by	D. W. Griffith, Inc.

Last Monday evening was one exciting night for the entertainment hunters who were gathered at the Apollo Theatre, where D. W. Griffith's latest picture had its initial showing previous to an indefinite run. Surely a greater number of thrills and chills would have been hard to collect in one picture. It was properly called "One Exciting Night," for it proved to be one in several different ways before "The End." A more puzzling mystery has probably never been witnessed on stage or screen—at any rate, one in which could be found many more hair-raising yet logical situations.

By the end of the first part we began to wonder if we knew our own minds. Here were at least six men in a room, with a murdered man on the floor before them and the record of a murder which took place in the very same house the night before, all of whom we are about equally suspicious of, and a subtitle is flashed before us to further our curiosity. It is simply the word "Which?" And we freely admit we were more than baffled. But ere the end of the second part the mystery was most satisfactorily solved. Fear not, the story will not be told here. Every thread was carefully taken up and tied and "One Exciting Night" comes to a most agreeable close.

But not before we are shown one of the most terrific storms ever reflected on the screen. Truly it is hard to believe that such a hurricane could have been used in connection with the performers without endangering their lives, not to speak of the risk taken by the director and camera man. It is a storm such as only Mr. Griffith seems able to produce. We could not help but remember the ice floe which was so realistically staged in "Way Down East."

But the most delightful part in "One Exciting Night" was the comedy element furnished by Romeo Washington, the negro part so cleverly handled by Porter Strong. This comedy element, which mainly included scenes between Romeo and the colored maid (Irma Harrison, who also did a splendid piece of work) was a joy. At times we were afraid the scenes would become too much like slapstick comedy, but our fears were uncalled for. Romeo brought a laugh—or should we say laughs?—with him whenever he appeared.

Carol Dempster made a typical Griffith heroine. She is, indeed, beautiful, gives a clever and winning performance and is all together charming.

Henry Hull, who more than once showed awkward, boyish charm, made a splendid hero. After playing in "The Old and the Queers" and "One Exciting Night" Mr. Hull should be quite at home in an atmosphere of mystery.

Beside Miss Dempster, Miss Harrington, Mr. Hull and Mr. Strong, who did our special praise, were Morgan Wallace, C. H. Crocker-King, Margaret Dale, Frank Sheridan, Frank Wunderlee, Grace Griswold, Herbert Sutch, Percy Carr and Charles E. Mack. A most elaborate cast, worthy, indeed, of an Griffith.

Added to together excellent fun, and in connection with "One Exciting Night" is the inventive musical program which was arranged by Arthur Fiedler. It added a great deal to the atmosphere of mystery which pervaded the Apollo Theatre.

Irene Sinclair, who wrote the story, seems to be somewhat of a mystery herself. It seems that she is trying to have fans think she is a man, thus perpetuating situations the author is trying to create. Miss Sinclair does not appear in person.

"One Exciting Night" is a fine type of picture for the public to enjoy, and from the quality of the cast and the production, it is a safe bet that it will be shown in the Grand Opera House.

My Telegram Oct 29-1922

FAMOUS CREATOR OF BIG FILMS.

David Wark Griffith, who has made another hit at the Apollo Theatre in "One Exciting Night," a film play in a gayer vein than usual with this producer.

My Telegram Oct 28-1922

THIS lively paragraph from the inventive mind of Joe Flynn narrowly missed the front page this morning:—"The management announces that Lloyd George, following the Premier's resignation, will appear personally at the Central Theatre this week in a girl unit, 'Steppin' Around.' Mr. George is a buck and wing dancer, and, other than a similarity of names, is in no way related to the popular English states . . . The ingenue in her dressing room confessed to the leading old woman, "I've got to go up to Peekskill on Sunday to attend my cousin's wedding. I hate it. It will be cold. I'll have to wear a thin evening gown and shiver all the time." "Nonsense," answered the leading old woman, "you can never feel cold when you see others feeling happy." . . . It was a prominent motion picture actor who stopped before a big poster and read slowly, "David Wark Griffith's 'One Exciting Night.'" He pondered a moment. "Fresh, isn't he?" he at last, "what have you been doing now, D. W. G.?" . . . Brock Pemberton has engaged Moffatt Johnston for his forthcoming production, "Six Characters in Search of an Author." Mr. Johnston played the role of Conrad Barn as in the famous Theatre Guild production of Shaw's "Back to Methuselah." He is a Scotchman.

My American Oct 29-1922

Get Ready to Shudder, Then Re... About Griffith's Mystery Film

By ROSS SELSWICK.

EVERY woman thinks she has a natural taste for arranging a bouquet of flowers. And every moving picture director thinks that when it comes to making comedy Shakespeare had him in mind when he wrote that ability, like a wonder at theatre, will out.

But D. W. Griffith gives the comedy entertainment two and a half years [illegible] to his art production, "One Exciting Night," by [illegible] nothing to take a day that [illegible] would never have thought [illegible] stand up alone.

This is a puzzling tale [illegible] and [illegible] Romeo, as usual in the character in this picture, [illegible] of dark complexion and [illegible] an [illegible] [illegible] the [illegible] of the [illegible]

Romeo, as usual in the character in this picture, [illegible] of dark complexion and [illegible] an [illegible] [illegible] the [illegible] of the [illegible]

Plays to a crashing crescendo—and Romeo reels off into a real indecent rhapsody with the maid.

One clutches one's secret and somebody's else pocketbook. The pearls of Pauline melt off into a [illegible] trappe when a [illegible] pair of eyes peer [illegible] through a dangerous [illegible] and an unknown [illegible] [illegible] secretly through the [illegible] exhibition. A [illegible] shudder, a [illegible] [illegible]—and Romeo [illegible] the medal for brevity that he [illegible] for finding it, falls [illegible] on the floor through handkerchief [illegible]

Lines are taken on machines [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

NEW YORK TELEGRAPH
OCT 28 1922

MAKING "One Exciting Night" was to David Wark Griffith a cerebral dissipation. After years of unexcelled motion picture creation he felt he had a little lark coming to him. A Griffith production in the past has meant soaring to artistic heights via the spectacular and intellectual route. Having explored so many of these film possibilities, Mr. Griffith had a yearning to take a little playtime, and enjoy himself by making a film that was neither a great historical nor spectacular drama.

He chose for his recreation a wild fantastic melodrama with enough weird moments and trick scenes to let him carry that imagination of his as far astray as he wished.

"Everyone will think I have gone mad," he said to himself, "but I shall shut my ears to the criticism of my friends and let my enemies do their worst. I am going to have a good time."

For three or four months he shut every one out of the Mamaroneck studios and turned his staff loose on a scenario that was as unlike Griffith as Sir Walter Scott is like Edgar Allan Poe. If his people marveled at his daring, no one admitted it. They were loyal and did their part.

Trying It on His Friends.

At the end of four months he emerged from his retirement. Timidly he invited his friends to see this picture—in no sense of the word a Griffith production—and waited to hear them express disapproval for a jazz when a Beethoven symphony was expected. During the entire unreeling of his supposed folly not a word was said. His guests sat tense in their seats, with eyes glued on the screen. Used to the homage of his associates and admirers, Mr. D. W. squirmed in his chair. He regretted his own indiscretion and wished he had curbed that mad desire to let his imagination run riot. The silence unbearable, he finally demanded to be told the truth without reservation.

"Is it so bad?" he asked.

"Bad!" they shouted. "It's a sensation! It has 'The Bat,' 'Bulldog Drummond' and 'The Cat and the Canary' so far outclassed not one of these melodramas can be mentioned in the same breath."

It is not on record that D. W. fainted, nor that it was necessary to apply the aromatic spirits of ammonia, but it is on record he had the finest surprise of his life. His imagination, instead of leading him into trouble, had been his guiding angel.

Without being conscious of having done so, David Wark Griffith has given the screen something entirely new. He has made it possible for a mystery play to be presented in motion picture form and still retain its surprises and its unexpected denouement at the end.

There have been melodramas in the past of girls betrayed and men led to the brink of ruin by unscrupulous friends, but never in the history of motion pictures has there been a melodrama so full of thrills, suspense and everything that makes for 100 per cent. interest.

"One Exciting Night" has all the satire of "Bulldog Drummond," with the situations of "The Bat" intensified. Comedy—bushels of it. Romeo Washington is as amusing a character as I have ever seen on the screen. The shivers that traveled down the backbone of the audience at the bloodcurdling murders were so real most of the women went home and looked under the bed and in the closet, to be perfectly sure no prowler with a slouch hat and cape was hidden, ready to trail his long white fingers across their throats in the dead of the night.

Intrigues Man Guest.

I took to see "One Exciting Night" a man who confesses to ennui when he is forced to look at "movies." He said he had an engagement, but he would look at one or two reels.

"Don't be offended," he begged, "when I leave, because I have an important business appointment."

"It's all right," I assured him. "I have no idea this isn't up to the Griffith standard, anyway. You can slip out in the darkness and no one will see you."

Then the picture came on. We both sat through to the Lorraine without a word.

"Your engagement?" I asked. "I forgot the hour. Perhaps you can catch it."

"My engagement is honored," he said. "I had an engagement with Phoebe Daniels. I wouldn't leave this theatre. The most important thing in my life is to meet this wonderful Phoebe."

NEW YORK TELEGRAPH
OCT 29 1922

"ONE EXCITING NIGHT."
D. W. Griffith—10 Reels.
Reviewed by Susanne Sexton.

CAST.

Agnes Harrington	Carol Dempster
John Fairfax	Henry Hull
Romeo Washington	Porter Strong
J. Wilson Rockmaine	Morgan Wallace
The Doctor	C. H. Crocker-King
Mrs. Harrington	Margaret Dale
The Detective	Frank Sheridan
Samuel Jones	Frank Wunderlee
Auntie Fairfax	Grace Griswold
The Maid	Irma Harrison
Clary Johnson	Herbert Sutch
The Butler	Percy Carr
A Guest	Charles E. Mack

Story of the play by Irene Sinclair. Photography by Hendrik Sartov. Music arranged and synchronized by Albert Peace, general musical director of D. W. Griffith, Inc.

"One Exciting Night" it is.

D. W. Griffith's newest production, inaugurating his fifth annual New York season, had its premiere at the Apollo Theatre last week. For sheer bloodcurdling inventiveness, it is going to snatch a lot of royalties away from Avery Hopwood and Mary Roberts Rinehart and put them back into the film industry. If there is one single spinetingler or gooseflesh inducer that Pinkerton, Doyle, Poe, Jack Boyle and the other mystery spinners have overlooked here you have it.

Totally unlike anything Mr. Griffith has presented since the thrills of the old Biograph days, "One Exciting Night" pays its respect to the old Greek unities. Two murders, the vicissitudes of half a million dollars, a charming love story, a tale of deceit which began in South Africa years before, the modern game of bootlegging, Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde and a dozen or so other ingredients have been lifted generously from Mr. Griffith's catacomb of plots and condensed in a few hours' entertainment.

Mr. Griffith himself claims no more for the picture than that it is a "modern" story of mystery. Just to make it a little more 1922 he has added a Darktown actor, Porter Strong, who carries off the comedy as Romeo Washington with the aid of two loose feet. Another artist, who may be to the screen what Bert Williams was to the stage in the naturalness of his art. Mr. Strong, who has been a Griffith player for years, plays under a cork make-up. His comedy efforts are aided by a little dark brown girl with nimble toes, Irma Harrison. To been this pair dance through the mystery adds at least 50 per cent. to the entertainment.

Then there is lovely Carol Dempster as the delightful heroine. Miss Dempster must have played tackle at Smith. When she makes a rodeo leap at the throat of a masked mystery man, it is no child's play. Henry Hull, already well trained on the stage in mystery yarns, is the leading man and does much excellent work. Others in the cast are Morgan Wallace, C. H. Crocker-King, Margaret Dale, Frank Sheridan, Frank Wunderlee, Grace Griswold, Herbert Sutch, Percy Carr and Charles E. Mack.

Realism in the last degree is added to the second act by actual views of the great hurricane which swept New York in June of this year. More than 100 persons are said to have lost their lives in Westchester County. Miss Dempster and Mr. Hull were nearly included in the fatality list if one may judge from the big scenes. Both players took splendid risks and the photography is little less than miraculous.

Since Mr. Griffith begs so politely that the plot be left unspoiled for future audiences little can be said about it except that it is full of prowling masked figures, hidden safes, sliding panels, hands on the wall, revolvers, coveted treasure, poised knives, a little love, a generous bit of comedy.

The statistician at the Apollo Theatre last week recorded 7,328 thrills in two hours. The storm was still raging.

Irene Sinclair wrote the story of the play, according to the program. Hendrik Sartov is responsible for the splendid photography. The music was arranged and synchronized by Albert Peace, Griffith's general musical director.

"One Exciting Night" will probably be as great a [illegible] ever released.

My Exhibitors Trade Review Nov. 4 1922

One Exciting Night

D. W. Griffith's Latest Production Is a Mystery-Comedy-Melodrama Which Has Made a Hit in New York and Boston. Prominent in the Cast Are Carol Dempster, Henry Hull, Porter Strong, Margaret Dale, Morgan Wallace, C. H. Crocker-King, Frank Sheridan, Frank Wunderlee and Grace Griswold. To Be Released by United Artists.

NEW YORK AMERICAN
OCT 28 1922

Rhymed Reviews

By ROSE PELSWICK

"One Exciting Night"—Apollo Theatre.

BONDED bootleg melodrama; haunted howls and doors that slam; a
Clutching hand and dizzy doorknobs as mysterious entrees
Masked detectives who had trailed the salient suspects till they nailed the—
But the programme has requested not to give the thing away.

EACH was madly double-crossing for a treasure that was tossing
Up the houseful; there's a heroine who suffered long and well,
For, engaged, it drove her frantic when another grew romantic,
And she had to turn him down as — but they've asked we shouldn't tell.

SO confusingly they trotted to discover who had plotted
For the half a million cold that was apparently concealed.
While a comedy was teeming through the complicated scheming
That distracts one from just what it is they do not want revealed.

"I'll marry him if you ask me to," says Carol Dempster (left) to Margaret Dale in "One Exciting Night," the Griffith mystery film.

AND a photograph involving what it is you're set to solving
Foiled a villain in an overcoat who staggered in the spot.
Two men killed and others going—wrong ones shot and no one knowing
That the villain was—but that would be interpreting the plot.

THEN the well-known Griffith climax; striking storm that takes its time; accidental revelation and a muffled exposé
Leaves one thrilled and chilled and baffled as the cryptic cues are raffled,
While the film—but they've requested not to give the thing away.

Motion Picture News 11/4

Radio Fans Listen In on Griffith Opening

When D. W. Griffith presented his newest photoplay feature, "One Exciting Night," for the first time at the Apollo theatre, New York, Monday evening, October 23d, thousands of radio fans are reported to have "listened in." Arrangements had been completed with the Bell Telephone broadcasting station by which a broadcasting apparatus had been installed on the stage of the Apollo, so that radio fans could hear Mr. Griffith's speech, the orchestra and applause.

The new film was shown in eleven reels.

My News

THE NEWEST PRODUCTION of D. W. Griffith, "One Exciting Night," opens Monday night at the Apollo with Miss Carol Dempster in the leading feminine role.

Exhibitors Herald Chicago Nov 4-1922

Theatre Review of Griffith's "One Exciting Night"

New Picture Is Great in a Way Different From Previous Work of Distinguished Producer

By JOHN S. SPARGO

NEW YORK, October 24.—D. W. Griffith's latest production, "One Exciting Night," which was given its metropolitan premiere last night at the Apollo theatre, is a great picture—great in a way different from previous product of the genius of the great director. Marked by the absence of mobs, costumes and big sets, "One Exciting Night" is a mystery crime story told so skillfully as to make every moment of its unfolding a tense, gripping one.

"One Exciting Night" has many [illegible] [illegible] comedy [illegible]

The Cast

Agnes Harrington	Carol Dempster
John Fairfax	Henry Hull
Romeo Washington	Porter Strong
J. Wilson Rockmaine	Morgan Wallace
The Doctor	C. H. Crocker-King
Mrs. Harrington	Margaret Dale
The Detective	Frank Sheridan
Samuel Jones	Frank Wunderlee
Auntie Fairfax	Grace Griswold
The Maid	Irma Harrison
Clary Johnson	Herbert Sutch
The Butler	Percy Carr

Griffith was never suspected of being able to compose produce which at times almost revolting.

* * *

The action of the story is in the hands of an excellent cast headed by Carol Dempster, who does exceptionally clever work as Agnes Harrington. The work in the comic scene, which is somewhat of the overacting order, the director must share only to be shared by the hero, Porter Strong. Hull is good [illegible] and presents the subtleties of this difficult character in a new light. [illegible] production would be complete without a Griffith villain, the overcoated villain of this "One Exciting Night" this is provided in the person of Morgan Wallace, who [illegible] the villain of the piece. Wallace is a [illegible] [illegible] he moved and yet sat upright on stage, dangling small [illegible] [illegible] the lights as they appear.

By E. V. ERR
Fresh Photo Plays R. F.

[illegible]

MONEY MAKING IDEAS

Which Have Been Used Successfully by Exhibitors to Build Up Their Patronage

By T. R. ROSUNDSON
(Lyric Theatre, Bangsville, Ohio)

As a money making idea I submit:

"THE FASHION SHOW"

The Fashion Show has proven to be one of my best features better than any [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

KANSAS CITY (MO.) TIMES
OCTOBER 27, 1922

A MOVIE OF LIFE AT M. U.

CO-EDS TO PLAY LEADS WILL BE PICKED BY D. W. GRIFFITH.

Students Will Make Up the Entire Cast, and Film, When Completed, Will Be Shown to Advertise University.

COLUMBIA, Mo., Oct. 28.—D. W. Griffith, nationally known motion picture director, has agreed to select from photographs of candidates, the cast for a five-reel picture portraying life at the University of Missouri to be filmed here, with students playing all parts. The film, when completed, will be shown throughout the state to advertise the university.

The project is being promoted by the university alumni association, and members of the student council, and will be the first production to be released, dealing strictly with life at a state university.

A group of pictures of the university girls will be sent to D. W. Griffith next Wednesday, and from this group Mr. Griffith will select the six who, in his opinion, will photograph best.

Some time within the next month, a professional casting director from St. Louis will arrive in Columbia to take interior and exterior photos.

Students in the school of engineering will transform Columbia and the surrounding territory into a miniature Hollywood. The engineering students will erect a studio for the filming of the picture.

The 5-reel film will be laid in Columbia, and in the hills and valleys surrounding the town for some ten miles.

Staats Zeitung und Herold (S)
New Yorker Staats Zeitung (M)
New Yorker Herold (E)
Issue of Oct. 28 1922

"One Exciting Night."

In „One Exciting Night", dem neuen Film des „Apollo Theaters", bietet der berühmte amerikanische Filmregisseur D. W. Griffith, der ihn dirigiert inszeniert hat, ein ganz neues Gebiet, das des geheimnisvollen Verbrecherstückes, das mit einem Mord beginnt, wobei das Publikum in atemloser Spannung darüber gelassen wird, wer eigentlich der Täter ist. Hier geht der Mordbube maskiert über die Bühne und steht inmitten von Vorgängen, die haarsträubend gruselig, aber auch sehr unterhaltend sind, weil in der Person eines feigen, verschüchterten Negers, der eine Kriegsmedaille gefunden hat und sich für einen „Helden" ausgiebt, der komische Einschlag auf ergötzlich zitternden und meistens davonlaufenden Beinen hineinkommt. Der Erpresserbrecher wird schließlich gefaßt, dank den Bemühungen eines beherzten jungen Mädchens, die ebenfalls im Mittelpunkt der Filmhandlung steht. Aber erst, nachdem er seine Beute beinahe schon in Sicherheit gebracht und entfliehen will in ein Unwetter, das draußen heult und tobt. Dieser Gewittersturm ist der Höhepunkt des Films. Er ist so drastisch natürlich und dabei so unheimlich gewaltig, wie selbst Griffith bisher noch nie derartiges zu arrangieren verstand.

Die Darstellung ist annähernd so eindringlich wie die Aufmachung. Carol Dempster, als Filmstern bekannt, ist die bildhübsche, lebendig spielende Interpretin der weiblichen Hauptrolle. Morgan Wallace spielt eindringlich den geheimnisvollen Verbrecher, Henry Hull liebenswürdig den unschuldig verdächtigten jungen Besitzer des Hauses, in dem die ganze Sache passiert, und auch andere Rollen sind bestens besetzt mit Margaret Dale, Frank Wunderlee, Frank Cheriban u. A. Aber allen voran in der Gunst eines lachend applaudierenden Publikums steht Porter Strong in der komischen Negerrolle, die er zum Schreien komisch gibt.

P.

BALTIMORE AMERICAN
OCT 27 1922

One Exciting Night

D. W. Griffith's latest motion picture, "One Exciting Night," comes to its first showing this week at the Apollo Theatre in New York.

D. W. Griffith has never been noted as a producer of comedy. As an investigator of tears he has always been supreme, but as a mirth provoker he has been somewhat of a dud. However, in his latest production, "One Exciting Night," which opened Monday at the Apollo, Mr. Griffith has concocted a slapstick farce which is well worthy of Mack Sennett at his best.

"One Exciting Night" is very much in the order of "Bulldog Drummond." It is a mystery melodrama, so liberally leavened with broad burlesque that the casual spectator never quite knows whether he is laughing at or with Mr. Griffith.

The general spirit of the thing is well carried out by the members of the cast. The hero, Henry Hull, has been doing it for several months now in "The Cat and the Canary," and C. H. Crocker-King, unless we are very much mistaken, was the arch-villain upon whom a green spotlight was always focused in "Bulldog Drummond."

"One Exciting Night" is in reality a pot boiler—and a highly successful one at that. It will do well in the box office wherever it goes. Let us trust, then, that it will make enough money to pay for another "Broken Blossoms."

J. BILTMORE.

DULUTH (MINN.) HERALD
OCT 28 1922

NEW YORK, Oct. 28.—(Special to The Herald.)—In "One Exciting Night" D. W. Griffith has turned from rural, costume and spectacle pictures to capitalize the craze for mystery productions. He did not wait to obtain the rights to "The Bat" at a very costly figure, but instead proceeded to put Mary Roberts Rinehart's thrilling story into screen form.

Griffith, like in "Way Down East," has utilized the forces of nature to good advantage. His newest production is brought to a thrilling climax with the most sensational wind and electrical storm that has ever been screened.

For his actors Griffith secured many who had been schooled in mystery plays on the stage. From "The Cat and the Canary" he took Henry Hull, a popular leading man, from "Bulldog Drummond" he secured C. Crocker-King, an English actor noted in the portrayal of such roles.

Claud Fitzmaurice and Porter Strong are among the Griffith veterans in the cast. In fact, Strong has the most time that has come his way since he entered the Griffith fold several years ago. Harry Earnest Smith, who has been a property man for Griffith and great deal of screen experience, and Frank Sheridan, who is also in the cast.

"One Exciting Night" opened at the Apollo and is expected to run for some time. The story is a mystery from the start and the audience is left guessing until the last reel.

LOS ANGELES (CALIF.) TIMES
Oct 29 1922

EXCITING, BUT MOSTLY IN NAME

Griffith's New Feature of Program Genre

Kirkwood's Voice Strong Feature of "Fool"

Glorious Gloria Frolics Again Satirically

BY FRITHERICK JAMES SMITH
(TIMES STAFF WRITER)

NEW YORK, Oct. 28.—D. W. Griffith's newest mirth effort, "One Exciting Night" came to town last week for a short run at the Apollo theater. It's report he received, left to me, all the way of this kind. It is a farce pretender—a farce pretender of the Griffith picture.

"One Exciting Night" is highly entertaining, from the standpoint of the Griffith picture, and from a photographic standpoint nothing more admirable has ever been shown on the screen.

In spite of all this, however, "One Exciting Night" adds nothing to Mr. Griffith's reputation as a producer. And it must also be stated that none of its performers particularly distinguish themselves. [illegible] the African hero acquits himself well, and Miss Carol Dempster is an attractive heroine, but neither are of the star class. There is a negro actor in the cast and Mr. Griffith told the first night audience that he liked him best of all, but in the opinion of the writer there is nothing remarkable about his performance.

"One Exciting Night" was made for little money—there is only one expensive set and not more than a dozen players. And that is why many film-goers who liked "Intolerance" and "Orphans of the Storm" will be disappointed when they see it. It is not a "$2 or even $1.50 film" by any means, despite its length. When it is cut to the normal length and is shown in the regular movie housed it will rank as a first class attraction.

However, this doesn't mean that Mr. Griffith has lost his skill as a film producer. He's after the money this time, having fared rather badly financially, even with his successes. "The Birth of a Nation" for instance, made Thomas Dixon, who wrote the novel on which it was based, more than a million dollars—much more than it made Mr. Griffith. Incidentally, it is interesting to know that about the only two pictures which have made money at $2 prices are "The Birth of a Nation" and "Way Down East." The losses on the nearly all the other pictures that are shown on Broadway at $2 are simply charged to the cost of production. They are simply shown in first class houses to aid in their exploitation.

Mr. Griffith needn't feel ashamed of "One Exciting Night." It's a good mystery film and in the regular film houses the "fans" will probably "eat it up." I hope he'll make a lot of money with it and make another masterpiece like "Broken Blossoms." Mr. Griffith is still the greatest film producer in the game but he can't knock out a masterpiece every time—even Michael Angelo didn't do that.

Next Monday night Broadway will see Douglas Fairbank's latest film child, "Robin Hood." It will be almost next door to "One Exciting Night" in West 42d street.

Cambridge (Mass) Tribune
Oct 28 1922

8/8

GRIFFITH'S LATEST PRODUCTION TAKES BOSTON BY STORM

"One Exciting Night," at Tremont Temple as Remarkable as "Way Down East"—Hurricane Scene in New Picture Outdoes Even the Ice Scene in the Latter Picture

The new D. W. Griffith play, "One Exciting Night" presents the spectacle characteristic of a Griffith movie, of crowds of spectators cheering, applauding, rocked with laughter or melted in sympathy, as if the Master had touched some great instrument and evoked the gamut of emotions. Such remarkable scenes have not been witnessed at the Tremont Temple since Mr. Griffith produced what many persons regard as his greatest triumph, "Way Down East."

In one respect at least "One Exciting Night" surpasses that classic. Both Boston and New York City state emphatically that the hurricane depicted in the new offering outdoes even the ice scene of "Way Down East." Not only that, it is on the highly popular order of mystery entertainments. There is no better Hallowe'en attraction anywhere. True to its name, it is full of spookiness and thrills punctuating the tense drama and the powerful love scenes. A feature is the wonderful comedy element.

There is a buzz of anticipation before the curtain goes up. "Isn't she cute?" "Carol is the nicest thing—" "I think he's the one who steals the—" "No, no that hideous man with the boring eyes." "Then the distinguished looking colored man—Hasn't he got an awful jaw?" "Oh, looky, here come Romeo Washington." Shrieks over the shambling figure and comic features of Porter Strong at once endearing himself for his pathetic absurdity. But ever the whispering undertones hark back to Carol Dempster in admiration of what the girl in her teens of today would like to be.

Miss Dempster in the role of Agnes Harrington indeed typifies the spirit of "do all and dare all" without abating a jot of graceful feminity or innate refinement. The young folks love her scenes with Henry Hull as John Fairfax. Mr Hull is not the conventional he doll of the movies, but a much more average and whimsical mortal, representing the bright, humor-loving attitude of today's youth and the American ability to "laugh at ourselves." Heroes now mirthmakers, girls getting wiser and more efficient all the time—how will it end? The audience at Tremont Temple like it that way. There is frantic applause when Miss Dempster saves Mr. Hull—the reverse English of the more usual theme of hero saving the heroine.

On the mystery side the riddles in the play are so intriguing and baffling that no one guesses the solutions until the final denouements. The question of the rogue's identity temporarily lost in the excitement of crashing trees, hurtling buildings and the girl's rescue that markes the wonderful hurricane. It returns with redoubled force as the carrier of the loot is spied, overtaken and caught, then finally unmasked.

Another and even bigger mystery waits to be solved, that of Miss Dempster's real identity to the story-character. When that second denouement is over and soon after the "clinch," Romeo Washington's latest career in the lazy realms of Darktown claims three hundred seconds of laughter.

The engagement at Tremont Temple is a limited one. The presentation as now shown will appear be duplicated in any movie house, being filmed and characterized by a masterpiece of the screen today.

orchestral setting and great stage effects. Those who do not like to stand in the long queues should get their seats in advance.

NEW YORK AMERICAN
OCT 30 1922

CAROL DEMPSTER is the heroine in D. W. Griffith's "One Exciting Night," which appears to be in for a run at the Apollo Theatre and adds to the fame of the producer.

Cleveland (O) Plain Dealer
Oct 29-1922

Griffith Stated to Make Up Losses With New Film

BY KARL K. KITCHEN.

NEW YORK, Oct. 28.—D. W. Griffith's latest photo play, which had its first metropolitan showing at the Apollo theater, last Monday night, leaves one, as Joseph Conrad would say, with mixed feelings.

For "One Exciting Night," as he calls his new film, is so totally foreign to anything he has ever produced that it does not [illegible] Griffith often [illegible] ing. In fact, it is more like a super-photo play by Mack Sennett.

However, "One Exciting Night" does produce a number of thrills and an unusually large number of laughs, and if nothing else, it takes all the punch out of the forthcoming film version of "The Bat," Avery Hopwood's money-making mystery play. It is said that "The Bat" has made more than $2,000,000.

And that is probably why Mr. Griffith made this new movie mystery film. For there is obviously a large audience for mystery thrillers, and having lost several small-sized fortunes trying to be artistic, the producer of "The Birth of a Nation" and "Broken Blossoms" is justified in trying to pick up a little real money with a pot-boiler.

"Broken Blossoms," perhaps the most artistic film ever made, was a financial disaster. "Way Down East," Mr. Griffith's hokum film, made and is still making several hundred thousand dollars. "One Exciting Night" will probably make a lot of money, which may encourage him to give the public one more artistic production before he leaves America.

It is not generally known, but Mr. Griffith is abandoning his studio near New York and moving to England. He will make only one more picture in this country for several years.

But to return to "One Exciting Night." The owners of "The Bat" are said to have asked $100,000 for the film rights. Mr. Griffith has provided a film story, slightly different, to be sure, but equally as good. For "The Bat," it must be admitted, amounts to nothing as drama.

Briefly, "One Exciting Night," concerns a missing heiress from England who is being forced into an unwelcome marriage with a crook by her mother. Bootleggers hide $500,000 in bank notes in the home of her American sweetheart and during her visit there two mysterious murders are committed which baffle the detectives who are on the job. A mysterious figure, like the central figure in "The Bat" commits the murders and just before the end of the film his identity is disclosed.

It must be admitted that unless one is "in the know" the mystery is well sustained and there is plenty of action, and what is more surprising, plenty of fun. And there is a storm scene at the finish that makes the storm in "The Old Homestead" seem like an April shower. Great trees are uprooted in the Griffith picture and from a photographic standpoint nothing more admirable has ever been shown on the screen.

In spite of all this, however, "One Exciting Night" adds nothing to Mr. Griffith's reputation as a producer. And it must also be stated that none of its performers particularly distinguish themselves. [illegible] the African hero acquits himself well, and Miss Carol Dempster is an attractive heroine, but neither are of the star class. There is a negro actor in the cast and Mr. Griffith told the first night audience that he liked him best of all, but in the opinion of the writer there is nothing remarkable about his performance.

"One Exciting Night" was made for little money—there is only one expensive set and not more than a dozen players. And that is why many film-goers who liked "Intolerance" and "Orphans of the Storm" will be disappointed when they see it. It is not a "$2 or even $1.50 film" by any means, despite its length. When it is cut to the normal length and is shown in the regular movie housed it will rank as a first class attraction.

However, this doesn't mean that Mr. Griffith has lost his skill as a film producer. He's after the money this time, having fared rather badly financially, even with his successes. "The Birth of a Nation" for instance, made Thomas Dixon, who wrote the novel on which it was based, more than a million dollars—much more than it made Mr. Griffith. Incidentally, it is interesting to know that about the only two pictures which have made money at $2 prices are "The Birth of a Nation" and "Way Down East." The losses on the nearly all the other pictures that are shown on Broadway at $2 are simply charged to the cost of production. They are simply shown in first class houses to aid in their exploitation.

Mr. Griffith needn't feel ashamed of "One Exciting Night." It's a good mystery film and in the regular film houses the "fans" will probably "eat it up." I hope he'll make a lot of money with it and make another masterpiece like "Broken Blossoms." Mr. Griffith is still the greatest film producer in the game but he can't knock out a masterpiece every time—even Michael Angelo didn't do that.

Next Monday night Broadway will see Douglas Fairbank's latest film child, "Robin Hood." It will be almost next door to "One Exciting Night" in West 42d street.

N.Y. Even. World
11-1-22

THEY PAY AND PAY AND—

This being a movie actor or actress isn't the easiest thing in the world. Ask any of them.

We never realized just what a tough proposition it was to be so much in the limelight until we were caught in the human jam that thronged the lobbies and the aisles of the Lyric Theatre Monday night, awaiting a chance to see the promenade of movie stars in the flesh that were scheduled to appear.

We chanced to be directly behind Carol Dempster as she fought her way through this canyon of curiosity, and now we know the curse of popularity.

When Miss Dempster left her limousine she wore a magnificent corsage bouquet of orchids.

When she finally straggled into the theatre she didn't even have a stem left. The movie fans had the flowers or parts of them, as souvenirs.

Later, when Valentino tried to enter the theatre, he was almost torn to ribbons, and when, finally, Mary and Doug arrived the police reserves present formed a hollow square and even then couldn't keep the rabid fans from them.

"I'd like," muttered a big star, "to be able to go to the theatre and remain unnoticed!"

Yes, we felt the same way you do about that statement.

NEW YORK EVENING WORLD
10-31-22

BUSY BARBER.

D. W. Griffith had not left the studio grounds for six weeks while making "One Exciting Night" when an assistant sent for a barber, not mentioning the fact to his chief.

"Tell him you are ready to cut his hair," were the instructions to the hedge-trimmer.

The barber approached the chair from which D. W. G. was directing a scene.

"I'm ready!" he announced.

"Oh, yes!" flashed back Griffith. "You go over there and stand by that door and I'll tell you what to do!"

The barber did. He waited for eight hours. No hair was cut, but the barber developed into a corking good extra actor and is now on the Griffith salary list.

The D. W. G. alfalfa was trimmed the following morning.

NEW YORK NEWS

May Revive "Intolerance"

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Chicago—D. W. Griffith is quoted in the dailies as saying:

"I'm thinking of reviving my old picture, "Intolerance" soon. What a galaxy of stars it has! Colleen Moore, Monte Blue, Douglas Fairbanks, the Gishes, Rudolph Valentino, Richard Barthelmess. I tried out Barthelmess and Valentino for a minor part—that was when Valentino was getting $5.50 a day as an extra—and Barthelmess got it. I consider him without question the greatest male actor on the screen today."

Boston Advertiser
11-1-22

Pretty Filmster In Mystery Film

Delicately dyed to represent a coffee-colored cutie, Irma Harrison is one of the most interesting and lively members of the cast of "One Exciting Night", D. W. Griffith's mystery thriller, now at Tremont Temple.

Miss Harrison portrays the sweetie of Romeo Washington, a pronounced brunette gentlemen delightfully depicted by Porter Strong.

In the story Romeo would fain leave a house of horror, but one look at Irma changes his plans, and he stays. You can't blame him.

IRMA HARRISON

NEW YORK JOURNAL
NOV 4 1922

MARGARET DALE
"One Exciting Night"—Apollo.

N.Y. Telegraph
11-1-22

D. W. Griffith to Chicago.

When "One Exciting Night" opens in Chicago D. W. Griffith will be on hand for the first night. He is starting today for Chicago in order to be there in ample time to arrange for the presentation of his "thriller." From the way Chicago always takes pictures that hold interest to its heart, we have an idea this latest Griffith production will [illegible] among the [illegible]

Herald Tribune N.Y.
10-31-22

GRIFFITH PICTURE RICH IN THRILLS

"One Exciting Night" Lives Up to Name

[illegible]

NEW YORK AMERICAN
NOV 2 - 1922

MARGARET DALE and Frank Sheridan in "One Exciting Night," Apollo Theatre.

PING FROM
NEW YORK TELEGRAPH
11-2-22

CAROL DEMPSTER.
She will talk over the radio tonight with D. W. Griffith and Porter Strong, telling how "One Exciting Night" was made.

Honolulu Star Bulletin
11-4-22

[illegible] was present at Boston [illegible] evening of October [illegible] when his picture, "One Exciting Night," had its premiere at the Tremont Temple theater. The picture will not be shown in New York until another month and will probably be released on the Pacific coast at the same time. The production is from a story by Irene Sinclair, and the action is in a modern setting in Baltimore. Among those in the cast are a number of stage players who have not hitherto been identified with the Griffith forces, or conspicuously with the screen. For example, Henry Hull, who is sufficiently introduced by reference to "The Cat and the Canary"; C. St. Croker-King, an English actor seen recently in "Bull Dog Drummond," and Porter Strong, an old minstrel man. Carol Dempster is the heroine of the piece.

"ONE EXCITING NIGHT"

Story of the play by Irene Sinclair, D. W. Griffith's production, shown at Apollo Theater, New York, engagement beginning October 23.

Reviewed by MARION RUSSELL

"One Exciting Night" has been appropriately named. We could not stop to count them but we are sure that there were one hundred thrills a minute that caused shivers to tickle the spine and fright sufficient to curl the hair. To those who like "spooky haunted houses" stories "One Exciting Night" will have a strong appeal.

THE CRITICAL X-RAY

This is not Griffith's best picture—no, not by any means! In fact, D. W. in a curtain speech admitted that the only part of the story which he considered real was that portion wherein the Negro Romeo Washington suffers from his natural superstition and fear of the unseen. And while we are on that subject, it is but fair to say that as far as the comedy element went, Porter Strong, impersonator of this burnt-cork hero, really walked away with the comedy honors. The house literally went into spasms of laughter when Romeo and his "yaller gal" in a mad race from the black-clothed apparition stalking thru the empty room of the haunted mansion rolled down a steep flight of stairs without any regard for their dignity.

All the ideas incorporated in the picture have been utilized before and when we digest the material which furnishes "One Exciting Night" we realize that it is a lot of old hokum. But how ingeniously it has been treated by that master craftsman, D. W., who seemed to be taking a little summer vacation between the making of his high-grade pictures, just to show the public that he can play at times in order to get away from the more serious style of productions.

The involved story is much too complicated to discuss in this brief space, but mystery, robbery, murder and a lot of intriguing villains supply constant interest. Of course, it is all in the way that the many episodes have been handled, and also it must not be forgotten that D. W. is past master in presenting springtime love scenes, showing the awakening of innocence and the dawn of youthful passion. These scenes are always handled with the delicate touch of the man who creates the beautiful and conveys it reverently. But not content with this, he must add a final thrill which results in a whirlwind tornado that lifted giant trees up from the ground and tossed them about like feathers, twisted the sides of houses and swept the roofs skyward, to say nothing of a torrential rain which almost drowned the hero and the intrepid young heroine. Of course, we hate to quarrel with the wizard of film productions, but had these scenes been less exaggerated they would have inspired more terror and convinced the skeptical of their reality.

As melodrama—and very rampant melodrama at times it is—"One Exciting Night" will carve a niche for itself in the land of "Make believe" and the film fans will tell one another of its thrilling moments and of the uncanny shock many of the scenes produced.

Carol Dempster was again the dream-like girl with the lovely face, but when driven to extreme head outlaw strength to battle with the mysterious villain and save her sweetheart, Henry Hull has an equal to impersonating the football, complete American type. Margaret Dale was distinguished looking as the correspondent Mrs. Harrington, while George Walsh, C. H. Croker-King, Frank Morrison, Dave Griswold, Patsy Ruth Miller, Dave Griswold, Patsy Ruth Miller, Frank Wunderlee and Fred Stanton acted and the twenty odd [illegible] acting as if it had the time of its life. It's [illegible] for laughs.

PING FROM
NEW YORK TELEGRAM

From Medicine Shows to the Movies

From the beginning of pictures the black-face comedian has been struggling for a place in the films. Failure has followed failure, except in minor parts, until the coming of Romeo Washington in D. W. Griffith's newest successor, "One Exciting Night," at the Apollo Theatre.

Not since the arrival of Harold Lloyd, apparently, has there been a character who moved every one to laughter as has Porter Strong in this black-face part.

The greatest effort to bring out a black-face comedian for the films was made with the late Bert Williams. A fortune was spent in making one picture after another, but never once did that famous artist ever give the true breath of comedy to his shadow characters. The films were largely withdrawn from circulation. In several instances they were never released.

The search for material from which to make comedy stars included the major part of the famous black-face stage stars. None ever survived the tests. The failure of Bert Williams, whose pantomime on the stage was so famous, started the legend it was impossible to popularize a black-face comedian.

Mr. Griffith has made his reputation by making legends rather than observing them. Five years ago he selected Porter Strong as a coming comedy star. During this period he carefully trained this player in pantomime. From time to time small parts were created, more as training for the player than a part in the production.

When he selected the story of "One Exciting Night" Griffith had Porter Strong in mind for the central comedy character.

The exceptional success of the character of Romeo Washington is the result. Mr. Griffith, having spent his early life in a Kentucky plantation, knows the colored race thoroughly.

Strong was born and grew up in Tennessee, Mr. [illegible]

In the path through medicine shows, theatrical tents, minstrel troupes, and finally vaudeville and with the minstrels and the circuit of burlesque.

[illegible] Washington, Strong [illegible] of comedy with the exception of a [illegible] being the greatest [illegible] as well as character [illegible] with [illegible] throughout. This sensation on the part of the audience is the result of [illegible] Strong had introduced in his [illegible] to make a black face character a [illegible] in the [illegible]

NEW YORK EVENING WORLD
11-6-22

STILLS.

It isn't often that we feel like offering a suggestion to D. W. Griffith, but here goes! We suggest that "Who Killed Johnson?" is a 100 per cent. better title for his big picture than "One Exciting Night." [illegible] Kenneth Harlan [illegible]

N. Y. Mail
11-2-22

D. W. Griffith will tell how and how he made "One Exciting Night" to the radio fans of the east tonight through the Bell Telephone Company broadcasting station. Music from the original score will be played to illustrate the various motifs. Carol Dempster [illegible]

New York City
11-3-22

GRIFFITH FILM AN INNOVATION

"One Exciting Night" Brings Mystery Play to Screen

The popularity of D. W. Griffith's new picture, "One Exciting Night," at the Apollo Theatre, proves that Griffith has caught the public fancy again with an innovation. He has shown that the mystery play, with all its quick twists and hidden clues, is an entertaining material for the screen as for the stage.

How other producers will follow him with his new interesting development, for Griffith, aside from being a master of screen technique, is also possessed of a proven and powerful imagination.

The picture reveals Griffith with a new characteristic that may be surprising to some of his followers who [illegible] his work in the past. [illegible] Griffith [illegible] with the [illegible] and [illegible] with [illegible] and [illegible] the [illegible] and [illegible] the [illegible] and [illegible] the

NEW YORK WORLD

N. Y. TELEGRAM
NOVEMBER

IN D. W. GRIFFITH'S NEW FILM

Miss Margaret Dale, noted actress, who appears on t Exciting Night" at the Apollo Theatre.

N.Y. World
11-12-22

Showing a storm in the Griffith film, "One Exciting Night" — remarkable photography by Fred L. Diem.

NEW YORK TELEGRAPH
NOV 12 1922

CAROL DEMPSTER IN D. W. GRIFFITH "ONE EXCITING NIGHT"

CLIPPING FROM NEW YORK TELEGRAM

IRMA HARRISON in "ONE EXCITING NIGHT" APOLLO

CLIPPING FROM NEW YORK AMERICAN

CAROL DEMPSTER "ONE EXCITING NIGHT"

BOSTON TELEGRAM
NOV 15 1922

CHICAGO (ILL.) HERALD-EXAMINER
NOVEMBER 12

DEMPSTER and D. W. Griffith, arriving in Chicago yester-day to be in personal attendance at the premier showing of their latest picture at the Illinois Theater tomorrow.

An Exciting Moment of "One Exciting Night"

Threatening the life of beauteous Carol Dempster is the Masked Figure who contrives to give nobody a quiet moment in Griffith's photo-

N.Y. Tribune
11-12-22

NEW YORK AMERICAN
NOV 7

Moore Tribune N.Y.C.
11-9-22

What will Griffith do next?

By Victor Hale

GRIFFITH O.K.'S GOOD PAY FOR GOOD ACTOR

Film Wizard and Carol Dempster Here for Opening of 'One Exciting Night.'

WEEKLY CHAT

Motion Picture Magnate Denounce Pictures of Stars He Has Made

NEW YORK AMERICAN
NOV 5 1922

"CLOSE-UP" OF DAVID WARK GRIFFITH

Great Film Producer Something of a Mystery to His Interviewer Until He Learned There Is Nothing Strange About Him at All—He's an "Open-Faced, Straight-Shooting Personality."

By JOSEPH MULVANEY.

AFTER passing through the alternating thrills and chills of "One Exciting Night," in the Apollo Theatre, I felt valiant enough to attempt the solution of an even greater mystery—the mystery of David Wark Griffith, the man behind the film.

For this man is to most of us a more dramatic problem than the vivid picture of love, intrigue and adventure which he has produced for the screen. While I was trying to guess the identity of the masked, cloaked, slouch-hatted figure around whom the action of the play spins the thought was in the back of my brain that perhaps the last flash would reveal him as D. W. Griffith himself.

Every producer puts himself into his work and it seems as though there were in the elusive, eerie character a great deal of Griffith as he is imagined by the public. You've seen those pictures of him—cloaked to the chin, glancing back over his shoulder, with keen, thoughtful eyes under a sombre, broad-brimmed hat, and an atmosphere of brooding mysticism over it all. Isn't there the suggestion of a Corsican vendettist about him or a Spanish conquistador or some other picturesque type? Anyaway, he was more of a mystery to me than any character in "One Exciting Night," and I looked for a lot more excitement tracking him to his lair and unmasking him in cold type.

I did the deed, truly enough, and oh, what a shock I got!—but not at all the sort of shock I expected. The strangest thing about David Wark Griffith is that there is nothing strange about him at all and a lot of people are making a mystery out of an open-faced, straight-shooting personality.

But truth is mighty and must prevail. He is a tall, slim, finely-drawn figure, with gray-streaked curling hair and somewhat ascetic features, and he can't be as young as he looks. He is a motion picture producer of an exceptional variety in that while he spends millions to execute his ideas and keeps a big plant always in operation, he does not go into mass production. He watches for weeks and months—watches, studies, thinks and calculates in silence—and suddenly something comes out of it all in a spectacular smash and the town is compelled to take notice.

This estimate of the man was received after an hour's conversation in his simple suite of offices in the Longacre building where we talked about films, present and past and future. All the atmosphere of mystery and mysticism faded in five minutes, revealing David Wark Griffith as a quick-thinking slow-speaking, mild-mannered man, altogether unusual.

David Wark Griffith.

When I asked him what he thought of "One Exciting Night" he shrugged his shoulders:

"Wait until I know what the public thinks of it and I'll tell you. It's a picture. It was interesting to make. We did some new things, or some things in a new way. If the public finds it entertaining it will be a success."

When I suggested that the comment of critics and the expressions of experts in the motion picture industry would indicate that, he shook his head and remarked, non-committally:

"Perhaps so, but if I accepted that as final I might long since have retired a failure. 'The Birth of a Nation,' which seems to remain a standard for judging motion pictures, stirred no excitements, no enthusiasm, when it was presented for the first time. 'Way Down East' did not cause a conflagration. 'Orphans of the Storm' was not acclaimed a great success in the beginning."

But Griffith conceded that there were many things in "One Exciting Night" that he liked and most of them were phases of the film to which I had attached little significance. He spoke of C. H. Crocker-King, the mysterious neighbor, as one of the finest actors on the screen, and that was fair enough praise, for the performance of that player is of a high grade of fineness.

Griffith said he had enjoyed the storm scene greatly. That length of unleashed elemental action was photographed at night in the Westchester hills, under the glare literally of every high-powered, portable light that could be hired between Boston and Philadelphia, with enough airplane propellers to equip a flying squadron at war-strength flaying the flooded hillside and the struggling actors. He told of the big trees—genuine, natural, towering pines—which had to be rocked and tossed in the gale. And then he said:

"I've heard 'One Exciting Night' spoken of as a comparatively inexpensive production for me. The fact is that only three pictures of the many I've made cost more. They were 'Orphans of the Storm,' 'Way Down East' and 'Intolerance.' Does it surprise you to know that the storm scene alone, in 'One Exciting Night,' cost about four times as much as 'The Birth of a Nation' in its entirety?"

It was astonishing and I seized the chance to swing the conversation back to the definition of success. I didn't want to go away with the impression that D. W. Griffith looked on the box office as the barometer of success. But he wouldn't let me go away with any other idea—because, he said:

"Of course, there are exceptions, but the screen is a medium essentially for public entertainment; instruction, too, but entertainment essentially. If you put forth a public entertainment that doesn't entertain the public or any substantial part of it, how can that be called a success?

And then I committed the blunder of bringing Mr. William Shakespeare into the discussion to refute Mr. David W. Griffith and naively I asserted that Shakespeare would starve in New York. Griffith smiled at my callow cocksureness and responded:

"You didn't think when you said that, for Shakespeare with his genius to-day would be the wealthiest man in the industry of the stage or screen. Why he knew better what the public wanted in his time than any manager of this year knows what the present public wants. With Shakespeare's perfect understanding of the stage and of the people, he would have had us all beaten before we started.

Whether he knew it or not, I decided the man would have to be stopped and brought back to the subject of films, so I said, semi-sarcastically:

"Oh, Shakespeare would probably be a riot in a maniacal melodrama to-day."

And David Work Griffith flung out his arms and exclaimed, enthusiastically:

"You've hit fairly! That's where his genius would overwhelm all competition to-day. See what he did with 'Macbeth,' for just one example. Nine murders, aren't there, in one show—and what a show!

"Can't you imagine him rehearsing it, taking the crude draft of the play first, speeding up the action with one murder, then thinking it sagged a bit and slipping in two more, then another and another, until the blood began to trickle all over the pit?

"And into this he put the weird witches and their incantations and the woods that moved—can't you see that forest on a film, sweeping across the plain with a watcher on the tower-top! What a play, what a picture for to-day! Action, action, action every minute; suspense, thrills, every emotion running riot! And the whole theme clothed in matchless poetry.

And in that perception I got a flash of Griffith's character more vivid and impressive than anything else that I had heard or seen about him. He possessed the power to rip like a circular saw through the wrappings of time, place and manner to uncover the fundamentals of life's romance.

And I would not in the least be amazed to see him put Shakespeare on the screen after "One Exciting Night" has passed into the previous

ST. LOUIS (MO.) POST-DISPATCH
NOVEMBER 14, 1922

NEW YORK MAIL
11-7-22

Exciting Night Is Right

By KATHARINE LANE

"AH'M goin' to meet Death runnin'," declares Romeo Washington. "Ah can't stand this waitin' for it." And as that is the light comedy speech of "One Exciting Night," at the Apollo, you get the drift of what happens when things are serious.

There is one particularly pleasant thing about seeing a thriller on the film. People have been trained not to whisper at the movies. You don't hear the worried, "Who do you think did the murder?" and "I bet it was the detective," and "No, it was probably the butler." This has always happened at every mystery play that I ever saw on the speaking stage.

They probably feel as the girl who sat next to me did. In the brief intermission she relaxed enough to murmur, "My! I have emoted so hard that I just can't talk." But she did get her breath in time to assure her escort indignantly, "Why, it couldn't be Henry Hull; they wouldn't let a leading man as good looking as that do a murder!"

AND you hardly suspect Carol Dempster, the nicest girl I have watched open enormous eyes in a close-up that makes one feel she is appealing to you personally. Of course, as soon as you see that picture of her in a basketball suit you realize that with all her slender, lissome grace she is going to prove strong and efficient.

Some willowy flappers who drift about in wide-sleeved gowns (Note: not for the even faintly [illegible] figures) look as if they could only be useful for waving a languid cigarette, or to permit some muscular collegian to do most of their dancing.

But Carol Dempster has the youngly purposeful air of a girl who could be depended upon in an emergency. So can her curly hair, for she comes in out of the storm with bewitching streaming ringlets. Carol wouldn't mind being surprised in the middle of a shampoo, and that is the supreme test of feminine vanity.

ONCE we saw "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," with the result that we had to keep the electric light burning o' nights for two weeks. When C. H. Crocker-King flashes his brilliant brown eyes through the shutters in "One Exciting Night" we began to think regretfully of our next electric light bill. There is a terrible delight in being frightened, of course, or the shuddering school of drama wouldn't be so alluring.

Luckily, Mr. Griffith does let Porter Strong shuffle into the kitchen to watch the talented ankles of Irma Harrison, just when you can't bear any more excitement for the moment. An infectious melody pursues this pair of dusky lovers. It has the same haunting rhythm that used to accompany the Village Gossip in "Way Down East." And Mr. Strong does the funniest series of falls and somersaults from the top of the mystery house to the foyer.

HOW do actors rehearse a fall like that, and then feel peppy enough to make it [illegible] the camera is busting? That tumble of a scared nigger boy, retreating from a ghost, is exactly right. You know how you say, watching broad comedy films, "Oh, but that sort of thing is too exaggerated; it's only acrobatic fooling!" But Romeo Washington (Mr. Strong) is real. He's afraid and you don't blame him.

"My mind wiggles. I'll take the job," Romeo says after he has realized the jassy charms of Miss Harrison. And the audience knows right away that Romeo is going to be let in for a night that should turn his skin white.

It wouldn't be so good for a weak heart to be taken to the storm scene in Part II. When a giant oak starts to fall upon Carol Dempster, who is already pinned to the ground by loose branches and beaten by a cloudburst, the anxiety is almost too much. You think the gallant, quick-moving Henry Hull will get there in time, but suppose he shouldn't!

Probably that is what makes Griffith's picture so plausible. He lets you remember that accidents do happen, that beautiful girls are not always saved and that even so dashing and likable a young man as Mr. Hull just might not be omnipotent.

But who did the murder and tried for the half million dollars in regular bills? Well, we thought it was Crocker King, and then we thought it was Frank Sheridan, the detective, and then we were sure it was the butler, and then we thought it might be Morgan Wallace, the rich and dignified suitor. But [illegible] Washington. And it [illegible]

(Copyright, 1922, by Fontaine Fox.)

TACOMA (WASH.) LEDGER

New Film of Griffith May Fill Coffers

Mystery Photoplay May Recoup Losses That Extravagant Productions Cost

By KARL K. KITCHEN

NEW YORK, Nov. 11.—D. W. Griffith's latest photoplay leaves one, as Joseph Conrad would say, with mixed feelings.

For "One Exciting Night," as he calls his new film, is so totally foreign to anything he has ever produced that it does not seem like a Griffith offering. In fact, it is more like a super-photoplay by Mack Sennett.

However, "One Exciting Night" does produce a number of thrills and an unusually large number of laughs, and if nothing else, it takes all the punch out of the forthcoming film version of "The Bat," Avery Hopwood's money-making mystery play. It is said that "The Bat" has made more than $8,000,000.

And that is probably why Mr. Griffith made this new movie mystery film. For there is obviously a large audience for mystery thrillers, and having lost several small-sized fortunes trying to be artistic, the producer of "The Birth of a Nation" and "Broken Blossoms" is justified in trying to pick up a little real money with a pot-boiler.

"Broken Blossoms," perhaps the most artistic film ever made, was a financial disaster. "Way Down East," Mr. Griffith's hokum film, made and is still making several hundred thousand dollars. "One Exciting Night" will probably make a lot of money, which may encourage him to give the public one more artistic production before he leaves America.

It is not generally known, but Mr. Griffith is abandoning his studio near New York and moving to England. He will make only one more picture in this country for several years.

But to return to "One Exciting Night." The owners of "The Bat" are said to have asked $100,000 for the film rights. Mr. Griffith has provided a film story, slightly different, to be sure, but equally as good. For "The Bat," it must be admitted, amounts to nothing as drama.

Briefly, "One Exciting Night" concerns a missing heiress from England who is being forced into an unwelcome marriage with a crook by her mother. Bootleggers hide $500,000 in bank notes in the home of her American sweetheart and during her visit there two mysterious murders are committed which baffle the detectives who are on the job. A mysterious figure, like the central figure in "The Bat," commits the murders and just before the end of the film his identity is disclosed.

It must be admitted that unless one is "in the know" the mystery is well sustained and there is plenty of action, and what is more surprising, plenty of fun. And there is a storm scene at the finish that makes the storm in "The Old Homestead" seem like an April shower. Great trees are uprooted in the Griffith picture and from a photographic standpoint nothing more admirable has ever been shown on the screen.

In spite of all this, however, "One Exciting Night" adds nothing to Griffith's reputation as a [illegible] And it must also be [illegible] that none of its [illegible] particularly distinguished. Henry Hull as the American hero acquits himself well and Miss Carol Dempster is attractive as heroine, but neither are in the star class. There is a negro actor in the cast and Mr. Griffith told the first night audience that he liked him best of all, but in the opinion of the writer there is nothing remarkable about his performance.

"One Exciting Night" was made for little money—there is only one expensive set and not more than a dozen players. And that is why many fans who liked "Intolerance" and "Orphans of the Storm" will be disappointed when they see it. It is not a $2 or even $1.50 film by any means, despite its length. When it is cut to the usual length and is shown in the smaller movie houses it will rank as a first class attraction.

However, this doesn't mean that Mr. Griffith has lost his skill as a film producer. He's after the money this time and has acted rather badly only in the sense that he has [illegible] the efforts of his predecessors. Birth of a Nation, for instance, was Thomas Dixon, who wrote the novel which it was based, more than a million dollars—much more than it could pay Griffith. Incidentally, it is interesting to know that all the early Griffith films which have made money, as well as all the other pictures that have been so successful, have been based on stories by other people.

Griffith seems just ashamed of "The Bat" and in the story he has written he has made the heroine a girl and the crooks [illegible] Griffith seems just ashamed of "The Bat" and in the story he has written he has made the heroine a girl and the crooks [illegible]

NEW YORK STAR
NOVEMBER 11, 1922

EVERYBODY SATISFIED WITH GRIFFITH PICTURES EXCEPT—GRIFFITH

D. W. Griffith is one of the most difficult men in the world to satisfy—with the work of D. W. Griffith. For the proof whereof one needs only to drop back of the scenes at the Apollo Theatre any evening between the close of the matinee performance of "One Exciting Night" and overture time for the evening showing, says Edwin J. Westrate in the New York "Mail."

"When 'One Exciting Night' had its premiere showing it was agreed practically unanimously by the audience that it was one of the most entertaining pictures Mr. Griffith had ever made. In fact, it is doubtful if any one in the house was dissatisfied except Mr. Griffith. He did not share in the general content.

So beginning the following morning he has spent his time dashing back and forth between his studios at Mamaroneck and backstage at the Lyric, making retakes of scenes, cutting the film, inserting new for old, in short ironing out the wrinkles that no one saw except himself.

It was backstage where he has the small projection screen on which he views new portions of film and reviews old sections every day that we found him yesterday watching, the film unroll with eager interest. Occasionally he would command "Stop!" and the screen would grow dark.

"Do you like this new substitute as well as the old?" he would query of one of his staff. "Don't you think this one is more direct?" or "I think we ought to shorten that scene." or "Don't cut off Hull's smile so abruptly there. Let's have about three feet more of it." or "It's better now with that other scene out, don't you think?" or "Put that new insert here. I think it would improve the whole passage."

When the reel was finished and Mr. Griffith apparently feeling somewhat more content now that he had made some more changes in his latest picture, he turned to us and said:

"Do you know, I've had this film run and rerun so often that I am becoming object when I even broach the subject of looking at it some more to the operator. But then there are so many things in a picture that seem perfectly all right to us in the projection room that are not so effective when they are presented to an audience. It means constantly trying new effects, catching some of the scenes, cutting here, adding a little there, until the picture is finally in the form that comes as near perfect from the standpoint of the spectator as we can make it."

As a side note, it might be mentioned here that Mr. Griffith made a glorious change in his last picture, "Orphans of the Storm," after the first [illegible] he had finally expressed himself as content with it. And no doubt [illegible] if he was [illegible] satisfied even then.

After the inevitable pictures you have made, what impelled you to turn to a mystery story?" we asked him.

"Well," he replied, "it is not exactly a new field to me. A number of years ago I made some mystery pictures, the last about seven years ago. Mystery is always an interesting subject and fear is one of the basic human emotions and when you produce a story in which fundamental feelings play a leading part you are touching certain chords which make for interest.

"My motive in making this 'One Exciting Night' was to make an entertaining story and to do it. The story was interesting.

"A mystery story is one of the hardest things in the world to construct. It is easy to write a story which sends people guessing, but more difficult to make them guess the right solution. Perhaps I think I had you fooled in this story. Perhaps you think I had you fooled. Well, you don't know how many people there are who will be guessing the right solution of the story. Perhaps I have underestimated the intelligence of the average audience. Perhaps I have underestimated the intelligence of certain people who read this story. Perhaps I have underestimated the intelligence of certain people who read this story. Perhaps I have underestimated the intelligence of certain people who read this story

NEW YORK WOMAN'S WEAR
OCTOBER 19, 1922

High Waistline in Frocks in New Film

Costumes in "One Exciting Night" Few, but Contain Interesting Ideas

Although the range of costumes in "One Exciting Night," the newest production of D. W. Griffith, which opened at the Apollo Theatre last night, is naturally somewhat limited, due to the fact that the main action of the picture, as the name implies, occurs during the course of one evening and night, and also to the fact that of the four feminine roles only two are of importance as regards appearance, nevertheless some interesting ideas in evening gowns were brought out, and the short preliminary action afforded some slight opportunity for the display of daytime frocks.

Evening gowns, of course, were of greatest importance during the main action, which takes place at an evening affair at the Kentucky estate of John Fairfax, played by Henry Hull. During this action, Carol Dempster, as Agnes Harrington, the young neighbor of Fairfax and the heroine of the picture, wears a frock of silver cloth and velvet, delightfully youthful and naive and suggestive of the full-skirted, tight-waisted frock of many years ago. The close fitting bodice was of velvet, with a square cut medium low decolletage in front, and a square U shaped lower decolletage in back. The skirt, of silver cloth, was very full and reached to slightly above the ankles, and had circular inserts over the hips, which were slightly distended. Bands of velvet decorated the skirts across front and back and circles of velvet were applied on the side insets. A black Chantilly lace fan completed the costume.

Velvet, Brocade and Lace.

Velvet brocade and lace combined to make a stunning gown for Mrs. Harrington, played by Margaret Dale. The velvet foundation fitted rather snugly and was entirely plain in the front, with square cut bodice, which resolved into a deep V in the back. Draped from the shoulders and following the V line of the back, the brocaded material formed the back of the gown and the short train, while from the low point of the V, lace was hung to form a second trailing train.

An interesting headdress was worn by one of the several guests at the Fairfax party. It consisted of a broad band of metal cloth swathed tightly over and covering the entire forehead. Narrowing as it approached the sides of the head, it ended in long dangling pendants, apparently beaded tassels.

Chiffon for Nightgown and Negligee.

Miss Dempster's negligee and nightgown worn during the bedroom scene following the second murder were novel and filmy. The negligee of printed chiffon seemed to be made of a huge square of material thrown over the shoulders in such fashion that the two points covered the arms and hung nearly to the floor. The chiffon was bordered in deep bands of a heavier material.

(Continued on Page Twenty-two)

The nightgown, also of chiffon, was followed by the empire style of gown with very high waistline. The skirt of the gown was finely pleated, and where it was joined to the high bodice it was banded in ribbon or velvet. This same ribbon outlined the V neck and the armholes.

An interesting point of all Miss Dempster's costumes was the divergence from the accepted style of low waistline. In all the gowns in "One Exciting Night" Miss Dempster affects a high waistline, in fact, one that to eyes accustomed to the low placed line of today seems almost abnormal. It takes, of course, an extremely youthful and supple figure to carry off such lines, but Miss Dempster's charm and grace are only accentuated by the adoption of this mode.

High Waisted Sports Suit.

A sports suit worn during the preliminary action, further carried out the idea. The coat of plain material is belted very high and broadly. An unusual collar of beaver or nutria fastened high up around Miss Dempster's face, and the big patch pockets and long cuffs are also among the features of this fur. The skirt worn with this coat is of a wide striped material.

Daily Call 10/27/22

D. W. Griffith's new film, "One Exciting Night," in 12 reels, will be given at the Apollo Theater tomorrow night. Mr. Griffith describes this picture as "made to entertain the public; to make the audience laugh and forget its troubles; a story told as the story tellers of old told them, for the entertainment of the hour and not to preach a moral or propound a thought."

Major C. Anderson Wright has engaged Mr. Leopold Wharton as general director for a new serial, to be produced in 15 episodes, dealing with the exposure of the Ku Klux Klan.

New York City
10-25-2

Newspaper Opinions

"One Exciting Night"—Griffith—Apollo

TIMES—Cloaked figures steal about, murders are committed, frightened women run and scream, white arms reach out from secret passages and two terrified negroes are always trying to escape from it all. And at the end there is a storm. This is the screaming, streaming climax of the film. And it is a magnificent piece of work. Griffith has even gone beyond his ice scene in "Way Down East," in itself it is a thrilling thing to watch. It would be if there were no story attached to it. It brings the picture to a whirling, whirring end.

WORLD—The part of the play that has a speaking acquaintance with "The Bat" possesses all the machinery and all the characteristics that go to make mystery thrillers, and despite this equipment the picture is tedious and involved and rambling. * * * If there is anything about this picture that is worth while it is the storm.

HERALD—Griffith has connected a slapstick farce which is well worthy of Mack Sennett at his best. "One Exciting Night" is very much on the order of "Bulldog Drummond." It is a mystery melodrama, so liberally leavened with broad burlesque that the casual spectator never quite knows whether he is laughing at or with Mr. Griffith. Just when the action becomes so terrific that the audience is constrained to smile patronizingly in self defense, Mr. Griffith steps in and pushes his characters over the line which separates ham melodrama from utter nonsense; and the audience suddenly realizes that it is being effectively kidded. * * * "One Exciting Night" is in reality a pot boiler—and a highly successful one at that. It will do well in the box office wherever it goes.

AMERICAN—There is a storm, or rather a tornado, in this new screen production which is indescribably dramatic. * * * He (Griffith) has shown that he is able to construct a thrilling and harrowing detective drama as skillfully as he can build an epic of history.

MORNING TELEGRAPH—For sheer blood-curdling inventiveness, it is going to snatch a lot of royalties away from Avery Hopwood and Mary Roberts Rinehart and put them back into the film industry. If there is one single spine-tingler or gooseflesh inducer that Pinkerton, Doyle, Poe, Jack Boyle and the other mystery spinners have overlooked here you have it. * * * "One Exciting Night" will probably be as great a money maker as Griffith ever released.

GLOBE—D. W. Griffith, all things being carefully considered, is the world's greatest producer of motion pictures; there is no doubt about that. This contention could, however, hardly be proven by "One Exciting Night" alone. * * * At no time during the action does the thing impress one as real. It just has everybody figuring how it is all going to come out, and judging by last night's audience this sort of thing is really better entertainment than absorbing a lot of alleged realism. In action, Griffith has injected a great many enormously funny bits, which were uproariously received by the first-nighters. The storm scene which comes as the climax of the second act, is the directorial genius at his best.

SUN—This new product of the man who has been called the master of the screen is a mystery play in the manner of Avery Hopwood and Mary Roberts Rinehart. It is just as exciting as "The Bat," "The Cat and the Canary" and other prize nerve wreckers which have held the American stage in recent years. The piece is listed as a comedy drama—if we recall the label correctly—but Griffith evidently worked on the principle that farce is the only comedy, because the continuity is full of exaggerated humor. In fact, this is its chief charm. * * * We have seen numerous mystery films, but Griffith's offering is eminently superior to anything of the sort that the American screen has known. Throughout every inch of the celluloid the director's art is evident, most telling evident. There are tense moments when one thinks one's heart just cannot last another yard. Then comes an outburst of comedy that congests the theater. If you don't die of fright you will laugh yourself to death.

EVE. JOURNAL — Even remembering what the master film producer has done in prior pictures, each of the spectators who saw his "Way Down East" is safe in saying that his present storm surpasses all. It is a shriller.

MAIL—Mr. Griffith has caught the imagination of the prevailing craze for mystery stories and has produced a picture in which he has shown his ability to keep a story moving at a rapid clip and at the same time make it mysterious and full of thrills. And so he has done in "One Exciting Night."

"One Exciting Night" at the Apollo Theatre

D. W. Griffith has added the Apollo Theatre with his picture "One Exciting Night," which opened the initial week of its occupancy on the Apollo Theatre.

One Exciting Night, Griffith Picture, Shown at the Apollo

By ALAN DALE

WHO-DID-IT-ISM crept into the pictures, or was rushed into the pictures, in the film entitled "One Exciting Night," at the Apollo Theatre. It was rushed in with plenty of comedy, a dash or three of spookery, and a rather remarkably suspenseful story.

You and I—callous ones!—may scoff at the utter "mystery" of "One Exciting Night," but those who revel in riddles and were "top of the class" in mathematics will enjoy this picture. Then, the screen does all this sort of thing much better than the stage.

Frinstance, there is a situation. There is some malefactor. There are various figures arrayed upon the stage. Then comes the close-up. You see a set of features that seem to give the show away. You watch a pair of magnified eyes that creep into your marrow. Every wrinkle in the enlarged countenance means something. These close-ups that the stage ignores mean infinitely more than anything the stage has to offer. To my mind they can hardly be abused. They are the wonderful assets of the films.

Carol Dempster.

"Please do not reveal the plot to those who have not seen it," says the programme at its very top. And the instructions, as far as I am concerned, are unnecessary. I couldn't reveal the plot. I'm too dense to reveal the plot. I was always bad at guessing contests. I want diagrams of all plots. Oh, I have imagination, but the who-did-it-drama surely does not call for imagination. It calls for perspicacity, and concentration, neither of which I possess. No; I shan't reveal your plot. I wouldn't if I could, and I couldn't if I would.

But "One Exciting Night" has plenty of comedy. You may experience a shiver or two, but immediately there is comedy, and you are relieved of your tension.

The darky roles in this picture are extremely well done. They are artistically done, and they add a great deal to the commercial possibility of "One Exciting Night." They vie with the who-did-it-ism.

Margaret Dale must be congratulated for her work, and Carol Dempster absolutely defied the close-up to do its worst. Poor Miss Dempster was the target of the close-ups, and she emerged intact. More could not have been expected. For those who like an agreeably young "hero" there is Henry Hull, and Morgan Wallace gave a satisfactory performance.

I simply WOULDN'T give away the plot. As soon as I read the programme and noted the request my spirits went up. I should have been lost—lost as plaintiff!

APOLLO THEATRE—"One Exciting Night," by Irene Sinclair, directed by D. W. Griffith.

THE CAST.

Agnes Harrington	Carol Dempster
John Fairfax	Henry Hull
Sandy Washington	Porter Strong
Romeo Washington	Morgan Wallace
Chauncey Drew	C. H. Crocker-King
Mrs. Harrington	Margaret Dale
Mr. Harrington	Frank Sheridan
Samuel Crane	Frank Wunderlich
Apollo Fairfax	Irene Harrison
Ann Mayfair	Irma Harrison
Leon Johnson	Herbert
Jim Butler	[illegible]
A Guest	[illegible]

My Telegram NOV 5 1922

On the Screen

"One Exciting Night" at Apollo Shows That Mr. Griffith Has His Lighter Moods

By Harriette Underhill

"One Exciting Night" is exciting, but just what else it is is difficult to say. You may safely apply this one adjective to it, however, for so far we have not found a single person who disagreed with that, and probably it would not be possible to find one. So everybody agrees that it is exciting, and in calling it what he has D. W. Griffith has forestalled all criticisms.

Many people have referred to Mr. Griffith as high-brow. They expect his pictures to delve into history, to deal with big subjects, to hold a sermon; and they go to his plays prepared not to tolerate any weaknesses or anachronisms which might be overlooked in just an ordinary man. The name "Griffith" has been breathed reverently. He has made fashions in movies, he has made fashions in stars and he has made stars. He is a great and an exceptional man, yet he has taken a holiday and made the picture which opened at the Apollo Theater Monday night. Therefore any one may take a holiday and enjoy it. It isn't necessary to go in the spirit which people used to have when they would explain their presence at a Charlie Chaplin picture by saying: "You know, I like Charlie Chaplin. I really think he is an artist." Go ahead and enjoy "One Exciting Night" and don't stop to apologize.

Mr. Griffith certainly decided before the picture was finished that it was just a lark, but we are not sure that he had so decided when he began it. Otherwise why are there all those titles about "mother love" and the "latent instinct" which makes a young woman who is old enough to be married carry a china doll around in her pocket and caress it surreptitiously? This heroine never looked to us as though she was more than half witted and she did not do anything to make us change our opinion until she began to hunt the murderer. In attempting to prove that his heroine knew no evil Mr. Griffith seemed to prove she knew nothing at all. When people talked to her she gazed dreamily into space, fluttered her eyelids and let her upper lip twitch. But then, perhaps, Mr. Griffith was burlesquing his own and other people's ingenues just as he was burlesquing other people's melodramas. As you never can be quite sure which you are to take seriously, it is better not to take any of it seriously, not even the love interest.

In the foreword it is written, "You will enjoy the picture more if you watch carefully through the leisurely beginning some of the seemingly unimportant scenes, as we believe you will find they have significance when the one exciting night comes." This is good advice, although the layman will find it difficult, for there are flashes of this and of that, with long explanatory titles. At the end we heard people all around exclaiming, "But I don't understand it at all. Why did the man murder him, and who was the bootlegger's partner, and why did he disguise himself?" And it is quite simple if you just watch the beginning and remember what you see.

"One Exciting Night" isn't in the least like any other picture you ever saw, so don't try to catalogue it. Just enjoy it! There is a great deal of slapstick comedy in it and a great deal of mystery, and bookcases open of their own accord and white hands reach out and clutch people about the throat and drag them behind the wainscoting, and people are murdered by other people whose faces are in shadow, and a number of different persons are working on a number of different clews which you, out in front, do not know exist. So it is not difficult to enjoy yourself if you care for any of these ways. The bootlegger meets his death because he is not content to steal only the cash, but he must also steal the receipts as his partner will have nothing on him. The man behind us exclaimed: "Wish I could get hold of those receipts! I'd tell my own! And we wanted to turn around and say, "Mr. Griffith does not say 'receipt' when he means 'recipe.'"

No Griffith picture, even a comedy melodrama, is complete unless the spectators see the heroine held in a horrifying position depicting instantaneous death, but saved by the hero. In this picture it is a storm which makes the night more exciting than it could possibly have been otherwise.

Henry Hull gives an excellent performance as the ardent young hero. Carol Dempster is the heroine, and her hard-hearted mamma is well played by Margaret Dale. Porter Strong gets most of the laughs as Romeo Washington, though he shares them with Irma Harrison as his sister, resourceful Aunt Sally. Frank Sheridan is another, and Herbert Rawlinson and Charles Hall are still others. Frank Wunderlich wears the mask.

CLIPPING FROM
Leeland Reviews N.Y.C.
11-6-22

Spooky, thrilling, mysterious hokum, told in Griffith's inimitable style

D. W. Griffith's "ONE EXCITING NIGHT"

UNITED ARTISTS

ENTERTAINMENT ..... It is that
PRODUCTION ..... Satisfactory for every necessity of plot; storm wonderful.
EXPLOITATION ..... Lots of opportunities
DIRECTION ..... Individual scenes show master hand; as a whole cannot compare with his work in the past STORY ..... Really two mysteries; neither startlingly unusual; mixture causes mystification.
CAST ..... Griffith knows how to make them all act
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Splendid
TIME ..... About two hours

When D. W. Griffith permits an audience, as he does in "One Exciting Night," to laugh at his characters and not always with them, you know immediately that he is not at all serious about his story. Despite that fact, and the fact that it hardly calls forth the directorial genius responsible for the big things that have been done in the past by Mr. Griffith, when considered from a purely entertainment standpoint, this latest mystery hokum of his will compare pretty favorably with the majority of those which have gone before.

When discussing a mystery play or film it is unfair not only to the maker, but also to the reader, to tell anything about the story. Be it said that very few opportunities for spine-chilling, blood-curdling thrills have been overlooked. Hands, uncanny, tapered fingers, come from behind moving panels in the wall, cloaked, masked figures dart in and out of scenes, two murders are perpetrated right before your eyes without you knowing who commits them; at one time or other every member of the cast seems bent on some stealthy, sneaking search. Things happen so fast one cannot keep track of them. Just about the time the audience is ready to shriek from excitement along comes a good-sized, hearty laugh to relieve the situation. There are altogether enough laughs to satisfy almost any comedy director. Romeo Washington, the negro servant, is alone responsible for a barrel full of them.

And then, toward the end, comes the most realistic storm the screen has yet seen. It is truly cyclonic. Trees are bent over like wheat stalks by the terrific wind, great forest giants are uprooted, houses are blown away, the characters are tossed about like bits of paper—it is thrilling, to say the least.

For the average audience it will prove sure-fire entertainment. Better class patrons may be somewhat disappointed with the solution of the mystery. It proves to be simple and decidedly obvious and but for the counter mystery which comes out at the end, explaining many of the hokum acts of the characters which mislead the audiences whose mind is centered on what appears to be the main mystery, it would scarcely prove unusual enough to make a compelling story. Two out of three of our party guessed the criminal long before the end; your reviewer would not agree with them because he was looking for something more difficult—so he muffed. But there you are—you will have all your patrons on the edge of their seats trying to outguess the story. When you do that you are entertaining them. That is what this picture was built for—and it fills the bill.

The cast is excellent. Carol Dempster as the girl holds you in every scene; Henry Hull is the boy, and he is great; Porter Strong, as Romeo Washington, the negro, is the scream of the picture; C. H. Crocker-King, Morgan Wallace, Margaret Dale, Frank Sheridan, Irma Harrison and Percy Carr add lots to the interest of the film.

* * * * * * * * *

Griffith tries his hand at mystery and the result is a piece of thrilling entertainment that cannot help being good for your box office. If you do not pay more than your seats can return to you you'll be able to enjoy it yourself.

Story by Irene Sinclair.
Personally directed by D. W. Griffith.
Photographed by Hendrik Sartov.

CINCINNATI (O.) BILLBOARD
NOVEMBER 11, 1922

BRILLIANT OPENING AT APOLLO

"One Exciting Night" Attracts Society

Society and motion picture celebrities were present Monday, October 23, at the opening of D. W. Griffith's newest picture, "One Exciting Night", at the Apollo Theater, New York.

Reservations have been made for Douglas Fairbanks, Mary Pickford, Lillian Gish, Rudolph Valentino, Richard Barthelmess, Mary Hay, Dorothy Gish, Carol Dempster, John Barrymore, David Belasco, Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, Bernard Baruch, Arthur Brisbane, Mr. and Mrs. August Belmont, Howard Chandler Christy, Mr. and Mrs. George Gordon Battle, [illegible] and Mrs. Don Parker, Dr. Frank Crane, Paul D. Cravath, Judge Joseph E. Corrigan, Colonel Coleman Du Pont, Chauncey M. Depew, Thomas Dixon, Commissioner Richard Enright, Charles Dana Gibson, Mr. and Mrs. Glen Tyler Dill, Miss Janet W. Guard, Rev. Dr. Percy Grant, Mr. and Mrs. Albert L. Guy, Wm. Randolph Hearst, Mayor John F. Hylan, Mrs. J. H. Hammond, Henry Holt, Rear Adm. Sigsbee, John H. Hahn, Martin W. Littleton, Sidney Mastbaum, Mr. and Mrs. Goodhue Livingston, Frank Munsey, Miss Anne Morgan, Hayes McHatt, Charles Nast, George Jean Nathan, Mr. and Mrs. W. L. Ostrander, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Phipps, Former Governor Al Smith, Elliot Sanger, Francis L. Stetson, Mr. and Mrs. Herbert L. Satterlee, Mr. and Mrs. Nathan Straus, Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Sharp, Henry W. Taft, Frank A. Vanderlip, Hon. Charles E. [illegible], Mr. and Mrs. H. P. Wilson.

Chattanooga Times 11/12/22

GRIFFITH TALKS ABOUT THE MOVIES

David Wark Griffith stopped shaking hands with friends in front of the Apollo theater long enough the other night to talk about making motion pictures, says the New York World. He says he thinks this latest film of his, "One Exciting Night," is probably the most difficult one he ever made.

"Mystery and suspense are the two most difficult elements of a story to transfer to the screen," he says.

"The reason is that the audience varies as much in the quickness with which it reacts to a situation.

"Much has been said about the age of the average mind, several authorities declaring it is about that of a 12-year-old child. No one can doubt this in general, but the fact that a mind is only 12 years old in its response to a general test, doesn't prove that it is not exceedingly penetrating in certain things.

"It is very confusing. Oftentimes the reaction will be astoundingly quick, particularly if the person is familiar with the setting and the type of characters which the scene presents. For instance, well-to-do people "get" any society scenes almost instantly, and yet in scenes involving a life with which they are not familiar they will be very laggard.

"The effort is to get a scene so timed both in speed of action and length that the quick minds are not bored by over-emphasis and the slow minds are not hurried or lose the scene entirely.

"Where there is suspense and mystery the audience must absorb every scene, or much of the effect is lost.

"For that reason 'One Exciting Night' is perhaps as trying a picture as I have ever made. It is difficult to realize how much effort it takes to keep each player in his or her character and also time the action so the scene will best serve the whole story.

"Comedy is a great stimulant to the minds of the audience. So, when comedy is introduced, as we do with Romeo, the negro in this picture, it is not only done to give a relief from the tensity of the action but also to keep constantly spurring the minds of the spectators."

Chicago, Ill. Journal
11-11-22

Again the Griffith!

D. W. Griffith steps forth again with something special, this time christened "One Exciting Night," and augmenting attendance at the Illinois, beginning Monday.

Other directors, from time to time and not too frequently at that, reach high and seem about to take from D. W. his laurels. But however kindly their intent and sure their reach, they remain a finger's length away. Griffith is the only one whose strokes remain infallible, whose perception is so keen it hits the city of the heavens, and who sends the imagination reeling to suggestion and conversation.

From the unforgettable time of "The birth of a Nation" through the so-called age of the sinners down the road of killing joy, through the immortal "Broken Blossoms" to the present "One Exciting Night" and every period between, he has never failed to produce beauty and art. He is the only director who knows what he knows and who knows how to do it. He knows how to make the people laugh and cry at will. There is most definitely a Griffith touch. There is a Griffith way of doing things. There is a Griffith way of making people see what he wants them to see. There is a Griffith way of telling a story. There is a Griffith way of making people think what he wants them to think. There is a Griffith way of making people feel what he wants them to feel. There is a Griffith way of making people do what he wants them to do. There is a Griffith way of making people be what he wants them to be. There is a Griffith way of making people love what he wants them to love. There is a Griffith way of making people hate what he wants them to hate. There is a Griffith way of making people fear what he wants them to fear. There is a Griffith way of making people hope what he wants them to hope. There is a Griffith way of making people believe what he wants them to believe. There is a Griffith way of making people love what he wants them to love. There is a Griffith way of making people hate what he wants them to hate. There is a Griffith way of making people fear what he wants them to fear. There is a Griffith way of making people hope what he wants them to hope. There is a Griffith way of making people believe what he wants them to believe.

NOV 1922

Tremont Temple—D. W. Griffith's mystery play "One Exciting Night," still holds the screen at Tremont Temple. Deserting the spectacular, the exotic, or the fantastical, the director has here devoted himself to entertainment for and of the present day, to lively humour and rapid-fire, modern-order thrills, centering about adventures in a haunted grotesque furnished less amusing, enhancing mysterious, and exclusive atmosphere, rich in [illegible] and [illegible] which surpass anything in their kind previously shown on the screen here or in Griffith pictures. Some remarkable [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

INDIANAPOLIS (IND.) STAR NOV 5 1922

The Third Dimension

In Which Inventors Turn Their Attention to Stereoscopic Motion Pictures—David Wark Griffith Does a "Bat."

JUST when the motion picture producers are getting ready to drop their old plea for "depth," along come two ambitious Cornell graduates, Lawrence Hammond and William F. Cassidy, with a plan for using the stereoscope to lend the motion pictures the illusion of a third dimension.

The inventors of this new stereoscopic arrangement for films explain that their plan calls for two negatives made by lenses 2½ inches apart. These two negatives are made into one strip of film, a print from one alternating with a print from the other.

To get the stereoscopic effect of the picture the spectator must hitch himself up with a "teleview," not unlike the old time stereoscope that used to lie on the table in every doctor's office. Otherwise the film will appear to be merely an ordinary picture badly blurred and out of focus.

What happens then is this: A shutter on the "teleview" opens and shuts with the shutter on the projection machine, giving the spectator a view first of the left hand camera's film and then of the right hand, at the same time shutting off the vision of one eye or the other. The composite effect of this complicated device is a single impression of a scene in three dimensions.

What the Invention Means.

Those who keep a fondly intent eye on the cinema need pay little attention to this new contraption; its immediate consequence is virtually nil. Complicated as the system is, it will be a long time before it reaches any appreciable stage of practicability, involving as it does the questions of expense and durability.

As to its desirability, there is no reason for believing that the three-dimensional film is particularly desirable save as a novelty.

When "depth" really comes to the screen the cinema will become a mere reflection of the stage. The motion picture as an independent medium of expression will be lost. The best screen artists have obtained their effects with shadows, masses, lines and motions. They have not always sought after "depth." When they have, it has been to obtain the effect of distance rather than of thickness.

At the same time it is not to be overlooked that in the realm of news and travel pictures the stereoscope would not be amiss. And as for artistic productions there is no real reason for believing that in relief they can not be as rich and beautiful as films made in two planes.

But for the present the upheaval over the threat or promise (as you will) of the "teleview" suggests that much is also about nothing. Stereoscopic motion pictures still belong to the dim and distant future.

"One Exciting Night" That.

"Is it so bad?" asked D. W. Griffith on the opening night of his new picture.

"Bad?" came back the reply. "It's a [illegible]. It has 'The Bat' and 'Bulldog Drummond' and 'The Cat and the Canary' so far outdistanced they shouldn't be mentioned in the same breath with it."

And Mr. Griffith probably proceeded to topple over in amazement.

He made "One Exciting Night" as a sort of mental relaxation after years of superspectacular productions. He felt that he had a rest coming; he would make "One Exciting Night" just as a "filler." So he chose for his recreation a fantastic melodrama with a lot of weird moments and unsolved mysteries, and shut himself up in his Mamaroneck studios for four months.

Now he has come forth into the world again and has brought with him what the New York critic says is a picture unlike anything he has ever done.

"Without being conscious of having done so," Miss Louella Parsons writes, "David Wark Griffith has given the screen something entirely new. He has made it possible for a mystery play to be presented in motion picture form and still retain its surprises and its unexpected denouement at the end.

"There have been melodramas in the past of girls betrayed and men led to the brink of ruin by unscrupulous friends, but never in the history of the motion pictures has there been a melodrama so full of thrills, suspense and everything that makes for 100 per cent interest.

Makes the Blood Curdle.

"'One Exciting Night' has all the satire of 'Bulldog Drummond' with the situations of 'The Bat' intensified. Comedy—bushels of it. Romeo Wallington is as amusing a character as I have ever seen on the screen. The shivers that traveled up and down the backbone of the audience at the blood-curdling murders were so real that most of the women went home and looked under the bed and in the closet, to be perfectly sure that no prowler with a slouch hat and cape was hidden, ready to trail his long fingers across their throats in the dead of the night."

It appears that one must get into the picture before the thrills come. "The early stages of the picture are not particularly promising. For a reel or so 'One Exciting Night' shaped up like another 'Dream Street' and the prospect is none too alluring," recounts Robert E. Sherwood. "But then the sinisters start and all is well. Hands appear through bay doorways and clutch at empty air. Ominous eyes gleam like automobile headlights from the depths of the night. Doors knobs turn myst[illegible]. And the audience, as one man, shiver[illegible]

Of course, there is the burnt cork [illegible] who indicates extreme fright by [illegible] his eyes rapidly and knocking his knees together. There is also the [illegible] which contains [illegible] and a [illegible] detective who never takes his hat off. What is more, there is a forewarn[illegible] from Mr. Griffith, which [illegible] "We welcome you to our new offering, a little romance, just a little mystery, but hope that a few thrills will go forth. What would a Griffith [illegible] be without a forewarn[illegible]

Guessing Who's the Villain.

The mystery of the play is more [illegible] than the melodramatic. [illegible] [illegible] from D. W. Griffith's [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

NEW YORK POST
NOV 14 1922

The Mirror
By Charles Pike Sawyer

David Wark Griffith, who has given an entirely "different" production from his world in his newest film "One Exciting Night," has been through the mill if ever a producer has. Perhaps that is one of the reasons why a well-known motion picture actor remarked to the Mirror a short time ago that he thought he knew something about pictures until he worked under Griffith and then found out that he was the merest tyro in the art.

Born forty-two years ago in La Grange, Ky., the son of Brig. Gen. Jacob Wark Griffith—known as "Roaring Jake"—who led a charge of the Second Kentucky Cavalry riding in a buggy, as his horse was shot and his right leg and left arm were broken. He was also one of Jefferson Davis's body guard. He returned from the war to bad health and in poverty. There was no schooling for David. His sister Mattie taught him, and she and his mother directed his reading and study along lines that would make him a Baptist minister.

But David didn't take to that kind of reading much. He picked his books and he listened to his father's stories of the war, cultivating his imagination—he didn't know then that he was going to need a lot of it in his after life in the movies. After that he helped on his brother's newspaper, and at sixteen started on his own, going to Louisville and getting a job on the Courier-Journal, his father being a friend of Marse Henry Watterson. Writing "obituaries," etc., didn't appeal to him long, so he got a job in a theatre.

That was the beginning and he never got the scene paint off. He first joined small traveling stock companies at $5 a week, and kept at this for some time, besides writing plays—twenty of them. Only one was produced, "The Fool and the Girl," by James K. Hackett. It failed. Receipts in a single dollar, he went to work in a coal mine, then was puddler in a steel mill, then came to New York and worked on the subway. Back to the stage ago, he played in companies of Mansfield, Grace O'Neil, and others, with no particular success.

Max Griffith got the notion that he could make a good operatic singer and spent thirty weeks on $100 while he studied. During that time he turned his attention to pictures and one day went to the Biograph company to sell a scenario. Became a film actor then and got into trouble for insisting upon another kind of acting for the screen, but wound up by finishing the picture as director. He had found himself at last. He was where he belongs with his enormous physical vitality and energy, imagination, stage experience and eyes for beauty.

He broke all rules for production by going into the country and staying two days to make a two-reel picture. He made the first slap-stick comedy. The star of the company was sick and they had to replace her. Mrs. Billy Bitzer, the camera man, wrote a scenario around a man going to buy a certain pair for a wedding, taking it home and on his way there in a cab knocking down people with the pair. He created the closeups and brought romance into the picture by switching from one location to another and having action proceeding at the same time.

Next Griffith made three-reelers, four-reelers, etc., and all this time neither he nor any of the director nine theme of the screen was made public. He first came into prominence with the four-reeler "Birth of a Nation," and he had to give away tickets to folks to get them to come in to see it. Mothers and sisters wouldn't go through a tempest for "Intolerance," "Hearts of the World," "Way Down East," and "Orphans of the Storm" some nerve, they knew, would expected a big picture "One Exciting Night," a comedy melodrama and, and that there isn't a dull moment in it

Boston Mass Herald Nov. 19, 1922

CAUSES CELEBRE IN COURTS HELP MAKE MYSTERY PLAYS POPULAR

Griffith's Plot in "One Exciting Night" Gives Audiences Puzzles and Thrills of Real Reporters and Detectives

A POWERFUL SCENE IN GRIFFITH'S "ONE EXCITING NIGHT," WHERE A SERIES OF "HAUNTED HOUSE" CRIMES NECESSITATES THE CALLING IN OF A CENTRAL OFFICE MAN. IN THIS EPISODE OF THE MOVIE PLAY, THE DETECTIVE (FRANK SHERIDAN) ACCUSES HENRY HULL OF DOUBLE MURDER AND ROBBERY. FROM LEFT TO RIGHT THE PLAYERS IN THE PICTURE ARE: SHERIDAN, MORGAN WALLACE, C. H. CROKER-KING, HULL, CAROL DEMPSTER AND MARGARET DALE. THE MURDERED MAN ON THE FLOOR IS DEPICTED BY CHARLES MACK

By HENRY MacMAHON

The fallibility of human justice was illustrated by The Sunday Herald recently with a long list of unsolved murders, and undoubtedly impels playwrights to construct ideal cases and solutions. Front page news is daily paralleled by the announcements of the theatres. Audiences take part as detectives and reporters in the exciting events effectively shown. The ingenuity of these stage murder mysteries wins admiration and suggests that the creators might have been kings of parsimony or experts in the higher mathematics if they had chosen to turn their talents in that direction. Recently three such exciting mystery plays were running simultaneously on the local boards, and now two of them, "One Exciting Night" and "The Bat," divide popular favor.

Until D. W. Griffith first showed "One Exciting Night" at Tremont Temple beginning Oct. 9, it was thought mystification was the peculiar province of the stage play. The movie lacks the human voice and the stage "tricks" — the traditional methods of thrilling by play of lights and scenic equipment. Moreover, intimacy of plot is a source of confusion in Movieland. Most of the directors are diligent perforce to use the simplest kind of stories.

But David Wark Griffith tackled the problem in such a way that he created competition with the stage instead of giving a cast full of real flesh and blood people who would have sure had to compete with the stage for gate in addition to the stage in Boston. Griffith's "One Exciting Night" is a photoplay in which the human actors are dwarfed by the human interest of the story. Nobody cares a rap for the actors, who would have sure had to compete for gate in Boston, but everybody cares for the story

Boston Morning Globe 11/29/22

Omaha (Neb) Bee 12/3/22

MOVIE FACTS AND FANCIES

David Wark Griffith is the latest celebrity to answer the query "What is wrong with the movies?"

"How long could David Belasco hold his supremacy as the stage's most artistic producer," asked Mr Griffith, "if his audiences straggled into his theatres all during the performance, some of them seeing the big dramatic climax before they had seen the events leading up to it? Brilliant as he is, he would be a lamentable failure if the public were permitted to see the surprises in his plays before the first act was seen, he could not possibly survive.

"It's just ridiculous what is the matter with motion pictures. Why do some of our intellectuals stands ridicule the motion pictures as cheap and ridiculous? Simply because many producers purposely make their pictures with an obvious theme. They figure if they try any subtlety it will be submerged when the films are run off with the last scenes first and the first scenes last.

"There must be some way to overcome this evil that is holding the motion picture down to a lower level and preventing it from attaining the place it was destined to reach. Even the stumbling over pairs of feet in the dark is a evil coupled with the inadequate idea going that our film productions in the main are relating to the theatres where the show and the act of an activity as the operator can operate the machine in order to seat as many people as possible.

Some one suggested to Mr Griffith that a system might be evolved whereby the exhibitor would send out to his patrons postcards with the hour the feature could be shown, asking that the patrons try and get to the theatre at the time mentioned on the cards.

"Naturally the theatre owner wants to make as much money as he can," said Mr Griffith. "No one blames him for that. The postcard might keep people away. He would not want to do anything that would work a hardship against his business. But I feel there is some brave soul somewhere who for the sake of what it means to motion pictures will try the experiment of not permitting his patrons to take their seats after the feature has been on for half an hour. He would be doing a great good and every producer would rise up and call him blessed."

Gertrude Quinlan, graduate of Boston's old Castle Square Company, and well-known musical comedy actress, is making her debut in pictures in "Back Home and Broke," George Ade's new photoplay written for his friend, Tommy Meighan. Miss Quinlan played in two stage successes by Mr Ade—"The College Widow" and "The Sultan of Sulu."

Inf. Jan 1 Injure rescue

My Life 11/30/22

"One Exciting Night"

EVERY so often, David Wark Griffith is compelled to take a vacation from his pet historical spectacles, and devote himself to the production of a picture which will make money.

"One Exciting Night" is the latest result of this enforced policy, and it turns out to be all that it was intended to be: a sure-fire box office success.

It is a mystery melodrama, with a liberal leaven of slap-stick burlesque, of the type that has flourished on the speaking stage of late years. It relies for its thrills upon such tricks as door-knobs that turn mysteriously, hands that appear from nowhere and cloaked figures that dart from shadow to shadow; it relies for its comic relief upon a burnt-cork comedian who assuages his intense fright with copious draughts of straight gin.

The start of the picture is weak. Mr. Griffith informs his audience in sub-title after sub-title that he is about to scare the life out of them. But nothing happens (at first) and the spectator begins to believe that Mr. Griffith will cry, "Wolf! Wolf!" once too often.

However, he atones for this later. He allows two of his characters to be murdered, and another one to be spirited out of sight through a trap door. At the finish he produces a trick wind storm which almost blows the spectators loose from their spinal columns.

I believe that Mr. Griffith went out of his way to be labeled in "One Exciting Night." Whenever it seems that the audience's credulity is about to be strained to the breaking point, he introduces a note of broad burlesque and convinces his patrons that they must not take the thing too literally.

In spite of its patent artificiality, "One Exciting Night" is thrilling and amusing. It pretends to be nothing else.

the e... aisle standing out in silhouette. New York

A GRIFFITH STORM. One of the worst that ever hit the "movies." It is in "One Exciting Night," which is thrilling New York. Frank Sheridan has hardly a dry thread on him.

NEW YORK TELEGRAM DEC 10 1922

FROM THE ONLOOKERS

Harry Crandall, head of a chain of theatres in Washington, D. C., which bear his name, has sent the following letter in answer to Mr. Griffith's statement on "What's Wrong With the Movies" in The Morning Telegraph of November 26:

"Mr. D. W. Griffith's statement in your department of The Morning Telegraph of November 26 has been read with great interest. Since, as I understand it, comment is welcome, I am taking the liberty of replying to Mr. Griffith from the standpoint of an exhibitor.

"Mr. Griffith went to quite some length to explain that he thought that one of the prime troubles with the motion picture industry to-day is that a patron can come in in the middle or at the end of a feature, viewing the surprises of the climax and denouement without having seen the development of events leading up to them, thus vitiating the effect of the picture as a whole. Obviously, when Mr. Griffith expressed that view he had in mind his own newest production, 'One Exciting Night.' In the case of this particular subject, relying on the elements of suspense and surprise for its greatest climacteric effect, Mr. Griffith is largely right. But he should bear in mind that pictures of this nature are produced in the ratio of about one in a hundred. And I hope I may be permitted to observe here that, to my mind, Mr. Griffith dulled the effect of 'One Exciting Night' by appealing for secrecy as to plot about half way through the feature, thus forewarning the spectator that he was to be surprised a little later.

Griffith Plan Impractical.

"In the large view, there may be more virtue than at first appears in the Griffith plan to exclude patrons from the theatre after a film has run half an hour, compelling them to wait for the next run of the feature, but it is not now practicable either from the viewpoint of theatre construction or reason exhibitors are forced to pay for film.

"In the first place, a theatre to have a lounge or rest room sufficiently large to accommodate a waiting audience would of necessity have to occupy twice the normal floor area, for a waiting crowd cannot be held in such compact form as one being entertained. This is assuming that the picture was of such merit as to attract capacity patronage.

"Frankly, as an exhibitor, we have not been confronted with any complaint as to the present method of presenting our photo-play bills. It is not the picture that discloses its pith to the spectator who comes in in the midst of its unreeling that public resents. It is the picture that the audience views from the beginning and in reel one is able to foresee what will transpire in reel eight of what should be only a five-reel feature. I think you will find that 90 per cent. of the exhibitors of the country will concur in this view.

"It is unfortunate that every time the desirability of change in the industry suggests itself, someone always attempts to point out where the exhibitor is at fault. After all, we are sincere and conscientious in our efforts along the line of progress and are working for the best interest of the picture industry as a whole.

"Granting that Mr. Griffith's suggestion is a good one, I next ask how far the producers will go toward accomplishing this kind of reform. I mean by that, will the producer be willing to accept say, one-fourth of his present film rental, under which the exhibitor is already staggering, in order to permit him to run three shows a day in place of the present continuous performances. That is precisely what the application of Mr. Griffith's idea would mean.

Exhibitors' Responsibility.

"If Mr. Griffith had in mind the $2 picture, he will find practically all exhibitors opposed to this. It has never been possible to assess the $2 scale as a good house policy. It should be borne in mind that the picture industry owes its tremendous and almost unbelievably rapid success to excellence of entertainment and cheapness of admission more than to any other factor.

"Now to get down to the plot of the thing. Let us see if it does make a difference when a patron happens to come during the middle of a show.

"At this particular time every producer spend months to secure, about everything else, material for pictures from well known and successful plays or widely read books, and it has been my observation that this class of production to my most every has been most successful. In Mr. Griffith's theatre, regarding plot [illegible] I cannot have a few rather [illegible] stories, or very, very, [illegible] of the monthly. The plot would be known [illegible] the entire possible audience [illegible]

[illegible]

FROM BALTIMORE SUN DEC 10

STRAGGLERS GIVE WEARY FEELING TO SEATED FANS

Announcement Of Time Of Features And Suppression Of "Come-And-Go" Are Urged.

Subject Holds Attention Of Leaders Of Industry And Public Shares Their Concern.

By T. M. C.

Personally, we hold an honest opinion that not a small per cent. of the entertainment value of a photoplay is lost when the spectator is subjected to a series of interruptions by a continual procession of patrons and ushers stamping up and down the theater aisles.

This annoyance of late arrivals at movie shows is, of course, nothing but a phase of the practice of setting no definite hours for performances and of encouraging patrons to come at any old time and see a "continuous show."

It is gratifying to learn that David Wark Griffith, the producer, has concurred wholeheartedly in this view and he has even gone so far as to lay the blame for the obvious story themes and general lack of subtlety in the movie art upon conditions created by the evil of this continuous-show practice which has been in vogue since the beginning of the film business.

And, what's more, Mr. Griffith says he spoke with Douglas Fairbanks and Mary Pickford on the subject, and "Mary talked for half an hour and agreed with me that something should be done." What more could be asked?

CHANCE TO LOSE MONEY.

In an interview last week in one of the New York newspapers Mr. Griffith is quoted as follows:

"If any theater owner blazed the trail and announced that he would show his feature films only at certain hours, he would probably lose money. His fellow-exhibitors would laugh at him for his visionary plan (as local exhibitors smiled at a similar suggestion offered some time ago by THE SUN's critic), but he would be doing a big thing for the artistic future of motion pictures.

"A plan might be devised on Broadway whereby no one would be seated after the feature had been on half an hour. If anyone arrived that late, he would have to wait until the end of the photoplay. There are comfortable divans and commodious lobbies to take care of the late-arriving patrons, but I am not sure whether this plan would be practical in the smaller towns, where the theater owner has no way of taking care of his patrons outside of the theater.

"How long could David Belasco hold his supremacy as the stage's most artistic producer if his audiences straggled into his theaters all during the performance, some of them seeing the big dramatic climax before they had seen the events leading up to it? Brilliant as he is, he would be a lamentable failure if the public were permitted to see the surprises in his plays first; if the denouement were presented before the first act was seen, he could not possibly survive.

WHAT IS WRONG?

"We ask ourselves what is the matter with motion pictures. Why do some of the most brilliant minds ridicule the motion picture as cheap and ridiculous? Simply because many producers purposely make their pictures with an obvious theme. They figure that if they try any subtlety it will be submerged when the films are run off with the last scenes first and the first scenes last.

"There must be some way to overcome this evil that is holding the motion picture down to a lower level and preventing it from attaining the place it was destined to reach. Even the stumbling over pairs of feet in the dark is a evil coupled with the inadequate idea going that our film productions in the main are relating to the theatres where the show and the act of an activity as the operator can operate the machine in order to seat as many people as possible.

Chicago Journal of Commerce 12-1-22

"One Exciting Night," the latest Griffith picture, which has been widely heralded as a mystery play, is also proving to be one of the best comedies ever seen upon the screen. It is now in its third week at the [illegible] Theatre. The comedy rests largely on the shoulders of Porter Strong, a Darktown "Romeo." The blackface comedian has always been a favorite on the American stage, and most of the famous burnt cork artists have tried their luck on the screen. They have met with much poor success, however, that the legend grew up that blackface could not be done in the films. From the reception Mr. Strong is daily receiving it would seem that one more good fable has been exploded.

Phila. Pa. Exhibitor 12/1/22

One Show a Night Advocated by Griffith

Says Practice of Ever-changing Audience Retards Industry's Growth

In an interview given to the New York Morning Telegraph, D. W. Griffith points out what he believes to be the most salient fault in the motion picture industry today and which may in the future have a far reaching influence. This is the fact that patrons are permitted to enter a theatre after the feature has been well under way to see the last half of the picture first and the first half last.

Mr. Griffith has turned to David Belasco and asked how long this producer would have retained as the master producer of the legitimate stage had he permitted the practice of people coming and going out of his theatre during a performance.

The gist of Mr. Griffith's criticism seems to mean that he hopes the time will soon arrive when the theatres will have for one show an evening in good the audience changing practically every [illegible]

Here's Action for You

THE CLIMAX of D. W. Griffith's "One Exciting Night," now running at the Apollo Theatre, is a tremendous wind and storm blown by Mr. Griffith himself, plunging handcuffed through the window of a detective to rescue the heroine. If you don't believe it, come and look at the blower.

CHICAGO (ILL.) HERALD-EXAMINER Dec. 3-1922

PORTER STRONG "ONE EXCITING NIGHT" at the ILLINOIS

"EXCITING NIGHT" OPS

"Exciting Night" will be released throughout the country this fall by United Artists. The New York date may be delayed owing to fire that destroyed the film on the pre-release run of the Griffith production and has put back its appearance in Montreal to play it immediately.

It may go to work after [illegible]

"The Exciting Night" [illegible] will end on December [illegible] The showing of this thrilling [illegible] Griffith has been successful [illegible] Rialto, and the Rialto [illegible] will open with the [illegible]

We don't blame the Famous Players for not showing "The Exciting Night." It is one of the most effective comedy relief sketches we have seen in a long time.

"The Exciting Night," the latest Griffith production, which has been widely heralded as a mystery play, is also proving to be one of the best comedies ever seen upon the screen. It is now in its third week at the [illegible] Theatre. The comedy rests largely on the shoulders of Porter Strong, a Darktown "Romeo." The blackface comedian has always been a favorite on the American stage, and most of the famous burnt cork artists have tried their luck on the screen. They have met with much poor success, however, that the legend grew up that blackface could not be done in the films. From the reception Mr. Strong is daily receiving it would seem that one more good fable has been exploded.

my telegraph 12/3/22

[illegible] Griffith's [illegible] Belasco [illegible]

Spokane Wash
12-10-22 Spokesman

N. Y. Eve. World
12-16-22

Macon (Ga) Telegraph 12/19/22

N.Y. Telegraph 12/24/1922

Griffith Wants Remedy.

David Wark Griffith gave an interview to the New York Telegraph last week on the backward presentation of motion pictures. "The evils of the continuous performance" is what he refers to. Since, in the last 10 years, motion pictures have betaken themselves from the dinginess of side streets to unreel within the most magnificent playhouses ever built—notably San Francisco's Granada, recently built at a cost of $3,000,000—possibly Mr. Griffith's ideas on presentation presage the next milestone of progress on the picture highway.

"What is the matter with the movies will be answered when some theater owner invents a remedy for the present handicap in the theater of permitting the public to see the last half of a picture before the first has been unreeled," Mr. Griffith is quoted as saying by Louella O. Parsons.

Tots Get Stepped On.

"The harm does not stop there. The part of the public that falls over your feet, just as you are enjoying the last half of the picture yourself—once in a while there is such a picture—and proceeds to talk until the beginning of the picture, destroys the picture in the entire radius to which their thoughtfulness extends. Audiences are well punctuated with this kind of a fan pest."

Continuing, Mr. Griffith says, "How long could David Belasco hold his supremacy as the stage's most artistic producer if his audiences straggled into his theaters all during the performance, some of them seeing the big dramatic climax before they had seen the events leading up to it. Brilliant as he is, he would be a lamentable failure if the public were permitted to see the surprises in his plays first; if the denouement was presented before the first act was seen he could not possibly survive.

"The greatest dramatic producer in the world of any age could not have any appeal to his public if he had to plan his plays with the idea that he must work out his plot with the thought it could be seen backward as well as in its logical sequence of acts.

Nothing Left for Patron.

"Take my picture, 'One Exciting Night,' (Mr. Griffith's latest picture playing now in New York.) It is full of unexpected moments. The audience is not supposed to know who murdered Johnson. The name of the arch villain who is constantly killing some one is not known. If the patrons of the theater walk into the house and see the whole plot exposed, with the murderer brought to justice, and the reason for all the wild excitement, what is there left for him when the first scenes go on again. You could not expect any one to find an evening's entertainment in a mystery explained in advance.

"I have talked with Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks on the harm that has been wrought by this backward presentation and both agree that something should be done.

Might Start on Broadway.

"If any theater blazed the trail," said Mr. Griffith, "and announced he would show his features only at certain hours, he would probably lose money. His fellow exhibitors would laugh at him for his visionary plan, but he would be doing a big thing for the artistic future of pictures.

"A plan might be devised on Broadway," went on Mr. Griffith, "whereby no one would be seated after the feature had been on half an hour. If any one arrived that late he would have to wait until the end of the photoplay. There are comfortable divans and commodious lobbies to take care of the late patrons, but I am not sure this plan would be practical in smaller towns, where the theater owner has no way of taking care of his patrons."

Grauman's Hollywood theater, which only presents special features, is already blazing the trail and offers only one program in the afternoon and one in the evening.

Should Give Schedules.

This plan is far from feasible for the average theater, but there is something the theaters could do, if they considered it worth while. Managements could educate the public to their picture time schedules with the change of each feature. They invariably do this through their advertisements when special productions like Douglas Fairbanks, Mary Pickford or Norma Talmadge play at their theaters and the public usually responds. This same thing could be done by their stars, which accompany their current presentations and again in their daily advertisements.

There might be reason to the fear that isn't working for somebody or something but it does not happen in a "Do the Thing Week" to get people to believe at the beginning of each new show, instead of the half, it would save the thanks of all the groups now [illegible]

TOO REASONABLE.

Most of us have often laughed over little stories we have read about some one asking a street car conductor or the milkman how his scenario is getting along and having him reply, "It's all ready but the final scene," but, in the estimation of the majority of producers, the best scripts have come from similar sources.

"I have noticed," mused David Wark Griffith yesterday, "that when a man or woman claiming no literary ability writes a scenario synopsis that they hit the point with a punch. Not that I am picking a quarrel with the literary folks, for I admire them greatly, but when a man without writing ability wants to describe a scene he forgets all about words and tells us what his mind pictures. For instance, in a recent scenario I read (written by a freight handler), the man wrote: 'He went in the kitchen, knocked his wife down and ducked out the window.'

"All the words in the English language couldn't picture that scene more graphically to the director; so simplicity is the thing."

MACON (GA.) TELEGRAPH
DECEMBER 17, 1922

D. W. Griffith's Newest Sensation One Exciting Night at Criterion Tomorrow

"One Exciting Night" is a mystery story presented on the screen in true Griffith style, but the theme of the story is not at all the kind that Mr. Griffith usually chooses. However, the picture is not only absorbingly entertaining but serves as an interesting demonstration of the big director's skill in handling a mystery story.

The construction of the picture is peculiar—interestingly so. Mr. Griffith has tantalized his spectator in the most entertaining way. "One Exciting Night" is a difficult picture to describe, and to tell you that it is the most remarkable screen production of its kind doesn't signify enough. It is tense from first to last, it has an extraordinary line of comedy relief in which Peter Strong, as Romeo Washington, a negro servant, is the high light, and it has a delicately outlined romance in which Carol Dempster, flower-like and dainty, and Henry Hull, as an impulsive youth, are the central figures. In addition to this, it has a terrific electric and wind storm, in which trees are uprooted, buildings blown away.

As is usual in Griffith productions one of the notable perfections is the outlining of character together with a rare psychology. And so subtle are some of the finer touches in this picture that we fear they will be unappreciated excepting as they go to make up the whole. The character of the girl, Agnes Harrington, for instance, is more or less of an impression. The writer does not recall ever seeing as beautifully sensitive a portrayal of the adolescent feminine as that of Carol Dempster in the role of Agnes. The production has extraordinary technical perfection and is edited and subtitled with the greatest care. Henry Hull is splendid as John Fairfax; the detective role, played by Frank Sheridan, is exceptionally well done, and Charles E. Mack, as a mysterious guest, is unforgetable. The performance given by Morgan Wallace, as J. Wilson Rockmaine, who turns out to be the villain, is a finished piece of work. It is a romantic mystery production de luxe.

(The regular Silent Drama department will be found on page 18)

One Exciting Night. United Artists.—D. W. Griffith relents his dignity and produces a lukum mystery melodrama which is thrilling and funny in the extreme. Those who go to the theatre to be entertained will find this piece highly palatable; those who do not will be entertained in spite of themselves.

LATEST D. W. GRIFFITH RELEASE A WEIRD NARRATIVE OF MYSTERY

Numerous Thrills, With Lot of Comedy, in Film Story. One Exciting Night.

By TAYLOR GLENN

David Wark Griffith's One Exciting Night, which is being shown this week at the Criterion Theater, has been quite appropriately named. If we are to judge from the shrieks and sounds of laughter evoked from the vast audiences which last night thronged Macon's only independent movie house. It was an impossibility to enumerate them, but we are sure that there were more than one hundred thrills every sixty seconds that caused shivers to tickle the spine and fright sufficient to curl our own too contrary hair.

We dare not say this is Griffith's greatest picture. Well do we remember his Birth of a Nation; his Way Down East; his Broken Blossoms; his Hearts of the World, and his Orphans of the Storm. Not all of them were greater than his latest feature; Way Down East probably appealed to our dramatic temperament more than any of the others. One Exciting Night, however, gets second place to the picture given first honors.

Comedy is very much in evidence throughout the entire picture. And it probably would be well to say that as far as the comedy element is concerned, Porter Strong, who impersonated the negro, Romeo Washington, with undisputed and unexcelled ability, walked away with comedy honors. The Criterion literally went into spasms of laughter when Romeo, who suffers from a natural superstition and fear of the unseen, and his "yaller gal," in a mad race from the black-clothed spectre stalking through the empty room of the haunted mansion, rolled down a steep flight of stairs without any regard for their dignity.

Mystery, Robbery and Murder

Space does not permit a very lengthy discussion of the many complications involved in this story. Mystery, robbery, murder and a world of intriguing villains supply constant interest. Then, too, there are springtime love scenes, which Griffith so often presents—innocence is awakened and youthful passion dawns. These scenes are always handled with the delicate touch of the man who creates the beautiful and conveys it reverently.

Melodrama is rampant in spots, and as such, One Exciting Night will carve a niche for itself in the land of imagination, and you who saw it yesterday and those of you who will see it today and tomorrow will tell your friends of its thrilling moments and of the unpropitious shocks many of the scenes produced.

Carol Dempster again was the dream-like girl with the lovely face, but when driven to extremes found sufficient strength to battle with the mysterious villain and save her boy-lover.

Henry Hull has no equal in characterizing the youthful, energetic American type. Margaret Dale was conspicuous as the unscrupulous Mrs. Harrington, while C. H. Crocker-King, Morgan Wallace, Grace Griswold, Frank Sheridan, Percy Carr, Irma Harrison and Frank Wunderlee filled out the engthy cast. Summing it up, one cannot describe One Exciting Night, one must see it and live throught it. It's worth both the time and the money.

IDENTIFIED DUCK FROM CANADIAN LAKE KILLED

SAVANNAH, Ga., Dec. 15.—It was learned from Washington today that a duck recently killed near Savannah had come from Canada within six weeks. The duck bore a leg band with No. 228,582 Bureau Biological Survey. The bureau was notified. The bird had been banded at Lake Scugog, Canada.

Boston (Mass) Screen & Stage 12/19/22

D.W. Griffith

Who presented "One Exciting Night" at the Tremont Temple during all last month and up to December 5th. Griffith is one of the most well-known producers in moving picture business and is one of the most well liked. Many of his pictures have been decided hits in Boston, "Orphans of the Storm" being one, starring Lillian and Dorothy Gish. Soon Boston will see another Griffith treat.

Wids (NYC) 12/20/22

The 10 Best

The following percentage table shows the standing of productions listed by motion picture critics of trade press, fan magazines and daily newspapers.

It should be remembered that reports are still being received and will be until THE FILM YEAR BOOK, 1923 finally goes to press this week:

Orphans of the Storm	100
Grandma's Boy	[illegible]
Blood and Sand	99
Prisoner of Zenda	97
Manook of the North	97
When Knighthood Was in Flower	97
Smilin' Through	97
To Have and Have Not	96
Robin Hood	96
Oliver Twist	96
Eternal Flame	96
One Glorious Day	96
Manslaughter	95
The Masquerader	95
Moran of the Lady Letty	95
Three Musketeers	95
Foolish Wives	95
The Storm	95

It should be remembered that some of the more recent release films are yet being seen throughout the country.

Detroit (Mich) News 12/31/22

HENRY WATTERSON HULL WHO PLAYS THE MALE LEAD in "ONE EXCITING NIGHT"

SLIPPING 12-17-22

MYSTERY PLAY IS HELD

"ONE EXCITING NIGHT" REMAINS HERE.

Blue Mouse Patrons Enthusiastic Over Griffith Film—Stampede Is Keen.

THE second and last big week of the D. W. Griffith's famous mystery drama, "One Exciting Night," is now the attraction at the Blue Mouse Theater, where the past week it has been packing the large house daily.

Mary Harding Hunter is a young actress in the lead role of the film, and has supported by Carol Dempster, Henry Hull, Porter Strong, Charles E. Mack, Frank Sheridan, Percy Carr, Irma Harrison, Frank Wunderlee, Grace Griswold, Margaret Dale and Morgan Wallace.

Comments in Kind.

Comments in the lobby of the theater are in kind, the general opinion being that the film is a good one, and that it is well worth the price of admission.

Dec 19 1922

SEE AGAIN IN A GRIFFITH PICTURE

MAE MARSH AND CAROL DEMPSTER WILL STAR

CAROL DEMPSTER

MYSTERY IS THEME OF FILM

Dec 18 1922

Film Fun N.Y. Dec 1922

When David Wark Griffith turned to the melodrama, he gave Carol Dempster the feminine lead. Here she is in "One Exciting Night," and she looks thrilling enough.

Motion Pictures Brklyn N.Y. 12/1922

"One Exciting Night"

D. W. Griffith has departed from his usual paths and is releasing a brand new mystery play. He refuses to divulge the plot, so you will have to make one up for yourselves.

Prepare to have the cold chills run up and down your back when H. Croker King creeps up and down the stairs.

Henry Hull and Carol Dempster fall in love in between screams and clutching hands.

It's a dark night and dark things creep around in the eerie atmosphere.

Page 42

NATIONAL MAGAZINE: Mostly About People

Stage Gossip of the Month in Boston
By MAITLAND LEROY OSBORNE

GRIFFITH SCORES AGAIN

DAVID WARK GRIFFITH'S "One Exciting Night," now playing at Boston, New York, and Chicago before general distribution over the country, for the first time accomplishes for the motion picture the highly popular mystery, surprise and climax that the so-called "mystery plays" have achieved in the speaking theatre.

It has been an axiom that movie plays must not puzzle the spectators about anything. Attempts to mystify in the movies have generally been flat failures, or have verged on absurdity. Speaking of "One Exciting Night," William Collier, the expert comedian, says that Griffith's treatment of the "suspects" or "culprits" in the mystery scenes of the play is his finest achievement yet. Unaided by the speaking voice, he intrigues, mystifies, and amuses the spectators, yet without the slightest confusion solves the puzzles as interestingly as he has raised them.

The play shows no less than five leading characters under suspicion of two murders and a great robbery. Three of the five are "hidden" characters. The scenes are highly dramatic. An atmosphere of some mystery and terror is created, relieved only by comic flashes of the negro servant's funny reaction to the exciting events.

Through it all Miss Carol Dempster has a role of progressive development, used from a novice policy into the heroine the major spirit of the final scenes. The fair Miss Dempster catches the not masked villain single-handed after a night chase through a terrific hurricane surpassing even the ice scene of "Way Down East" in its fury and grandeur.

This is only the first climax. The second and final one is the revelation of the villain and the solving of the heroine's real identity, giving a wonderfully satisfying and happy denouement to the story. Right alongside the interest in the main plots is the strong liking created for poor Romeo Washington, the scared negro of the spooky events and the hurricane. The depictment by Porter Strong, a well-known ex-minstrel man, adds a delightfully unctuous black face to the portrait gallery of great movie characters.

Never did Griffith show his "miracle" quality so wonderfully as in the filming of the great storm in the second act of the entertainment. The spectator gasps with wonder, then takes home the memory of it as incredible and yet real. To think of trees and houses moving headlong through the air like a Mother's enchantment; not lily or rock stuff such as they use out at Hollywood, but huge objects weighing tons and hurtling through air like leaves in the wind—think of this, and you have some faint conception of how Griffith makes the storm and photographs it.

Old showmen say that "One Exciting Night" in the regular movie houses is bound to be the most popular of all the Griffith productions next to "Birth of a Nation" and "Way Down East." Those who desire to see it as a magnificent stage production as well should attend the Griffith supervised presentations at Tremont Temple, Boston, and at the other key cities. The Boston public does not see it in a prologue in an hotel, while the stage effects give all the ghostly sounds and the terrific noises of the storm. In this production Griffith has put over for the screen the complete mystery thriller.

DAVID WARK GRIFFITH seeks a contrast quality in his heroines. Since he usually finds what he seeks, the protagonists of his plays have a winsome appeal, and of none is this more true of Miss Carol Dempster, who plays the leading role of his latest production, "One Exciting Night." She embodies the elfin, urban dancer and yet romantic and intimate girl of this period. "She has that develops the body and the mind; the body all in work for you, in fight for you; emotions and imaginings that you feel to be nothing of the world." So says Griffith's new curio. He studied through and Miss Dempster and applied her to angles these inherent qualities. Those who admired the young actress in "Orphans Dream" will find that she has in unexpected her achievement and the role of Janet Harrington in "One Exciting Night."

TACOMA (WASH.) LEDGER
JANUARY 1, 1923

News of

Griffith Is Master of Melodrama

"One Exciting Night" at Blue Mouse Is Thrilling Mystery Film

BY L. L. CLEMANS

"One Exciting Night," the current attraction at the Blue Mouse, has been appropriately named. We could not stop to count them, but we are sure that there were more thrills in this picture of Griffith's to the foot of film than any other cinema mystery story. And many of them caused shivers to travel up and down the spine in wild abandon.

This is not Griffith's best picture by any means, but it will probably create as much comment from the theater-going public as his more pretentious offerings.

All the ideas incorporated in this picture have been utilized before and when we digest the material which furnishes "One Exciting Night" we realize that it is a lot of old hokum. But how ingeniously has the master craftsman treated the subject. It rather seems that this picture was made just to show the public that Griffith can play at times in order to get away from his more serious style of production.

The involved story is much too complicated to discuss in this brief review, but mystery, robbery, murder and a lot of intriguing villians supply constant interest. Of course, it is all in the way that the many episodes have been handled and through it is presented springtime love scenes, showing the awakening of innocence and dawn of youthful passion.

These scenes are always handled with the delicate touch of the man who creates the beautiful and conveys it reverently. But not content with this, he must add a final thrill which results in a whirlwind tornado that uplifts giant trees from the ground and tosses them about like feathers, twists the sides of the houses and sweeps the roofs skyward, to say nothing of the torrential rain which almost drowns the hero and the intrepid young heroine.

Of course, we hate to quarrel with the wizard of film productions, but had these scenes been less exaggerated they would have inspired more terror and convinced the skeptical of their reality.

As melodrama, "One Exciting Night" will carve a niche for itself in the land of "make-believe" and the film fans will tell one another of its thrilling moments and of the uncanny shock many of the scenes produced.

Porter Strong, impersonator of Romeo Washington, really walked away with the comedy honors. The audience Saturday evening literally went into spasms of laughter when Romeo and his "yaller gal," in a mad race from the black-clothed apparition stalking through the empty room of the haunted mansion, rolled down a steep flight of stairs without any regard for their dignity.

Carol Dempster was again the dream-like girl with the lovely face, but when driven to extremes found sufficient strength to battle with the mysterious villain and save her boy lover. Henry Hull has no equal in impersonating the youthful, energetic American type.

Margaret Dale was distinguished looking as the unscrupulous Mrs. Harrington, while Morgan Wallace, C. H. Crocker-King, Frank Sheridan, Grace Griswold, Percy Carr, Frank Wunderlee and Irma Harrison filled out the lengthy cast.

Summing it up, one cannot describe "One Exciting Night," one must see it and live through it.

THREE MATCHED CHARACTERS IN MOVIE MYSTERY

Long Search for Triplicate Ended by Starting One and Following Two MOTION PICTURE MAG.

Jan 1923

D. W. Griffith's "One Exciting Night" does nothing in the way of alleviating the depression caused by Ingram's "Trifling Women," despite the fact that it is an immeasurably better production.

It causes us, primarily, to wonder when the motion picture producers will find the courage to blaze a trail. Let a stage play find success on Broadway; or let a novel run into any number of editions and—presto!—it becomes a motion picture whether or not it faintly resembles what is known as screen material. Until this parasitic tendency disappears—until the motion picture stands on its own—there cannot be the achievement which might reasonably be expected.

"One Exciting Night" is a cross between "The Bat," and "The Cat and the Canary," both mystery plays which have found favor during the last theatrical season. The only difference is that it has not been possible to maintain the same suspense in the screen production.

The program asked us not to reveal the plot. It would be difficult indeed for us to do so, for there is still a fairly large question in our mind as to what it was all about.

Suffice it to say, there is a house-party in an old home which has long been idle except for the bootleggers who stored their wares there. Thru one night masked and hooded forms flit about dark passages and up and down shadowy stairways. Ghostly hands open fastened shutters and a frightful storm precedes the dawning and a solution of the mystery.

The storm supplies the Griffith suspense. It is exceptionally well done and there is a time when you sit forward on the edge of your chair, trusting that the handcuffed hero will miraculously rescue the heroine, who is threatened by a falling tree.

Carol Dempster is the heroine. Henry Hull is the hero, and likable enough, too. The other members of the cast are not well-known to motion picture audiences. But Porter Strong deserves mention for his portrayal of Romeo Washington.

We have come to modify our hopes for every alternate D. W. Griffith production. After "Way Down East," for example, we had his "Dream Street," a pleasant enough picture, but not up to the Griffith standard. Now, after "Orphans of the Storm," we have "One Exciting Night," less worthy of the genius of Mr. Griffith than "Dream Street" even.

It seems a deplorable thing that a man as unquestionably great as D. W. Griffith should ever devote his gifts to anything but great pictures—or, at least, what give promise of being great pictures.

(MINN.) PIONEER-PRESS
St Paul 1/7/23

The Empress.
(A Review)

"One Exciting Night," Griffith's first thriller, which opened at the Empress yesterday, has the ingredients of "The Bat," "The Cat and the Canary" and the "Last Warning" all crowded into one. It is like combining the battle of the Marne, the San Francisco earthquake and the great Ceylon monsoon into one engagement.

The little bug of mystery is sent scurrying across the screen early when Griffith suggests: "Isn't there something—think now—that you are afraid of?" He proceeds to develop the motive by creepy hands, ghost lights and a terrific storm. We have a couple of good old-fashioned killings at the cross roads and in the attic and in the front hall.

Very early you commence to guess who does it all. Of course with my vast mentality I spotted him almost as soon as Griffith did. I spotted the wrong one, however, but at the final disclosure I wasn't surprised because it was a guy that had been mixing in pretty hot and he looked like a bootlegger who used to call on a friend of mine.

There is comedy relief afforded by Romeo Washington, who, as "sulled help," develops a tremendous frenzy in getting away from things. This is relief well afforded from a situation that makes you think so much. Griffith says "he leaves much of the story to your imagination." Without imagination you are out of luck.

There is an excellent orchestral score and I found it absorbing and merging into the picture in an unusual way. There is a fine orchestra and I liked the music as well as the picture. If you will remember "Orphans" and others of Griffith you will realize how important the makeup staff is. He never busts here.

I am not going to tell you who the villain is, because I can't give you a full review the story. I can only give a part of it and leave the rest to your own sense and [illegible]. There are five persons you will suspect of being deadly murder. Griffith is a good guy and man to the word with us for there is no.

Carol Dempster has the big part and is a sweet girl. She does her part well. Henry Hull plays the hero and is a pleasing young man. Porter Strong plays the part of Romeo Washington, the sulled help, and he is a comedian of the first water. Frank Aiello is the villain.

Of the supporting cast, Alice Joyce and Frank Aiello are the most prominent. Alice Joyce is a beautiful woman and Frank Aiello is the villain.

Griffith's Taste Was Not Negligible

HERE FOR FILM'S PREMIERE

Left to right: David W. Griffith, Mrs. A. L. Grey, and Miss Carol Dempster. (TRIBUNE Photo.)

David Griffith, moving picture producer, with almost half a hundred members of his acting company and staff, is in Chicago to aid in the opening of his latest picture, "One Exciting Night," which has its premiere at the Illinois theater tomorrow night.

"I never had money enough," said Mr. Griffith at the Congress, "to produce the picture I really want to. But it is the ambition of my life." He was speaking of the gigantic picture which should strive to make friendly the peoples of the world.

The producer expressed himself forcibly on prohibition, saying: "I believe I produced a picture called 'Intolerance.' That title expresses my idea of prohibition. If it only prohibited—that would be different. You see, is intolerance, for some folks won't stand what other folks insist is the right. And who shall judge?"

Chicago (Ill) Herald Examiner 12/18/22

DECEMBER 18, 1922.

HOW TO SUCCEED

Shun Talkers—Aim Five Years Ahead

One of a series of inspirational articles written especially for the Hearst newspapers by America's most successful men.

Persons Who Talk Much Seldom Have Much to Talk About—Accomplishment Is the Real Satisfaction—To Escape Competition, Aim Five Years Ahead—Today Is the Day of the Capitalist—Tomorrow Will Be the Day of the Thinker.

D. W. GRIFFITH,
Famous Motion Picture Producer.

ANY person who makes money constructively will at the same time make a success which is not to be measured by money.

It is to be hoped that success in life will be more and more divorced from the money measure.

A dollar makes a good one for a young man to use in electing his figure.

In my business we deal in figures, life in words, therefore we shall try to express a few thoughts with no expectation that the wording will be sufficiently vivid to impress them in the memory of the young man beginning his working life.

Our first two things to do is to take pleasure above everything consideration.

There happens to be no simpler way than to think and plan for at least five years ahead. The moment a young man or young woman begins doing that rigidly, he or she immediately advances into a preferred class that steps ahead of at least 80 per cent of the public.

To see yourself in the desired goal, in all its details, is in itself some accomplishment.

Another simple thing is to shun talkers and talking. You have observed that persons who talk much seldom have much to talk about.

Talk and talkers divert one's efforts and drain one's initiative. After much talking one feels one has done much but really has ACCOMPLISHED nothing. In the end there is no satisfaction like accomplishment.

After all, what each one of us is striving for is happiness. Offentimes it seems this nation is a sorry people rather than a happy people. Perhaps this is because we are a people of very fine and high ideals, yet set up standards of attainment that are decidedly material. It is the old fight of the money changers in the Temple.

We do not understand how any one can ever succeed with regarding work as an ordeal. If you do not like your work and find it is, it would seem you were practicing an unconscious treachery towards yourself and your fellow man. The moment you don't like your work, that work becomes shameful; and where there is shame there is degradation. And if you degrade yourself by doing something you intensely dislike, any success that may come from it must be a mockery.

By your work you should bring happiness and thought and information to the world. You should increase the love of one for another; destroy the primitive prejudices of one person against another who happens to live in a different place.

Real work benefits your neighbor as much as yourself. This is a day of rapid change in the lives of the American people. Within a few years revolutionary things have happened in our religious and social attitudes. They are happening even more vigorously in our economic laws.

Yesterday was the day of the Worker. Today is the day of the Capitalist. Tomorrow will be the day of the Thinker.

Those who are caught in this changing period may be very much confused. But I think it may be accepted that there is no happiness without accomplishment, and there is no accomplishment unless it helps your brother man.

Dr. Griffith

Canton (Ohio) Repository January 4/1923

MYSTERY AND SURPRISE FILL GRIFFITH'S NEW SCREEN DRAMA

Strange hands with long bony fingers, masked figures darting in and out of doors, strange noises, hookeases that open noiselessly and enfold victims—mystery that holds one in a white heat of excitement from the time a murder is committed until the end of the thirteenth reel—that is David Wark Griffith's newest picture and one of the greatest he has ever done, "One Exciting Night."

The picture opened a week's engagement at the Grand theater Saturday afternoon and was greeted by a large crowd of mystery lovers.

There is a general tangling of the plot which becomes so intricate that it is almost impossible to determine who the real murderer is. As in "The Bat," there are murders committed before your very eyes and so cleverly are they done that it is impossible to recognize the murderer.

"One Exciting Night" would be the death of a person if so many exciting things really did happen in one night and just to watch it on the screen leaves one weak from excitement.

This is the first time that Griffith has invaded the field of mystery and it is difficult to understand why with the splendid possibilities of the screen to depict a real mystery that it has not been done before. In view of the tremendous popularity of the mystery drama today Griffith's inspiration was a happy one. Where mechanical perfection is impossible on the stage it seems as if witchcraft itself must have conspired with Griffith to make the screen mystery.

As it is Griffith's one unbreakable rule that there must be a tremendous climax to his big pictures, he has introduced a storm scene in which trees are uprooted and crash to the ground and in which the very force of the rain hurls the principals to the ground. It is, of course, in the storm that the real murderer is caught after the heroine is pinioned underneath a tree which the wind has twisted from its roots and hurled to the ground.

The picture is stupendous from a scenic and photographic point of view. Especially in the storm, where the principal figures seem little more than silhouetted pawns being moved about by a mighty force.

In "The Birth of a Nation" Griffith took an old-fashioned story and made a masterpiece of it. In "Way Down East" he repeated this achievement. In "One Exciting Night" he has taken the most up-to-date form of drama and made a picture that, from the viewpoint of real interest, und[illegible] all his other efforts. The master hand of Griffith has even added new mystery to the mystery drama.

Carol Dempster is starred as the debutante heroine, while Henry Hull, the handsome young chap who is making such a success on the speaking stage in the mystery drama "The Cat and the Canary," is the male lead. Griffith seems to have chosen all his characters to fit special types and not because of the prominence they have achieved. There is Morgan Wallace, as a suave man of wealth, past his youth, but who has an obsession to win the love of a young girl. The girl feels nothing but repugnance for him, but in order to save her mother from disgrace she promises to marry him.

And then enters Hull as young John Fairfax, who falls madly in love with the girl and in his impetuosity fairly carries her away from her fiance.

Fairfax opens his ancestral home in Louisville, Ky., and invites a large party for the week end. It is here that things happen. In the absence of Fairfax his home has been made the headquarters of a band of bootleggers, who are forced to flee when Fairfax arrives. A half million dollars in a traveling bag is the cause of the murder of a man.

Suspicion falls on practically every member of the cast and when it is finally cleared away there is one of the biggest surprises any mystery drama has afforded.

Porter Strong as a negro, and Irma Harrison, as a mulatto maid, provide the comedy. The negro's inherent fear of the supernatural is the basis for the comedy.

C. H. Cocker-King, who made such a tremendous hit as the Doctor in "Bull Dog Drummond" plays an important role in the picture with all the artistry that the long schooling he had under Sir Henry Irving would suggest. His role is that of a man of mystery and his queer actions do much toward tangling the plot.

"One Exciting Night" will be presented for two performances daily at the Grand for a solid [illegible]

Canton (O) News 1-7-23

All Elements Of Melodrama Carried In Griffith Film

All the tricks of the melodrama of all time seem to have been gathered together for "One Exciting Night," Griffith's newest personally directed production, which opened an eight day engagement in the Grand Saturday.

If anything has been overlooked, a survey of the melodramatic stage in trade after viewing the performance failed to suggest it.

There are murders and violence, secret panels and hidden passageways, doors that open without cause and gaunt hands clutching out from behind heavy curtains. There are masked men with mysterious cloaks, black men with strange leering eyes, good men who whisper mysterious conversations with evil ones, footfalls where no one is seen to walk and noises without a source.

It is the kind of a play in which suspicion may fall with equal severity upon nearly every member of the cast and in which every spectator plays detective for the evening and seems to enjoy the necessity. As in such plays of this type, followers and spectators are asked to refrain from divulging the solution of the plot to persons who have not seen the picture.

It is a cast Griffith [illegible] chosen and presented with the results for which all of Griffith's pictures have been noted. It is another difference from everything he has previously done for it is a play where his magical touch [illegible] these are very [illegible] that it is difficult to [illegible] the [illegible] of the [illegible] and [illegible] the [illegible] of the [illegible] and [illegible] the [illegible] of the [illegible] and

David W. Griffith's Epochal Picture Creation "ONE EXCITING NIGHT"

—o—

A Summary of Its Features—A Revolutionary Departure by the Wizard of Filmdom.

—o—

FAR different from anything the Wizard of the Films, D. W. Griffith, has ever done is that thrilling production, "One Exciting Night" which recently finished its spectacular run in New York but will soon return here.

In "One Exciting Night" Griffith has effected a revolutionary departure from all his old classic standards of scenic investiture, mobs, costumes and evolved an up to date, gripping lovable mystery story.

"Mystery comedy-drama that is all suspense" as one critic describes the latest Griffith opus, fully summarizes the picture.

Following is the cast of this epoch-making presentation:

Agnes Harrington . . . . . Carol Dempster
John Fairfax . . . . . Henry Hull
J. Wilson Rockmaine . . . . . Morgan Wallace
The neighbor . . . . . C. H. Crocker-King
Romeo Washington . . . . . Porter Strong
The detective . . . . . Frank Sheridan
Mrs. Harrington . . . . . Margaret Dale
Samuel Jones . . . . . Frank Wunderlee
Auntie Fairfax . . . . . Grace Griswold
The maid . . . . . Irma Harrison
Clary Johnson . . . . . Herbert Sutch
The butler . . . . . Percy Carr

Story by Irene Sinclair. Musical score arranged and synchronized by Albert Pesce. Photography by Hendrik Sartov. Directed and produced by David Wark Griffith.

Henry Hull's work in the picture is up to his high standard as seen on the speaking stage.

The work of the famous Carol Dempster reveals the master-hand of the Wizard himself. He has done wonders for her. Miss Dempster's position in filmdom should be assured after her work in "One Exciting Night."

Don't Be Bald—See Merke Institute—512 5th Avenue

As what might be termed a waif of Africa, though legitimate heiress to a vast English estate, and deprived of this lawful heritage, Miss Dempster portrays the modern girl in all her intensity and tensity of life, play and frivolity, but yet sincere and sweet and grounded in rectitude when the things that count enter her life. Especially in the storm preceding the climax is her impersonation truly superb — and what a storm! A storm previously thought inconceivable in photography.

The histrionic ability of Porter Strong was also remarkable. In fact the acting, photography, direction, lighting and settings, were all rivals in amazing originality and reflection.

SYNOPSIS OF THE STORY — The death of her mother, following news that her father has succumbed in the African wilds, Agnes Harrington is taken to America as a babe that her father's younger brother may inherit the vast English estate. Plot deals with her trials thus connected in the late 'teens of her life.

HIGH SPOTS—First, the storm. Handling of the mystery element. The heroine's sympathetic, sweet and human handling of her role. Total unexpectedness of the villain's identity. The superior comedy of Porter Strong.

It is hard to imagine a film with higher possibilities for "attendance records" than "One Exciting Night." Coming, too, as a paradox in the methods of Griffith the Great—a complete departure from his former successes, "The Birth of a Nation", "The Two Orphans", and "Way Down East" — it naturally attracts unbounded curiosity. And it shows that the master of screen-craft is at home in any metier, so vast and resourceful is his genius for the screen.

Now Griffith's enormous public is waiting for his next production, feeling that other surprises equally wonderful and profound await them.

Cleveland (O.) Plain Dealer
PAGE TWELVE
1/8/23

Reviews of New

"One Exciting Night" is That; Meighan-Ade Good

BY W. WARD MARSH.

Mr. D. W. Griffith's assault on our nerves is now in the Stillman. His battery has the title of "One Exciting Night," a mystery melodrama which goes in for drum-fire after the first 500 feet, and those in the audience who survive this twelve-reel attack are entitled to a set of copper-plated nerves gratis.

It has been customary to say one to another that no one but a Griffith could have done this or that picture. It is now quite correct to say that anyone but a Griffith might have made "One Exciting Night." Barring two or three Prizma titles near its close and the suspense it is not Griffithesque.

There are few closeups. The terror which is expressed by the characters is told in slashed scenes, hurriedly jumping from one to another, rather than by cornering one player and "shooting" him in the many stages of fright. Mr. Griffith is capable—or at least was with Miss Lillian Gish—of placing the camera close to his character and "getting over" all the grief which made "Way Down East" so popular (and which made "Broken Blossoms" so appreciated—by a few of us).

"One Exciting Night" is told jerkily. It behaves like an apt pupil from the Academy of St. Vitus. Lack of smoothness in the telling is its greatest sin. It suffers in the editing, but strangely, since it jumps from scene to scene, the story is not lost and it builds consistently.

* * * *

It tricks you. You believe one thing when exactly the opposite is taking place. Were you "on the ground" during the actual happenings you would know better than to believe this "treachery" because you would ask questions. Since you are not, we believe you will do as we did—go straight through to the end, leaping with excitement and shouting with fear, and then settle down at the close of the picture, thanking the gods that while the heroine never found mother love she did win a protector. Other than that you will probably await the stretcher bearers who will come and remove your thoroughly enervated body from the theater.

Its second boast, next to its mystery, is the storm scene. In this the ice scene in "Way Down East" fades to nothing so far as excitement and suspense is concerned. It is a studio made tornado which makes the natural ones appear like a frisky breeze. Through this set in which trees are uprooted and buildings carried away the heroine pursues the villain and the pair are followed closely by the hero in handcuffs. In this is one genuine Griffith touch. That is when the heroine is pinned down by a fallen branch. She lies in the path of a tree which threatens to fall on her. Hours drag by before the hero arrives in the "nick of time." The tree falls. The agony of suspense!

* * * *

Carol Dempster is the heroine and Henry Hull the hero. The comedy falls to Porter Strong who appears in blackface. The leading characters are carried along on the high tide of action, and the acting is not reckoned with seriously. Miss Dempster, however, plays well, with considerable feeling for the part. Hull accents the melodramatics too much.

Porter Strong will undoubtedly appeal to many, the majority, but we found in him the customary Griffith humor—that which is invariably carried beyond what we believe to be reality, and so, no longer quite funny. Strong "relieves" the tense situations like the comic maid did in "The Bat." C. H. Crocker-King (it would be unfair to disclose his role) gives the best performance. Frank Sheridan is good as the detective.

"One Exciting Night" is not a great picture, but it is an unusual [illegible] it is to the screen what [illegible] is to the stage.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS (N. Y. City
JANUARY 20, 1923

[illegible]ce Contest on [illegible]ng Night"

Seattle [illegible] "My Most Exciting Night" was the [illegible] contest put over in conjunction with [illegible] Seattle Star by Vic Gauntlett for John Hamrick's Blue Mouse theatre here when "One Exciting Night" was run at that theatre.

Cash prizes of $35, $25, $15 and $10, as well as tickets to the theatre, were awarded for the best 200-word essay by Seattle citizens on the "Exciting Night" subject. The six best essays were printed in the Star's columns, and publicity on the contest was run for several weeks in advance, as well as during the showing.

Another item of exploitation put over by Mr. Gauntlett was the distribution of bright yellow cards, four by five inches in size, to each patron of the theatre as he passed out at the end of the performance. Each card bore a small cartoon of "Romeo Washington," the colored comedian of the play, and the words, "Shh—! Not a Word to Your Friends About the Solution of the Mysterious Plot in D. W. Griffith's 'One Exciting Night,' Now playing at the Blue Mouse Theatre."

These cards, as well as carrying out their purpose and keeping the solution of the plot quiet, also had the effect as clever advertising matter, due to the fact that patrons of the theatre, after carrying the card out and reading it, would drop it some place on the street where it would attract the attention of many more people.

"WILL SHOOT AT SIGHT"

Some Daredevil Booze-Carriers Display Bargain Prices to Smugglers' Boats — Reports About Tremendous Amount Recently Sneaked Ashore Called "Pipe Dreams."

Stirred by reports that a fleet of twenty-seven rum runners was hovering off the Jersey coast, ready to discharge its wet cargo at the first opportune moment, indignant over the rumors that 50,000 cases of whisky had been landed near Atlantic Highlands on Thursday night, and spurred to additional activity by the demand from Washington for an explanation of conditions, the Federal prohibition enforcement authorities of New York and New Jersey met in secret conference at prohibition headquarters yesterday to plan another "death blow" against the defiant forces of the smuggling bootleggers.

[illegible]

SATURDAY, JANUARY 13, 1923
THEATRES. THEATRES.

Broadway's NEWEST Romeo

[illegible]

See Romeo and His Juliet in
D. W. Griffith's Masterpiece

One Exciting Night

STRAND THEATRE

[illegible]

AT POPULAR PRICES

Minneapolis (Minn.) News
1-8-23

GARRICK—A little white girl is born [illegible] Africa. The father [illegible]. The mother dies. The child is [illegible] out of her birthright.

Change of scene years later to civilization—and what a picture! [illegible] spooky house; bootlegger kings [illegible] ing to the death; the grown girl and her lover fighting for life and for happiness; the masked villain, tip-toeing, running, stabbing; sliding panels and turning doorknobs; the crooked man and his sweetie turning half white with fright; detectives galloping, threatening, fighting for $100,000—and the swirling, tempestuous storm!

That's what you see in "One Exciting Night" at the Garrick and never was a film more appropriately named. It fits one, thrills you with wild imagining, its mystery, deliberately [illegible] but a hair-breadth [illegible] with the love thread running through it the strong girl.

Fear! Yes. Mystery! Yes. Comedy! Yes. Murder! Yes. Nothing startling about that, we know, but when all is said and done, within the author's [illegible] of the figures of human passions, motives as they are. There's more to know how a picture should end.

[illegible]

Dry Navy Takes 2 Ships Of Sea-Rum Market Fleet

Prices Are Being Brought Here—Liquor Selling Continues Despite Denial of Prohibition Officials—Prepare to Cope with Smuggler Today.

[illegible]

CLEVELAND (O.) PLAIN-DEALER
JANUARY 8, 1923

For Film Fans by Q. E. D.

"Twelve Greatest People In Motion-Picture Industry" Cited And Some Disagreement Expressed.

SOME months ago, Motion Picture News laid plans for a novel stunt. The News was anxious to establish a Hall of Fame populated by the "twelve greatest people of the motion-picture industry." To this end, they invited 100 people, good men and true, to constitute a jury. Each juror was to make an individual choice of 12 persons and append to each name briefly his reasons for the selection. The 12 persons appearing the greatest number of times on each of the individual lists were thus automatically elected to the Hall of Fame. The 100 men composing the jury were drawn from every walk of the picture industry, from the highest to the most humble—critics, directors, producers, distributors, exhibitors, etc.

IN the holiday number of the magazine [illegible] published the Hall of Fame. We quoted the lucky recipients, starting off with Griffith, who was first place. We shall content ourself with quoting only one from the many "reasons" which the jurors contributed from its honor roll.

[illegible]

Ten Best Films of 1922. But back to our muttons, as our esteemed confrere would say. We were agreeably pleased when, in last Sunday's New York Times, James O. Spearing, the paper's film critic, also voiced his disapproval in no uncertain terms. Says Mr. Spearing: "Obviously it is no list of the 12 greatest creators of worthwhile motion-pictures, nor even of the 12 persons most responsible for the development of what may be called the art of cinematography. Anyone making up such a list would accept some of those named, probably half of them, but for the rest he would look among the directors who have created beautiful and expressive motion-pictures, the scenarists who have supplied them with sure and intelligent continuities, the actors who are true pantomimists and the students of the screen who have endeared it and pointed the way to genuine cinematographic creation."

He then mentions Hugo Munsterberg's "The Photoplay," Vachel Lindsay's "The Art of the Moving Picture" and Dr. Victor O. Freeburg's "The Art of Photoplay Making" as being volumes which were of the greatest influence upon the improvement of the motion picture.

MR. SPEARING not being thoroughly [illegible] with the Year Book which Terry Ramsaye is preparing for his set of inspiration for the Hall of Fame, Mr. Ramsaye, who is having a history of the motion picture which is now appearing serially in The Photoplay, [illegible] for the [illegible] and [illegible] as "[illegible] Ramsaye's method is simple. He asks the [illegible] to submit the list of [illegible] who have [illegible]

[illegible]

Newark Sunday News 1/4/23

Twelve Selected for Movies' Hall of Fame

List Made Up by Jury of 100 Includes Producers, Directors, Exhibitors and Players.

Griffith First and Zukor Next

The Motion Picture News, one of the most widely circulated trade journals in the film industry, recently invited 100 persons, connected in various ways with the production and exhibition of photo plays, to select the twelve men and women who had contributed most to the success of motion pictures. The jury was considered conversant with the conditions within the industry and well informed regarding the individuals engaged in it. Each juror contributed a list and the twelve persons whose names appeared most often in the lists were automatically elected to the magazine's "1923 Hall of Fame."

D. W. Griffith led the list with a total of eighty-nine votes. Long an outstanding figure in the industry, it would appear to be inevitable that he should receive an overwhelming majority. Some of the reasons given for his selection follow: "The greatest creative and directorial genius in the industry;" "For the masterpieces he has created;" "Establisher of the first well-defined school of directing;" and "Because of his achievements as a director and because he has been a guide to others in the profession."

Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, was next on the list with seventy-two votes. To him were attributed the following distinctions: "Greatest organization mind in the industry;" "Centralized finance and business;" "Organization and stabilization in production," and "Vision and imagination."

Samuel L. Rothafel, veteran exhibitor, was the next selection and the only one chosen in his field. He has acted as managing director of such New York theaters as the Regent, Strand, Rivoli, Rialto and is now at the Capitol, where, as many patrons of the "movies" assert, the most excellent presentations of motion pictures may be seen. He has done much to bring music of the finest class to the film play house and to the attention of thousands who otherwise might never hear first rate compositions adequately performed. He is described as "the originator of a class of entertainment that has elevated the business to a great extent. He is in a class by himself as an exhibitor, having done more toward the exhibition of pictures from an artistic standpoint than any other single individual."

Mary Pickford is the only woman chosen. Of her it was said: "The star who did most for the general uplift of pictures and the greatest actress ever developed in the industry," "whose sweetness and clean characterizations have brought delight into millions of homes and more millions of hearts," and "made the world love her."

Charlie Chaplin was selected by fifty-five jurors and followed Mary on the list. From his advocates in the contest he evoked this flattering comment: "He is the first really great genius to express himself wholly on the screen," "wonderful pantomime artist and greatest character of his kind the world has ever known," "an artist unsurpassed in screen comedy," "the only comedian who can be counted upon no matter what the vehicle," and "for making more motion picture 'fans' than any other twelve persons combined."

Douglas Fairbanks followed in order. George Ade's comment on the "Mary" was: "Because his manly and heroic impersonations and magnificent productions have set a real standard for other stars." Others said: "Because of his great confidence in the future of the industry, putting more of his own money into it than any other individual," and "for vision, genre and producing ability which created that sublime screen masterpiece, Robin Hood."

George Eastman, who placed raw film manufacture on a standardized basis was next. Charles Urban said of him: "A manufacturer who has contributed the finest of raw material without which there could not have been the progress that has been made." "For being the inspiration of the many important improvements which have come from his organization," and another voter.

Thomas Edison was honored next. His inventive genius has contributed to making possible and developing the motion picture.

Louis B. Mayer, producer and executive, Marcus Loew, exhibitor and executive, Jesse L. Lasky, producer and executive, and Adolph Zukor, producer and executive, completed the list.

Prior to Griffith, producers and executives were not considered. Griffith was selected because of his work as a director. Zukor, Lasky, Mayer and Loew were selected because of their executive ability. Chaplin was selected because of his work as a comedian. Fairbanks because of his work as a comedian and producer. Mary Pickford because of her work as a star. Edison because of his work as a pioneer. Eastman because of his work in film manufacture. Rothafel because of his work as a film exhibitor.

Rothafel, Eastman, Edison, Chaplin, Fairbanks and Pickford were selected by the jury because of their work in the industry, not because of their work in other fields.

Griffith was selected because of his work as a director, Zukor, Lasky, Mayer and Loew because of their executive ability, and Rothafel because of his work as a film exhibitor.

Rothafel, Eastman, Edison, Chaplin, Fairbanks and Pickford were selected because of their work in the industry, not because of their work in other fields.

Griffith was selected because of his work as a director, Zukor, Lasky, Mayer and Loew because of their executive ability, and Rothafel because of his work as a film exhibitor.

PHILADELPHIA NORTH AMERICAN
JAN 9 1923

STANTON

'One Exciting Night' Entertainingly Grisly and Creepy

In his latest photoplay creation, "One Exciting Night," at the Stanton, D. W. Griffith has departed entirely from his usual custom of presenting a dramatic subject in a spectacular way. Instead he has put all of his energy into making as grisly and creepy a picture as could possibly be made. There are no pictures of human failings, and the remedies for them, but sheer spookiness and hilarious comedy.

"One Exciting Night" is cut from the same pattern as the play, "The Bat," even in some of its titling, which has a number of phrases used in that play. A murder of a wealthy man leads to all sorts of folks coming to his home in the hope of finding his money. There are any number of persons who could easily be suspected of killing, but the identity is carefully hidden. In fact, it is a little too carefully diverted. To see several persons in whispered conferences leads one almost to believe that the old gentleman killed himself.

Carol Dempster is seen as the heroine, and presents a very attractive and at times pathetic picture. Her portrayal of terror, when eyes peer in at the window, doors open, and hands reach out from nowhere and clutch, is highly realistic. It nearly sets one's teeth chattering. Henry Hull is the leading man, and enacts his role with his accustomed energy, but there is nothing particularly distinctive about his impersonation.

The chief comedy diversion is provided by Porter Strong, who is seen as a negro butler. The effect on him of the various events mentioned above are at times screamingly funny, and he makes the most of every opportunity, altho at no time does he overdo it.

After a number of mysterious comings and goings, killings and disappearances, a storm is required to clear up the mystery, and the spectator finds that there are any number of reasons for the events. As for the storm itself, it falls rather flat because it is done to death. It loses all semblance of realism when enormous trees fly thru the air, and yet human beings are still able to walk and run in it, to be sure a bit unsteadily, but they walk, nevertheless.

Human nature is capable of almost anything, and that is why Griffith has been able to pile horror upon horror upon his heroes and heroines in other pictures. But nature cannot be made to do any more than she will, even in the movies. And in this storm Griffith has overdone nature.

ST. LOUIS (MO.) POST-DISPATCH
JANUARY 15, 1923

"ONE EXCITING NIGHT" GREAT MYSTERY FILM

'The Dangerous Age' and 'Making a Man' Also Are Interesting Moving Picture Offerings.

D. W. GRIFFITH runs "The Bat" a close second with "One Exciting Night," which opened yesterday at the Pershing. This is a story devised solely for entertainment and it fills its purpose admirably. From the very start, an atmosphere of mystery is thrown about the movements of the various characters. There are a stolen baby, a house reputed to be haunted, a hidden treasure, plotting bootleggers, a mysterious stranger, two murders, a detective and all the trimmings to keep the audience guessing until the final climax.

Panels move out uncannily from the walls, gripping hands reach out and grasp their unsuspecting victims. As in all good plays of this kind, the tension would be unbearable without comedy. In this instance it is supplied by Porter Strong in the role of Romeo Washington, a negro who wanders into the house of mystery and is "pestered by de hants." He lifts this part to the level of a stellar role. As was the case with "The Bat," those who see the film are asked not to reveal the plot. It is sufficient to say that the mystery turns around the hiding of the bootlegger's half-million dollars and the parentage of a girl who loves a man who is suspected of two murders which occur in the course of the action. No Griffith picture is complete without one big smashing scenic thriller. In this instance it is a most realistic storm and chase which lead up to the unmasking of the real villain. The picture is entertaining all the way.

PORTLAND (ORE.) JOURNAL
JANUARY 22, 1923

Blue Mouse Has Mystery That Thrills

By C. T. H.

SOMEBODY killed the boss bootlegger who had amassed half a million. Who was it? and what became of the money?

A greedy uncle paid an adventuress to hide the child so he could inherit her fortune. Where's the baby now?

A black savage in the Congo picked up a gold locket. What did he do with it?

This is as much of the story "One Exciting Night" as really ought to be told if those film fans who haven't seen David W. Griffith's latest production now showing at the Blue Mouse don't want to have the beautiful mystery spoiled for them by advance solution.

Timid but thrill-loving maidens sat and shivered delicately all around us while the film was being run finished. For the story contained all the elements of excitement: Love, exploration, crime, crooked police, the black mask, clutching hands reaching out of the dark, comedy in the kitchen with a terrified black man and a nimble but fear-stricken "yellow gal," a mighty storm that uproots trees and almost allows the murderer-thief to escape.

And suspense! When that big trunk starts to topple, with the beautiful heroine imprisoned by a heavy lock beneath, the theater audience had to hold on to their seats.

Henry Hull is the leading male actor of the piece, with the demure Carol Dempster as the girl about to be married and all for money. Porter Strong has the comedy in the role of the negro servant. An earnest endeavor and excellent work is in evidence throughout the entire production.

PHILADELPHIA INQUIRER
JAN 9 1923

"ONE EXCITING NIGHT"

A Picture of Thrills and Shivers at Stanton

With a great to-do of ghostly hands and moving shadows, of skulking forms and mysterious sounds, D. W. Griffith has restored into a new and, if the truth must be told, far less successful field than his old one in "One Exciting Night" the picture that begins an indefinite engagement at the Stanton yesterday.

Every possible device and appliance that makes for the production of thrills and shivers has been used by Mr. Griffith in the making of this mystery melodrama, but the producer's old methods have not been entirely neglected either, and the usual leaders of sentimental sweetness that played such a prominent part in "Orphans of the Storm," in "Way Down East" and other Griffith productions are also to be found in abundance. Throughout the play Mystery—with a capital M—Grand Mystery and Mysterious Mystery stalk hand in hand with Love, as personified by Carol Dempster in very thin silk gowns, and Henry Hull in the leading part, who characterizes all of Griffith's leading men, looks the sentiments which prompt the picture or some of its characters to take of many good women.

There is, of course, a mystery, there is a band of mystery in which the author plays a part, there is a mysterious man who wears the inevitable black cape, and there is a young lady who seems to be quite as at home in the lighting and appearance as any of the mysterious men. There is a mysterious house, there is a mysterious lady who seems to be in the house, there is a mysterious man who seems to be in the

NEWARK, N. J. NEWS

JAN 19 1923

In the Theaters

"One Exciting Night" Shown at the Rialto

Griffith's Latest Production Is Compound of Mystery Plays, Melodrama and Comedy.

Takes Firm Hold of Audiences

Capacity audiences witnessed the initial presentations of David Wark Griffith's latest film production, "One Exciting Night," at the Rialto Theater yesterday, each in turn being served with a two-hour compound of screened mystery that kept eyes closely focussed on the silver sheet. Mr. Griffith has created nothing forceful or deeply moving in this play, but has not failed in making a picture which sustains interest and entertains one throughout its eleven reels. In doing this he has resorted to all the old clutching-hand, masked-face and sliding-panel dodges made familiar in melodrama. So ingeniously has he used them that the effect on spectators is quickening.

The story seems like a wild mixture of the more recent mystery dramas, the old-time "meller" and the riotous film comedy, but so absorbing and fast moving is it that an audience is unlikely to consider its sources or the material out of which it is contrived while enjoying its gratifying developments. All big present-day pictures, it would appear, can not get along without an impressive display of nature's warring elements, and "One Exciting Night" is not a bit behind the times in this respect. Driving wind and rain, with the uprooting of trees, brings the film to such a climax as must cause many spectators to wonder over the possibilities of artificial representation before the camera.

With all its hectic features, the film is superficial in its denotement of human nature, and one follows its course with a curiosity that seldom gives way to a thrill. There is plenty to amuse in the production. The antics of Porter Strong, working in burnt cork as a panicky negro, provokes laughter without detracting from the interest exerted by the mysterious proceedings.

The action moves slowly at first, being introduced by an African scene in which a baby girl, left motherless, falls under the care of a woman who subtlmes with the uncle of the child to appropriate its inheritance. A Kaffir, loyal to the mother of the little one, witnesses their plan. Later the woman is seen in America posing as the mother of the girl, Agnes Harrington, now grown to womanhood. She would force Agnes into marriage with a middle-aged man, but the girl falls in love with John Fairfax, a young Southerner.

In order to see more of Agnes, John invites her, with others, to a reception at his home, long unused by his family and which he reopens for the occasion.

It has not been unoccupied, however, having been used as the headquarters of a band of bootleggers, the leader of which is killed in one of the upper rooms of the house the night before the reception. He is known to have secreted a bag containing a large sum of money somewhere in the dwelling prior to his death.

It is during the reception that several mysterious figures appear in the house, all of them being eager to unearth the money left by the bootlegger. Perplexing and interesting incidents ensue. Masked men stalk around and peer into the house, gain entrance, dash through halls and terrorize its occupants. Another murder is committed and the scening around continues, meanwhile holding its grip in one's attention. The home ends in the play especially are gathered together, the mystery is cleared, love has its way and the heroine discovers the inheritance from her in her infancy.

Carol Dempster, who plays the role of Agnes, is appealing in appearance and shows acting ability at times, but seems, often, inclined to be a puppet in the hands of the director. Among the others are Henry Hull, Morgan Wallace, Charles King, Margaret Seale, Jack Cooper and Lena Harrison.

The photography was notably fine from a technical standpoint, the many exciting scenes being filmed with clearness and having lost little of their force. There are some fine examples of photography in the production, and of their importance it should have credit and be a guide to others.

The scenery, including some of the finest bizarre examples of staging it is, contributes to the success of the production. Special mention should be made of the lighting effects, which are at times wonderful.

It is safe, nevertheless, to predict that it is nothing we are at a loss.

Newark (N.J.) Call 1/20/23

Minneapolis (Minn) Commercial 2-3-23

"One Exciting Night"

(United Artists)

Entertainment value.....Good, if intent is appreciated.
Production.....Good.
Exploitation.....Very good
Appeal.....Those who can appreciate satire

"One Exciting Night" is a picture that will be both praised and condemned. There are some who will see in it a clever satire on mystery thrillers of the stage, which have been enjoying quite a vogue, but to Mr. Average Fan it will be but a conglomeration of hokum, theatrical thrills and slapstick, which in the aggregate represents to him so much "stuff," a concoction of these ingredients which somehow failed to mix.

The picture is one that will be talked about, and is therefore valuable from the box office standpoint, with D. W.'s name also adding to its drawing power. Whether nightmares, such as this, will be accepted as entertainment by the masses is conjectural. It is certain that the picture is not going to help Griffith's prestige any, as to most people it is hopelessly jumbled, pointless and much too long. It was made, apparently, without great expense, for there are no big sets and no "names" of box office consequence. The picture's highlight is a big storm scene which is greatly overdone. There are a couple of murders, and the identity of the murderer is effectively concealed up to the big climax, but because of the confusing incidents, the suspense is not maintained as it should be in a mystery play of this type with the action draggy at times. Some good comedy is introduced, with Porter Strong, blackface, doing the honors. Irma Harrison runs away with acting honors, although Carol Dempster and Henry Hull head the cast.

The story hinges around a quest for a half a million dollars hidden in a house by a bootleger killed by his confederates. The identity of the murderer is carefully concealed, and a number of the inhabitants of the house suspected of the crime, before it is finally solved.

If your patrons want a concoction like this, you can make money with it. It is novel, to say the least, but unless your patrons take it in the "kidding" sense which we believe Griffith intended the picture to be taken, you may have "One Terrible Night" if you play this picture. (Length, 11 reels).

Carol Dempster, who has the star role in D. W. Griffith's "One Exciting Night."
Moffett Studio.

PITTSBURGH (PA.) PRESS
JANUARY 21, 1923

Portland Herald 1/4/23

GRIFFITH IN NEW MOOD AT STRAND

The Great Director Demonstrates That He Is Not Always Serious

By MADELEINE LOUIS

David W. Griffith has given to the world so much of genuine pleasure and real knowledge by way of the screen; he has created so many motion picture stars, without whose brilliance the films would be rather dismal, that we have come to regard his undertakings with something of reverence. We believe he is a great director, distinctly original, a bit high-brow and always almost painfully in earnest. We approach his productions expecting him to live up to past performances. Thus "The Birth of a Nation" remains the most satisfying picture we ever saw, while his "Broken Blossoms" stands out among the three or four greatest. It is true that "Orphans of the Storm" proved a real disappointment, and the occasional foolish touch almost constitutes a [illegible]

[illegible]

DETROIT (MICH.) NEWS & JOURNAL

LAUGHS CHASE WEIRD EVENTS

And Griffith Keeps You Mystified and Entertained Until Last Fade-Out.

By HAROLD HEFFERNAN.

D. W. Griffith's "One Exciting Night" is certainly a lot more than that. It is a horrible, gruesome night; a night full of masked killers, hidden safes, sliding panels, revolving bookcases, hidden hands groping out of doorways and all the old serial thrillers matched up with some modern melodramatic atmosphere that Griffith no doubt lifted from "The Bat" and "The Cat and the Canary." It is decidedly novel film entertainment and, as being presented at the Broadway Strand this week, with special back stage effects, it will doubtless prove one of the most talked of pictures of the current season.

In spite of its many harrowing situations, "One Exciting Night" does not leave the depressing effect felt by most murder-mysteries because the crimes have not been unduly stressed and the action is nicely interspersed with some low comedy by a blackface servant who is more afraid than you are. When the suspense becomes too great and Griffith fears you'll jump right out of your seat and yell, he hurries this gentleman into the foreground. Then, after you've had your hearty laugh, back goes the director to the grim business of crime and robbery again. Porter Strong plays the frightened servant and if you can't still your jumping pulses long enough to laugh aloud at his antics then your system isn't strong enough to chance a trip to this theater.

* * *

A refreshing and charming little love story is also contained in "One Exciting Night." It is an ultra-rapid romance because the hero convincingly woos and wins the lady of his heart and defeats his hated rival all within the few hours in which the odd events transpire. It sounds impossible but it is effectively carried out, nevertheless.

The story drags to some extent at the start and labors heavily under the stress of establishing seemingly unimportant incidents, but once the house party in the deserted mansion of the hero gets under way all is forgotten under the spell of fast moving events. A half million dollars in currency is hidden in a satchel in the house, which has been used as a rendezvous by bootleggers. Everybody in the house is apparently attempting to find the satchel and when one bootlegger is killed by another (whose face is concealed) the hero is blamed. Later the hero's chum screams and falls dead from a knife wound and the hero is also suspected of this crime.

Then as his spectators are thoroughly bewildered Griffith introduces a wind and rainstorm climax that is a technical triumph. He chases all his characters right out in the wet where great trees are bending and crashing to earth. It is truly a tremendous effect and leaves one almost physically exhausted at the end. Here comes heroine just before the slightest of all the trees pins her beneath its trunk and together they arise and catch the villain. And sure enough, it turns out to be the man you most logically would have pointed to as the villain but didn't. Thus in a comedy sports a story of this sort to make a logical climax.

* * *

Although there are only two film appearances to the cast, the acting is unusual if only for its excellent acting. Carol Dempster, the heroine, has been cast in a number of Griffith's films in recent months and shows that she is developing into a very good actress. Her work in this film is very good. Henry Hull, who plays the hero, is generally pleasing. Porter Strong is generally pleasing. There are many others in the cast, but they are not prominent in the story.

[illegible]

Carol Dempster, "One Exciting Night"

DUFFERIN TERRACE at Quebec with its open air skating rink and the ski jump beside the Chateau Frontenac.

CAROL DEMPSTER, who has the principal feminine role in D. W. Griffith's "One Exciting Night."

"One Exciting Night" Contest Tied Up with Newspaper

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind.—The manager of the Circle theater here [illegible] "One Exciting Night," [illegible]

[illegible]

Toledo, O. Newspaper 1-16-23

"ONE EXCITING NIGHT" CONTINUES TO FOOL 'EM

WELL, have you been able to figure out the mystery in "One Exciting Night?" This Griffith feature, held for a second week at the Valentine, seems to be a popular amateur detective sport. So far there doesn't seem to be anyone able to figure it out until the final scenes. Everybody in the audience usually is positive of the solution, but near the end you can hear the surprised "Ohs."

LOS ANGELES (CALIF.) HERALD

[illegible]

HENRY HULL and CAROL DEMPSTER
IN
"ONE EXCITING NIGHT"
at the STRAND THEATRE

Detroit (Mich) Free Press 1/28/23

Carol Dempster, who has the star role in D. W. Griffith's "One Exciting Night."
Moffett Studio.

Kansas City (Mo) Journal 1/21/23

Henry Hull and Carol Dempster, in "One Exciting Night," showing this week at the Newman theater.

Nashville (Tenn) Banner 1-28-23

CAROL DEMPSTER, heroine in D. W. Griffith's "One Exciting Night."

CLIPPING FROM
Los Angeles (Cal) Herald Bulletin
1-31-23

THIS EXHIBITOR PUTS "ONE EXCITING NIGHT" IN "CLASS BY ITSELF" AND SAYS IT "SAVED THE DAY"

Declaring that D. W. Griffith's great mystery picture, "One Exciting Night," is in a class by itself and that it "saved the day" in warding off the usual pre-Xmas holiday slump in business, F. W. Mausert of the Rialto Theatre, Glens Falls, N. Y., has sent a message to United Artists corporation praising the picture in most enthusiastic and emphatic terms.

"One Exciting Night" was booked for a three day engagement at the Rialto, Glens Falls, with the expressed purpose of ascertaining what the picture would do when put on without any special or extensive publicity, advertising or exploitation campaign. "Let the picture work for itself," was the idea. There was no special advance campaign. The publicity consisted of matter taken from the United Artists press book and the advertising was kept down to the usual space, carrying the ready made advertising copy from the campaign book.

And this is what Mr. Mausert has to say about the business done and about the picture:

"'One Exciting Night' has saved the day. The usual holiday slump, at least as far as the three day showing which ended tonight is concerned, has failed to appear. Instead, we have packed our house with the most enthusiastic crowds of the season. We have endeavored to run in this attraction showing it continuously and we have fully believe that this picture

MADISON (WIS.) STATE JOUR
FEBRUARY 6, 1923

"ONE EXCITING NIGHT" IS FAST MOVING FILM

BY FIRST NIGHTER

Events of a lifetime crowd into D. W. Griffith's "One Exciting Night" at the Parkway. A haunted house that makes Edgar A. Poe's "House of Usher" pale into insignificance, offers sanctuary to thieves, murderers and a motley group of bootleggers. Door knobs are turned by unseen fingers, long skinny hands reach out for victims from the folds of heavy portieres; messy ghosts skulk behind sliding wall panels, thin white clammy things stalk up the staircase and pace the halls. The lair rendezvous can not compare to the terrible secrets locked in the Patrice home.

Greed and Fear Hill Love and jeopardize Life in the Griffith scheme of things. Dramatic gems grace the action of men, and are endowed with human significance.

"One Exciting Night" has the combination of widely diverging parts of action. A helpless infant grows to womanhood, and during her heritage through the inability of her uncle disclosed before Death, she met her "true love" in the house of horrors where crimes and secrets of crimes had gathered for the sole purpose of seeking out a treasure that had been the memory of a generous master a few days before. The hard fisted gangsters of the crime syndicate the police with the gang at its heels "Ka-ran."

Many of the Griffith concepts were repeated in the filming of his latest production. Point and the moderate of the action always serve to the mind. The drawing together of the parents should be made into a pleasant story with a pleasing climax. A lack of probably disposing the use of sensation in some chapter the use of sensation and character in another, brought up the old question of the use of sensation in pictures.

Some of the Griffith concepts were repeated in the filming of his latest production. Point and the moderate of the action always serve to the mind. The drawing together of the parents should be made into a pleasant story with a pleasing climax. A lack of probably disposing the use of sensation in some chapter the use of sensation and character in another, brought up the old question of the use of sensation in pictures.

CLIPPING FROM
DETROIT (MICH.) NEWS & JOURNAL
JAN 28 1923

Griffith Tricks Public

MYSTERY NOW IN FILMS

By HAROLD HEFFERNAN

SLIDING panels, faces at the window, revolving book cases, shots in the night, a cloaked and masked killer, misleading clues and comedy servants—all of these and more, too, have been trotted out by D. W. Griffith to make capital of the public's current craze for mystery in its drama.

"One Exciting Night" is the title of this whimsy of the film master and while its cast numbers only 15 players and its scenic investiture requires no more than one lavish interior and a smashing storm scene, it will probably make more money for Griffith than several of his costlier and more elaborate efforts of the past few years.

Contrary to general opinion, Griffith has not accumulated a fortune from his 15 years of mingling in the film world. His name has become identified with the finest productions and his genius has been turned to the development of such inventions that have improved picture presentations than any other figure in the industry, but he has not profited in a measure commensurate with his notable accomplishments. Commenting on what some state to be his lack money, Frederick Tyson Smith, in Photoplay, remarks that brilliant productions seem to contract to be a thirsty mind, a robust heart, three sets of clothes and a watch. He and Griffith is frankly out to take some of the profits of

The Hall and other stage mystery plays that have been revolving lately in the theatre in repertoire or repertory, by actually spent a few evenings with "The Hall" and the heavy dates to get to work on the script for "The Dressing Room." Then it was the problem of work, the people who figure in the story, the scenes, the settings, the lighting, the photography, the cutting, the titling, the cast, the production, the release, the exhibition, the reviews, the reactions, the results, the profits, the losses, the lessons, the conclusions, the deductions, the inductions, the reductions, the seductions, the productions, the productions, the product

San Francisco Cal Examiner 4/5/23

Rhymed Reviews

By ROSE PELSWICK

"One Exciting Night"—Portola Theater.

BOUNDED during melodrama; haunted howls and doors that slam;
Clutching hand and dizzy doorknobs as mysterious entree;
Masked detectives who had trailed the salient suspects till they nailed them—

But the program has requested not to give the thing away.

EACH one madly double-crossed for a treasure that was lost,
Up the housful; there's a heroine who suffered long and well,
For, engaged, it drove her frantic when another grew romantic,
And she had to turn himdown as—but they've asked we shouldn't tell.

SO confusingly they trotted to discover who had plotted
For the half a million cold that was apparently concealed.
While a comedy was teeming through the complicated scheming
That distracts one from just what it is they do not want revealed.

AND a photograph involving what it is you're set to solving
Fooled a villain in an overcoat who staggered in the spot.
Two men killed and others going—wrong ones shot and no one knowing
That the villain was—but that would be interpreting the plot.

Carol Dempster.

THEN the well-known Griffith climax; striking storm that takes its time; and—
Idental revelation and a shuffled expose,
Leaves one thrilled and chilled and barfed as the cryptic cues are unfolded
While the film—but they've requested we not give the thing away.

PORTOLA SHOWS GRIFFITH'S FILM, "ONE EXCITING NIGHT"

Griffith has gone to the extreme of melodrama in filming "One Exciting Night." This picture he named descriptively. On the screen of the New Portola, where the latest Griffith work is being featured, you will see about everything that "The Bat" offers in the way of thrills and mystery—and then some.

You will see the secret openings in the walls, the sliding panels, the mysterious hands, the moving fireplaces, the mysterious killings, the secret searchings for the half million dollars, the appearances and disappearances of masked men. And all these things are mystifying, despite at anything are almost sure to be wrong—just as in "The Bat," in this "One Exciting Night" you will finally see somebody, cloaked and masked, elude the detectives in the old mansion and make his getaway with the half million.

But the heroine detects what the detectives miss. She rushes after the mysterious thief. The young hero, also observing, follows; but, having fallen under suspicion, he is handicapped by handcuffs. What chance is there now to catch the agile and fleeting robber, who has obtained a good start?

But Griffith knows how to do these things.

He turns on the greatest storm the films ever carried—a hurricane. And it has been said that the hurricane of this production was genuine. There are torrents of rain, with wind that knocks over the trees and blows them about. Soon the thief's cloak and mask are blown away and you see that he is—well, one of the numerous men in turn suspected by you. The little heroine follows resolutely and bravely. The young hero proceeds along as well as possible. Oh, but it is a terrible storm! Falling trees catch and hold the girl. How they contrived these scenes without killing her is to me the greatest of the mysteries of "One Exciting Night." The storm beats down the thief, and he cannot get away. Suddenly the young hero makes his way to the brave little heroine, and handcuffs as he is, he contrives to extricate her from the clutch of the fallen trees—but only just in time, as the next instant greater trees crash down over the spot where she had been imprisoned. Triumph comes to the young lovers in the capture of the robber.

Comedy, of which there is no lack in the earlier episodes, returns to show the colored Homer of the laughs in the play on sailing away as the hurricane picks up his cabin. And solution of all the mysteries brings to conclusion the two exciting hours of "One Exciting Night"—a romantic story for Griffith to do, but done in a Griffith way.

Carol Dempster and Henry Hull are the principals in the romantic part of the drama.

THOMAS MUNAN

BALTIMORE SUN
FEB 18 1923

For Film Fans by Q. E.

"One Exciting Night," A Departure For David Wark Griffith, Current At New Theater.

Jackson (Miss) Clarion Ledger 3/18/23

Pre-Views Griffith's New Production

Audience Requested to Keep Plot Secret

(Leroy Donnell)

Eight members of the local press, a score of prominent citizens and the staff of the Majestic Theater assembled last Monday morning for a special pre-viewing of D. W. Griffith's latest release, "One Exciting Night."

Before the house was darkened for the presentation, the manager of the Majestic requested that all give their solemn promise that they would not tell to any of their friends the plot of the play, how it ended, or about any part of the picture. Every person in the theater readily agreed to keep the facts secret and the picture started.

Twelve reels of celluloid, 12,000 feet of film, passed on the screen, depicting a mystery so intense, so thrilling, so weird, and so absorbing that not one person stirred from his seat until the startling climax. Griffith, the creator of "The Birth of a Nation," has made another great picture. Of a different caliber of his previous productions, and dwarfing all others for climaxes, thrills and humor. A mystery from the start, it surpasses the stirring productions of "The Bat" and "The Cat and the Canary," in plot and execution—secreting treasure, personal disappearance, puzzling homicide, hidden identity—mystery until the audience sat breathless!

The climax! Of course no Griffith picture would be truly Griffithesque without its great climax scene. And "One Exciting Night" has it. This time it is a storm, a torrential downpour of rain coupled with hurricane winds—trees are uprooted, houses unroofed, demolished—the hero catches the villain, the mystery is all explained and you wake from mystery land to realize you are only sitting in a motion picture theater.

It was requested that the plot should not be revealed, so what it is all about will have to remain a mystery—but feeling that half the pleasure would be spoiled by divulging the story the request is heeded and only the characters are brought forth.

C. H. Croker-King, the doctor in "Bull-Dog Drummond," leads his sinister eyes to a mysterious role in his clever way. Henry Hull, not content with the thrills of "The Cat and the Canary," plays the likable John Fairfax. Morgan Wallace as J. Rochmaine has a Dr. Jekyl and Mr. Hyde role. Carol Dempster plays the charming flapper who will make the unbelievers enthusiastic about the modern girl.

After all, it was a Griffith picture what more could be said?

"One Exciting Night" has been booked for a week's run at the Majestic theater three days beginning April 2.

"One Exciting Night" Is Given Hearty Reception

Something novel in the way of cinema productions has come with D. W. Griffith's "One Exciting Night", which began a three days' run at the Capitol yesterday. For sheer delight of entertainment one fails to recall when they have seen anything so out of the ordinary, odd and mysterious, and yet replete with the refreshing comedy characteristic of Griffith's efforts. The congregation last night sat in awe at certain stages of the picture, only to burst out in unrestrained laughter a few minutes later, then gasp when taken back to some uncanny act or scene quietly following.

Lurking figures slink stealthily thru the shrubbery. Someone shouts whoever happens to be standing in his way; doors open unexpectedly; secret panels slide mysteriously; the opposite wall acts as a crashing crescendo. One stitches one's apart and somebody stole pocketbook. A gruesome stab, a scintillating shadow, a shrilling complication; shouts, a haunted house to live. Horror, Mystery is the one principal of the story.

The lighting effects are wonderful, especially in the storm, which might be said to be a little overdrawn, or exaggerated. It is said Griffith and his cameraman experiment eleven weeks in making this one feature and as many as two men were used at one time in operating the mechanical properties. Most all roles reach to the highest, some methods are best of them in two hours and very soon and hours up to the end, quite over all play would Hades of Hollywood.

To the theater public, Griffith has introduced a new element in this photo. The night club idea and laughs that are sprinkled in it, making it seem to be a further relief from the tense situations. Henry Hull and Carol Dempster have leading roles. They are so good in one of these roles that we are sure of their being in all the more prominent roles in the future. Morgan Wallace is in his element as the villain. Frank Sheridan, Frank Wunderlee, Miss Grace Griswold, Miss Irma Harrison, Herbert Sutch, Percy Carr and Charles T. Mack, are all well made the roles.

The young actor of the year, in which the fairy reaches the climax when the mirror frame is unbearable, the parlor is the scene, and the lady of good manners and taste in parlance, the lady of good manners and taste in parlance, the lady of good manners and taste in parlance,

Lowell (Mass) Feb. 13 1922
Courier-Citizen

THE STRAND.

D. W. Griffith's Mystery Drama, One Exciting Night" Chief Attraction for the Entire Week—Also Will Rogers.

"One Exciting Night" a D. W. Griffith production is the stellar feature on the week's program at The Strand. There are other good contributions, but this stands out in the lead, and it's everything that has been said of it by the advance man. It has all the pleasing elements generally found in a high-grade picture production. Besides thrills, mystery and romance, the producer has injected some of the best humor that the screen has offered in some time. The telling of the story of "One Exciting Night" must be unfolded by the screen itself. To do otherwise would be depriving the prospective patrons during the remainder of the week's run of much entertainment. To skeletonize the facts about which the action swings, however, will not hurt a mite. It concerns a young girl, a satchel containing one-half million dollars, an da wild scramble to get possession of it. Henry Hull plays the leading male role and with him Miss Carol Dempster, shares in the honors. The author has not depended on the spectacular or relied on the stirring mob scenes, but has merely presented an excellent mystery drama in a true Griffith way. The hurricane scene is the storm of storms on the screen. It raised our hair a mite, and only Romeo Washington—a Negro character who is a whole show in himself—could smooth it down by his extremely amusing antics. Porter Strong makes this ambitious, job-hunting Romeo the life of the production so to speak, and his love-making to the maid, played by Irma Harrison, is done in a characteristic way. The mystery that overshadows everything else for the greater part of the story, remains unsolved up to the last minute, and when the curtain is finally raised and the identity made known the patrons will surely gasp. There are many side features injected into the presentation—all done in a complete, artistic and finished manner by Griffith. As a matter of truth, the entire production has a Griffithesque tinge to it that stands out at all times. And those who fully understand what Griffith means to screen productions, should realize that something different and satisfying is assured.

Will Rogers and his educated ropes are being featured also. Will has always had a hankering to do something with the ropes before the camera, and he now comes along with his newest comedy "The Ropin' Fool," in which he sways and switches about in the most amusing manner with his "bits of string." He does everything possible with them, even to lassoing a rat with a bit of twine. Here's a few of his stunts: Lassoes a rider about the waist without the rope going over his head; lasages a horse around the nose, around the front feet, back feet and both the back and front feet; throws two ropes with one hand and many other tricks. And to add to the entertainment he injects some of that brand of Rogers humor that is all his own. You remember that face? It's just as funny, while the sayings credited to the cowboy star, are more humorous than ever.

There are other contributions, including excellent musical numbers, that help make the bill one of merit.

Los Angeles Call 2/14/23
M.P. Bulletin

D. W. GRIFFITH'S "ONE EXCITING NIGHT" BREAKS HOUSE RECORD IN MINNEAPOLIS

Although following a very strong attraction, D. W. Griffith's mystery picture "One Exciting Night," a United Artists release, broke all house records in the first week of its run at the Gartick Theatre, Minneapolis.

"One Exciting Night" opened to tremendous business January 6, but the second day's business was even bigger and smashed all records for a single day's attendance at the Gartick. Capacity business continued all during the week, with a steady increasing building up toward the last of the week to another big opening for the second week of an indefinite engagement.

On the second day of the first week's run, besides a huge matinee, the evening performance brought out a patronage that required not only every house attaches but caused an early and anxious survey of the situation by city officials to see that the municipal regulation was not over-strained. The house management then took extra notice to see that the daily increasing crowds were handled in such a manner that there was no further cause for worry.

The advance campaign at the Gartick for "One Exciting Night" was carried on mainly through direct correspondence. There was a special lobby display of life-size representations of girls and printed posters. The musical score, as effective for this distinct feature, was given particular attention. A [illegible] campaign accompanied the engagement.

"One Exciting Night" [illegible] at the Empress Theatre, St. Louis, [illegible] records in this city.

Daily (Tyrone Pa) Feb 10, 1923

Baltimore (Md) News Feb 14-1923

The SCREEN

"ONE EXCITING NIGHT" PROVES THAT THE SCREEN CAN SCARE

By NORMAN CLARK

Type Of Film—MYSTERY MELODRAMA.
Title—"ONE EXCITING NIGHT."
Theatre—NEW.
Value—85 PER CENT.

"ONE EXCITING NIGHT" proves that it is possible for the screen to handle farcical mystery melodrama. The speaking stage has been doing it nicely and profitably for some years.

"One Exciting Night" represents the serious D. W. Griffith in a spoofing mood—on a holiday, as it were. He probably wished to see if it were possible to make a film scare the populace as the stage has done through the medium of "The Bat" and such plays. Of course, by this time "One Exciting Night" has proved to Mr. Griffith that such is possible. At just the moment when a nervous woman should let loose a delicious and modified scream, one did yesterday at the New Theatre. When you can make a woman give forth one of those dainty squeals it shows that she is interested in what you are saying and doing.

CAROL DEMPSTER.

There is a ton of fun in "One Exciting Night," supplied mostly by Romeo Washington, a negro servant in the Fairfax home—the house of mystery. A brave fellow is Romeo until ghastly hands protrude from walls, panels in walls slide, shots ring out, murder is done and the like. Then Romeo begins to think of his sins and to wonder if hell is as hot as it has been pictured.

You can almost rest assured that at the end of every Griffith picture there is going to be some sort of stirring event. "One Exciting Night" closes with a wind and rain storm. Mr. Griffith never does things half way. When he rains he rains and when he blows he blows! Never was there such a storm on land or sea as in this photoplay. Griffith uproots more trees in five minutes than Nature could do in a month of sustained storming.

Henry Hull and Carol Dempster are young and engaging in the leading roles.

M.P. World (NY) Feb. 10 1923

Records Broken by Griffith Production

Following an exceptional lithograph and "sniping" campaign, plus plenty of newspaper advertising space, D. W. Griffith's latest picture feature, "One Exciting Night," smashed all attendance records at regular prices during the first two weeks' run at the Stillman Theatre, Cleveland, Ohio, says United Artists. The picture could have stayed at the Stillman for a third week had it not been that previous bookings made it necessary to take it off.

F. Desburg, of the Loew's Ohio theatres, controlling the Stillman house, wrote as follows concerning the showing: "Just completed two weeks' run of 'One Exciting Night' at the Stillman Theatre, Cleveland. Business exceptionally fine both weeks. Picture enthusiastically received. Properly exploited, it should make a hit anywhere.

My Exhibitors Trade Review Feb 10-1923

MOTION PICTURE NEWS (N. Y. Edit) FEBRUARY 10, 1923

"ONE EXCITING NIGHT"
(United Artists)
PERSHING, ST. LOUIS, MO.—55c-$1.10. Business very good.
GARDEN, MILWAUKEE.—55c. Business good. Second week.

M.P. Picture News Feb 10 1923

"One Exciting Night" Praised
Chicago Critics Unanimous in Concerning Griffith's New Mystery Playe

Baltimore (Md) Post Feb 16 1923

Griffith's Lat...

Griffith Film Goes Over Big in Detroit

Los Angeles (Cal) Examiner Feb. 10. 1923

BY FLORENCE LAWRENCE

EXCITEMENT reigns—women scream from suspense or hysteria and giggle with nervous relief as the reels of the new Griffith play, "One Exciting Night," unroll at the Mission.

Men with black masks stalk about, mysterious shadows appear at doors and windows, and every once in a while some one falls dead of a knife or dagger blow.

In this new film, which admittedly resembles a recent successful stage play, Mr. Griffith provides a relief from the occasionally too obvious photoplay plot.

The whole picture becomes a game of "killer—killer—find the killer." Every one in the house party suspects his vis-a-vis of the crimes. Suspicion points at all and at no one. Doubt stalks in the wake of the innocent and danger threatens even the most wary.

For sheer mystery, Mr. Griffith has hit the bull's eye. That is, if the continued confusion of ideas among the spectators makes for the perfection of mystery. Certainly the solving of the problem is one for intricately attuned Sherlock Holmes, and not for a mere casual photoplay patron.

In fact it appears occasionally in this picture that the producer himself wasn't sure where to put the blame for the killing until he just had to make the final reel. However, that may be captious criticism. There is a comedy theme which is perhaps a bit overdone—and a storm.

Long Island or wherever Griffith now works must be beset by rain and wind—if his recent films are to be regarded as any evidence of climatic conditions. This one is noisier and more thrilling than the storm in "Way Down East," but it's more or less the same sort of an interval in the picture.

Carol Dempster as the girl, and Henry Hull as the young lover, are familiar and welcome figures on the silver sheet. Others in the cast are less well known and so many of them wear masks or strange make-up that their personality is hidden.

Los Angeles (Cal) Record Feb. 15 1923

GRIFFITH FILM LINES 'EM UP
By Gilbert Brown

The guests are trifling away the early evening hours in the old Kentucky mansion.

There's half a million dollars—the day's receipts of a lazy bootlegger—hidden upstairs, where the bootlegger was murdered last night.

Steps crunch the gravel outside. A grim face at the window. A flapper shrieks.

+ + +

The great guessing game is on. You're sitting beside the director's chair of D. W. Griffith, trying to unravel the mysterious threads of "One Exciting Night" as they are spun by the movie camera on the mission screen.

You can't do it. It's too hectic, breath-taking, unbelievable, funny, horrible and generally involved for analysis until after it's over and the orchestra plays "Lohengrin."

Then you'll probably decide it's the best double-barreled mystery story sprung since Clara Phillips kissed the county jail good-bye.

Griffith is said to have re-do "One Exciting Night" to ensure himself [illegible] serious attempts to enrich screen art. The result is spontaneous, slap-dash and refreshing.

Fine plot craftsmanship, Carol Dempster's elfin personality and a storm scene that puts our cinematic dramatist of the west coast in the shade, are the three things that make the film an ideal evening hour. Five glasses of lime toddy over the [illegible] wind and rain machines get in action.

Ah! Don't give away the story of the yarn's over the line. I promised I wouldn't, either.

[illegible] plays with Hull equals a Hungarian rhapsody by Franz Liszt. If you don't like the [illegible] go to hear it.

Los Angeles (Cal) Express Feb. 15-1923

B-I-N, Here's a Spooky Bunch of Thrills and Fun

By PEARL RALL

MISSION, "One Exciting Night"—Mystery story by Irene Sinclair; produced by D. W. Griffith; photographed by Hendrik Sartov.
CAST—Agnes Harrington, Carol Dempster; John Fairfax, Henry Hull; Romeo Washington, Porter Strong; J. Wilson Beckmaine, Morgan Wallace; the doctor, C. H. Crocker-King; Mrs. Harrington, Margaret Dale; the detective, Frank Sheridan; Samuel Jones, Frank Wunderlee; Auntie Fairfax, Grace Griswold; the maid, Irma Harrison; Clary Johnson, Herbert Sutch; the butler, Percy Carr; a guest, Charles E. Mack.

BEING pledged to secrecy as to the details of the plot of D. W. Griffith's latest photoplay, "One Exciting Night," precludes yielding to the first impulse one feels upon leaving the Mission theater this week. There remains but two things generally to say therefore. So I pass this on to you to tell your friends. "It's as good as 'The Bat,' or possibly 'The Rear Car' for thrills and a bit of merriment," and "Go, see it."

Most surprising thing about "One Exciting Night" is that a mystery story of such complication has been so deftly transmitted to the screen, with all the attendant thrills and not a few of the laughs. The storm scene is marvellous, but a trifle strong, a "whale of a blow," we'll say. Griffith has beaten the cyclone in "The Old Homestead," which is saying a lot. The motives for the later excitement in the murder of the various bootlegger in the closed home of a multimillionaire are just a trifle slow in the planting.

But when the company of guests and "suspects" have been assembled in that palatial menage any initial slowness is more than made up for. It reminds one strongly of that wild and woolly tale of Earl Derr Biggers, which George Cohen employed so successfully in "Seven Keys to Baldpate." Five candiates for the death chair in "One Exciting Night" present themselves and the spectator is as much mystified as the inmates of the Harrington home. It's a jolly assortment of types, too, one has to choose from as the guilty person.

As uncertain figures steal softly about in the outer darkness of the grounds, wild eyes peer curiously into shuttered windows at the guests, cloaked bandits rush madly about, sliding panels and wall shelves open mysteriously and ominously, disclosing eerie hands that drag unsuspecting folk into the gaping chasm to heaven knows where, one's hair rises unconsciously on one's head. But you keep your eyes glued to the screen lest you miss some of the nerve-racking details. Besides you are hot on the trail of the suspect, too. You almost agree with young Harrington at times that the detective is the chap.

There is a charming love interest, as light as the murder mystery you are watching. Dainty Carol Dempster and Henry Hull are the principals in this, with Morgan Wallace as a nifty villain. Miss Dempster, although with a way distinctly her own, reminds one slightly of Miss Gish, a former famous Griffith star; while Mr. Hull is even more like one of his predecessors, Robbie Harron of happy memory. Porter Strang furnishes the principal comedy relief, in the heroic figure of Romeo Washington, who wears a medal of honor which he neglects to inform associates was "found," not won. Charles E. Mack makes an effective contribution to the spine chillers.

There is little of the D. W. Griffith the picture-going public has come to know in "One Exciting Night." It is Griffith in his more frivolous mood and yet there is the touch Griffith attention to detail that marks him as superior. The photographic is particularly interesting in its night light and shadow effects that are truly atmospheric and artistic as well.

Cincinnati (Ohio) Times Star Feb. 15 1923

D. W. GRIFFITH'S new picture, "The White Rose," will be [illegible] on the screen [illegible] "One Exciting Night," we hear. This film [illegible] continues [illegible] the "pleasure" rather than the artistic. And what [illegible] please the box office. They do say he is still paying [illegible] "Intolerance" [illegible] "Broken Blossoms."

Moving Picture World (NYC) Feb. 24. 1923

Moving Picture World (NY) Feb 17 1923

Mystery Poster

For "One Exciting Night," J. M. Edgar Hart, of the Palace Theatre, El Paso, used a frame in the lobby showing a window before which sat the sweethearts in the Griffith picture. The window panes were translucent and in back was a stooping figure with claw-like hands, apparently about to snatch the boy baldheaded.

A careful adjustment of the lights brought out this figure in just the required vagueness. Too strong a shadow would detract from the suggestion of mystery. The vagueness is part of the sales value. Bill Johnson liked it so well he is routing it over the remainder of the territory. Hart does so well with his displays that it would pay to give him first crack at all the big stuff and then ship the display with the film. He has real ideas on lobby work.

N. Y. EXHIBITOR'S TRADE REVIEW
FEBRUARY 17, 1923

622

"ONE EXCITING NIGHT"
(United Artists)
PERSHING, ST. LOUIS, MO.—33c-$1.10. Second week, business very good.
GARDEN, MILWAUKEE.—55c. Business good. Second week.

M-P Picture News (NY) Feb 24 1923

"One Exciting Night" Teaser Ads Arouse Curiosity

Dallas, Texas.—Jean Finley, publicity director of the Old Mill theatre, ran effective teaser ads on "One Exciting Night" for more than a week in advance of the run.

These ads did not reveal the title of the picture and were so designed as to dominate the page on which they appeared in the newspapers. There were five different type ads, the first composed of five circles with one within another; the second ad consisted of four circles with the words, "It Thrills," in the center; the third ad contained three circles with the words, "What? When? Who? Where?—Thrills"; the fourth ad contained two circles with the title of the picture, "One Exciting Night," in the center and in one corner the Old Mill theatre, and the final ad was an announcement.

As an advance stunt, Mr. Finley sent out invitations to five hundred of the most influential people of Dallas to attend a midnight showing of "One Exciting Night" the night before the picture opened. The invitations admitted two people, and long before 11 o'clock large crowds were waiting outside the theatre to gain admittance.

M. P. News (Nye.) Feb. 24 1923.

"One Exciting Night" Liked in Detroit

"If 'One Exciting Night' doesn't run three weeks at the Strand we'll stop reviewing pictures and go to work," said J. L. K., critic for the Detroit Evening Times in his review of D. W. Griffith's mystery picture, a United Artists release, when it opened at the Broadway Strand theatre, Detroit, and started an indefinite run to a packed house. "Griffith has put another halo around the genius that 'shot' 'The Birth of a Nation.' Movie fans have seen Griffith in romance, Griffith in spectacle, Griffith in pathos and Griffith in war, but never Griffith in mystery melodrama. Try it just once. You'll like him in melodrama, too!"

"D. W. Griffith's 'One Exciting Night' is that and a lot more," said the critic for the Detroit News. "It is decidedly novel entertainment and will doubtless prove one of the most talked of pictures of the current season. Although there are only two film veterans in the cast, the picture is unusual if only for its excellent acting."

M. P. World Feb. 24 1923

Detroit Newspapers Give High Praise to "One Exciting Night"

"If 'One Exciting Night' doesn't run three weeks at the Strand we'll stop reviewing pictures and go to work," said J. L. K., critic for the Detroit Evening Times in his review of D. W. Griffith's mystery picture, a United Artists release, when it opened at the Broadway Strand theatre, Detroit. "Griffith has put another halo around the genius that 'shot' 'The Birth of a Nation'. Movie fans have seen Griffith in romance, Griffith in spectacle, Griffith in pathos and Griffith in war, but never Griffith in mystery melodrama. Try it just once. You'll like him in melodrama, too! Like the crack of a coachman's whip action unreels. Here comedy, tragedy, romance and mystery abide. Griffith detail takes the spotlight. For every move there's a reason, a logical foundation previously laid. Griffith in melodrama is the same master mind as Griffith in spectacle."

"D. W. Griffith's 'One Exciting Night' is that and a lot more," said the critic for the Detroit News. "It is decidedly novel entertainment and will doubtless prove one of the most talked of pictures of the current season. Although there are only two film veterans in the cast, the picture is unusual if only for its excellent acting."

"'One Exciting Night' is a picture that will please everybody," said the critic for the Detroit Free Press, "because it is full of the best elements of play building. There is not a dull moment and the most blase spectator is being surprised at every turn. Only Griffith, perhaps, could have done this thing so well. This picture is new and it is refreshing. For sheer delight of entertainment one pauses to recall when there has been anything on the screen to approach it."

Boston (Mass) Transcript March 27. 1923.

Random Notes on Griffith

Mr. D. W. Griffith's latest film, "One Exciting Night," started off with the pontifical adumbrations on virtue and vice, which we have come to associate with this great producer. Very soon it became clear that this was a method of disguising a mystery drama, full of spooks, and sliding panels, and unedifying death scenes. . . .

Rarely has a cinema audience laughed more than over the antics of a terrified negro man-servant and a little negress, his beloved, who become inextricably mixed up in the machinations of the various seekers for the treasure. Mr. Porter Strong and Miss Irma Harrison deserve a large reward for saving the film from becoming futile. Here, at any rate, the day of the mystery drama is drawing to a close, whatever it may be doing in America. The thrill-scene of a terrific rainstorm is simply a burlesque of the end of "Way Down East." . . . There is in the film an air of over-production and over-preciseness which does not improve it. Mr. Griffith desires to play with and fool the audience, and in this spirit the film must be taken. [The London Morning Post.

Chicago (Ill) News March 26. 1923

N. Y. EXHIBITOR'S TRADE REVIEW MARCH 10, 1923

"ONE EXCITING NIGHT"

(United Artists)

NEW THEATRE, BALTIMORE, MD.—25c. 25-50c. Unusually big business.

Exploitation.—Big newspaper adv. campaign.

Press Comment.—D. W. Griffith has outbatted "The Bat" in "One Exciting Night."—Post. "One Exciting Night" may have been made on an offday.—Sun. "One Exciting Night" is a new venture for "the wizard." Observing the enormous vogue of "The Bat" and other kindred "stage thrillers," he set out to give the screen a mystery story along the same lines and he certainly has succeeded to a large extent. —Evening Sun. "One Exciting Night" proves that it is possible for the screen to handle fardal mystery melodrama.—News. "One Exciting Night" produces thrills, chills and giggles. We advise you not to miss it.—American.

"THE PRODIGAL HIRON"

N. Y. Exhibitors Trade Review March 17 1923

"ONE EXCITING NIGHT"

(United Artists)

MISSION, LOS ANGELES.—35-55c. 55-80c. Doing excellent business.

Short Subjects.—Mission Theatre Review; "The Mirror."

Press Comments.—Go see it. The most surprising thing about it is that a mystery story has so deftly been adapted to the screen, with all the attendant thrills and not a few of the laughs.—Express. For sheer mystery Griffith has hit the bull's eye.—Examiner. I could imagine Mr. Griffith spending his time to better advantage. He has a talent for more potential cinematic achievements. At the same time, most of the audiences will find the picture entertaining, but it seems old-fashioned compared with the present-day films.—Times.

MARK STRAND, ALBANY.—30-60c. Just fair business. No extra effort made toward exploiting the feature.

Short Subjects.—Topical Review.

Press Comments.—As big a guessing contest as "The Bat."—News. It is "The Bat," minus the shrieks, groans and whispers. Griffith has entered a new field and succeeded thoroughly. — Knickerbocker Press. Picture is typically Griffith in theme and photography.—Journal.

PALACE, PHILADELPHIA.—35c. Although this had a four weeks' run at the Stanton only seven blocks away, it did a laughable business here. No exploitation.

Short Subjects.—Pathe News and Topics of the Day.

NEW, BALTIMORE, MD.—25-50c. Second week, big business.

Exploitation.—Large newspaper display, posters, lobby display.

Trenton (N J) Gazette March 23 1923

Carol Dempster

IN THE MOVIE WORLD.

How the Negro Role in "One Exciting Night" Was Developed.

Porter Strong, the black-face comic whose love, tears and thrills are the life of the party in D. W. Griffith's latest thriller, "One Exciting Night," waited eight years for his chance. Probably few people will remember the scene in "The Birth of a Nation" where a poor negro sees a Ku-Klux klan horseman swallow a whole bucket of water (by secretly dropping it into a pill concealed under his robe) and the negro runs away screaming in terror. That "negro," then only an extra man, was Porter Strong. It was the first picture in which he had ever appeared, and he became so infatuated with Griffith that he determined to stick to him in the hope of making a big success through Griffith's direction. Strong has worked for Griffith in some capacity or other ever since. He knew that he could play a great negro part if he could only get the chance. He played "bits" in almost every Griffith picture, but could not get a chance at a big part. Strong and his desire to play a big negro part got to be a joke about the studio, but Griffith encouraged him to hang on.

When Griffith was getting ready to produce his first mystery picture, "One Exciting Night," he saw the opportunity of including a negro part that would afford Strong unusual opportunities in the way of comedy—so Griffith, seemingly able to do anything connected with motion pictures—rewrote the manuscript, incorporating a corking comedy negro part, and determined to give Strong his chance to make good.

That Strong made good with a vengeance the audiences fairly shaking with laughter during the long run of "One Exciting Night" at the Illinois theater are the best evidence.

Athens (Ga) Herald 3/29/23

"ONE EXCITING NIGHT" CONTAINS ABOUT ALL INGREDIENTS, PLUS A STORM SCENE; PALACE SPECIAL THURSDAY AND FRIDAY

D. W. Griffith's latest motion picture sensation, "One Exciting Night," which had been announced as the feature attraction for Thursday and Friday at the Palace Theatre, D. W. Griffith, master-maker of photoplays, has taken for his cue the increasing popularity of the last two or three years of the stage melodrama and has produced a mystery picture par excellence.

In this newest of Griffith films, the great director gives five of the six elements that go to make up effective mystery—secreted treasure, personal disapearance, puzzling homicide, hidden identity, and the return of the avenging spirit. And with it all he gives the spectator an altogether marvellous assortment in the way of actual entertainment.

There is as sweet and dainty a love story as ever was filmed; there is mystery galore—mystery till the audience sits breathless—and then comes relief from the suspense in the form of the most delightful and laughter-provoking comedy from Romeo Washington, a wonderful black-face character who finds himself torn between love of a dusky maid and fear of the peering eyes and stealthy figures that creep in and out are seen everywhere.

In this picture Mr. Griffith has departed entirely from the heavy and spectacular and gone in purely for audience laughter, mystery, thrills and thrills. There are no great mob scenes, no historical motif to be picturized, no mass of costumes.

But there is entertainment—a full and much sought satchel containing two hours of it. There is a missing half a million dollars in bills that lies for a time submerged in a flour barrel in the kitchen while the armorous Romeo makes love to the choice of his heart. And all the time there is uppermost in the minds of everybody the query—"Who murdered Johnson?"

Of course no Griffith picture would be truly Griffithesque without its great climax scene. And "One Exciting Night" has it. This time it is a storm, that type of mid-summer thunderstorm with which everybody everywhere is familiar—a torrential downpour of rain coupled with hurricane winds, low-sweeping clouds, split assunder every second by bolts of tree shredding lightning. Trees are uprooted and flung about like matches before an airplane propeller; houses are unroofed, demolished, and crumpled beneath the tempest. And in the midst of the Boy and Girl find their love story come true; the villain is captured; the mystery of the half million dollars cleared.

Carol Dempster has the feminine role and seldom does a theatregoer see a sweeter or daintier characterization than she gives. Other players in the cast are all of widely known popularity and ability.

Athens (Ga) Herald March 29 1923

Scene from D. W. GRIFFITH'S "ONE EXCITING NIGHT"

Palace Special Thursday and Friday.

"Forget Me Not" Extraordinary Attraction Palace Tonight; D. W. Griffith's Latest Sensation

NEW GRIFFITH FOR THE STRAND

David Work's "One Exciting Night" Arrives Tomorrow —Last of Mayo and Walton Double Feature Bill

A splendid double feature photoplay program will be presented for the last times today. The well-known stage and screen star, Frank Mayo, as the star of a splendid drama entitled "The First Degree," and Gladys Walton in "Gossip," Are the two attractions that are being presented today.

For his latest motion picture sensation, "One Exciting Night," which has been announced as the feature attraction for tomorrow, D. W. Griffith, master-maker of photoplays, has taken for his cue the increasing popularity of the last two or three years of the stage melodrama and has produced a mystery picture par excellence.

In this newest of Griffith films, a United Artists Corporation release, the great director gives five of the six elements that go to make up effective mystery—secreted treasure, personal disappearance, puzzling homicide, hidden identity, and the return of the avenging spirit. And with it all he gives the spectator an altogether marvelous assortment in the way of actual entertainment.

There is as sweet and dainty a love story as ever was filmed, there is mystery galore—mystery till the audience sits breathless—and then comes relief from the suspense in the form of the most delightful and laughter-provoking comedy from Romeo Washington, a wonderful black-face character who finds himself torn between love of a dusky maid and fear of the peering eyes and stealthy figures that creep in and out are seen everywhere.

In this picture Mr. Griffith has departed entirely from the heavy and spectacular and gone in purely for audience entertainment in the way of love, laughter, mystery, thrills and thrills. There are no great mob scenes, no historical motif to be picturised, no mass of costumes.

But there is entertainment—a full two hours of it. There is a missing and much sought satchel containing half a million dollars in bills that lies for a time submerged in a flour barrel in the kitchen while the armorous Romeo makes love to the choice of his heart. And all the time there is uppermost in the minds of everybody the query—"Who murdered Johnson?"

Of course, no Griffith picture would be truly Griffithesque without its great climax scene. And "One Exciting Night" has it. This time it is a storm, that type of mid-summer thunderstorm with which everybody everywhere is familiar—a torrential downpour of rain coupled with hurricane winds, low-sweeping clouds, split asunder every second by bolts of tree shredding lightning. Trees are uprooted and flung about like matches before an airplane propeller; houses are unroofed, demolished, and crumble beneath the tempest. And in the midst of it the Boy and Girl find their love story come true; the villain is captured; the mystery of the half million dollars cleared.

Carol Dempster has the feminine role and seldom does a theatregoer see a sweeter or daintier characterization than she gives. Other players in the cast are all of widely known popularity and ability.

Carol Dempster

Chicago (Ill) Journal March 31. 1923.

Griffith Sends 'One Exciting Night'

New Mystery Piece Thrills and Turns Blood Cold—"Covered Wagon," a Hit, Soon to Be Shown—General Film News

By VIRGINIA DALE

BACK to town comes "One Exciting Night," a product of the Griffith workshops. Balaban and Katz choose it now as an attraction for their "hit house," the Roosevelt.

What edges in on the Griffith name has gilt upon its margin. This was the first lesson D. W. G. taught the fans; that he could do no cinematic wrong. And for years we have believed that "Griffith" was a synonym for "the best."

Well, they say no man can strike twelve all the time, and though the great Mr. Griffith may not always have lived up to the faith he nurtured in us, with his current mystery piece he rather suspasses himself. He has forgotten preachments and thrust aside a moral. He has gone in for entertainment, pure and intricate.

"One Exciting Night" concerns itself not with things as they are, but as they might be. It adjusts itself humorously to situations that have begun to pall. It has the stealthy hands and the murderous intent and the screaming ladies in the audience that go with all good thrillers.

Being without the reassurance of vocal assets, the film is probably even more lively than its little mystery brothers of the stage. And as things seen are more readily remembered than those heard, it is possible to check up afterward and discover a reason for every chill, a cause for every blood-curdling effect.

Henry Hull, recruited from the Broadway theater for the purpose, is displayed as the chief target for sensation. He roams the celluloid in futile hope of calm, and, not until the final fade-out, finds it in the arms of the lady so long denied him.

Carol Dempster, lithe and lovely and by personal declamation under 20, is another terror-stricken young 'un. Most of us look like frights when we're frightened, but not Carol. Perhaps Griffith discovered she could still be beautiful when afraid, and made a film to prove it to the world.

There are two black-face folks who are in "One Exciting Night" with the intention of making those who watch laugh. And the watchers do, so they have earned their salaries.

If you want to be thrilled, if you want to be entertained, see "One Exciting Night;" it's the best of the mystery shows.

M. P. News (New York) 3/31/23

D. W. GRIFFITH has not announced any of his production activities but it is rumored about that he is shortly to visit England for the purpose of directing English artists in an English story based upon the Brotherhood of Man. It is said that the picture will carry a strong religious motive and that it will be filmed in Wales. Meanwhile Griffith's "One Exciting Night," has opened in London at the New Oxford theatre.

Atlantic City NJ. Press 3/31/23

der in the musical field.

"ONE EXCITING NIGHT" PLAYING AT LIBERTY TODAY

D. W. Griffith, famous photoplay producer, has made another player famous. This new hero of the screen wizards, with legion of admirers is Porter Strong, who plays the terrified darky in "One Exciting Night," Griffith's novel mystery drama, a United Artists' release, the attraction at the Liberty today and tomorrow. In all these thrilling crime plays there must be some comic relief to offset the shivers. Sometimes this comedy is dumped in without rhyme or reason, but in the case of Romeo Washington, the colored gentleman in "One Exciting Night," it is perfectly natural outgrowth of every susceptible [illegible]

Chicago (Ill) News 3/31/23

PICTURE PLAYS IN CHICAGO NEXT WEEK

LEFT TO RIGHT (ABOVE)—CAROL DEMPSTER IN "ONE EXCITING NIGHT." AT ROOSEVELT; CONRAD NAGEL AND [illegible] NEGRI IN "BELLA DONNA," AT McVICKER'S; NORMA TALMADGE IN [illegible] OF WETONA," AT [illegible] RANDOLPH. BELOW—ANNA Q. NILSSON AND FRANK KEENAN IN "PETER WESTON." AT THE CHICAGO; [illegible] MAY WONG AND KENNETH HARLAN IN "THE TOLL OF THE SEA." AT THE STATE-LAKE.

Waltham (Mass) Free Press 3/31/23

catch the vision and its glory.

CENTRAL SQUARE

Latest Griffiths Features to be Shown Here Sunday

The manager of the Central square theater says that the latest Griffith screen sensation, "One Exciting Night", has been booked for an engagement beginning next Monday. It differs in almost every respect from former Griffith productions. It does not present a great historical period; does not picturize any enormous spectacle; has no tremendous mob scenes, but Mr. Griffith has departed from the heavy and spectacular to tell a modern and strictly up-to-date mystery story which is replete with love, laughter, mystery and thrills, and has as its own special climax, a perfectly gorgeous and tremendously realistic storm scene in the midst of which the plot comes to an end; the villain is captured.

Chicago Ill Herald Examiner april 1 1923

HENRY HULL & CAROL DEMPSTER IN D.W. GRIFFITH'S "ONE EXCITING NIGHT" AT ROOSEVELT

Atlantic City (N.J.) Press 3/31/23

D. W. GRIFFITH "EXCITING NIGHT" AT PARK

"One Exciting Night," the D. W. Griffith sub-attraction at the Park Theatre today and tomorrow, will be found full of surprising thrills that surge to a great tide of happiness at the finale of the story.

The destructive bolt of passion with greedy, devouring, speed travels through the film to the accompaniment of laughter and smiles that play with mystery.

It is this mysterious phase of the film that give it the title and aid and abet its course with stealthy events that peep in and out of the picture. The whole creates an absorbing puzzle that pulls the heart strings, scatters worries and wipes out trifling considerations during its progress.

"IT IS THE LAW," AT THE APOLLO THEATRE

Atlantic City NJ. Gazette Review 3/31/23

"ONE EXCITING NIGHT" AT THE PARK THEATRE

"One Exciting Night," the D. W. Griffith [illegible] attraction which begins a two-day engagement at the Park Theatre today will be found full of surprising thrills that surge to a great tide of happiness at the finale of the story.

The destructive bolt of passion with greedy, devouring speed travels through the film to the accompaniment of laughter and smiles that play with mystery.

It is this mysterious phase of the film that gives it the title and aid and abet its course with stealthy events that peep in and out of the picture. The whole creates an absorbing puzzle that pulls the heart strings, scatters worries and wipes out trifling considerations during its progress. The picture has been [illegible] from the [illegible] brought to the screen [illegible] with the fury of heaven and [illegible]

Atlantic City (N. J.) Gazette APRIL 1, 1923

"One Exciting Night" at the Park Today

A Griffith Mystery Picture, Latest Film Sensation — Great Storm Scene Climax

The D. W. Griffith photoplay is announced as the attraction at the Park Theatre as to-day's feature.

With this announcement comes the statement that "One Exciting Night" differs in almost every respect from former Griffith productions. It does not present any great historical period; does not picturize any enormous spectacle; has no tremendous mob scenes, but Mr. Griffith has departed from the heavy and spectacle to tell a modern and strictly up-to-date mystery story.

The mystery picture is new to the screen, and critics point out naturally follows the increasing popularity in the last two or three years of the mystery stage play.

The action in "One Exciting Night, moves swift and straight, for in this picture Mr. Griffith has endeavored to follow the old Greek unity with the events and action all taking place within twelve hours, as near as possible to the exact time it ordinarily would take for these events to happen. The plot of the story of "One Exciting Night" is not revealed here, but it may be said that this latest production of the famous Griffith is replete with love, laughter, mystery and thrills, and has as its own special Griffithesque climax a perfectly gorgeous and tremendously realistic storm scene in the midst of which the plot comes to a end; the villain is captured. Besides the big feature attraction there are a number of other short features on the program.

Following is the list of feature attractions for the coming week: Monday and Tuesday, Dorothy Dalton in "The Flame of Wednesday, Clara Windsor and Colleen Moore in "Broken Chains." Thursday, Valeria Cheatwick and Richard Dix in "Yellow Men and Gold." Friday, [illegible]

NALTHAM (Mass) NEWS APRIL 2, 1923 9

YD

of the [illegible] me she was crazed with fear.'

"Then I knew that even if she did push me aside she didn't know what she was doing."

Tomorrow—Love Knows No Friend

Copyright, John F. Dille Co.

Central Sq. Theatre

For his latest motion picture sensation, "One Exciting Night," which has been announced as the feature attraction for today, Tuesday and Wednesday at the Central Square Theatre, D. W. Griffith, mastermaker of photoplays, has taken for his cue the increasing popularity of the last two or three years of the stage melodrama and has produced a mystery picture par excellence.

There is as sweet and dainty a love story as ever was filmed; there is mystery galore—mystery till the audience sits breathless—and then comes relief from the suspense in the form of the most delightful and laughter-provoking comedy from Romeo Washington, a wonderful black-face character who finds himself torn between love of a dusky maid and fear of the peering eyes and stealthy figures that creep in and out are seen everywhere.

In this picture Mr. Griffith has departed entirely from the heavy and spectacular and gone in purely for audience entertainment in the way of love, laughter, mystery, thrills and thrills. There are no great mob scenes, no historical motif to be picturized, no mass of costumes.

Of course no Griffith picture would be truly Griffithesque without its great climax scene. And "One Exciting Night" has it. This time it is a storm, that type of mid-summer thunder storm with which everybody everywhere is familiar—a torrential downpour of rain coupled with hurricane winds, low-sweeping clouds, split asunder every second by bolts of true shredding lighting. Trees are uprooted and flung about like matches before an airplane propeller, houses are uprooted, demolished and crumble beneath the tempest. And in the midst of the fear and utter despair there love story does true; the villain is captured, the mystery of the half million dollars cleared.

Carol Dempster has the heroine role and seldom does a theatrogoer see a character or definitive characterization than she gives. Other players in the cast are all of equally known geniality and ability.

"ONE EXCITING NIGHT," STRAND

D. W. Griffiths Motion Picture Sensation—Christy Comedy Also on Bill.

[illegible]

Chicago (Ill) American April 31, 1923

Griffith's Play

[illegible]

Scranton (Pa) Scranton april 1 1923

Scranton (Pa) Scranton April 1, 1923

Scene From D. W. Griffiths' "Laughing Thrill," a Photoplay That is Different, At the Strand All This Week.

Scranton (Pa) Republican 4/2/23

SCENE From D. W. Griffith's "One Exciting Night," Which Is to Be Shown at the Strand Theater All This Week.

Ny Telegraph april 15/23

Baltimore (Md) News April 6/1923

According To This D. W. Griffith Is To Make His Films In England.

(From the London Times.)

D. W. Griffith has decided to produce films in this country. He has completed his plans, and probably will begin work here before the end of the year. On his recent visit Mr. Griffith declared that the climate of Great Britain was admirable from the point of view of film production, and that the English beauty spots and remains of old buildings would make ideal settings for films. The film on which he is now at work (in succession to "One Exciting Night," now to be seen at the New Oxford Theatre) may be the last he will make in America.

But Keep Watch On The Rascal

(From the Chicago Spectator.)

Los Angeles (Cal) Examiner april 11, 1923.

Griffith Foils Film Piracy Plot

An injunction has been procured by D. W. Griffith against a company of alleged "film pirates" in several Southern States, preventing this group of men from releasing under the title of "One Exciting Night" an old Western picture made ten years ago and which for its audience effects depends upon several stereotyped fights staged in a rainstorm.

The film was booked by the manager of a theater in New Orleans, the alleged pirates making much ado over the presence of Griffith in that city and cashing in on the publicity. New titles even had been printed, working in the name of Griffith, and the film, in five reels, scratched and warped, was run for two performances before the manager realized it was a fake. He wired Griffith's Eastern offices and learned that the ten-reel production, "One Exciting Night," had not been booked in New Orleans and that he had been duped. The men got away with a week's rental, paid in advance.

The injunction procured by the Griffith offices is for the protection of exhibitors in the smaller towns or in neighborhood theaters who do not have the opportunity to review pictures before booking, but depend on mail service to deliver their shows.

"One Exciting Night" is showing at the Mission Theater here in its fourth week and promises to make a long run record.

Oakland (Cal) Tribune april. 15. 1923.

We are fascinated by the endless possibilities which the invention of a London scientist suggests. He has invented a mechanical device by which he claims he can reduce to an exact science the public's judgment of a theatrical entertainment. It is called a sphygmo-cardiograph, and can be attached to the wrists of the spectators to record the emotions. The fluctuations of the pulse are recorded upon a paper ribbon or tape, and is subject to slight variations, dependant upon the temperament of its individual.

What welcome news this must be to D. W. Griffith! No longer will he have to take his pictures to the operate theaters in New York. He can simply gather in a small but representative audience in his own projection room and get a scientific reaction. Think how much it will help in cutting and assembling a picture! The dear little s.-c. on the wrist of the producer will record his emotions as he sees the mass of roughly assembled film run off. His cutters can follow his objections by reading the little paper tape, and cut out just what he wants cut. Critics can bundle their little s-c's into the pockets and watch a show without fear of forgetfulness. Back at the office, they'll write their reviews from the s.-c's record.

And the producer who tries all his "program features" out on the dog—in Canada, where the news of a "flop" will not reach the United States and reduced to his credit, can eliminate Canada entirely from his calculations. He can attach sphygmo-cardiographs to the wrists of a small but select bunch of critics, including dumbbells, morons, highbrows and average folks and get a perfect chart of their reactions.

Probably though this Godsend to the industry will prove to be another gamble from curiosity. You bet! The dog-pure would get such a kick out of connecting their s. c. responses. And so would we. What would we know if then there's all that money and the hard work of years at stake? Back in the old days we used to have a fellow by the name of Barnum who

Ny Telegraph april 25/1923

Society Film Fanatics

The cinema has established itself as one of the leading diversions of English society. The latest craze is for film parties at country houses. The Duke of Sutherland entertained a big party at Sutton Place, Guildford, the other day, and a special attraction for the guests was a private view of the Griffith film, "One Exciting Night." The Griffith management made this possible by lending a spare copy of the film.

Griffith Not Wealthy.

By the way, Mr. Griffith's brother, Albert L. Grey, who came to London to superintend the presentation here of "One Exciting Night," has been disabusing the English public of the idea that his brother is a wealthy man.

"It is commonly supposed," he told an interviewer, "that my brother is a millionaire. The truth is that he is comparatively a poor man, whose films are so expensive that he is always at the mercy of financiers. It depends on me to make enough money to keep us both out of the workhouse!"

'ONE EXCITING NIGHT' TO BE ROAD-SHOW IN EUROPE

D. W. Griffith Concern Arranges for Presentation in a Number of Big Cities.

WARNER SAYS "WATCH FANS"

Western New York Exhibitors Plan to Send Independent Delegates to Big Chicago Convention.

By LOUELLA O. PARSONS.

"ONE EXCITING NIGHT" will be produced about [illegible] time, general manager of the D. W. Griffith offices, who came home yesterday on the Berlin, completed arrangements for showing this most recent Griffith production in Rome, Paris, Scarborough and other large European cities. He then said London is called "One Exciting Night" in which the same spirit is now showing in New York, with no questions as regards of the success, but is doing so in which it is not Mr. Griffith's policy as a producer.

The Epoch theatre was full of the United Theatre and one of only the world theatres for the reason it was impossible to have the theatre for two longer time.

Mr. Grey and Lilling Gish in Rome, he said she hopes to finish her picture in some time about June. It is possible to get a [illegible] film for the coming of the two girls this year [illegible] Mr. Griffith's plans for the future are [illegible]

Albuquerque (N M) Journal 5/8/23

Indianapolis (Ind) Star APR -8

Ny World april 15-1923

Ny Telegraph 4/29/23

ONE EXCITING NIGHT OPENS IN EDINBURGH

Toronto (Canada) M.P. Digest 5/5/23

Ny Telegraph april 29 1923

Exhibitors Herald Chicago april 28/1923

Akron (Ohio) Times 5/14/23

Brainard (Minn) Dispatch 5/14/23

"One Exciting Night" Capacity Business Leaves Pay — The Pilot Block Big

Akron (Ohio) Times 5/16/23

COLONIAL.—Of stage acting, playwriting and screen acting, the most difficult and different to master is screen acting, thinks Henry Hull. He is one of the few persons of theatrical fame who has done the three at one time—appearing as leading man in "The Cat and the Canary," collaborating in the writing of "East Side, West Side," and taking the leading role in D. W. Griffith's "One Exciting Night," at the Colonial theatre.

For a time Hull divided his 24 hours into three shifts: from 8 to 4 at the Griffith studio; from 4 to midnight at the theatre, and from midnight until 8 working on his play.

"Screen acting is the hardest job I ever tackled," he says. "You can rewrite at least some of the bad lines you put into a play. You can make up tomorrow for the poor show that you give today on the stage. But the screen is permanent, a persistent recorder that screams forth your weaknesses.

"There is no way to cover up; no chance for other players to help you. Leading lines on the stage, of course, is a great art. But to tell the same story, even more poignantly, without words, is greater art. Mr. Griffith says it takes five years of constant practice to become an effective screen player. I believe him. But I wouldn't believe him if I hadn't tried to do something for the screen.

"Instead of screen acting hurting one for the stage, I earnest believe it is the greatest training there is. It gives that grounding in pantomime which has been characteristic of the best of the foreign players who have been successful here. Everyone familiar with the stage knows the finish that foreign talent has. The screen, I believe, will give it just as well, and I look forward to some remarkable stage players graduating from the screen to the stage."

Montreal (Canada) Star. May. 21 1923

Griffiths Presents Real Melodrama in "One Exciting Night"

NO producer of motion pictures on this side of the Atlantic has revealed greater versatility and a keener regard for theatrical values upon the screen than D. W. Griffiths. He is not afraid of experiments. He has made plenty, and he has more than once overreached himself in his ambition to achieve something distinctive. But that is rather to his credit than otherwise. There remains his solid progress as a director of dramatic silent drama, and it would be idle to deny that this alone entitles him to be ranked as the leading spirit among the few producers who are actuated by other aims than the mere accumulation of big bank accounts.

* * *

Mr. Griffiths' latest contribution to the screen is an experiment in melodrama. He has attempted in pictorial form a story of mystery that defies solution before the climax, holding the attention of the beholder until the secret is revealed. He has succeeded largely because he has worked upon definite lines of dramatic development and has kept before him always the essential factor that the public must be kept interested without any loss of action or dragging of the end of the mystery.

* * *

This is easy enough upon the stage in the spoken drama, because there is the dialogue to sustain the mystery in addition to the action. But pictures of course not only fail to achieve the speech can, but detract from the interest of the pictured action if they are either too long or too elaborate. It follows that the inherent defect of a film must be overcome by the director. Mr. Griffiths has done this in the setting. And in the picture "One Exciting Night" he has made a novel contribution at the time when it is needed most, and which will stand up, not only in the present, but in the future, if not unique in the ways they are.

* * *

In a mystery play with sufficient elements of crime, comedy, pathos, romance, that includes some of the best acting, and has produced a pictured picture par excellence.

In the school of film drama, the great director principle of the art is illustrated that it is better to illustrate than to describe. Mystery, pictured

Nashville (Tenn) Tennessean 5/23/23

Lights and Shades Of Shadow Land

By ANNE RANKIN

"ONE EXCITING NIGHT."

There's nobody quite like Griffith. Even in a mystery play whose frank intention is to do nothing but give you a riotously creepy time, breath-catching, hair raising, and tense, he philosophizes a little in his opening titles, speaks of the passion, the love, and the greed that inspire or underlie the most of life's action, even in a mystery play. Then he takes you into his confidence and asks you to talk of the film you are now seeing, but not to divulge its secret.

He believes in sentiment, too; elusive and shy, yet eager and deliriously young. Carol Dempster has all of this in her face and Henry Hull much of it. Their love story is tremulous and swift and set in a whirl of thrills and terrors.

The tale opens in Africa with a wicked woman, a helpless baby, a kindly Kaffir, a great fortune, and an unscrupulous brother who appropriates it, all as material for the tangle [illegible] which the plot soon falls.

Then [illegible] the American thrills. A house [illegible] deserted, infested by hoodlums and hiding a treasure not in [illegible]ish gold or jewels, but in plain, everyday greenbacks offers a [illegible] background for masked intruders, ghastly hands, ghastly [illegible] places, a ruthless Killer, and frightened women who think to lock the Terror out, but simply lock it in!

The tale comes to a climax in a great storm with the fragile and shrieking heroine, pinned beneath fallen branches and in the track of the crashing trees, with the hero struggling to her rescue, but helpless with manacled hands.

Who the Killer is—who the girl is—where the money is—where the lost inheritance is—what it's all about—nobody will tell.

Mr. Griffith means for you to see it for yourself, and that is just what everybody in Nashville will do while the picture is at Loew's the [illegible]

Moving Picture World (N.Y.C.) May 26 1923

Skeletons Featured One Exciting Night

Starting with a teaser, S. S. Wallace, Jr., opened the campaign on the Griffith play at the Capitol Theatre, Oklahoma City, by telling that "Before crossing the Delaware George Washington spent One Exciting Night."

That got people worried. They could not see why anyone should pay space rates to communicate this fact to a waiting public, but the information was repeated in single ones, for several days. Then Wallace put them out of their misery by telling that the play was coming to the Capitol.

Three days before the opening he staged One Exciting Afternoon when he tossed 300 balloons from the roof of the tallest building in town while the traffic cops—both of them—fought to preserve order in the street below. There were a number of free fights but no arrests.

In the lobby the best part of the display was a cutout of a darkey, done in cartoon style, with his knees knocking together, and his eyes rolling in fright. The eyes were individually mounted and motorized. As the white eyeballs were the only touch of color to the cutout, the effect was remarkably good.

The rest of the display was serpentines from the ceiling and two dancing skeletons. The value of these last is more or less problematical. Mr. Wallace knows his game and probably would not have used them had they been a detriment, but in many sections the skeletons would have kept the more timid away, though there is nothing in the play to frighten them off. The motor also took care of the skeletons, which were flat affairs with jointed arms and legs.

Miami (Fla) Metropolis 5/29/23

"ONE EXCITING NIGHT"—"We certainly did play 'rough' in the storm scene," said Carol Dempster ruefully discussing the much talked of climax to D. W. Griffith's new picture, "One Exciting Night," a United Artists release at the Paramount theatre Tuesday.

"With a 90-mile gale to fight against and a drenching rain driving in our faces we could scarcely even breathe in the most violent scenes. Spiked shoes, such as baseball players wear, helped to keep us from slipping."

The storm scene is the greatest thing of its kind ever put on the screen. Eleven weeks were occupied in making it and as many as 500 men were used at one time in constructing the mechanical properties. Stout old trees crash to the ground, young saplings are bent almost in two, houses are torn apart and borne up in the high wind, while over all play weird flashes of lightning.

Memphis (Ill) Star 5/24/23

SYLVOR GRAND.

"One Exciting Night" is a mystifying capacity audience at the Sylvor Grand. There are thrills and laughter for every one in this different picture.

A kind of artistic achievement easy for the film but impossible for the "indoor drama" is illustrated by the Ford's Theater scene in "The Birth of a Nation," which comes next Sunday. The old-fashioned drama has long attempted to represent a stage within a stage, and some of such representations have been rather realistic. But in the film scene showing the assassination of President Lincoln, one sees not only the auditorium of the theater, the audience and the historical figures in the boxes.

Spectators gaze at the scene with fascinated horror. It is too terrible, too awesome for applause, yet not a spectator but feels that in this impressive rendition Mr. Griffith has surpassed the greatest pictorial achievements of the [illegible] drama.

Columbus (Ga) Engine. Sun. 5/30/23

Richmond (Va) News Leader. 5/26/23

"As the Colonel."

For the latest motion picture sensation, "One Exciting Night," which has been announced as the feature attraction for next week at the Colonial theatre, D. W. Griffith, master-maker of photoplays, has taken for his co-the increasing popularity of the last two or three years of the stage melodrama and has produced a mystery picture par excellence.

In this newest of Griffith films, a United Artists Corporation release, the great director gives five of the six elements that go to make up effective mystery—secreted treasure, personal disappearance, puzzling homicide, hidden identity, and the return of the avenging spirit. And with it all he gives the spectator an altogether marvellous assortment in the way of actual entertainment.

There is as sweet and dainty a love story as ever was filmed; there is mystery galore—mystery till the audience sits breathless—and then comes relief from the suspense in the form of the most delightful and laughter-provoking comedy from Romeo Washington, a wonderful black-face character who finds himself torn between love of a dusky maid and fear of the peering eyes and stealthy figures that creep in and out are seen everywhere.

In this picture Mr. Griffith has departed entirely from the heavy and spectacular and gone in purely for audience entertainment in the way of love, laughter, mystery, thrills and chills. There are no great mob scenes, no historical motif to be picturized, no mass of costumes.

Of course no Griffith picture would be truly Griffithesque without its great climax scene. And "One Exciting Night" has it. This time it is a storm, that type of mid-summer thunder storm with which everybody everywhere is familiar—a torrential downpour of rain coupled with hurricane winds, low-sweeping clouds, split asunder every second by bolts of tree shredding lightning. Trees are uprooted and flung about like matches before an airplane propeller; houses are unroofed, demolished, and crumble beneath the tempest. And in the midst of it the Boy and Girl find their love story come true; the villain is captured; the mystery of the half million dollars cleared.

MYSTERY FILM CREATES GREAT INTEREST AT LYRIC THEATRE

Mystery plays have become the vogue and last night at the Lyric theatre the fashion was set for mystery time. In "One Exciting Night," a United Artists release, David W. Griffith has not attempted the spectacular or called on stirring mob scenes, but has merely presented an excellent modern mystery drama in the British vein.

However, he was not content with the usual, so a hurricane, that for the present is the storm of storms on the screen, was used as a climax. It rained and rain just a little higher, and only Romeo Washington—a negro character who was a whole movie himself—could smooth it down with his comedy amusing antics. Porter Strong takes his ambitious, in keeping throughout the life of the film, to speak, and [illegible] making to the part played by Lila Harrison, is done

Wichita Kan Eagle June 3 1923

New York Tribune 6/1/23

Milwaukee Wis Wisconsin News 5/26

New Bedford (Mass) Mercury 6/1/23

YD PRINCESS THEATRE

D. W. Griffith's latest production entitled "One Exciting Night" will be seen at the Princess Theatre, Fairhaven today and tomorrow. The cast includes Carol Dempster and Henry Hull. It is the story of a girl who is sought by tempestuous lovers, one guided by his heart and the other by greed. The first chapter of the new historical serial "The Oregon Trail" starring Art Accord will also be shown.

Newburyport (Mass) News-Letter June 2, 1923

Theatrical Topics

The Premier.

For his latest motion picture sensation, "One Exciting Night," which has been announced as the feature attraction for next Monday and Tuesday at the Premier Theatre, D. W. Griffith, master-maker of photoplays, has taken for his cue the increasing popularity of the last two or three years of the stage melodrama and has produced a mystery picture par excellence.

In this newest of Griffith films, a United Artists Corporation release, the great director gives five of the six elements that go to make up effective mystery— secreted treasure, personal disappearance, puzzling homicide, hidden identity, and the return of the avenging spirit. And with it all he gives the spectator an altogether marvellous assortment in the way of actual entertainment.

There is as sweet and dainty a love story as ever was filmed; there is mystery galore—mystery till the audience sits breathless—and then comes relief from the suspense in the form of the most delightful and laughter-provoking comedy from Romeo Washington, a wonderful black-face character who finds himself torn between love of a dusky maid and fear of the peering eyes and stealthy figures that creep in and out are seen everywhere.

In this picture Mr. Griffith has departed entirely from the heavy and spectacular and gone in purely for audience entertainment in the way of love, laughter, mystery, thrills and chills. There are no great mob scenes, no historical motif to be picturized, no mass of costumes.

Of course no Griffith picture would be truly Griffithesque without its great climax scene. And "One Exciting Night" has it. This time it is a storm, that type of mid-summer thunder storm with which everybody everywhere is familiar—a torrential downpour of rain coupled with hurricane winds, low-sweeping clouds, split asunder every second by bolts of tree shredding lightning. Trees are uprooted and flung about like matches before an airplane propeller; houses are unroofed, demolished, and crumble beneath the tempest. And in the midst of it the Boy and Girl find their love story come true; the villain is captured; the mystery of the half million dollars cleared.

NY Herald June 12 1923

PORTER STRONG, MOVIE ACTOR, DIED SUDDENLY

Porter Strong, aged 44, a motion picture actor, died suddenly of heart disease yesterday in his home, 151 West Forty-seventh street. He was born in St. Joseph, Mo., and had traveled throughout the country with vaudeville and minstrel troupes. In recent years he had been playing in the movies under the direction of D. W. Griffith. His last appearance on the screen was as Romeo, a negro, in Griffith's "One Exciting Night."

Denver (Colo) Post June 13, 1923

ACTOR IS VICTIM OF HIS COLLAR

New York, June 12.—Porter Strong, who played Romeo, the Harlem Negro, in "One Exciting Night"—a film mystery, in [illegible] a victim of his own collar.

Strong, who was 44 years old, and a David Wark Griffith actor, was found dead Tuesday in his hotel room. He apparently had been knocked unconscious in a fall, and his stiff collar had then choked him to death when his head fell [illegible]

Motion Picture News Supply June 16, 1923

Canada Critics Praise "One Exciting Night"

"D. W. Griffith has waded in among the seventeen different kinds of movie wives, juvenile wonders and costume period stuff, and come out with something new, which is as beautiful as only a Griffith can make it, hilarious with real comedy, packed with thrills and altogether refreshing," said the reviewer for the London, Ontario, Free Press in writing of "One Exciting Night," when this United Artists release was being shown at the Grand theatre, that city.

"The storm scene climax in 'One Exciting Night' is an epoch in pictures," said the critic for the Evening Tribune when this Griffith feature was shown at the Starland theatre, Winnipeg, and added; "You will see all the furies of Nature as if plucked from the skies and transferred to the screen."

NY Telegraph June 17 1923

PORTER STRONG, PICTURE ACTOR, DIES SUDDENLY

Porter Strong died suddenly in his home in the Hotel Anselm, 151 West Forty-seventh street, Monday afternoon. His body was found by Miss Helen McLaughlin, housekeeper.

Dr. Levy of Roosevelt Hospital said he was responsible due to heart failure.

Mr. Strong was 44 years old and had been with Griffith as an actor and in various capacities, as a machine gunner in "One Exciting Night" and "A Virginia Romance." D. W. Griffith [illegible]

He had been with Mr. Griffith in all the picture work for seven years. Prior to that time he had been with Winchell Smith in the legitimate stage, and had been [illegible] in the Lyceum stock. He was born in St. Joseph, Mo.

Mr. Strong is a [illegible] of the Lambs Club, the Friars and the Actors' Equity Association. He was married to the first time to the [illegible]

The body was taken to the Campbell Funeral Church, Broadway and 66th street, where the funeral will be held on Friday, at 2 o'clock.

Chicago Ill Post 6/14/23

Los Angeles Cal Times June 16 1923

Boston (Mass) Post 6/20/23

M.P. World (NY) July 7 1923

ONE EXCITING NIGHT. (11,000 feet). Star Vic. Rattling good mystery film, but eleven reels is too long. Failed to pull. Must have the special musical score to put it over right. Had fair attendance. Draw family and student class in town of 4,000. Admission varies. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre (600 seats), Decorah, Iowa.

ONE EXCITING NIGHT. (11,000 feet). Star, Carol Dempster. One of those mystery pictures that carries a "kick" in the final scenes but not a picture one would expect from Griffith. Will please approximately sixty per cent. H. W. Whittemore, Select Pictures Theatre, Newcastle, California.

Chicago (Ill) Tribune July 8.1923

Its Object—Question Only 'Nother for Critics

Dear Miss Tinee: Now, my kid, and to the point. I know people who in Texas caught on to dominoes and taking the French curriculum on a little vacation, such as you did. I defend D. W. Griffith, in the first place, because it is the screen's greatest and nearest reason for being something classed as one of the arts. "One Exciting Night" is the first real mystery [illegible] ever screened, and it was [illegible] before other directors [illegible]. That is, as soon as they [illegible] screen rights to plays like "The Bat" or "Cat and Canary," etc.

I saw "One Exciting Night" twice, once at the Illinois and once at the Thalia. At the Illinois the show was longer and the music was wonderful and the audience rocked with laughter and excitement. At Thalia it was much worse—that is, the roaring was much worse—and I have never seen the patrons of that theater so completely won over and taken by surprise as they were here by "One Exciting Night." Don't think I am Mr. G.'s press agent, because I am not. As for the storm scene, I point to the critics' views, especially your own.

When Jake says Griffith's actors seem to have St. Vitus dance he shows his lack of knowledge of dramatics, and to prove it I will point to the name Barthelmess has made for himself under Griffith and L. Gish's election as America's greatest screen actress by various photoplay magazines' subscribers.

As for "Bella Donna," being a good picture, all I can say is, I am sorry I spent the money to see it. George Fitzmaurice is a good director, but this picture was a fizzle compared with "One Arabian Night."

In conclusion, Mr. Jake, I advise you not to see pictures that pain you so. And to Griffith fans the world over I say, defend the maker of the world's greatest, "The Birth of a Nation," "Broken Blossoms" and "Orphans of the Storm." J. D.

Exhibitors Herald Chicago (Ill) Aug. 4 1923

United Artists

One Exciting Night, a D. W. Griffith production.—Very good as all Griffiths, especially the storm. Poor business, but no fault of picture. Too hot just now. Will bring it back in winter and will clean up.—Calderon & Salas Porras, Teatro Alcazar, Chihuahua, Mex.—Neighborhood patronage.

Ft Worth (Tex) Star-Telegram Aug. 4 1923

GRIFFITH FILM GETS SPECIAL SHOWING

Ft Worth (Tex) Star-Telegram Aug. 3 1923

[illegible] are six rounds, it is said, to the building up of effective mystery, and "One Exciting Night," D. W. Griffith's great mystery photoplay, coming Sunday to the Palace Theater under a United Artists' release, travel five of them.

Griffith gives secreted treasure, personal disappearance, puzzling homicides, hidden identity, and even symbolizes the return of the avenging spirit. The only motif he does not handle is that of mystery murder through jealousy.

The progress of the art of thrills has led to skillful and ever more skillful combinations of the prime elements.

The "haunted house" idea is one of the oldest in fictive annals. Around it the modern comedy thriller is built in such fashion as to hold several plot-stories. The scene of Griffith's play is a mansion near Louisville, Ky., which is thought by the negroes to be "haunted."

Griffith soon provides the key to this part of the play by action showing the place to be a bootleggers' cache. The only folk likely to have $500,000 lying around in some hole in the wall—at least nowadays—are bootleggers! Up there in the attic a masked figure kills one of the partners, in a quarrel over the money. Thus the buried treasure, the mysterious homocide and the concealed identity of the robber are all "set" for what follows.

Next, the main action of the host and the guests in the house develops still another plot-sequence, with the mystery of Carol Dempster's antecedents, and the reactions of the house party to various menaces that culminate in a second murder. Now the hidden-identity quest widens to five suspects, the dude, the stranger, the black butler, the detective and even the hero. Henry Hull, Frank Sheridan, Frank Wunderlee, C. H. Crocker-King and Wallace Morgan by turns are thought to have a guilty knowledge of the black deeds in the house of mystery.

San Antonio (Tex) Express Aug. 4 1923

CROWD TURNED AWAY AT MIDNIGHT MATINEE

The experiment of a midnight matinee at the Empire Theater Friday night, giving the first showing of D. W. Griffith's "One Exciting Night" will not be repeated without precautions for handling huge crowds. For the hundreds who thronged the lobby of the theater before the midnight hour, nearly broke the doors, and it required all the patience of ushers and doormen to keep back scores unable to see the film.

The novelty of a midnight matinee evidently caught San Antonio's fancy and the film had an opening which broke all records.

The Empire symphony orchestra, under Julien Paul Blitz, gave a program of spooky music in keeping with the picture and the ghostly garments of ushers added to the air of mystery.

Exhibitors Herald Chicago (Ill) Aug. 11 1923

[illegible] Sons, Elmira [illegible], N. Y.—Neighborhood patronage.

United Artists

One Exciting Night, a D. W. Griffith production. — Excellent entertainment. Pleased good sized crowds.—H. A. McClure, Strand Theatre, Memphis, Tenn.—General patronage.

United Artists

One Exciting Night, a D. W. Griffith production. This still [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

My Picture Play Magazine. April 1923

Cursed with a Comic Face

Henry Hull insists that that is his predicament, but neither motion-picture producers nor the public agree with him.

By Barbara Little

Photo by Kendall Evans

WHEN Mr. Griffith engaged me to play in 'One Exciting Night' I told him that no one would ever take me seriously. I'm cursed with a comic face. On the stage I can fix it all up with putty and make myself look pretty much as I want to. And there I have my voice to work with. But on the screen without my voice and without a facial disguise, what would I be, I wondered. 'But we don't photograph the face,' Mr. Griffith assured me. 'We photograph the thoughts, the soul.' And I decided that let me out, too, because you can't fix up your thoughts or your soul with putty and paint."

But it didn't let Henry Hull out. Mr. Griffith went right ahead and had him play one of the leading rôles in the mystery picture, and he made such a hit in it that now other producers are clamoring for him. He is making a picture with Mary Thurman for Allied Artists release, and as soon as he finishes that he will be featured in a J. Parker Read production and there are other engagements waiting for him later.

Besides, that notion of his about having a comic face is just one of those little obsessions people get about themselves sometimes. I couldn't take him seriously when he maligned his looks because I had just come from the lobby of the theater where he was playing "The Cat and the Canary" and heard the flappers filing out remarking, "Isn't Henry Hull just darling?"

Sometimes when you go to interview an actor you wonder how he ever got into the movies, but with Henry Hull you wonder how on earth he managed to stay out of them so long. He is an ideal type, young and lithe and simply bristling with energy. Unromantic, but wonderfully ingratiating. Vivid dark eyes that rivet your attention.

"Oh, well, I was in the movies before," he admitted somewhat sheepishly, "if you must know the truth. But the experience was so unpleasant that I tried to forget it."

"Were you as bad as all that?" I asked, feeling as though I had inadvertently opened the door where the family skeletons were hidden.

"I don't know how bad I was. I don't want to." He put me at ease again with a nice smile. "Selfishly, I wasn't thinking of how bad I was, but how rotten working in pictures was. It was almost six years ago, and the conditions under which motion-picture actors worked were terrible. The director was apt to say, 'Hey, youse come in and give this goil a doity look, and then pick up dem papers and git out.' Do you wonder I didn't feel exactly inspired? It might be some charming story that we were doing, 'Little Women' for instance. That was my last attempt at pictures under the old régime. I came back then to my beloved theater where we were treated like gentlemen. 'Pardon, Mr. Hull, but the curtain rings up in half an hour' sounded like music to my ears after that.

"But conditions are becoming reversed in the theater and the movies. The old traditions of the greenroom are fast disappearing. The courtesy that used to be found in the theater is found mostly in the motion-picture studios now.

"Working up at Mr. Griffith's is like being in the old Empire theater company. The actors are treated with such graciousness and respect. Now in the old days——"

He looked oddly like a small boy just out of a football scrimmage. His appearance didn't live up to the stale, grease-paint atmosphere he was stressing so vigorously.

"Pardon me Mr. Hull," I protested weakly, "but just where did you learn about the 'good old days' in the theater?"

"Thirteen years ago in my sister-in-law's, Margaret Anglin's, company. I played in it."

The sternness of his rebuke was tempered by genuine pleasure at my illusions about his age.

"Frankly, I have been afraid of going into pictures," Mr. Hull assured me later, when finding that we were neighbors he had offered to drive me home. His car, I might add, is not of the showy Broadway variety with mirror-like paint and lots of nickel trimmings. It was just a stock-pattern car of good make, dressed up for the winter with side curtains and extra windshields. "All the disadvantages of a closed car with none of the advantages of an open one," he informed me suavely in salesmanlike patter as he pushed me through the mazes of winter accessories.

Cor

But to go back to his fear of pictures.

"I've been afraid of pictures; they are so merciless, and the actor is dependent upon so many factors beside his own ability. On the stage, if an actor fails, it is largely his own fault. And even if every one else does his work wretchedly the actor has a chance to distinguish himself. When you go out on the stage you don't care if the lights go out and the scenery topples over, you still can do your part. But in pictures the director, the continuity writer, or the cutter can ruin the picture.

"When you have been working for years on your voice, it is like running in an obstacle race to try to get an effect without it. But look at the advantages of acting in pictures. I've been on the stage for thirteen years and I am just beginning to be known to a few people in the bigger cities. But as soon as I made one picture, I became known to people from here to Kamchatka."

Mr. Hull bubbles with enthusiasm all of the time in spite of his many months' grind at working eleven hours a day. He follows the never-die school of philosophers and is a glowing testimonial of the success of their teachings. Two years ago when Margaret Anglin was arranging a special performance of "Tiger Cats" her leading man became ill the day before the performance. The part for his young brother-in-law who accomplished the seemingly impossible task of memorizing the part and the stage directions in time to give a performance the next day. And it was a good performance.

Mr. Hull lives in the old part of New York City called Greenwich Village where modern apartment houses have not encroached. He bought the house from its original owner and builder and is proud of its traditions. His house even boasts a back yard, which is as rare in New York, almost, as keeping a cow. There, he and his young son putter around in the spring tending a great patch of hyacinths which they later replace with other flowers and vines. He reads nothing more morbid than J. M. Barrie and Mark Twain. He has no use for the gloomy Russians.

Before he started this terrible sixteen hours of work a day schedule, he had time for gardens, and reading, and things like that. He even had time to write a play which he produced in New York last fall. "East Side, West Side" was one of those moderate successes; it brought the author neither the thrill of success nor the goad of failure. He has sold the motion-picture rights to it to Thomas H. Ince, so he may still become known as a playwright.

I have an idea, though, that you won't think of Henry Hull in just the way he expects; not as the young man with a comic face, not as the author of "East Side, West Side," but as a dynamic and magnetic [illegible]

Movie Weekly. New York Feb. 10 1923

Carol Dempster tells why she never had a sweetheart

New Griffith screen star reveals secret to interviewer — Love affairs take up too much of one's time, she says.

By Lewis F. Levenson

IF CAROL DEMPSTER has no sweetheart — and Carol Dempster has no sweetheart—it's because she is too busy to think about such things. At least that is what the lady herself told me when I interviewed her the other day.

But before explaining the How and the Why of this situation, let me tell you how I found Carol Dempster.

I found her in an ideal New York home. There are New York homes and New York homes, but the ideal New York home is tasteful, quiet, spacious, situated somewhere on the west side, as near to Riverside Drive as possible, but not on that show street. I found her quite as she is, a gracious girl, just out of her 'teens, dressed in her at home clothes, a smock, a plaid skirt, her wavy reddish brown hair all aftuff over her shoulders.

She in a deep chair, I in as deep, in the library of this home.

"Ever since mother died, I have been living with Mrs. Gray," she explained to me. Mrs. Gray is the wife of Albert L. Gray, general manager of the D. W. Griffith organization. "Unfortunately she is not feeling well this afternoon. She is a darling. I wish you could meet her."

I was looking closely at Carol Dempster—I had never met her before—and suddenly I made a discovery. "This girl," I said to myself, "is not an actress. She is a regular girl." My thoughts were strangely verified a moment later, when I asked her to tell me something about herself.

THAT'S not easy," she smiled. "I am a Californian. I really wanted to be a dancer, so I went to Denishawn, the school for dancers run by Ruth St. Denis. I believe that every girl, whether she wants to be an actress or not, should learn dancing. It has been of immeasurable help to me. It teaches you what to do with your hands and feet, how to walk, how to hold your body.

"I danced with the Denishawn pupils, in exhibition dances, and once or twice for the movies, but I'm afraid that the scenes they made of me were never used, for I never did see them. Then one day Mr. Griffith visited the school. He asked to be introduced to mother, and soon after he signed a contract with her, I joined his company."

Perhaps the reason why Carol Dempster is unspoiled, why she is still a regular girl and not of the actress type, is that she has always acted for Mr. Griffith. Notice her next remark:

"I've still an awful lot to learn. Sometimes when I'm working on the set and I don't do things just right, I get vexed with myself. Then Mr. Griffith says: 'Take your time. When you have had as much experience as some of the others, you'll not be making mistakes.' Then I realize how little I know."

This is modesty and earnestness, two traits that promise well for Carol Dempster's future.

"My first picture, strangely enough, was one in which both Clarine Seymour and Bobby Harron played. Dick Barthelmess was the other lead. Clarine and Bobbie are both gone now. You probably know the other things I have done: 'Dream Street,' and 'One Exciting Night.'"

You can't ask Carol Dempster silly questions. She is too earnest—and she has read "Merton of the Movies." But there was one particular question that I came purposely to ask her, so, gritting my teeth, I went to it.

"Have you a sweetheart, Miss Dempster?" I inquired.

She turned her cool gray eyes directly upon me.

"No," she answered sweetly, "I must tell you that I have not."

Gritting my teeth again, I asked another question.

"Why?" I queried calmly.

Miss Dempster laughed. It was a delightful laugh that sounded like music.

"Oh!" she exclaimed, "I'm too busy—too busy by far. You know love affairs take up a great deal of one's time, and I feel that just at present I must devote myself entirely to my career. The screen, I might say, is the only sweetheart I have, and really it is all I want."

SATISFIED I sat back and listened to her continue telling about her life in and near the Griffith studio, while she is working and while she is resting.

"Mrs. Gray," she went on, "lives in New Rochelle, not so far away from Mamaroneck, so that even if I am not working in the summer, I still use the Point, as the little fork of land is called, which extends out into Long Island Sound, and on which the studio stands. We have a boat house and a bath house, and many has been the time when Mr. Griffith has called for some player, only to be informed that she was seen going toward the back in a bathing suit a little while ago."

Then a shake of her head: "I'm quite a swimmer, you know. Dancing helped me there, too. When we made 'The Idol Dancer,' down in Bermuda, I had to do a lot of diving—for the camera, of course. And I found that under water I could be just as graceful as on dry land. I only had to remember how to use my hands and feet, and it made as pretty a picture as you would want."

As for the rest of the Dempster family: "Father

Continued on page 6

Above: Carol Dempster, D. W. Griffith's new screen protegé, who will be seen shortly in his latest picture, "The White Rose."

At Right: Miss Dempster in one of the horrible moments of the Griffith thriller "One Exciting Night."

and my brothers are out in California. And California may be lovely, but in the summer time there isn't a place finer than Westchester, Mamaroneck and the Sound."

Do you get the picture now? A girl teeming with life, eager to get on in her chosen profession, an out-of-doors girl, one who swims, plays tennis, skates, dances. That is Carol Dempster.

"I used to despise the movies. I didn't like them at all. But now I realize that if you are capable, you can accomplish as much in pictures as in any other form of art. Just now I'm waiting for my sets to be built in 'The White Rose,' Mr. Griffith's next picture."

"And what do you plan to do in the future?"

"I'm pointing toward 'The White Slave.' That'll be a big picture. If Mr. Griffith ever does it, it will take at least a year and possibly longer."

I prophesy that "The White Slave" will be a very worthwhile picture, indeed.

CAROL DEMPSTER has visited Europe. She told me of picture-making in Germany, the great "UFA" studio near Berlin, and of one of the two great thrills of her life, a trip across the English Channel in an aeroplane. The other thrill:

"Do you know, I was even more thrilled by the radio than by the aeroplane trip. I went down to "WHAP," the big American Telephone and Telegraph station downtown not long ago, and made a little speech. It was positively uncanny. They told me that at least 500,000 people would be listening in, and then they sent me into a little room, and made me talk to a disc. If I could have seen anything, anyone, it wouldn't have been so bad, but talking to nothing at all—ugh!"

Miss Dempster doesn't want to go on the stage. She has a good voice, however, and is practicing singing in her spare moments—that is, if she has any spare moments, which seems doubtful, considering the many things she has to do. Her hobbies? Mrs. Gray comes first, of course. Then Mrs. Gray's three dogs—two Chows and a compatriot police dog.

Thus you have the picture of Carol Dempster, a girl whose life is full to the brim of happiness, a girl whose entire screen career has been in the hands of Mr. Griffith.

No wonder that she hasn't the time to bother about having a sweetheart!

Buffalo (N.Y.) Express August 19 1923

United Artists

My Picture Play Magazine Nov 3 1923

Exhibitors Herald Chicago Ill Nov 3 1923

One Exciting Night, A D. W. Griffith production.—Eleven reels. The best mystery picture we have ever shown. In spite of its too great length, it held the attention of the audience to the very end. —C. M. Newman, Y. M. C. A. theatre, Blacksburg, Va.—Col[illegible] community.

S'Matter with D. W.?

Sho's yo bohn I'm shiverin' in my boots at the prospects of what's gonna pour down on my pore old haid, but I don't give a tinker's durn. I've gotta have my say or die, so here I is.

Sez I, "I likes Mister David W. Griffith better'n all them other directors put together, an' I'm gettin' durn sick hearin' 'bout his faults. Ain't none of us humans faultless even at our best, an' it 'pears like the writers and critics spends more time pickin' on pore ole David then on any one else. S'matter with him? I reckon his style might be what some mean ole critter of a critic would call a bit florid, but it's so peculiarly his own, an', anyway, D. W.'s a poet an' you've gotta forgive a poet mos' anything, now, haven't you?

I thought his "One Exciting Night" wuz a durn good picture. 'Course 'twas impossible all them goin's on in one night never could have happened in real life, but most of us people don't want real life when we go to the movies. What we want is thrills—great gobs of 'em! We got 'em sho' nuff in "One Exciting Night." Gee, I got shivers up an' down my spinal column an' my bobbed hair stood on ends when that ghastly hand wuz pawing over the Fairfax mansion—— Gee whiz!! The show wuz packed with kids, an' they had a scrumptious time—me, too. I forgot I wuz growed up and mos' perched myself on my neighbor's lap I wuz that excited. That pore skeered stiff nigger an' his brown-skin flapper tickled me plumb to my gizzards. The house wuz in an uproar. Ole David shore can make us people laugh an' cry, an' after all, that's the supreme test in the movies. Now ain't it?

Speaking of those sort of things, I ain't overfond of critics. What I mean is the real sho nuff dyed-in-ink critics. Them an' me never do agree 'bout pictures. They're so full of style an' they make me madder'n a hatter. That's a low-down job, too, gettin' paid to pick on other folks, but I reckon some one's gotta do the dirty work.

Speakin' of sich, there's a lady what wuz in September's magazine. Me an' she don't agree 'bout Douglas Fairbanks. I'm one gal that gets all thrilled up over Doug's wide grin, an' I ain't a Babe Ruth fan, either. I shore do hate baseball, but I shore do like Douglas. An' I shore do think "Robin Hood" wuz one of the best pictures of this year of our Lord. I wuz up in the pit of my home town's mos' exclusive show when I saw it. The pit wuz filled with kids in knee breeches. It wuz more fun than a box seat. Even the cop wuz friendly. He plumb forgot he wuz a cop an' let the kids whistle softly them gay liltin' tunes that went with "Robin Hood."

Gee, we all got so interested in the picture we almos' thought we wuz living in them glowin' darin' days of Robin Fitz Hugh. I wish we wuz, anyway. Lady, how can you deny the blithe bonny grace of him—Doug, I mean? It's clear cut, too. Shucks! some of us people are gettin' durn tired of them slick-lookin' critturs that are beginning to crawl all over the screen. An' speakin' of heroes an' sich, I think Mister Griffith has durn good taste in pickin' leadin' ladies—ladies is right, they look it—empty-headed—humph, none of us folks know what's in the other fellow's head. An' what's more, Mister Griffith ladies have brains enough to look girlish an' sweet and what's more, plenty of us people are gettin' durn sick of flappers an' flippers, an' vamps, an' sheiks, therefore I contend Mister Griffith ladies are smart. Now Carol Dempster is a mighty pretty little body, an' Lillian Gish reminds me of Lancelot's Elaine, an' I shore do wish Mister Griffith would put Tennyson's "Idylls of the King" on the screen. Some of us people would like to see Lillian Gish as the fair Elaine under D. W. direction. I sorter like ole-time stuff, an' them Idylls are mighty romantic, powerfully so, an' plenty of us people still want romance, so there you are. There ain't no pleasin' all of us, an' some of us are jus' bohn cranks anyway, and at our best the general cussedness of us is enough to turn a director green.

Lan's, how we do growl! 'Nuff sed.

MAY G. NELSON.

129 South Dupre Street, New Orleans, La.

LUCE'S PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU

NEW YORK — BOSTON

CLIPPING FROM

EXHIBITORS HERALD, CHICAGO
DECEMBER 13, 1924

production.— [illegible] D. W. Griffith picture—its drawing power remains the same. This is at least the fourth time here and we had S. R. O. out for three days. Twelve reels.—Rex P. Lingrett, Cozy theatre, Columbia, Mo.—Small town patronage.

ONE EXCITING NIGHT, a D. W. Griffith production.—Here is a mystery picture par excellent. It keeps you guessing from start to finish. Too long, drags first three reels, then goes good. The storm is also too long. Cut this to eight reels, and it would be a knockout for a regular program picture. Eleven reels.—Glen [illegible] Crystal theatre, Tom[illegible], Ariz. — General patronage.

THE IRON TRAIL, with a special cast.—Rex Beach story with 7,000 feet of film ruined. Slow and dragey throughout. [illegible]

Ft Wayne (Ind) Sentinel Sep 27 1923

"One Exciting Night," a D. W. Griffith Production, Presented at the Orpheum Theater.

The Cast

The Boy.....Henry Hull
The Girl.....Carol Dempster

Glued to the edge of your seat and breathless with excitement you watch Griffith go "The Bat" and all the other thrillers one better in "One Exciting Night." Every element of the mystery play is there with its best dress on. There is the harsh unfeeling mother, the sweet young thing, the other sweet young thing who loves her, the unloved fiance, the horrid, creepy man who makes you shudder with a glance, and sweet old auntie, and a whole crew of funny black-face comedians who make the chills chiller and the creeps creppier by their intense reactions.

David Wark seems to be having an excellent joke with himself all the while. Looking over the lineup of plays on Broadway and the best selling novels he must have decided that mysteries were the order of the day. So he must have decided to make one, too, as a kind of relaxation from his usual intense mood. You have the sense, as you watch "One Exciting Night" that, like Mr. Cohan in "The Tavern," Griffith is burlesquing himself. The result is great.

Young, as all Griffith's players have been, and charming as the best of them, are Henry Hull and Miss Dempster, who furnish the romantic note. Both know the secret of suggesting emotion. Both have grace and plenty of energy. The young tornado which puts the final kick at the end of the very exciting night shows Miss Dempster, beaten by rain and wind and hail, but still merry and still after the villain with all the vim in the world.

If you like to settle down with a detective novel and read through to the end, you will find equal pleasure in "One Exciting Night."

S'Matter with D. W.?

Sho's yo bohn I'm shiverin' in my boots at the prospects of what's gonna pour down on my pore old haid, but I don't give a tinker's durn. I've gotta have my say or die, so here I is.

Sez I, "I likes Mister David W. Griffith better'n all them other directors put together, an' I'm gettin' durn sick hearin' 'bout his faults. Ain't none of us humans faultless even at our best, an' it 'pears like the writers and critics spends more time pickin' on pore ole David then on any one else. S'matter with him? I reckon his style might be what some mean ole critter of a critic would call a bit florid, but it's so peculiarly his own, an', anyway, D. W.'s a poet an' you've gotta forgive a poet mos' anything, now, haven't you?

I thought his "One Exciting Night" wuz a durn good picture. 'Course 'twas impossible all them goin's on in one night never could have happened in real life, but most of us people don't want real life when we go to the movies. What we want is thrills—great gobs of 'em! We got 'em sho' nuff in "One Exciting Night." Gee, I got shivers up an' down my spinal column an' my bobbed hair stood on ends when that ghastly hand wuz pawing over the Fairfax mansion—— Gee whiz!! The show wuz packed with kids, an' they had a scrumptious time—me, too. I forgot I wuz growed up and mos' perched myself on my neighbor's lap I wuz that excited. That pore skeered stiff nigger an' his brown-skin flapper tickled me plumb to my gizzards. The house wuz in an uproar. Ole David shore can make us people laugh an' cry, an' after all, that's the supreme test in the movies. Now ain't it?

Speaking of those sort of things, I ain't overfond of critics. What I mean is the real sho nuff dyed-in-ink critics. Them an' me never do agree 'bout pictures. They're so full of style an' they make me madder'n a hatter. That's a low-down job, too, gettin' paid to pick on other folks, but I reckon some one's gotta do the dirty work.

Speakin' of sich, there's a lady what wuz in September's magazine. Me an' she don't agree 'bout Douglas Fairbanks. I'm one gal that gets all thrilled up over Doug's wide grin, an' I ain't a Babe Ruth fan, either. I shore do hate baseball, but I shore do like Douglas. An' I shore do think "Robin Hood" wuz one of the best pictures of this year of our Lord. I wuz up in the pit of my home town's mos' exclusive show when I saw it. The pit wuz filled with kids in knee breeches. It wuz more fun than a box seat. Even the cop wuz friendly. He plumb forgot he wuz a cop an' let the kids whistle softly them gay liltin' tunes that went with "Robin Hood."

Gee, we all got so interested in the picture we almos' thought we wuz living in them glowin' darin' days of Robin Fitz Hugh. I wish we wuz, anyway. Lady, how can you deny the blithe bonny grace of him—Doug, I mean? It's clear cut, too. Shucks! some of us people are gettin' durn tired of them slick-lookin' critturs that are beginning to crawl all over the screen. An' speakin' of heroes an' sich, I think Mister Griffith has durn good taste in pickin' leadin' ladies—ladies is right, they look it—empty-headed—humph, none of us folks know what's in the other fellow's head. An' what's more, Mister Griffith ladies have brains enough to look girlish an' sweet and what's more, plenty of us people are gettin' durn sick of flappers an' flippers, an' vamps, an' sheiks, therefore I contend Mister Griffith ladies are smart. Now Carol Dempster is a mighty pretty little body, an' Lillian Gish reminds me of Lancelot's Elaine, an' I shore do wish Mister Griffith would put Tennyson's "Idylls of the King" on the screen. Some of us people would like to see Lillian Gish as the fair Elaine under D. W. direction. I sorter like ole-time stuff, an' them Idylls are mighty romantic, powerfully so, an' plenty of us people still want romance, so there you are. There ain't no pleasin' all of us, an' some of us are jus' bohn cranks anyway, and at our best the general cussedness of us is enough to turn a director green.

Lan's, how we do growl! 'Nuff sed.

MAY G. NELSON.

129 South Dupre Street, New Orleans, La.

Muskogee (Okla) Phoenix Oct 28 1923

[illegible]